— In the fourth of his lectures on Robert Browning the Rev. Stopford Brooke criticised him as an artist and found that, while he had in previous addresses exalted Browning at the expense of Tennyson, it was necessary in this respect to reverse the positions. The frequent and fatal faults in many of the pieces he could excuse neither by the subtlety of the thought, for Shakespeare's sonnets, with much better form, were even more subtle, nor by an intentional adaptation to the subject; the cause was mere slovenliness. He had too little respect for his art and none for the public. The consequence was that a much larger proportion of Tennyson's work was near to the universal heart of things, and had the beauty of form which would make it classical.

— Messrs. C. J. Clay & Sons of the Cambridge University Press will shortly publish a work, The Apostles' Creed: its Relation to Primitive Christianity, by Dr. Swete, regius professor of divinity at Cambridge. Its purpose is to supply educated members of the English Church, who are not professed theologians, with materials for forming a judgment upon a controversy which originated in Germany, and has recently attracted attention in England. The substance of the book was delivered in the form of lectures at Cambridge during the Lent term of the present year.

— It is a pleasure to know that M. Édouard Grenier, the poet, has collected the interesting reminiscences of Alfred de Musset, George Sand, Lamartine, Prosper Merimée, Augier, Sainte-Beuve, and others, which he has been publishing in the Revue Bleue, and that they will appear in book form under the well-worn title of Souvenirs Littéraires.

— Edward Bellamy is at work on a new book that will be published this year.

— No one could have less liking for the notoriety of the personal paragraph than Miss Hesba Stretton, but the editor of the Young Woman publishes an illustrated sketch of her in his July number. Her life is, like one of her stories, simple, quiet, of confident, religious faith. On her mother's side she traces direct descent to a chancellor of Henry II; her father was a bookseller, and from him she inherited the name of Smith. The assumed name of Hesba is composed by taking the initial letters of the names of five sisters. Her first encouragement to authorship was from Charles Dickens, who sent £58 and a request for more in reply to a MS. which had been surreptitiously forwarded by her eldest sister, Elizabeth, with whom she has lived all her life. After the first success scarcely a Christmas number of All the Year Round was edited by Dickens without some contribution from her pen. Jessica's First Prayer won her something like fame, but she herself can hardly reckon up the number of volumes that have followed it. Their popularity may be estimated from the payment of £400 which she received by an agreement to receive a penny per copy sold of one short story. In 1876 she received the American Tract Society's medal for a novel with a religious basis, but she herself thinks Michel Lorio's Cross is her best effort. In the neighborhood of Ham Common, where she now lives, the villagers know well that her religion of kindliness and sympathy is not confined to her books. — Literary World, London.

— The most interesting figure at the marriage of Miss Violet Maxse to Lord Salisbury's fourth son was not that grand seigneur, the tall, burly, cynical but kindly-faced marquis, who had in July, 1888, the pride of being prime minister on the tercentenary of the repulse of the Spanish armada by a government of which his great ancestor, Lord Burleigh, was head. Though the Cecils are "on the top" now as they were in "the spacious times of great Elizabeth," the cynosure of all eyes in the church was the slight figure of an old gentleman who was in such delicate health that he required an arm to help him up the aisle — George Meredith. George Meredith looks his part. Genius and distinction are written on his beautiful, intellectual head, in his almost inspired expression. A man of medium height, he has a thin, delicate figure; a large, noble head, crowned with luxuriant white hair; a short, crisp, well-shaped white beard, peaking out like Lord Spencer's; soft, blue-gray eyes, and a slightly retroussé nose. Though a home ruler and a democrat, his manner and voice are decidedly aristocratic. His is exactly the personality one would have chosen for the writer of such masterpieces as Richard Feverel and Diana of the Crossways.— Literary World, London.

— The Rev. Stopford A. Brooke will give a course of lectures at the Lowell Institute in the autumn. Apropos of this subject, the London Literary World supplies an anxious correspondent with the following extraordinary information: "The Lowell Lectures are a new foundation, in commemoration of the late James Russell Lowell and in connection with the new university at Chicago. Professor Drummond was the lecturer last year, and his course formed the basis of The Lowell Lectures on the Ascent of Man, which has just been published."

— Ginn & Co. have in preparation for their International Modern Language series Morceaux Choisis de Paul Bourget, edited for use in schools by A. N. van Daell, professor of modern languages in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

— Longmans, Green & Co. will publish in the fall an abridgment of Mr. Edward Clodd's Story of Creation, under the title of A Primer of Evolution.

— Messrs. Longmans & Co. announce as in the press Documents Illustrating English Economical History, by Mr. W. J. Ashley, some time fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford, and now professor of political economy at Harvard University.

— D. C. Heath & Co., Boston, have in press for immediate issue in their Heath's Modern Language series Lessing's Nathan der Weise, edited, with introduction, notes, and bibliography, by Dr. Sylvester Primer, professor of Germanic languages in the University of Texas.

— Mr. Charles de Kay, the well-known author, poet, and art critic of the Times, has been nominated by President Cleveland as Consul-General of the United States at Berlin.

— Many a student has tried to rearrange and analyze the rich material left by Leonardo da Vinci, but without marked success. It is therefore cheering to know that the task has at length been satisfactorily accomplished, and that the Codice Atlantico, which contains 1,750 writings and drawings by this celebrated man, is at last to be published, presumably by private subscription, in 35 parts, each containing 40 heliotype plates of reproduction, together with a double transcription of the text and notes. The entire work will be printed on special handmade paper. U. Hoepli is the publisher who has been intrusted with this great Italian work.

— Messrs. William Andrews & Co. of Hull, England, propose shortly issuing The Quaker Poets of England, by Evelyn Pyne (Mrs. Evelyn Noble Armitage), author of The Message of Quakerism to the Present Day. The volume will include biographical notices of all Quaker poets down to the present time, together with selections from their poetry, and will be prefaced with an essay on the peculiar characteristics of Quaker poetry and a brief sketch of the rise of the Society of Friends in England.

— That very useful journal, Public Opinion of Washington, sends out a large plate of "Some Representative Contributors," which gives reduced photographs of many prominent men of letters. It is, in one way, a mark of the vigor of the new management of the paper.

— An authorized life of Mr. Edison will shortly be published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus. The work, which will be entitled The Life and Inventions of Edison, is written by Messrs. W. K. L. and Antonia Dickson, with the approval and coöperation of the great inventor himself.

— The large body of literature attributed to Paracelsus will be included in unabridged form, and in English, in two volumes, to be brought out in London. They will bear the title The Hermetic and Alchemical Writings of Paracelsus. The text from which the translation has been made is that of the Geneva folio of 1658 in Latin.

— The marble portrait bust of Harriet Beecher Stowe was unveiled at the Wadsworth Athenæum, Hartford, Conn., on the afternoon of May 24, by Hilda Stowe, one of the author's grandchildren. Mrs. Isabella Beecher Hooker, Mrs. Stowe's sister, made the address. The bust is the work of Anne Whitney of Boston, and was purchased with the subscriptions of Connecticut women.

— A portrait of Emily Brontë, the only one known, has been recently discovered, and has been engraved for publication in the July number of the Woman at Home. It is pronounced by some of those who knew Emily Brontë an excellent likeness. The Woman at Home has also secured a hitherto unpublished manuscript by Emily Brontë, which will appear later on.

— Prof. Herbert Tuttle of Cornell University died at Ithaca on June 21, after a year of physical and mental infirmities. He was born at Bennington, Vt., in 1846, graduated from the University of Vermont in 1869, and was engaged in newspaper work, both in this country and in Europe, until 1880, when he was appointed lecturer in the University of Michigan. In the following year he accepted the chair of modern history at Cornell. His works are German Political Leaders and the well-known History of Prussia, the three volumes of which, issued thus far, cover the period 1134–1756.

— One of the most ingenious of pen-names is Theo. Gift — a sort of half translation of Dorothea. Theo. Gift is Mrs. Dorothy Boulger, a prominent writer for the last twenty years. Her husband, Professor Boulger, is about to accompany the Jackson-Harmsworth expedition in a scientific capacity.

— Mr. Charles Booth, whose work on the Condition of the Aged Poor has just been published, intends in a further volume to deal with various proposals for the relief of this section of the poor. The fifth and sixth volume of the same author's Life and Labour of the People in London will be issued shortly by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. These two volumes will deal with the trades of London generally.

— Mr. Kipling has four books in preparation: a second series of Barrack-Room Ballads, a second series of (four) Jungle Stories, and two other volumes of short stories. One of these will consist of sketches which have not appeared in any periodical. The first of the four new Jungle Stories, "How Fear Came to the Jungle," has appeared in the Pall Mall Budget.

— Longmans, Green & Co. have in preparation a new book by Sir Edwin Arnold, entitled Wandering Words, consisting of a series of articles which have been contributed chiefly to American magazines and newspapers, with numerous illustrations from photographs and from drawings by B. Boothby. They also announce Studies on the Coast of Arran, by George Milner.

— It is said in London that two books of great interest will be published in the near future — Macaulay's Journal and Professor Jewett's Conversations.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the Literary World are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biography.

Memoirs Illustrating the History of Napoleon I, from 1802–1815. By Baron Claude-François de Meneval. Vol. I. D. Appleton & Co. $2.00

The Life and Letters of James Macpherson. By Bailey Saunders. Macmillan & Co. $2.50

Dictionary of National Biography. Edited by Sidney Lee. Vol. XXXIX. Morehead–Myles. Macmillan & Co. $3.75

Life of St. Francis of Assisi. By Paul Sabatier. Trans. by Louise Seymour Houghton. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50

Samuel Chapman Armstrong. By Robert C. Ogden. Fleming H. Revell Co. 35c.

Economics and Politics.

Primitive Civilizations; or, Outline of the History of Ownership in Archaic Communities. By E. J. Simcox. Two vols. Macmillan & Co. $10.00

The History of Trade Unionism. By Sidney and Beatrice Webb. Longmans, Green & Co. $5.00

The Sphere of the State; or, the People as a Body Politic. By Frank Sargent Hoffman. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

Wealth and Moral Law. By E. Benjamin Andrews, D.D., LL.D. Hartford Seminary Press. $1.00

Educational.

Introductory Lessons in English Grammar, and First Book in English. By Wm. H. Maxwell. American Book Co. Each, 40c.

First Lessons in Reading. By Elizabeth H. Fundenberg. American Book Co. 25c.

First Lessons in Reading. By Elizabeth H. Fundenberg. Teacher's edition. American Book Co. 50c.

Fungi and Fungicides. By Clarence M. Weed, D.Sc. Illustrated. The Orange Judd Co. $1.00

A Journal of American Ethnology and Archæology. Editor, J. Walter Fewkes. Vol. IV. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.00

Fiction.

The Sorrows of Werther. By Johann Wolfgang Goethe. Mascot Publishing Co. 50c

Oscar in Africa. By Harry Castlemon. Illustrated. Porter & Coates.

Grizzly's Little Pard. By Elizabeth Maxwell Comfort. Thomas Whittaker. 75c.

Rudin. A Novel. By Ivan Turgenev. Tr. by Constance Garnett. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

A Pound of Cure. A Story of Monte Carlo. By William Henry Bishop. Chas. Scribner's Sons. $1.00

Tales of the Maine Coast. By Noah Brooks. Chas. Scribner's Sons. $1.00

Waverley Novels. Dryburgh edition. Vol. XXII. The Fair Maid of Perth. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

Major Joshua. A Novel. By Francis Foster. Longmans, Green & Co.

Outlaw and Lawmaker. By Mrs. Campbell-Praed. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

A Modern Rosalind. By Edith Carpenter. Rand, McNally & Co. 75c.

Break O'Day Tales. By Frank West Rollins. Joseph Knight Co. 75c.

Wanted, a Copyist. By W. H. Brearley. Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

Chaperoned. Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

Jessie's Three Resolutions. By Mary E. Bamford. American Baptist Publishing Soc. 90c.

The American Ambassador. By a Public Man. Illustrated. Laird & Lee. 25c.

A Moral Dilemma. By Annie Thompson. Longmans, Green & Co. 50c.

Poor Folk. Translated from the Russian of F. Dostoietvsky by Lena Milman. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

Van Bibber and Others. By Richard Harding Davis. Harper & Brothers. 60c.

Fairy Tales for Little Readers. By Sarah J. Burke. A. Lovell & Co. 30c.

Poetry, Music, and the Drama.

Five O'Clock Tea. Farce. By W. D. Howells. Harper & Brothers. 50c.

The Tragedies of Euripides in English Verse. By Arthur S. Way, M.A. In three volumes. Vol. I. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

The Torch-Bearers. By Arlo Bates. Roberts Brothers. 50c.

Judas. A Drama in five acts. By Jno. Lesslie Hall. Williamsburg, Va.: Henley T. Jones. 50c.

Selections from the Poems of Arthur Hugh Clough. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

The Temple Shakespeare. Measure for Measure. — The Comedy of Errors. Macmillan & Co. Each, 45c.

Religion and Theology.

The Moral Conflict of Humanity, and Other Papers. By A. C. Kendrick. American Baptist Pub. Soc. $1.00

The Claims of Christianity. By William Samuel Lilly. D. Appleton & Co. $3.50

Travel and Observation.

On and Off the Saddle. By Lispenard Rutgers. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

Miscellaneous.

A Manual of the Study of Documents. By Persifor Frazer. Illustrated. J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.00

The Women's Conquest of New York. By a Member of the Committee of Safety of 1908. Harper & Brothers. 25c.

Regents Bulletin. No. 24, March, 1894, University of the State of New York, 15c.; No. 25, May, 1894, Secretary's Report. 35c.

The Money of the Bible. By George C. Williamson. Illustrated. F. H. Revell Co. $1.00

Business. A Plain Talk with Men and Women who Work. By Amos R. Wells. F. H. Revell Co. 35c.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

Advertising Rates:

First page, per line,	20 cents.
Other advertising pages,	16 "

Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

Public Library,
Lawrence, Mass.

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 Somerset Street
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 28 JULY 1894

Vol. XXV No. 15 Whole No. 511

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

"A Remarkable Book."

THIRD AND CHEAPER EDITION, WITH NEW PREFACE.

SOCIAL EVOLUTION.

By Benjamin Kidd. 8vo, cloth. Price, $1.75.

"There is scarcely a page in Mr. Kidd's book which is not full of suggestion regarding the social problem of our time, and it is not a little comforting in the battle and turmoil, the running hither and thither of the age when we 'scarce possess our souls before we die,' to find a writer who calmly applies the most recent doctrines of science to modern society and life, and who is yet able to say that the future is hopeful and the prospect fair."—Observer, London.

"A book notable alike for originality and breadth, philosophical reasoning and literary attractiveness."—Chautauquan.

"The volume . . . owes much of its success to its noble tone, its clear and delightful style, and to the very great pleasure the reader experiences as he is conducted through the strong, dignified and courteous discussion. From a scientific point of view it is the most important contribution recently made to biological sociology."—Independent.

Just Published.

A History of Germany in the Middle Ages.

By Ernest F. Henderson, A. M. (Harvard), Ph.D. (Berlin), Editor of "Select Historical Documents of the Middle Ages" (Bohn). 8vo, cloth. Price $2.60 net.

Primitive Civilizations;

Or, Outlines of the History of Ownership in Archaic Communities. By E. J. Simcox, author of "Natural Laws," etc. 2 vols., 8vo, $10.00.

Aspects of Modern Study.

Being University Extenion Addresses by Lord Playfair, Canon Browne, Mr. Goschen, Mr. John Morley, Sir James Paget, Professor Max Muller, the Duke of Argyll, the Bishop of Durham and Professor Jebb. 12mo, cloth. Price, $1.00.

Literary Associations of the English Lakes.

By H. D. Rawnsley, Hon. Canon of Carlisle. 2 vols., 12mo, $4.00.

JUST READY. BY JOHN RUSKIN.

LETTERS TO A COLLEGE FRIEND DURING THE YEARS 1840-1845.

Including an Essay on "Death before Adam Fell." By John Ruskin, D. C. L., LL. D. 12mo, cloth. Price, $1.50.

ALREADY PUBLISHED.

VERONA, AND OTHER LECTURES.

Delivered principally at the Royal and London Institutions between 1870 and 1883. By John Ruskin, D. C. L., LL. D. Illustrated with Frontispiece in color and 11 Photogravure Plates from drawings by the author. 8vo, cloth. Price, $2.50 net.

Now Ready. Vol. III. THE HOUSE OF FAME. THE LEGEND OF GOOD WOMEN. TREATISE ON THE ASTROLABE.

The Oxford Chaucer.

Complete works of Geoffrey Chaucer. Edited from numerous manuscripts by the Rev. Walter W. Skeat, Litt. D., LL. D., M. A., Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. In six volumes, demy 8vo, with Portrait and Facsimiles. 8vo, buckram, $4.00 each, net.

Already Published.

Vol. I. ROMAUNT OF THE ROSE. Minor Poems.
Vol. II. BOETHIUS. TROILUS AND CRISEYDE.

The remaining volumes will be published at short intervals during the present year. The complete set of six volumes is offered to subscribers at $17.50 net, payable strictly in advance. Payment in full must accompany each subscription. Subscriptions may be sent in through booksellers if the above conditions are strictly complied with.

Just Published.

Children's Singing Games.

With the Tunes to which they are Sung. Collected and edited by Alice B. Gomme. Pictured in black and white by Winifred Smith. Oblong 8vo, ornamental, $1.50.

⁂ Also two Editions de Luxe, limited; one printed on Kemscott paper, bound in linen, $9.00 net. The other, printed on Japanese vellum, bound in vellum, $11.00 net.

Children's Singing Games appeal to every child who loves dance and song and play, and to every elder who is glad to revive the pleasantest memories of childhood. Mrs. Gomme has carefully picked out of the innumerable variants the best and brightest versions of both words and music.

VOL. I. NEW TRANSLATION.

THE NOVELS OF IVAN TURGENEV.

Translated from the Russian by Constance Garnett. In seven volumes. 16mo, cloth extra, gilt top, $1.25 each.

Now Ready. Vol. I., RUDIN. Further volumes in preparation.

"Mrs. Garnett's version of 'Rudin' reads, indeed, with all the charm and ease of an original work, and all true lovers of good literature will feel grateful to her for having so ably accomplished a difficult task."—Publishers' Circular.

Just Published.

Studies in Forestry.

Being a Short Course of Lectures on the Principles of Sylviculture, delivered at the Botanic Garden, Oxford, by John Nisbet, D. Oec. of the Indian Forest Service, author of "British Forest Trees." 12mo, cloth. Price, $2.00 net.

Just Published.

Hints on Driving.

By Captain C. Morley Knight, R. A. Illustrated by G. H. A. White, Royal Artillery. 12mo. Price, $1.25 net.

MACMILLAN & CO., 66 Fifth Avenue, New York.

D. APPLETON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

SECOND VOLUME OF

Memoirs Illustrating the History of Napoleon I.,

From 1802 to 1815. By BARON CLAUDE-FRANÇOIS DE MÉNEVAL, Private Secretary to Napoleon. Edited by his Grandson, BARON NAPOLEON JOSEPH DE MÉNEVAL. With Portraits and Autograph Letters. In three volumes. 8vo. Cloth, $2.00 per volume. Volume II. now ready.

The second volume deals with Napoleon's life between 1806 and 1812, the period of his ascendency on the Continent. The victories of Jena and Wagram, the crushing of Prussia and Austria, the Austrian Alliance, crowned by the marriage of Marie Louise, the relations of Napoleon with the Czar Alexander, much that is interesting of Napoleon's personal habits and tastes, and the beginnings and fruition of his thoughts about divorce, are included in this volume, which closes with an explanation of the causes that led to the Russian war.

Dr. Janet of Harley Street.

By ARABELLA KENEALY, author of "Molly and her Man-o'-War, etc. No. 147, Town and Country Library. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

"In 'Dr. Janet of Harley Street' Dr. Arabella Kenealy has shown that the art of writing lively fiction is not the least of her many accomplishments. Miss Kenealy has a quick sense of humor and a lively faculty of observation, and her style is vivid and effective."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"It is a clever book, and well worth reading. Miss Kenealy has imagined an interesting character, and realized her vividly."—London Chronicle.

The Purple Light of Love.

By HENRY GOELET MCVICKAR, author of "A Precious Trio," etc. 12mo. Cloth, 75 cents.

A story of New York and Newport social life, most adroitly and cleverly told.

For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers.

D. APPLETON & CO.,
72 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.

FITCHBURG RAILROAD,

Hoosac Tunnel Route.

SARATOGA.

On and after June 18, 1894, the special

Fast Express Train,

Parlor Car attached, will be run daily, Sundays excepted, leaving

Boston 9.00 A. M.,

Stop at Greenfield for dinner, arriving at

Saratoga 3.30 P. M.

For tickets and further information apply at 250 Washington Street, Boston.

J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

FRANK T. SABIN'S CATALOGUE of FINE and RARE BOOKS, ENGRAVINGS, AUTOGRAPHS, etc. (52 pp.), is NOW READY, and will be sent on application.

118 SHAFTESBURY AVE., LONDON, W.

NOW READY.

THE HUDSON LIBRARY.

Published bi-monthly. Registered as second-class matter. 16mo, paper, each 50 cents. Subscription per year, $3.00.

Volume I. Love and Shawlstraps. By ANNETTE LUCILE NOBLE, author of "Uncle Jack's Executors," etc. (Ready.)

Volume II. Miss Hurd, An Enigma. By ANNA KATHERINE GREEN. (In preparation.)

ALSO READY.

Uncle Jack's Executors. By Miss A. L. NOBLE. The ninth edition. 16mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

"Comes from a writer of unusual talent. . . . Remarkable for its sketches of character, its naturalness, its frequent flashes of intellectual brightness, and its genuine humor. . . . One of the best novels of the season, and deserving of a permanent place among works of genuine American fiction."—The Churchman.

Red Cap and Blue Jacket. A Tale of the Time of the French Revolution. By GEORGE DUNN. American Copyright Edition. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

"Not many novels of recent times contain more original characters, which are as real and original as if they had been created by Scott. . . . The great merit of the book is its humor, which is rich, and good, and real, and not artificial. It is never more effective than in the Luxembourg, under the shadow of the guillotine, with the tumbril making its horrid rounds. We make no attempt to tell the story. The author must be left to do that, in his own way, which is all his own."—The Scotsman.

"The characters are vividly delineated, and there are many dramatic incidents on sea and land: a fight between an English and a French man-of-war, a shipwreck, the closing scenes of the French Revolution and two romances."—The Literary News.

In Varying Moods. By BEATRICE HARRADEN. Copyright American Edition. 16mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

"The author's touch is most dainty and graceful, and her description of the various people who figure in these bits of life are so vivid as to make them forever a part of the mental furniture of the reader who has once known them."—Boston Times.

"The author of this volume is a literary artist of rare facility, who chooses words with a fine sense of their value, and puts them together with exquisite harmony."—N. Y. Times.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,
New York and London.

None Genuine unless bearing the Trade Mark.

MEISTERSCHAFT French, German, Spanish, Italian,

Actually Spoken and Mastered in Ten Weeks, without leaving your homes, by the Meisterschaft System. 550th Thousand. Pupils taught as if actually in the presence of the teacher. PRACTICAL Terms for membership, $5.00 for each language. All questions answered and exercises corrected free of charge. Specimen copy of Part One, any language, sent free on receipt of 2 cent postage stamp.

MEISTERSCHAFT PUBLISHING CO.

196 Summer St.
Boston, Mass.

LINGUISTRY

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

SIGN OF THE ARK.

Noah Farnham Morrison,
Rare, Old and Curious Books,
877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.
Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

THE LIBRARY OF AMERICAN LITERATURE

presents a perfect picture of the literature of your country from the beginning until the present time. 1,207 authors are represented by 2,671 selections. Biography of each author. 160 FINE PORTRAITS. Send three 2c. stamps for fine illustrated specimen to William Evarts Benjamin, Publisher 136 Boylston Street, Boston,

And learn how to buy it by easy payments for

Only 10 Cents a Day.

THE

POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY

FOR AUGUST.

The Chaos in Moral Training. By Prof. JOHN DEWEY.

Points out the confusing character of much of the training as to right and wrong given by parents to their children. The facts are drawn from the recollections of a class of students in ethics.

A Proposition for an Artificial Isthmus. By ERNEST A. LE SUEUR.

A scheme for an immense dam between Scotland and Ireland which shall enable the tidal power in the North Channel to be utilized. This power would be transmitted electrically to the British industrial centers.

Rain-Making. By Prof. FERNANDO SANFORD.

Gives the natural laws upon which the fall of rain depends, and shows up the imposture in the claims of certain well-known "rain-makers."

The Story of a Great Work. (Illustrated.) By J. JONES BELL.

An account of the construction of the tunnel under the St. Clair River.

OTHER ARTICLES:

MILK FOR BABES (illustrated); NATURE AS DRAMA AND ENGINERY; THE NOCTURNAL MIGRATION OF BIRDS; MODERN VIEWS AND PROBLEMS OF PHYSICS; FORM AND LIFE; ACCURACY IN OBSERVATION; THE PHOTOGRAPHY OF COLORS; SKETCH OF WILLIAM MATTIEU WILLIAMS (with Portrait).
CORRESPONDENCE; EDITOR'S TABLE; LITERARY NOTICES; POPULAR MISCELLANY; NOTES.

50 cents a number; $5.00 a year.

D. APPLETON & CO., NEW YORK.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address
Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - -	$16,014,000.00
Liabilities, -	$13,808,000.00
Surplus, - -	$2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

The Literary World

Vol. XXV BOSTON 28 JULY 1894 No. 15

CONTENTS

James Macpherson 227
Méneval's Memoirs of Napoleon 227
Johnson's Washington 228
Philosophy and Development of Religion . 229
Eight Hours for Work 229
Major General John Paterson . . . 230
Congregationalists in America . . . 230
Fiction:
Rudin 231
Tales of the Maine Coast 231
The Purple Light of Love 231
Outlaw and Lawmaker 231

Poetry:
A Poet's Wife. Grant Allen 232
Contemporary Thought and Thinkers . . 232
The Writings of Thomas Paine . . . 232
Fiction:
Major Joshua 233
Break o' Day Tales 233
A Daughter of Music 233
Grizzly's Little Pard 233
Dr. Janet of Harley Street 233
Quaker Idyls 233
Poor Folk 233
The Dancing Faun 233
Carlotta's Intended 233
Struthers and the Comedy of the Masked Musicians, 234
A Gauntlet 234
Three Weeks in Politics 234
Minor Notices:
The Rise of Modern Democracy in Old and New England 234
Sources of the Constitution of the United States, 234
The Sphere of the State 234
Studies in Mediæval Life and Literature . . 235
Select Specimens of Great French Writers . . 235
A Manual of the Study of Documents . . 235
The Moral Conflict of Humanity . . . 235
Periodicals 235
News and Notes 237

JAMES MACPHERSON.*

THE object of Mr. Bailey Saunders in writing this biography has been chiefly to study the Ossianic poems, their origin and influence, and the remarkable controversy to which they gave rise, from the point of view of an unprejudiced truth-seeker. He has evidently no desire to surround the object of his attention with any interest not properly belonging to him, but he chooses to write in the form of a biography because the disputed questions of the authenticity of the poems are largely affected by considerations of Macpherson's personal attainments, character, and pursuits. On Macpherson the man he spends comparatively little time. It is Macpherson the writer, the student, the controversialist, with whom he is concerned, and indeed the materials for ordinary biographical work are, or seem to be, scanty and unproductive.

The Macphersons are an important clan in the Highlands, one of the most ancient families in the north of Scotland, possessing the usual long record of feuds with other clans, and James seems to have inherited all the characteristics of his proud and sensitive race. His father was a poor farmer in Ruthven, where James was born and brought up, "a barefit laddie." The parochial school, the Aberdeen College, and one winter at Edinburgh University furnished his education, and when hardly twenty he assumed charge of the school in his native village. The circumstances attending the collection and publication of the Gaelic poems are told in detail, together with the influence that they had upon European literature, the growth of distrust concerning their origin, the details of the quarrel with Dr. Johnson, and the final report of the Highland Society. Mr. Saunders is as far from believing in the antiquity of every line of Ossian, or from defending the claim that the poems are descended in epic form from the third century, as he is from copying the harsh and wholesale condemnation of Macpherson and his work, familiar chiefly from the tirades of Dr. Johnson. The general conclusions to which he comes do not differ materially from the report of the committee of the Highland Society so far as external evidence is concerned. Admitting that Macpherson's Celtic history is "oversanguine fiction" and that he was often unpardonably inaccurate both as an editor and as a translator, he yet believes in the general authenticity of the bulk of his work. He would rank Macpherson with the old writers who gave the Eddas and the Nibelungenlied to the world, since in none of these can it be determined just how much was drawn from ancient lore and how much was added by the collector and transcriber.

There are brief pictures of Macpherson in his later days, showing him a good-natured man, an indulgent landlord, and very kind to the poor. Mrs. Anne Grant, a near neighbor, wrote of him, "His religious principles were, I fear, unfixed and fluctuating; but the primary cause that so much genius, taste, benevolence, and prosperity did not produce or diffuse more happiness was his living a stranger to the comforts of domestic life, from which unhappy connections excluded him." He died in 1796 at the age of sixty years. It is rather curious to note that his burial in Westminster Abbey was in accordance with his own wishes as expressed in a codicil to his will, a practice which was permissible at that time. Thus his body was taken from Scotland, where he died, and after a journey of eighteen days interred in the south transept, not far from the Poets' Corner. A final chapter gives a brief history of the famous controversy since his death. It is not so many years ago that the sentence "Mohammed was an impostor who flourished in Arabia" was taken out from certain schoolbooks. It seems only fair that the histories of English literature now in use should be revised sufficiently to give James Macpherson credit for what he undoubtedly did do, even if they conclude that he overestimated, either by ignorance or by design, the antiquity and the connected sequence of his Gaelic fragments.

MENEVAL'S MEMOIRS OF NAPOLEON.*

THE flood of Napoleonic literature shows no sign yet of abating from off the face of the earth. In all its extent there is probably no more attractive portrait of the great Corsican than the one given by the private secretary who succeeded Bourrienne and who wrote these memoirs (to occupy three volumes in the translation) toward the close of his life, which began in 1778 and ended in 1850. Baron de Méneval is a devoted Bonapartist in his views of all French affairs of state, and he has naturally been criticised even by English admirers of the Emperor. These words on the disposition of England remind us forcibly, indeed, of the eloquent brief for Napoleon which so many Americans have read in their childhood — J. S. C. Abbott's Life:

> Napoleon was forced to acknowledge that there was neither armistice nor peace to be hoped for from this irreconcilable enemy, and he had nothing further to rely on than the superiority of his power and unusual means, for it was war to the death. It became, from that moment forward, his sole occupation to throw back on England all the harm that she engaged to inflict upon us.

Baron de Méneval does not throw much fresh light on any of the darker passages of the career of the First Consul or the Emperor. What is generally regarded as the judicial murder of the Duc d'Enghien he deplores, but excuses as a necessity for the preservation of the peace of France, and much of his inordinate personal ambition his secretary credits to his love for his country, for however much he was an Italian in his passionateness of nature, he was true to France in all his thoughts:

> All the powers of his ambition were strained to render the French nation great and prosperous. He never spoke of France but in terms of affection. France had no rival in his heart nor in his mind; her greatness was the object of all his thoughts, the opinion which she had of him was his constant preoccupation.

The interest of these Memoirs lies in their revelation of the private life of Napoleon, which his secretary knew thoroughly and which he describes in close detail. Méneval was first acquainted with Louis and Joseph Bonaparte, and the latter brought him to the notice of the First Consul as a proper person for a secretary to succeed Bourrienne, whose Memoirs are much less trustworthy than the straightforward narrative here given. There is an agreeable account of Méneval's first meeting with his future master:

---

* Life and Letters of James Macpherson. By Bailey Saunders. Macmillan & Co. $2.50.

* Memoirs Illustrating the History of Napoleon I from 1802 to 1815. By Baron Claude-François de Méneval, private secretary to Napoleon. Vols I and II. D. Appleton & Co. $4.00.

> Having examined me for a moment with a piercing glance, which would have greatly intimidated me if I had seen it there for the first time, he told me that he wished to attach me to his service and asked me if I felt myself strong enough to undertake the task which he proposed to confide to me. I answered him with some embarrassment, with the commonplace remark that I was not very sure of myself, but that I would do all in my power to justify his confidence. I kept my objections to myself because I knew that he would not like them, and, besides, the way in which he had received me at dinner had considerably weakened them. He did not seem dissatisfied with my answer, for he rose from his seat and came up to me smiling, rather sardonically, it is true, and pulled my ear, which I knew to be a sign of favor. He then said to me, "Very well, come back tomorrow morning at seven and come straight here." That was all the conversation which preceded my admission into this sanctuary, which I imagined as a sort of place from which nothing but invisible oracles proceeded, accompanied by lightning and thunder. Such was the very simple investiture which I received for a post, the responsibility of which seemed so terrible that, when it was proposed to me, I could only think of it with terror. After this short audience and this laconic dialogue, the First Consul made a sign with his hand, which I took for an order to withdraw, and left me, to go into an adjoining drawing-room, where, no doubt, some business awaited him.

After describing his person Méneval continues thus:

> When excited by any violent passion his face assumed an even terrible expression. A sort of rotary movement very visibly produced itself on his forehead and between his eyebrows; his eyes flashed fire; his nostrils dilated, swollen with the inner storm. But these transient movements, whatever their cause may have been, in no way brought disorder to his mind. He seemed to be able to control at will these explosions, which, by the way, as time went on became less and less frequent. His head remained cool; the blood never went to it, flowing back to the heart. In ordinary life his expression was calm, meditative, and gently grave. When in a good humor or anxious to please his expression was sweet and caressing, and his face was lighted up by a most beautiful smile. Amongst familiars his laugh was loud and mocking [raillant].

Méneval concludes an account of the one serious disturbance of the very amicable relations between the emperor and himself with this excuse:

> One cannot be astonished that a keen and ready spirit so susceptible to impressions, so agitated by so many and such various thoughts, should, in circumstances of little importance, have paid its tribute to the imperfections of human nature. . . . Although this superior man was not insensible to the pin-pricks of everyday life, under great reverses he always remained self-controlled, always calm, always serene, and armed with all his presence of mind. So I bore him no ill will for what had happened, and neither did he towards me.

Méneval repeatedly calls attention to the simplicity of manner and of life which marked the great man in private. For instance:

> In his retreat at La Malmaison Napoleon appeared like a father in the midst of his family. This abnegation of his grandeur, his simple and dignified manners, the pleasing ways and gracious familiarity of Madame Bonaparte, had a great charm for me. In our leisure moments the First Consul used to go over his bookcases with me, telling me what books I ought to read. . . . I had expected to find him brusque and of uncertain temper, instead of which I found him patient, indulgent, easy to please, by no means exacting, merry with a merriness which was often noisy and mocking, and sometimes of a charming bonhomie.

Napoleon's wonderful power of concentration on the subject before him and of turning at once to another very different has been frequently dwelt upon by his biographers. Naturally Baron de Méneval has much to say on this point:

> His ideas developed, as he dictated, with an abundance and a clearness which showed that his attention was firmly riveted to the subject with which he was dealing; they sprang from his head even as Minerva sprang fully armed from the head of Jupiter. . . . The various subjects were arranged in his head as though in a cupboard. "When I want to interrupt one piece of work," he used to say, "I close the drawer in which it is, and I open another. The two pieces of business never get mixed up together, and never trouble or tire me. When I want to go to sleep I close up all the drawers, and then I am ready to go off to sleep."

Less familiar are this judgment on Bonaparte's religiousness and his estimate of Rousseau:

> Bonaparte was sincerely religious — I may add a true Catholic. His detestation of the freethinking cynicism which preaches contempt for religion — which was considered, on the contrary, by him as the basis of morality and decency — was as great as his horror for the bigotry which fetters human intelligence. . . . His respect for the doctrines of the gospel was the outcome of his convictions and early training.
>
> Arriving before the Ile des Peupliers, the First Consul paused before the tomb of Jean Jacques, and said that it would have been better for the repose of France had this man never existed. "And why, citizen consul?" said Girardin. "It was he who prepared the French Revolution." "I should not have thought, citizen consul, that you had any reason to complain of the Revolution." "Well," answered he, "the future will show whether it would not have been better for the peace of the world that neither I nor Rousseau had ever lived." And so saying he continued his walk with a dreamy air.

Baron de Méneval will not convince those whom Lanfrey has made disbelievers in Napoleon's patriotism or those who have come to consider him a monster of dissoluteness. But such as the secretary saw him and knew him for thirteen years he has described him, affectionately but not with blind eulogy. It is probable that one who knew the man so intimately was, on the whole, a better witness than the historian who saw the desolating influence upon France of Napoleon's overweening ambition, and judged him from the far less personal standpoint of the historian. The translation is but mediocre and again reminds us of the extraordinary indifference publishers display, as a rule, in respect to this important matter.

JOHNSON'S WASHINGTON.*

NOTWITHSTANDING there are some five hundred biographies of Washington in the various modern languages, to say nothing of sketches and encyclopedia articles, there is room for more. Certainly there was need for this monograph, which the author thinks is the first attempt to consider the military character of Washington and to write his life as a soldier. Frankly recognizing that there are three distinct eras in "Washington-olatry," he names three — first, that of the old soldiers who had fought under their chief; next, the reaction brought about by the fierce attacks of the Jeffersonian democracy; while in the last twenty-five years the drift of sentiment has given Washington his proper place in history and just appreciation as a soldier and statesman. The unvictorious general who never won a battle is now understood to have been the Revolution itself and one of the great generals of history. The statesman who never made a motion or devised a measure, or made a proposition in the convention of which he was president, is appreciated as the spirit which directed the formation of the Constitution and the Union.

With the free, frank spirit of a soldier and the artless, almost childlike method of a "Virginian," General Johnson proceeds to describe his hero. His style is unique and his method very direct. He is far from being pedantic, does not strive aggressively to have his grammar correct, and has no hesitation whatever in avowing his decidedly sectional and Southern ways of looking at things. In some respects the work is a political pamphlet, which indulges in occasional hits at Northern or Yankee sectionalism and sentimentalism. Furthermore, the author enjoys peppering the military critics who from their study tables pass adverse judgment on military officers. There are slight traces of scientific research or long pondering over historic testimonies, and one rarely comes across a biographical work treating of a familiar subject which is so colored from beginning to end with the writer's personality. There are great areas of history with which the general is evidently not acquainted, and when he diverges into remarks and judgments not strictly germane to his subject he delivers verdicts which are amusing.

The limitations of this book are as pronounced as its excellences and its undeniable charm. Indeed, so charmed has been the reviewer that, willy nilly, he has read every line of the book. The distinctive excellences seem to be that the local surroundings of the boy and the young man Washington have been pictured with unusual brightness and with a firmness of touch which comes from thorough familiarity with the environment. Again, the story of a soldier is told by a soldier, and we seem to read the thoughts and discover the springs of Washington's motives as a soldier more clearly than in any other book. The soldierly frankness of the author, again, makes him a just critic of Washington's defects as a commander. Some of the author's criticisms upon the New England character are really very amusing; but, on the other hand, it is a good thing to get sympathetic views of the character of the men below Penn's line. General Johnson has a shockingly poor opinion of the members of the Continental Congress, and speaks of them with unmeasured contempt, giving them, we are inclined to believe, more than they deserve. From the civilian point of view we cannot agree with him in some of his judgments. Not to go into further details concerning a book which is certainly one of the most fascinating we have met for a long time, we commend it as a delightful picture of the great commander who never won a battle and yet was as great in war as in peace.

---

* Great Commanders: General Washington. By Gen. Bradley E. Johnson. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

PHILOSOPHY AND DEVELOPMENT OF RELIGION.[*]

PROF. OTTO PFLEIDERER of Berlin is generally considered the most eminent exponent in Germany of "Liberal Christianity." Several of his detailed and scholarly treatises, on Primitive Christianity, Paulinism, and The Philosophy of Religion (probably his greatest work) are the foundation on which he has erected the lighter structure of these popular lectures. As a special favor he was permitted to give these two courses — the first on the philosophy of religion and the second on the origin and development of Christianity — during the same season. The second course has been attacked by Professor Dods and others in a small volume published by the Clarks of Edinburgh, as handling a subject not intended by Lord Gifford, but the objection seems out of place as he was a believer in the natural origin of the Christian religion, and the lectures by Prof. Edward Caird, given last year, included a survey of several historical faiths from the standpoint of naturalism. These volumes are worthy companions of the new master of Balliol's study, The Evolution of Religion. They are more distinctively the work of one who approaches philosophy from the side of religion or theology, and of the two volumes the second is rather the abler, as the author is even more at home in the criticism and interpretation of early Christianity than in the philosophic field. One who reads this second volume may feel that he has perused, on the whole, the fairest and most solidly grounded rationalistic construction of Christianity to be found today. In the philosophic volume Dr. Pfleiderer will seem to many too much of a theologian and too little of a scientist, but this is natural from the tenor of his lifelong studies. But he admits a conflict between religion and science just as little as between religion and morality:

> As the ground of moral obligation was not to be found either in the subject or in society, but only in the universal or divine will that combines both, so in like manner the ground of science or of cognition generally is neither to be found in the subject nor in the object per se, but only in the divine thinking that combines the two, which, on the common ground of the forms of thinking in all thinking minds, and of the forms of being in all beings, makes possible the correspondence or agreement between the former and the latter, or in a word makes possible knowledge of truth. As morality is not in fact dependent in such a way on religion that certain particular duties were prescribed to it by a religious authority, yet certainly in this sense that it finds the ideal principle of all genuine moral willing and doing in its being bound to the absolute will of the good or of God, in like manner science is not bound in any individual act of knowledge to religious authority, but it can only really find the ground of the possibility of all true cognition in the fact of its being bound to the creative reason which is absolutely the truth.

The lectures in the first volume go on to treat of belief in God, the religious view of man — his nature, actuality, redemption, and education — idealism and naturalism, and optimism and pessimism. Dr. Pfleiderer accepts both ancestral spirits and nature spirits as the origin of religion; the theory of evolution as philosophically interpreted; the religious dignity of man as he is today; and the optimistic view contained in the term Providence. An especially noteworthy passage is that on the combination in Jesus of Nazareth of the "two sides of Jewish piety — the individualism of the heart-religion of the Psalms, and the socialism of the prophetic-apocalyptic idea of the Kingdom" (pp. 251–254).

The second volume opens with an introduction in which Strauss and Baur get credit for helping powerfully to bring criticism into the right way. The "preparation for Christianity in Judaism" leads us on to the "Gospel of Jesus Christ." "The religious and the moral motives stood in his case in the purest harmony and in the most fruitful reciprocity," while "the deepest truth which Jesus impressed for the first time on humanity, and with a power such as no other ever did, is this, Die and live again. Thou findest salvation nowhere but in the unconditional and unreserved surrender of thy whole self to God and his will of goodness." In the histories of the childhood of Jesus, the older accounts of the baptism and the transfiguration, and the legends of the resurrection, Professor Pfleiderer finds, like Matthew Arnold, the early Christian epic representation of Christ, which to him is valuable as the Divina Commedia and Paradise Lost are valuable as containing most precious truth, "but not common reality as perceived by the senses." The account of Paul's life and doctrine is pervaded by the same view. The fourth Gospel is described in the chapter on Jewish and Christian Hellenism as "a didactic writing which has invested its theological thoughts, drawn from Paul and Philo, in the form of a life of Jesus." Other chapters on the Christianity of the Alexandrian Fathers, of Augustine, and of Luther and Zwingli conclude the exposition.

For those who are for any reason unable to read and digest Professor Pfleiderer's larger works these volumes afford a more easily manageable résumé of his positions as a philosopher and a critic. It is to be regretted that the English dress of the lectures, whether the author's or a translator's, was not more carefully revised. The English proof-reader should, moreover, have seen the incongruity of capitalizing pronouns referring to Jesus with the purely humanitarian view of his person held by the lecturer. This capitalization is not a German but an English custom.

EIGHT HOURS FOR WORK.[*]

MR. RAE, whose admirable volume on Contemporary Socialism is one of the two or three best books on socialism in our language, has made a contribution of high value to the discussion of an important issue in the world of work. He has followed the inductive method, too little practiced by most writers and speakers on this subject, and has begun by inquiring what have been the actual effects of shorter hours — the ten-hours day, the nine-hours day, and the eight-hours day — where they have been tried. Accordingly he presents the English, American, and Australian experience in reducing hours of work from twelve or more to ten, and from ten to eight, and his conclusion, from a candid study of this varied trial, is highly favorable to the eight-hours day:

> The general conclusion which the whole history of the short-hours movement and the special history of the eight-hours experiments seem strongly to suggest [is] that, if masters and men both do their part aright, we can, in the great run of occupations, get as good a day's work done regularly in eight hours as in any longer working day. This suggestion is strongly supported (1) by the large number of experiments in which the eight-hours system has succeeded compared with the small number and indecisive character of those in which it has failed; (2) by the great variety of the occupations in which it has been successfully tried; (3) by the number of the cases in which production has been even increased by it, and sometimes without piece-work or any other special spur.

Not to go into the details, which all who know Mr. Rae's tone of mind — sober and judicial it always is — will expect and not fail to find here, justifying his conclusions, we may mention especially the chapter on "Reserves of Personal Efficiency," in which he shows that the greater intelligence and contentment attending the eight-hours day have a marked effect on keeping up the product to the ten-hours standard. This is the case even in the running of automatic machinery, where such a result would least of all be expected. Mr. Rae considers, therefore, that ten hours' pay could be given by the employer without loss in very many occupations for this more efficient eight hours' work. Wages must be governed by production; we cannot raise figs from thistles and pay ten hours' wages for eight hours' work according to the former standard of efficiency. The commonest of arguments among laboring men, that the shorter day would provide work for the unemployed, Mr. Rae thoroughly exposes:

---

[*] Philosophy and Development of Religion. The Gifford Lectures for 1894. By Otto Pfleiderer, D.D. Two vols. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $5.00.

[*] Eight Hours for Work. By John Rae, M.A. Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

> Restricting production may sometimes be useful for a merchant in a single branch of industry in special circumstances, but its general adoption by the working class as a supposed means of enlarging the demand for their labor would be fatal policy. Instead of making more work for the unemployed in proportion to the restriction, they would have really in that proportion made less work for the employed; so that the natural effect of restricting production would be to lower wages, not to raise them. . . . A market is never overstocked all round; it is overstocked with some things only. . . . To restrict the supply all round would only make bad worse.

The experience of Victoria with the eight-hours day for thirty-four years is of great interest:

> There is growing up in Australia, and very largely in consequence of the eight-hours day, a working class which for general morale, intelligence, and industrial efficiency is probably already superior to that of any other branch of our Anglo-Saxon race, and for happiness, cheerfulness, and all-round comfort of life has never had its equal in the world before. For all this advantage, moreover, nobody seems to be a shilling the worse. It is truly remarkable how immaterial apparently has been the cost of the eight-hours day in Victoria. Look for the effects of it where you will, they still ever elude your observation. Wages have not fallen, wages have not risen; production has not fallen except in certain trifling cases; prices have not risen except again in certain trifling instances; trade has not suffered, profits have not dwindled; the unemployed have not vanished, not so much as shrunk in any perceptible degree; the working classes — the great body of the nation — have an hour more to call their own; that is all. Shortening the day has apparently again proved its own reward.

Mr. Rae favors legislation in favor of shortening the laboring day because of the inertia of the employing class. But he would much prefer the trade option method, according to which eight hours would become the rule in a particular trade only upon the demand of a majority of its members or organized members in the whole country. Such a law should be elastic and gradual in its operation, but the international agreement which some advocate is unlikely. Mr. Rae has made out a strong case for the eight-hours day, and his book is especially to be commended to two classes of people — the employers who disregard the "reserve of personal efficiency" in the workman, and the employees who base their demand for fewer hours on very indefensible grounds.

MAJOR GENERAL JOHN PATERSON.*

SURELY the generals in the American Revolutionary Army deserve, each one of them, a well-written biography. Major General John Paterson was one of those most useful and most active men who, while not possessing a high order of genius, were just the kind of men needed by Washington for the consummation of his plans. It is fortunate that in his great-grandson, the professor of mineralogy and metallurgy in the School of Mines of Columbia College, New York, there has been found the combination of qualities necessary in a good biographer. These, for the present subject at least, are industry, patience, intelligence, regard for his subject, and, last but not least, ability to publish his own book. Republics, no doubt, are very grateful, but they are not given to sending at once into manifold editions a work of this kind, excellent as it is. Although other officers were more picturesque and dramatic in their personality, and though many others are better known, it seems doubtful whether on Washington's staff there was a more faithful and earnest officer than General Paterson. He was of the stock which, after fighting against the tyranny of James II, came over from Dumfriesshire to settle Connecticut. The future Revolutionary general, born in 1744 at Farmington, Conn., was reared under the eye of a father who saw long service in the French and Indian Wars; thus the son was reasonably sure to make a good soldier. He was a student in Yale College, graduated in 1762. Emigrating in 1774 with his family to Lenox, Berkshire County, Mass., he had his home for many years in that frontier county of Massachusetts, now so rich in the associations of history and culture. He went as representative of the town of Lenox to the convention at Salem, and later endeavored successfully to enlist the Stockbridge and Mohawk Indians in the American cause. Possessing a knowledge of law and military matters and ability as a commander, he led the men of Berkshire County in a regiment which, on its arrival in Boston, served nine days as minutemen, and later became the Fifteenth Foot in the Continental Infantry service. Encamped beyond Cambridge, it threw up the first redoubt along the lines around Boston, which turned that city into a besieged town.

The battle of Bunker Hill is briskly described, and then comes the continuous narrative of Paterson's experiences throughout the Revolution. In the siege of Boston, the battles of Trenton and Princeton, the sufferings at Valley Forge, where Steuben transformed a mob into an army, the battle of Monmouth, and in the Highlands of the Hudson, where he commanded at West Point, Paterson was an active military officer until the end of the war. At the conclusion of peace he returned to Berkshire County to assist in its development. A luminous chapter is devoted to the famous, or rather infamous, Shay's Rebellion, during which Paterson did signal service in restoring the national and State authorities. In later life he became a pioneer in the formation and development of Broome and Tioga Counties in New York.

The concluding chapter is one of great interest to the student of social life, and is one of the most pleasantly readable in the book. It gives a vivid picture of colonial and post-Revolutionary life in Berkshire County on the New England frontier. In the appendix there are a number of papers of interest, prominent among which is the chaste and polished address of Judge Tucker at the dedication of the Paterson monument at Pittsfield. The illustrations and battle plans are of the first order of mechanical excellence. There is a very good analytical index and a number of folding pages giving the genealogy of the various descendants of James Paterson of Scotland, born 1664, died December 2, 1750.

The book, as a whole, is thoroughly creditable, not only to the author's heart, but to his head, and we have found very few slips of the pen or printer's mistakes. In the paragraph on the expenses of the war, on page 139, however, instead of the "two millions" borrowed from Holland, the United States Treasury Reports show that in 1809, when principal and interest were paid to the Dutch, the total amounted to fourteen millions of dollars.

CONGREGATIONALISTS IN AMERICA.*

IN this comely subscription volume Rev. Dr. Dunning has successfully accomplished his endeavor to tell in popular form "the story of the rise of modern Congregationalism and its growth in America." He has naturally begun with a chapter on the Apostolic Congregationalism of the New Testament times. One misses in this connection any mention of the very important work of the late Dr. Edwin Hatch on primitive Christian institutions; Dr. Dunning writes for busy people, indeed, but they should be pointed to the best books if they are to go further than this volume. A second chapter on the revival of Apostolic Congregationalism in later times brings us down to the exile in Holland of the English Brownists and the familiar story of the Pilgrims and the Puritans. Dr. Dunning relates with fairness and good literary skill the developments of this most democratic of church polities through the Cambridge Synod of 1643, the Half-Way Covenant, and the decline in religion and morals, which were followed by "the Great Awakening," and then recites the honorable record of the Congregationalist pulpit in the Revolutionary War. He might well have made more prominent the work of Rev. Jonathan Mayhew and Rev. Mr. Hancock of Lexington, but he does full justice to the vigorous pamphlet of Rev. John Wise, issued in the early part of the eighteenth century and reprinted in 1772, in which the writer declared that "Democracy is Christ's government in church and state." Dr. Dunning may well say that Wise presented "the strongest arguments for democratic principles in ecclesiastical and civil government which the eighteenth century produced." As Dr. Storrs says in his introduction, "If democracy is legitimate anywhere it must be in the church."

---

* The Life of John Paterson. By Thomas Egleston, LL.D. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50.

* Congregationalists in America. A Popular History of Their Origin, Belief, Polity, Growth, and Work. By Rev. Albert E. Dunning, D.D. J. A. Hill & Co. Published by Subscription. $2.75.

When Dr. Dunning reaches the "Unitarian Departure," he handles matters on which he will find less general assent. His tone is kindly and remote from that of the controversialist or bigot, but he does not appear to belong with those numerous Trinitarian Congregationalists who both regret the division and agree that it could not take place today under the same provocation, but that the result would probably be a Broad Church and a Low Church in the one Congregationalist body. Dr. Dunning twice refers to the fact that the National Conference of Unitarian Churches did not insert the epithet "Congregationalist" in its title, as if the Unitarians thereby significantly "disclaimed" the name. He thus gives an entirely wrong impression. The Unitarian National Conference was consulting brevity and euphony in a title now sufficiently long, and the Unitarians have steadily claimed that they are not only Congregationalists but the most consistent Congregationalists in maintaining the strict independence of each church. Their Year-Book calls itself "of Unitarian Congregational Churches."

The latter part of the book presents the very honorable record of the Congregationalists in education (it is "the denomination which educates"), philanthropy, literature, and the strictly ecclesiastical activities. The very significant controversies of recent years concerning the higher criticism of the Bible, the Andover Seminary, and the American Board are expressly passed over as matters whose importance is not yet determined. But few readers can fail to reflect that they must mean much more, for good or ill, than many things which are here related in detail. Dr. Dunning as a historian has chosen to avoid matters still in debate among our Congregationalist friends. Others will be inclined to believe that the catholicism which Dr. Storrs rightly claims to be a note of this polity will gradually extend to doctrine also, and that less and less stress will be laid upon dogma and more and more upon work.

FICTION.

Rudin.

The new and tasteful complete English edition of Turgenev's novels, translated by Constance Garnett, begins with Rudin as Volume I of the series. It is the earliest of Turgenev's social novels, and is one of the most interesting if not one of the most carefully elaborated. The character of Dmitri Rudin, "who buttons his greatcoat as if he were fulfilling a sacred duty," is remarkably analyzed even among the wonderful analytical studies with which Turgenev has enriched literature. Rudin is vain, lazy, conceited, a self-deceiver, and a coward, and yet Turgenev has managed to make him retain the reader's sympathy and win his pity rather than his contempt. The description of a students' club in St. Petersburg is one of the most vivid and interesting sketches in any of Turgenev's novels. In Rudin occurs the well-known story of the bird taken as a type of man's life, so often quoted. The heroine, Natalya, is the most delicately beautiful of all Turgenev's young girls in her innocence and whole-souled enthusiasm. Miss Garnett's translation is fair and much better than the average English version of Russian novels. — Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

Tales of the Maine Coast.

These seven stories, by Noah Brooks, of ancient doings in and about Castine, Me., are admirable. They present excellently the picturesqueness of the coast and the queer, shrewd characteristics of its people, with their odd memories for important events linked to small personal happenings. "Pansy Pegg" is as good a prose heroine as the maiden who inspired Whittier's words, "It might have been," which the artist translated on canvas. The "Phantom Sailor" shows that comic streak of want of veracity for the sake of a good joke which perplexes the stern moralist. "The Waif of Nautilus Island" is a tender tale of loyal love, and "A Hereditary Barn" reveals the innate New England weakness to do as one's ancestors did, if moroseness is in the blood. The book gives a pleasanter impression of New England life than Miss Wilkins' tales of perpetual self-sacrifice, but it is as true. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.

The Purple Light of Love.

"From the purple light of love good Lord deliver us" should be added to the Litany if it is really so dangerous an element in life as Mr. Henry Goelet McVickar would have us believe. According to him it occasions an honest, clever, hard working lawyer to fall in love violently with a woman whom he has only seen three times, and he grows so ill and thin that all his friends tremble for his life and reason. It never occurs to this wonderful hero, however, that he might follow up the acquaintance of this idol, but when she writes him that she was spending a day in New York and would like to see him, he immediately threw "his arms wildly around her; he kissed her passionately. 'Marry me, will you not? For God's sake, say yes.'" It is also owing to the "purple light of love" that when our hero finds that his wife is carrying on a flirtation with one of her former lovers he rushes off to Europe in search of death, after making a will leaving all his property to his wife. He will not stoop to the vulgarity and conventionality of ordinary suicide, but finds novelty and amusement in hiring a sleigh in St. Petersburg and driving all night without an overcoat. "As he neared the city he with incredible difficulty managed to get his coat on, but on reaching his stable he could not get out of the sleigh." This original proceeding has the desired effect, but before he dies there is time for the heroine to be summoned. Fortunately her lover follows her and the hero has just time to join their hands "along the bedclothes" of his bed. "Then this soul having spoken went back to its God."— D. Appleton & Co. 75c.

Outlaw and Lawmaker.

The scene of Mrs. Campbell-Praed's latest novel is laid in Australia. The plot runs the gamut of every possible variety of battle, murder, and sudden death. It would be a pity to spoil the reader's pleasure by sketching in detail the incidents of this blood and thunder story, as its chief interest lies in the numberless exciting adventures through which its hero and heroine pass. The heroine would awaken more sympathy if she were not continually "on the rampage for beaux." The book, although it sinks far below the level of Mrs. Campbell-Praed's earlier stories in style and construction, is decidedly above the average of cheap paper novels, and is worth idling an hour over. — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

When a novel bears on its title-page the Scripture text, "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her," and then illustrates that sin in its modern phases, the reticence of the text is preferable to its unfolding. Virna Woods, the author of A Modern Magdalene, makes her heroine elope with the husband of another woman. After his sudden death she is led through greater depths of shame until she too dies. We learn not only of Chinese "high-binders," but also of houses of assignation and criminal medical establishments. The book is evidently written with the noble purpose of teaching charity and of showing the hard-heartedness of many church professors and the kindness of sinners towards each other. It is wholly free from vulgarity of tone or picturesque viciousness; but it lacks intensity of grasp, and its many complicated situations and numerous characters dull the reader's sensibilities instead of raising them to a height of horror or sympathy. — Lee & Shepard. $1.25.

Three of Mr. W. D. Howells' farces appear in the taking form of Harper's Black and White series — Five O'Clock Tea, A Likely Story, and The Mouse Trap. All three are "trifles light as air," but there is a place for trifles in life, especially when they are served up so artistically. — Harper & Brothers. Each, 50c.

The Literary World

BOSTON 28 JULY 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

A Poet's Wife.

(In Memoriam, M. Le G.)

A white little soul was cast on the world,
  As pure and fair as the falling snow.
Her white little wings on her breast were furled,
  As she glided down to her home below.

If this white little soul had met with her worth
  In a queenly crown she had been arrayed;
But the blind caprice that is god of this earth
  Gave her the garb of a simple maid.

And she grew as a lily that lurks in a wood
  And scents with its breath a desolate place,
Till she bloomed into beautiful womanhood,
  And the light that was in her lighted her face.

Then a poet, walking this weary world,
  Like a flash of dawn on her vision broke;
And around his heart her tendrils curled
  As a creeper lithe round a shielding oak.

And she turned and twined till the two were one,
  And a fresh young life within her stirred;
And a baby soul from beyond the sun
  Swam into her ken to a tune unheard.

Across our path the poet strayed;
  A tremulous thrill through our woodland ran;
We saw and loved the white little maid,
  We saw and loved the white-souled man.

Ah me! had we known for how short a spell
  She was lent to our love by the dumb design.
Ah me! but in truth we had loved her well—
  My heart and the heart that is one with mine.

We had shown our love in a thousand ways;
  We had brought her flowers from a garden of song;
We had strayed with her soul where the deep brook strays;
  We had sat where the sunset lingers long.

We had wandered mazily, hand in hand,
  Through the summer meads where the sweet birds sing;
And when autumn flared through the golden land
  We had cheated winter with talk of spring.

But we looked through the arch of the coming years,
  And we said, "For life she shall still be ours,
Why steal the honey of joys and tears?
  Why haste to pluck all time's fair flowers?"

We spake, but the sands of her fated days
  Ran swiftly out ere the word was sped;
And the faded wreath of our tardy praise
  We can but lay by our Mildred dead.

— Grant Allen.

The Academy.

CONTEMPORARY THOUGHT AND THINKERS.*

THESE two volumes in the neat Eversley series contain some forty brief papers each from the able London journal with which Mr. Hutton has long been identified. They are the offspring of a mind singularly gifted with the power of seeing halfway truths and facts neglected by the really greatest thinkers—a mind in which commonplaceness seems almost inspired and ordinary views of life take on a curious novelty. It is a mind with which extremists have little patience, and of which even men of action who feel that something not extreme must continually be done naturally cherish distrust, for Mr. Hutton desires action to be so free from disturbance of accepted and venerated truths that practically nonaction is the course that suits him best. The same quality that keeps him from seeing that an Irishman has the same title, fundamentally, as an Englishman to local self-government leads him to deprecate Darwinism and suspect the application of scientific modes of thought to theology and Biblical criticism. But it is by his emphasis on the more generally neglected implications of popular theories and his subtle perception of the weaknesses of ambitious schemes of thought that Mr. Hutton most profits us, and when he gets upon the ground of moral practice he has nearly always a sound conscience. As a religious believer he cannot sympathize with Carlyle's pantheism, for he finds that

> The great difference between Pantheism and Theism is this: that genuine Theism humbles the mind, while Pantheism inflates it.

This is, however, more a matter of individual temperament, and one so believing would not like to have to compare Spinoza with Joseph Cook, for example, as patterns of humility. Yet Carlyle's "immensities and eternities" do have an inflating tendency. As a literary critic Mr. Hutton sees how vastly this same general bent of mind made Carlyle's strength:

> Carlyle was far the greatest interpreter our literature has ever had of the infinite forces working through society, of that vast, dim background of social beliefs, unbeliefs, enthusiasms, sentimentalities, superstitions, hopes, fears, and trusts, which go to make up either the strong cement or the destructive lava-stream of national life, and to image forth some of the genuine features of the retributive providence of history.

Mr. Hutton's limitations will appear to some in what he says of Emerson's verse: "I should say that a little of Emerson's verse is genuine poetry, though not of the highest order," and of the essay on the "Over-Soul" that it does not seem "even instructive," while yet "his genuine wisdom will live long and startle many generations with its clear, high, thrilling note." Mr. Hutton is at his best when defending the ideal aspects of life against such limited thinkers as Sir J. F. Stephen, or siding with Dr. Martineau against agnosticism and materialism.

The principal topics of these essays, besides those already named, are Dickens, Leslie Stephen, J. S. Mill, M. Arnold, Professors Huxley and Tyndall, Maurice, Bagehot, Stanley, Tennyson, Dean Church, and Newman—several papers on ants and wasps as social beings closing the second volume. This estimate of Mill has much of truth in it:

> As a man there was in him a certain poverty of nature, in spite of the nobleness in him—a monotonous joylessness, in spite of the hectic sanguineness of his theoretic creed—a want of general trust, which spurred on into an almost artificial zeal his ardor for philosophic reconstruction; and these are qualities which will probably put a well-marked limit on the future propagation of an influence such as few writers on such subjects have ever before attained within the period of their own lifetime.

The comparison of Amiel and Clough is one of the most penetrating papers in the whole collection, both of them being declared to have been "far too much afraid of hampering the free play of his intellect." Mr. Hutton's ethical note, perhaps his strongest and most trustworthy, speaks plainly here as in the closing essay of the collection:

> The strong man can do with less happiness than the weaker man; but, in either case alike, the happiness which it is a duty to aim at is only so much as is subservient to the higher work of life; and when all is said the duty of happiness can never really compare, in its significance to human life, with the happiness of duty.

THE WRITINGS OF THOMAS PAINE.*

THE author of Common Sense, that great pamphlet of the American Revolution, whose effect Mr. Conway may be pardoned for saying "has never been paralleled in literary history," has at length had justice done him in the beginning of a handsome library edition of his writings. Mr. Conway, like many other biographers, has magnified the necessity and the services to mankind of his subject, and the four volumes to be given to this complete edition of Paine's works will doubtless contain many matters the loss of which the world would not need to lament. But Paine was a man whose remarkable style seemed born with him, so little do his earlier compositions differ in manner from his latest. His definition of good writing corresponded to his practice: "To fit the powers of thinking and the turn of language to the subject so as to bring out a clear conclusion that shall hit the point in question, and nothing else is the true criterion of writing."

The first essay here printed is "African Slavery in America," which appeared March 8, 1775; Mr. Conway believes it to be the first protest against slavery as distinct from the slave trade by an American. Common Sense, The Forester's Letters in reply to his critics, and the series of papers entitled The American Crisis are the substantial matters in this volume. The first has no little application to the present time with its innumerable socialistic proposals for regenerating mankind by legislation. It is an extreme statement that begins the famous pamphlet, but, like all such, it has

---

*Criticisms on Contemporary Thought and Thinkers Selected from the Spectator. By Richard Holt Hutton, M.A. Two volumes. Macmillan & Co. $3.00.

*The Writings of Thomas Paine. Collected and edited by Moncure Daniel Conway. Vol. I, 1774-1779. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50.

its truth not to be neglected in asserting the opposite extreme:

> Some writers have so confounded society with government as to leave little or no distinction between them; whereas they are not only different, but have different origins. Society is produced by our wants and government by our wickedness; the former promotes our happiness positively by uniting our affections, the latter negatively by restraining our vices. The one encourages intercourse, the other creates distinctions. The first is a patron, the last a punisher. Society in every state is a blessing, but Government, even in its best state, is but a necessary evil; in its worst state an intolerable one.

Mr. Conway has followed the earliest editions and kept Paine's own spelling; manifest misprints and punctuation interfering with the sense are the only things changed. The editor deserves the thanks of all Americans for his indefatigable zeal in erecting this best of monuments to the great pamphleteer of the Revolution.

FICTION.

Major Joshua.

If any evidence were needed at this late day to prove that even the summer novel is no longer intended to amuse, Mr. Francis Forster has furnished his share of it in this book. Major Joshua is the most consistent piece of incarnate selfishness that we have yet met in fiction. He had no morality. Expediency and his own ease were sufficient guide in all cases. He accepted the general rule that all virtues pay well in the long run and that sin is not so much wicked as it is foolish. The story of the book is developed in the experiences of certain characters whom the major's philosophy had influenced to a greater or less extent, while he himself goes on making himself comfortable to the end, when we leave him absorbed in the rapture of a perfect dinner. As for the other characters, the frozen indifference of one is contrasted too vividly with the tempestuous moods of another, who finally commits suicide — too vividly, that is, for naturalness. There is only one character in the book for whom one can feel genuine admiration occasionally, though one pities them all, or would if they were just a trifle more lifelike. — Longmans, Green & Co. $1.00.

Break o' Day Tales.

The cool green and white covers, the clear type, and the modest size of this little book, by Frank West Rollins, prepossess one favorably, and the impression is confirmed by closer acquaintance with the five short tales it contains. They are stories, just stories, three of them bringing each a love affair to a happy conclusion, one a tale of fanciful adventure, and one a ghost story, or, better perhaps, a "mystery." This is good proportion for warm weather, and considering that in all the five there is neither a moral, a villain, nor a theory, we are disposed to vote the book a triumphant success. — Joseph Knight Co. 75c.

A Daughter of Music.

Novels which are disagreeable novels but compel the reader's attention seem to be the present vogue. If they make the unnatural appear as the natural, and the plot is complicated with love for art or music, then success is assured. G. Colmore, the novelist in hand, has thus succeeded in creating a heroine who is brought to a knowledge of herself through music. She deserts her husband for a musician and then leaves him full of remorse. Her husband finds her and brings her home, concealing her guilt but treating her with perpetual scorn, in memory of the curse he has invoked upon her and her child. The boy has the same passionate love for music as his mother as he grows older. The unfolding of the curse and the Nemesis, which falls upon him who inflicts the revenge as well as upon her who deserves it, and the creative life of music are described at length. — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Grizzly's Little Pard.

This exquisite picture of the life of a ranchman and the child he adopted after the death of its parents is by Elizabeth Maxwell Comfort, whose Little Heroine of Poverty Flat is a child classic. Like that book, this one is worthy of ranking with the pathetic stories related by Mrs. Wiggin and Mrs. Ewing. The child is more ideal than any one of their children, but then the creation of the ideal tends towards its realization. There is an undue vein of sentiment in the story, yet it is all so sweet and noble — the parents' love for each other, and the beautiful relation between Grizzly and this "little pard," the girl heroine of the tale, combined with just enough of adventure and plot to sustain the reader's eager interest — that both young and old will gladly peruse the book. — Thomas Whittaker. 75c.

Dr. Janet of Harley Street.

A novel by a woman doctor is a novelty, although Dr. Mary Putnam Jacobi has written short stories. An Englishwoman M.D., Arabella Kenealy, has, however, entered the field of fiction with a novel on the vexed "woman question." Dr. Janet of Harley Street has been well received by the English press, and Messrs. Appleton & Co. have chosen a fortunate time to republish it when the very questions with which the book deals are being discussed and weighed in the New York Constitutional Convention. Dr. Kenealy's novel, although sometimes offending against taste in discussing subjects best passed over in silence, is a book of considerable force. The character of the heroine, Dr. Janet, is well drawn and clever, though one is not prepossessed in her favor by her first appearance on the scene in a man's shooting-coat and tweed "divided skirts." — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Quaker Idyls.

Sarah M. H. Gardner's little book must be classed as fiction because of its form, in eight brief sketches and stories, but it bears every evidence of foundation in fact. The author's style is very well fitted to her subject; it has a tranquil beauty and an even flow that become narratives of love and courtship and wedding among the Friends. "Two Gentlewomen" and "Pamelia Tewksbury's Courtship" are perhaps the best of the eight papers, though the two longest, "Some Ante-Bellum Letters from a Quaker Girl" in Boston and "My Grandame's Secret," are very pleasing. No greater contrast could be imagined than that of these quiet but deep tales and the shallow passions of much contemporary fiction, the advantage lying entirely with the first. — Henry Holt & Co. 75c.

Poor Folk.

It would be hardly possible to imagine a slighter framework than that which Dostoievsky has used for this vivid picture of two hunted, miserable lives. The story is told in letters which pass between an old half-witted clerk, who has neither money, friends, nor reputation — a laughing stock in his office, and hardly able to hold even this poor situation — and his cousin who lives across the way. The character of the old copyist is revealed gradually in these letters. Mr. George Moore, author of the much-discussed Esther Waters, has written a discriminating but appreciative preface for the book, and he sums up the story well when he says: "The love of Mákar for Varvara seems to me like the love of a man condemned to penal servitude for life for a mouse that comes into the solitude of his cell for crumbs. Mákar is one of life's convicts; Varvara is the mouse that comes for crumbs, and the end is the same — a better-filled hand is extended to the mouse, and the mouse returns no more to cheer the cell's loneliness." The book is one of the Keynote series and is translated from the Russian by Lena Milman. — Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

The Dancing Faun.

There is a touch of cleverness in the style of this novel, but not enough cleverness to redeem its vulgarity, its coarse sensationalism, and its low moral tone. The story of a young woman born and bred in the best English society who so forgets her dignity as to offer herself body and soul to "the dancing faun" — a man of no character who, as she knows, is already married — is bad enough; but that this girl should, when rejected, murder her lover in the most open and barefaced manner possible is true neither to art nor to the facts of English life. Her conduct after the murder is thoroughly unnatural, and the whole story is revolting from beginning to end. Florence Farr, the writer, has a certain skill in reporting conversations, and her "dancing faun" is a well-sustained character; but French morality minus French art is unendurable. — Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

Carlotta's Intended.

It is strong, robust human nature that Mrs. Ruth McEnery Stuart chooses to paint on her canvas, and aside from the remarkable character of Patrick Rooney, the little Irish shoemaker who gives the name to the book, the background of all the stories is warm and picturesque. The author is vivid in her descriptions and has a keen sense of humor as well as a faculty for making us love her characters. To take a little crippled Irish shoemaker and turn him into a hero before our eyes and make us shed a tear or two over his early grave is not an easy task for any writer. The Irishman's faithful and chivalrous love for Carlotta — the little girl whose shoes he had made for fourteen years — is very tender and pathetic, and the tragic ending is made less heartrending when Carlotta marries a man of her own age to whom she can give a satisfying love. The writer who takes the commonplace lives all about us and turns them into poetry is the true realist. This is what Mrs. Stuart does in these tales. They are overloaded with incident and crude in their literary form, but they are brilliant sketches and are likely to be followed by still better work. Mrs. Stuart has good command of the negro dialect, and her "Plantation Love Songs" and "Voices," bound with these stories, have a tropical charm for all Northern ears. Ten attractive illustrations add to the value of the book. — Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

Struthers and the Comedy of the Masked Musicians.

Mrs. Anna Bowman Dodd does fairly well in her society story. It is a realistic tale of a young married couple who were delightfully happy until the husband developed an intense social ambition. To be "taken up" by a certain fashionable New York set he sacrificed all his peace and comfort at home, and stopped only just in time to save his wife's honor. The wife is a fascinating little piece of femininity, and the way in which her charming simplicity brings the social world of both England and America to her feet makes a strong and agreeable contrast to her husband's wire-pulling. "The Masked Musicians" is too utterly impossible in plot to be called realistic. The eldest son of an English lord is cast off by his family on account of an unsuitable marriage. A couple of masked musicians in a little Italian town turn out to be the penniless couple in disguise. The younger son of the lord is on the eve of marriage to an American girl. She discovers how he has treated his own brother and angrily refuses to marry him. The conception of both stories is far ahead of their execution. They lack climax and are dragged out to undue length. According to the polite fiction of the hour, so-called "society" in both England and America must be rotten to the core. "Struthers," though sound in its morale, presents a most disgraceful picture of both American and English social life. We have had a careful study of an English cad presented to us recently in Mr. Bailey-Martin — his American cousin is almost as contemptible. — Lovell, Coryell & Co. 50c.

A Gauntlet.

The woman question comes to us again clothed in this Norwegian drama. It is the old plea for equal rights and equal standards of purity. This time the woman side of the question is ably presented by a man; and Björnson, the reformer, shows himself deeply in sympathy with the moral revolt of his heroine, Svava, who finds that her betrothed has only his future to offer her. "A woman, then, owes a man her past and future, but a man only owes a woman his future" are the words of the indignant girl as she throws her gloves in her lover's face and leaves him forever. For dramatic representation we suppose that Björnson's dramas have many faults. Ibsen's success in this country is chiefly due to the interest the subjects of his dramas have evoked, rather than to their dramatic power. Neither Pastor Sang or A Gauntlet has action enough to appeal to the average theater-going audience; but both plays are deeply interesting from a literary and social point of view. In the evolution of social life the woman question is at the front, and great changes in her position may be expected. This play was written in 1887, when many of its points of view must have been wholly new, and must have aroused both discussion and opposition. Coming now after The Heavenly Twins, The Superfluous Woman, The Yellow Aster, and Ibsen's searching dramas, A Gauntlet reads like a restatement of truths which the thinking world is already agreed upon. "Pastor Sang" as a character is more original than any character in A Gauntlet. Perhaps Svava's father, the light, superficial Ries, is the best drawn of the dramatis personæ here. Svava herself is only a mouthpiece. It is her theories rather than herself which interest us. The frontispiece of the book is a striking portrait of Björnson. "The reformer who will dare all things for truth's sake" is written in every line in his face. — Longmans, Green & Co. $1.25.

Three Weeks in Politics.

Mr. John Kendrick Bangs, the funny man of one of the Harper periodicals, recently ran as candidate for the mayoralty of Yonkers, N. Y., on the Democratic ticket. This little volume in Harper's Black and White series gives an amusing and instructive account of his experiences — not much at variance with fact we imagine — in the form of conversations at the table of Mrs. Smithers-Pedagog's boarding house. The principal speaker is the Idiot who has been assisting his friend the poet, Thaddeus Perkins, to be defeated. Mr. Perkins' three weeks in politics bring him into unwilling contact with the balance of power vote — a very thirsty element; with the orators who talk of "Purantic" laws and the unworthy "incubents" of office; and with a long line of mythical friends of his youth. Mr. Bangs tells his tale humorously, but the booklet would be a good document for municipal reform to circulate in their campaign against national politics in municipal affairs. It is an effective companion piece to Dr. Gladden's Cosmopolis Club. — Harper & Brothers. 50c.

Young Sam and Sabina, the latest issue of the Unknown Library, is by Tom Cobbleigh, author of Gentleman Upcott's Daughter. Although not as clever as that stirring story of rustic life, it is very good of its kind. Some of the characters have such strong individuality that they are doubtless drawn from real men and women. Christopher, Sabina, Sam, the widow Sophia, and old Sam Grinter live and act like human beings, and the small stage on which they figure in that remote part of Somersetshire is as important to them as if the great outside world were intensely concerned in their humble doings. The author has a happy way of depicting the lives of such a class. — Cassell Pub. Co. 50c.

MINOR NOTICES.

The Rise of Modern Democracy in Old and New England.

These two essays, excellently translated from the French of Dr. Charles Borgeaud of the faculty of law at Geneva by Mrs. Birkbeck Hill, make up one of the smaller volumes in Sonnenschein's Social Science series, and one of the best. Dr. Borgeaud has been a student of democracy for ten years, and has published two works on the subject. In the first essay he shows, with the usual luminousness and much more than the usual research and accuracy of the typical French author, that modern democracy is the result of the Reformation, however little Luther had such an aim in view. He then relates in detail the little-known history of that most remarkable document, "The Agreement of the People of England," due to John Lilburne in 1647. Here was first fully developed the idea of a social contract between individuals as the foundation of the State. The "Agreement," with its astonishing anticipation of modern written constitutions, came to naught through Cromwell. But in New England the secession of the more independent members of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, under Thomas Hooker, led to the Fundamental Orders of Connecticut, the first written constitution in America. The development in Massachusetts out of the early theocracy and the establishment of Rhode Island are also related by Dr. Borgeaud briefly but clearly. He has little sympathy with the writers who go back to the woods of Germany for the origin of American freedom while a more striking original is close at hand in the Congregational polity. No student of our political history should pass by this admirable volume. — Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.

Sources of the Constitution of the United States.

C. Ellis Stevens, who writes LL.D., D.C.L., and F.S.A. (Edinburgh) after his name on the title-page of this valuable essay, is, we believe, an Episcopal clergyman of Philadelphia. His book was taken in hand a number of years ago with the intention of showing the close connection of our national constitution and institutions with those of England. Mr. Bryce, Mr. Hannis Taylor, and others have since enlarged on this subject of the natural evolution of American from English politics, but there is room for such a popular book as this, especially after Mr. Douglas Campbell's highly exaggerated claims of a Dutch original for much of what is most characteristically English in America. Dr. Stevens' polemic against Mr. Campbell is confined to numerous footnotes, but it is much to the point and, to our mind, very effective for the most part. Dr. Stevens is open, in turn, to criticism from Dr. Borgeaud in neglecting the obviously religious antecedents of our liberties and going too far back to Germany and the folkmote for explanations and origins which the New York constitution of 1777, or that of Massachusetts in 1780, for instance, could have given him. But Dr. Stevens holds firmly, as a rule, to the real historical development, and his chapters on the legislature, the executive, the judiciary, and the bill of rights in the constitution are lucid and logical. They are supported by a large body of quotations in the footnotes, which make more than half the matter of the book. Bryce, Taswell-Langmead, Hannis Taylor, and Bishop Stubbs are the names that most frequently occur here, but can so industrious a student as Dr. Stevens have neglected M. Boutmy, whom he never quotes? The book is one to be particularly recommended to those who have been carried away by Mr. Douglas Campbell's imaginative reconstruction of our history. — Macmillan & Co. $1.50.

The Sphere of the State.

Professor Frank S. Hoffmann of Union College publishes in this volume the substance of a course of lectures to the senior class of that institution. His general attitude might be described as that of Prof. R. T. Ely, with qualifications in the direction of opportunism. He properly distinguishes between the State and the Government, but he fails to distinguish between society and the State, and he carries his theory of the complete sovereignty of the State to a denial of "inalienable rights" and individual freedom which we must consider incompatible with our whole system of free institutions. He tells us that "a law is a requirement of the State, while a statute is a decree of the government. The former can never be wrong; the latter is not often unmixed with error and is ever capable of alteration and improvement." This seems to indicate an almost purely mythological conception of the State, so that one is agreeably surprised to find Professor Hoffmann insisting on a purified civil service as an antecedent to State ownership of railroads. Bimetallism is, of course, consistent with the exalted notion of the State entertained by the author, and he would have the ratio of gold and silver changed often enough to keep the two metals on a parity. The practical difficulties in the way are not sufficiently considered. On the whole, Professor Hoffmann's views seem very sensible, especially when he frees himself from mythology and handles a specific problem. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

Studies in Mediæval Life and Literature.

It was loving labor on the part of the late Prof. Edward Tompkins McLaughlin of Yale University to prepare these six essays. No apology is needed for the unelaborated state in which he left them. They are, in fact, in their present form monographs on the various subjects, and give evidence of his intimate knowledge and research as well as his ardent interest. Most attractive and freshest are those on "The Mediæval Feeling for Nature" and "Childhood in Mediæval Literature." In the former he finds as a cause of the singular obtuseness to the charm and influences of nature, the crudeness and lack of culture of the times, or, in other words, a better explanation than is generally given may be found, as he believes, "in modern refinement and ethical sensitiveness;" in fact, it is in a certain degree a matter of culture. Other papers are on an old German gallant, on a German farmer of the thirteenth century, on Neidhart von Reuenthal and his Bavarian peasants, and finally on a mediæval woman, Heloise. He sketches the career of this famous but unfortunate friend, pupil, and victim of Abelard, and endeavors to set her in her proper position as seen in the light of the present day. An introduction and appendix by Professor Lounsbury add to the value of the book. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.

Select Specimens of Great French Writers.

These selections from French writers of the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries, accompanied by literary appreciations by the most eminent French critics, form a most desirable collection for the French scholar's use. The volume is really a history of the French literature of three centuries. We are taken from Corneille to Renan and Taine, great care having been used to restrict the number of selections, drawing only upon the really great writers. The lion's share of the space is taken by the classic period of the age of Louis XIV. Another admirable feature of the volume is the appreciations or critiques of the writers from the pen of the great critics. Sainte-Beuve, Scherer, and Bourget are represented here, so that a pupil has the benefit of reading the best French criticism, and no critics in the world surpass the French school. A book like this can only be used with profit by an advanced scholar. Before a pupil can appreciate M. Faguet's criticism of Victor Hugo he ought to have read and enjoyed Les Misérables; but the editor assumes that the masterpieces of French literature are to be read in connection with this volume. G. Eugéne Fasnacht, the compiler, is the editor of Macmillan's series of foreign classics. — Macmillan & Co. $1.75.

A Manual of the Study of Documents.

This handy volume, by Persifor Frazer, will be found of great use to all persons interested in the study of penmanship and of the individual character of handwriting. It is a "counterfeit detector," for it will enable one after some study of its pages to detect fraud and forgery. In addition to the old methods of research there are several new suggestions for the detection of counterfeit writing. Dr. Frazer suggests that the term Bibliotics is broad enough to apply to any object which it may be desired to investigate, such as parchment, wax tablets, papyrus, printing paper, stone, or any other substance capable of receiving and retaining characters. Under the head of "Grammapheny" he would include all that relates to the discovery of fraud, and under that of "Plassopheny" all that relates to forgery. In the development of his subject he goes into valuable minutiæ under the head of physical examination, studying all that belongs to the manner of writing, the instrument, the fluid used, evidences of tampering, scanning under various lights, the use of magnifying instruments, the substances written upon, the composite photography of signatures, the tremor of feebleness, illiteracy, or fraud, and the writing done by guided hands. In part second he enters into the detail of inks and their testing, the reagents used by forgers, and the method of reaction, winding up with a digest of the laws relating to the testimony of experts on handwriting. The book is very interesting, and gives the result of a lifetime of study of this important specialty. Apart from its curious interest as a flower growing in one nook of the garden of literature, it is an exceedingly useful manual for all persons to whom the detection of fraud and the establishment of truth is a question of supreme practical interest. The book is very well printed and illustrated and has a good index. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.00.

The Moral Conflict of Humanity.

It is now nearly fifty years since the venerable A. C. Kendrick, D.D., LL.D., obtained his doctorate's degree from Union College. For over sixty years he has been known as one of the leading Hellenists of the United States. He was a member of the Anglo-American Bible Revision Committee, and is the author of a number of well-known books on the Greek language and in Biblical and general literature. Now that he is in his eighty-fourth year, his many students and admirers will welcome the thoughtful and scholarly volume which his publishers have collected and send forth in neat, attractive dress. The sixteen papers in the book are careful studies of difficult texts in the Scriptures, especially those connected with the subject of eschatology. Without any pretense at rhetorical embellishment, and apparently without any attempt to prejudge the questions involved, Dr. Kendrick writes as an independent thinker. The papers are all full of thought and suggestion to the student and serious reader. Throughout the work it is evident that Dr. Kendrick seeks to obtain the right solution of the problems of Scripture not from tradition or external authority, but from the true scope and drift of the thought of the New Testament writers. Thus the book falls into line with the best scientific thought of our century and of all the centuries. — American Baptist Publication Society. $1.00.

A late issue in the Expositor's Bible is The Second Epistle to the Corinthians, by James Denney, B.D. It has a large proportion of homiletical matter, and seems to take rank with the rather mediocre volumes of the series. — A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.50.

PERIODICALS.

Scribner's for August is a fiction number. Mr. W. C. Brownell's illustrated paper on Newport and "Lowell's Letters to Poe," with notes by Professor Woodbury, being the two more solid articles. Carolus Duran is the painter of the issue, with the usual sketch by Mr. Hamerton, and "The Poet with the Mandolin" for the picture. The stories are "French for a Fortnight," by Mr. Bunner; "An Undiscovered Murder," by T. R. Sullivan; "The Missing Evidence in 'The People vs. Dangerking,'" by W. H. Shelton; "The End of Books," by Octave Uzanne; "She and Journalism," by Harrison Robertson; "Awaiting Judgment," by W. G. Hewitt; and more chapters of "John March, Southerner," by Mr. Cable. Octave Thanet's sketch of an American type is "The People that We Serve," i.e., servant-girls, politicians, and the like.

In the August Atlantic Mrs. Deland brings Cecil Shore and Roger Carey into relations that threaten evil, and when he tries to get Alicia to name the day, in order to make sure of himself, their engagement is broken off; the situation thus becomes decidedly strained. "A Fair Exchange," by A. M. Ewell, and "Love and Art," by Mrs. Kirk, make up the rest of the fiction in the number. Mr. W. R. Thayer closes his sympathetic editing of the "Letters of Sidney Lanier." The late Frank Bolles' series of Provincial papers is continued by one on "August Birds in Cape Breton." "Cardinal Lavigerie's Work in North Africa," by William Sharp; "Some Evils of Our Consular Service," by A. H. Washburn; "Professional Horsemen," by H. C. Merwin; "The College Graduate and Public Life," by Theodore Roosevelt; and "The Girlhood of an Autocrat," Catherine II of Russia, by Susan Coolidge, are the more solid articles of the number. Mrs. Alice Morse Earle contributes a brief paper on "Church Communion Tokens." Miss Thomas' "Voices from Afar" do not seem to be very articulate. Marie von Ebner-Eschenbach, Mr. Weyman, Marcella, and Pembroke are reviewed at length; the reviewer of Miss Wilkins seems to hold a brief for her against all comers.

In Harper's for August the chief articles are "Old Monmouth" (Northeastern New Jersey and its coast resorts), by Julian Ralph; "Up the Norway Coast," by George Card Pease; "A Few Edible Toadstools and Mushrooms," by W. Hamilton Gibson; "My First Visit to New England" (impressions of Hawthorne, Emerson, and Thoreau), by William Dean Howells; and "Stubble and Slough in Dakota," by Frederic Remington. Fiction is an especially strong feature of the number. Besides the conclusion of Mr. Du Maurier's striking novel, "Trilby," and the second installment of Charles Dudley Warner's "The Golden House," there are six complete short stories: Richard Harding Davis contributes "The Editor's Story," a tale of New York; Owen Wister gives another vivid picture of Western life in "The Serenade of Siskiyou;" Miss Elsie S. Nordhoff is the author of "Heimweh," a tale of homesickness on the prairie; "Step-Brothers to Dives," by Miss Louise Betts Edwards, is a sketch of urban charity; "The Inn of San Jacinto," by Miss Zoe Dana Underhill, is a ghost story; and in "A Vista in Central Park" Brander Matthews gives another glimpse of New York life. The Editor's Study discusses the "American Spirit," "Vulgarity in Fiction," and the proposed memorial to George William Curtis.

The complete novel in the August number of Lippincott's is "Sweetheart Manette," by Maurice Thompson. The scene is laid at Bay St. Louis on the Gulf of Mexico, and the charming heroine has a quartette of lovers and no little difficulty in deciding between them. Louise Stockton's tale, "A Mess of Pottage," is concluded. Other short stories are "At the Rough-and-Tumble Landing," by Prof. Charles G. D. Roberts; "A Military Manœuvre," by Kate Lee Ashley; "The Everlastin' Buzzards' Sit," by Charles McIlvaine; and "An In Memoriam of the Keys," by Johanna Staats. Thomas Stinson Jarvis contributes an acute and suggestive essay on "Feminine Phases," and Charles Henry Webb discusses "Uncared-for Cats" in a humanely humorous vein. Mrs. M. E. W. Sherwood supplies interesting reminiscences of "Washington Before the War." Mary Elizabeth Blake writes on "Muscles and Morals," George Grantham Bain on "Newspaper 'Faking,'" and Will Clemens on "Chinese Shops" and their peculiar signs. The poetry of the number is by Margaret Gilman George, Dora Read Goodale, Fannie Bent Dillingham, and Prof. John B. Tabb.

In the July Macmillan's Mr. Blackmore's novel is concluded and the mystery about the disappearance of the body of Sir Thomas Waldron is cleared up in an unexpected way. A second article on the beginnings of the British army treats of the cavalry. Two slight sketches are "The Wit of Man," in lighter vein, and an "East Indian Episode," by Mrs. Steel. An instructive article on "The Founders of the Bank of England" gives certain historical and biographical facts relating to that great financial institution which was chartered in 1694. The biographic paper of the number is a lengthy one on Madame du Deffand. An attractive sketch, somewhat idyllic, is on "Scholar-Gipsies." A letter from Lord Chatham on the surrender of Saratoga and a racy account of the visit of a small landholder to his property in Ireland complete the list of contents.

In the Quarterly Journal of Economics for July Mr. C. C. Closson, Jr., concludes his very valuable collection of information about "The Unemployed in American Cities" and what was done for them last winter. Mr. Joseph A. Hill closes his full account of "The Civil War Income Tax" with remarks of an unfavorable character on the income tax in time of peace in this country. Mr. James Mavor concludes his discussion of "The English Railway Rate Question," and Mr. T. N. Carver writes on "The Theory of Wages Adjusted to Recent Theories of Value."

The June issue of the Economic Journal, in many ways at once the handsomest and the fullest of all the economic reviews, opens with a careful article by John Graham Brooks on "Results of the Retail Liquor Traffic without Private Profit." Mr. Brooks is an expert in this field, and his favorable opinion of the Norwegian system should weigh heavily in its favor with all candid minds. Mr. Edwin Cannan gives the first part of an interesting account of "Ricardo in Parliament." A Canadian banker, Mr. B. E. Walker of Toronto, expounds "Banking in Canada," and Mr. F. C. Harrison handles "The Indian Currency Question." The Reviews, Notes and Memoranda, and Current Topics departments are crowded with able contributions from specialists of authority.

In the Nineteenth Century for July are two articles of great interest, if not more — Mrs. Sidney Webb's on "The Failure of the Labour Commission," and Frederic Harrison's on "The Centenary of Edward Gibbon." Mrs. Webb (née Beatrice Potter) views the Labour Report from a socialistic standpoint, but she might have well gone on to point out the fallacy of expecting anything valuable or effective from a commission that was not already known before. Mrs. Webb, as was to be expected, reserves all her admiration for the Minority Report. She is a brilliant and conscientious but by no means judicial writer. Mr. Harrison, who is no mere eulogist, declares that, "the Decline and Fall is the most perfect book that English prose (outside its fiction) possesses, meaning by book a work perfect in design, totus, teres, atque rotundus, symmetrical, complete, final, and executed from beginning to end with the same mastery on one uniform plan. There is no other history extant which can be put beside it, if we reckon all the following qualities and conditions: (1) its immense field, both in extent of area and in epochs of time; (2) its consummate concentration and grasp of view; (3) its amazing range of learning and curious accuracy of detail; (4) its pomp of movement and splendor of style. There have been before and since more subtle observers and more truly enlightened spirits. There have been historians quite as learned, who have made even fewer errors, and some who have written in a purer form. But no historian has ever combined all Gibbon's supreme gifts. And, accordingly, the Decline and Fall remains the type of the perfect literary history, just as the Zeus of Pheidias remained the type of the father of gods and men." "The Partition of Africa," by A. Silva White, with a new map; "Religion in Primary Schools," by J. G. Fitch; and "The Art of Dying," by Miss I. A. Taylor, are other articles of interest.

Sir John Seeley, K.C.M.G., as the author of Ecce Homo is now styled, opens the July Contemporary Review with a strong paper on the need of studying English annals in connection with those of other nations, "History of English Policy." Mr. W. T. Stead gives, in his usual sensational way, "Incidents of Labor War in America." Prof. A. B. Bruce commends Miss Julia Wedgwood's new volume on "The Message of Israel." "Hampstead Heath" is the subject of a descriptive paper by Phil Robinson. "Employer's Liability," "The Prospects of Liberal Reunion," and "The Armenian Question" are other topics of the time well treated.

The Fortnightly Review for July is strong in a translation of "Faust," a long story by Tourgénieff, translated by Miss Milman; a trenchant paper on "Socialism and Natural Selection," by Karl Pearson, who criticises Mr. Kidd with great sharpness from the standpoints of the socialist and the scientist; and an essay on "The Poetry of Robert Bridges," by Professor Dowden. M. Paul Verlaine's "Notes on England" go to show that M. Verlaine has a very high opinion of the importance of his comings and goings — it is not likely to increase his reputation; Oscar Wilde's "Poems in Prose" are of much more value. "Working-Class Settlements," by Charles Hancock, describes those at Mulhouse and Milan.

In the opening article of the Popular Science Monthly for August Prof. John Dewey of Michigan attacks one of the educational problems of the day under the title, "The Chaos in Moral Training." The recollections of a class in ethics as to the moral teaching received from their parents furnish the material upon which he comments in this essay. An especially timely paper is one on "Human Aggregation and Crime," by M. G. Tarde, which is a general study of the phenomena of mob violence. Prof. E. S. Morse gives some suggestions upon "The Distribution of Government Publications." There are two articles of especial interest to engineers — one being an illustrated description of the tunnel under the St. Clair River by J. Jones Bell, which he entitles "The Story of a Great Work," while the other is "A Proposition for an Artificial Isthmus between Scotland and Ireland," which is set forth by E. A. Le Sueur. The absurd pretensions with regard to rain-making that have been made by various cranks are thoroughly riddled by Prof. Fernando Sanford of Stanford University. Frank M. Chapman contributes a descriptive article on "The Nocturnal Migration of Birds;" and there is another by Prof. C. M. Weed describing, with illustrations, "A Family of Water Kings." Mrs. Louise E. Hogan gives some advice concerning "Milk for Babes," a matter that cannot have too much care during the summer months. M. Lazare Weiller describes a recent triumph in "The Photography of Colors." George Iles writes on "Nature as Drama and Enginery;" Prof. D. W. Hering gives some "Modern Views and Problems of Physics;" M. Georges Pouchet has an essay on "Form and Life;" H. Littlewood, F.R.C.S., treats of "Accuracy in Observation," with especial reference to young physicians; and there are a biographical sketch and a portrait of W. Mattieu Williams, author of The Chemistry of Cookery, Science in Short Chapters, and other popular books. In the Editor's Table, "Man and Woman" and "The Meaning of Dynamite" are the subjects discussed.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— Major Joseph Kirkland died very suddenly, April 29, at his residence in Chicago. He was born in Geneva, New York, January 7, 1830. His father was a professor in Hamilton College. In 1856 he came to Chicago and went into business. He enlisted in the army at the breaking out of the war, and served with distinction. He was on General McClellan's staff for some time, and later on that of Gen. Fitz-John Porter, upon whose retirement he left the service. Returning to Chicago he engaged in business until 1880, when he studied law and was admitted to the bar. For about ten years he practiced this profession, always doing some literary work as well. The latter gradually absorbed more and more of his time, and for the past two years he devoted himself to it entirely. He made his literary reputation originally with Zury. It was followed by The McVeys, The Captain of Company K, and a number of short stories. For several years he was literary editor of the Chicago Tribune, but of late had devoted himself chiefly to historical work. He published within the past few years The Story of Chicago and A History of the Chicago Massacre of 1812, and at the time of his death was engaged upon other work relating to this city and the Fair.

— We have the authority of the Sybarite for a new and curious phase of money-lending. There is, apparently, a gentleman in Fleet Street who makes advances on the security of MSS. to needy novelists who are bringing out a serial or getting a weekly allowance from a publisher. A future installment of "copy" has to be deposited with a note authorizing payment of the next allowance to bearer. The MS. is then delivered, and in due time the money collected and a large deduction made for interest. The security is fairly safe, but a smart American recently got £7 for a bundle of blank sheets with only the first and last few pages written upon. — Literary World, London.

— The English Spenser Society, after twenty-six years of activity, has published its farewell volume, a reprint of Heywood's The Spider and the Flie.

— In a recent magazine article Mark Twain told of the discovery of his "Jumping Frog" story in a Greek text-book, the inference being that the story had a classical prototype. But the resemblance was so striking that it proved too much, and now Professor Sidgwick, who prepared the text-book in question, states that he took the story straight from its American source, merely to use it as an exercise for translation into Greek.

— Prof. John Fiske will deliver a series of lectures on American history during the summer in Oxford. The course is authorized by the university authorities pursuant to a plan recently entered upon, namely, that lectures on American subjects by Americans should be regularly provided. Professor Fiske, by the way, is a most attractive lecturer. His historical works are generally first planned as lectures, since experience has taught him that the statement of a subject for the purpose of delivering it orally clears the ground better than any other method for the preparation of a book.

— T. Fisher Unwin will shortly publish S. R. Crockett's new story, Mad Sir Ughtred of the Hills. About one third of it has already appeared in the St. James' Gazette. Mr. Unwin has also made arrangements to publish Mr. Crockett's novel, The Lilac Sun Bonnet, on September 15, and the biography of the late Charles Bradlaugh, upon which Mrs. Bradlaugh Bonner and Mr. J. M. Robertson are engaged.

— A memorial window to Charles Kingsley has recently been placed in the church at Holne, South Devon, where he was born.

— It is shortly intended to issue a complete, unexpurgated and absolutely literal translation of the works of M. Zola which are included in the remarkable Rougon-Macquart series. The work is being undertaken under the auspices of the Lutetian Society, and the translators of the first half-dozen novels consist of Messrs. Havelock Ellis, Ernest Dowson, Arthur Symons, Victor Plarr, Ernest L. Churchill, and A. Teixeira de Mattos. Each novel will be in two volumes; the first, L'Assommoir, translated into English by Mr. Arthur Symons, is expected to be ready for issue this month. Seeing that the publisher of what were recognized as expurgated editions of some of these novels of the great French realist was imprisoned for publishing, it will be curious to see if any notice will be taken of this new and "strictly private" issue of the works. — Publishers' Circular.

— The latest photograph of Mr. Swinburne in a grizzled beard shows a much better looking man than the Swinburne of his sentimental youthful portraits. He is now fifty-seven years old, and lives in a handsome bachelor home at Putney with his friend, Theodore Watts. He is always more or less busy. The long list of over thirty volumes which bear his name will doubtless have several additions before death stills his pen.

— George Rex Graham, the founder of Graham's Magazine, died on the 13th inst., in the Orange Memorial Hospital, Orange, N. J., of which he had been an inmate for five years. Mr. Graham was born in Philadelphia, January 18, 1813, and when a boy learned the trade of a cabinetmaker. Devoting his spare hours to study he qualified himself for the bar, and subsequently became the editor of the Saturday Evening Post of Philadelphia. In 1841 he united The Gentlemen's Magazine and Atkinson's Casket and formed Graham's Magazine, which for many years thereafter was known as the best magazine of its kind published in the United States. Under his management the magazine attained a very large circulation. Its contributors included William Cullen Bryant, James Fenimore Cooper, Edgar Allan Poe, Bayard Taylor, Henry W. Longfellow, James Russell Lowell, John G. Saxe, E. P. Whipple, William Devoe, Mrs. Ann S. Stephens, N. P. Willis, Thomas Dunn English, and others. Charles J. Peterson was associated with Mr. Graham for a while, but withdrew to start Peterson's Magazine. Longfellow's "The Spanish Student" appeared for the first time in the pages of Graham's Magazine; "Nuremburg" appeared in June, 1844. Other important contributions to it were "Childhood," "Belfry of Burges," "The Arsenal at Springfield," and "Dante's Divina Commedia," which was published in June, 1850. Poe contributed "The Murders of the Rue Morgue," "Orion," "Dreamland," "To Helen," "Israfel," "A Few Words About Brainard," "Life in Death," and "The Canker Worm." Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Twice-Told Tales" and "The Earth's Holocaust" appeared in May, 1844.

— The Bookman reports that a portrait of Emily Brontë, the only one known, has recently been discovered, and has been engraved for publication. It has been pronounced an excellent likeness.

— By the death of Mme. Renan, which occurred suddenly in May, the task of editing the unpublished and uncollected writings of her husband will devolve upon her son Ary, who is in every way qualified to carry through this delicate undertaking. The first volume he expects to issue is the memorial which Renan wrote of his sister, which, although actually printed several years ago for private circulation, is, so far as the general public is concerned, an unknown work. Following the memorial the editor will issue a collection of his father's fugitive essays on literary and scientific subjects, which in turn is to be followed by a series of over one hundred letters addressed by Renan to his sister while he was in the theological seminary.

— M. Daudet, who incurred the unqualified enmity of the Provençals by his Tartarin of Tarascon, succeeded about three years ago — so he has recently confessed — in regaining the good will of the offended people. An innkeeper at Tarascon, it appears, was the first to discover that the biographer of Tartarin was an abused man, the discovery having been suggested by the continued arrival of Englishmen, asking to see the redoubtable lion-slayer. In reply to these inquiries, the landlord assured Daudet, his invariable answer was: "But he has gone hunting, and he may be gone a week. Then the travelers would stay and spend their money at the inn for a week and depart," said the landlord, with a mournful face, "depart without seeing Tartarin at all. Monsieur, my gratitude to you is eternal."

— It is with unfeigned regret, says the Examiner, that we inform our readers that Mme. Sarah Grand will give readings from her works, notably from the Twins, in this country next autumn. In anticipation of this ordeal, Mme. Grand is preparing herself by reading in public in her own country, where her "positively first appearance on any stage" has made quite a flutter among her hysterical admirers. It is consoling to learn that the author of the Heavenly Twins is an unpretentious-looking woman, who appears in public dressed "in dainty black, relieved by a wreath of roses under the brim of her hat."

— Mrs. John Richard Green hastens to deny the statement rashly advanced in certain reviews of her book, Town Life in the Fifteenth Century, that she exerted a strong influence over the literary style of her distinguished husband, the similarity of style between Town Life and The Short History being adduced as evidence. Mrs. Green confutes this ingenious assumption by assuring her critics that her acquaintance with Mr. Green did not begin until after The Short History was completed.

—Many readers to whom the late Prof. Henry Morley introduced in easily accessible form some of the masterpieces of English literature will be glad to hear that a scheme is on foot to establish a most fitting memorial. It has been suggested that a sum of £1,000 or £1,200 shall be raised for the purpose of purchasing the late professor's entire library, and presenting it to the library commissioners of Hampstead — where he lived for many years — to be permanently kept as the Henry Morley Library. A number of eminent people are interesting themselves in the project.

—It will interest lovers of Charles Lamb, and indeed lovers of literature in general, to learn that Canon Ainger has been appointed master of the temple in succession to Dean Vaughan.

—The restoration of the Stratford-on-Avon Grammar School, where Shakespeare was educated, has just been completed. The work has been carried out at the cost of the late Mr. C. E. Flower and his widow.

—The Félibres are going to indulge in more elaborate fêtes this year. They are to begin at Lyons on the 9th of August, and to finish at the fountain of Vaucluse on the 15th of August. On Saturday, the 11th, the Comédie Française will act "Œdipe Roi," and on Sunday, the 12th, "Antigone," at the Roman theater at Orange.

—Sir Austen Henry Layard, G.C.B., died in London on July 4. He was born in Paris on March 5, 1817, and passed his boyhood in Italy. In 1839 he traveled through Europe to Constantinople, whence he proceeded, in the following year, to India. It was on this trip that he saw for the first time the ruins of Nimroud. In 1845–6–7 he conducted the excavations that carried his name around the world. He published Nineveh and its Remains in 1849, Monuments of Nineveh in 1853, and Early Adventures in Persia, Babylonia, and Susania, in 1887. He was an honorary D.C.L. of the University of Oxford, and lord rector of Aberdeen University in 1855–56. He was in Parliament for many years, and served the queen as undersecretary of state for foreign affairs and as ambassador to Spain and Turkey.

—Professor Skeat has discovered among the MSS. in the British Museum a ballad which he attributes to Chaucer. The poem, which contains three stanzas of nine lines each, written in the difficult meter of part of Anelida and Arcite, Professor Skeat declares to be "the most complete example that exists of his [Chaucer's] mastery over the technicalities of rhythm."

—More than ten years since Mr. Horace E. Scudder delivered a Lowell course of lectures on "Childhood in Literature and Art." Later these lectures were published, with certain changes, as articles in the Atlantic Monthly. They are to be revised once more and appear in book form this fall.

—The great north window of Stationers' Hall was unveiled by the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, July 5, with suitable ceremonies. It is the gift of the new master of the company, Joshua W. Butterworth, Esq., member of the well-known firm of law publishers. It replaces a curious patchwork window, some fragments of the glass of which were said to be of sixteenth century manufacture. The new window was executed in Munich, and will be known as the Caxton window. The main portion of the window represents Caxton submitting a proof of his first printing in the Almonry at Westminster Abbey to King Edward IV. By the side of the king stands the queen, on one side a young prince, whilst a lady in waiting is peering over the king's shoulder at the wonderful production. Descending the stairs leading to Caxton's apartment in Westminster Abbey are two monks. In the foreground is seated a boy busily grinding the materials for the ink, and behind him, an important feature of the work, is an exact reproduction of the real printing press; whilst to the left, in the background, is seen a compositor arranging the type. Above the center panel appear the arms of the company, supported by angels on either side holding the miter and pastoral cross of the archbishop of Canterbury, the patron of the company. Below will be seen the former barge of the Stationers' Company, on either side of which is a recumbent figure, one with old Greek parchments, the other with a modern book. The border of the window consists of medallions interspersed with rich ornaments, containing in the upper part the date of the charter of the company (1556), and to the right the colophons of eminent printers, namely, William Seres, Reginald Wolf, Wynkyn de Worde, Richard Tottel; whilst to the left are those of Richard Jugge, John Day, John Cawood, and Hugh Singleton.

—Sometime during August Messrs. Chatto & Windus hope to have ready for publication a new volume of Essays by Mr. Swinburne.

—The Rev. Francis Warre, rector of Bemerton, England, makes an appeal for funds for the restoration of the old church where his famous predecessor, George Herbert, officiated. About four hundred pounds is needed for the work, which will be carried out under the superintendence of Mr. C. E. Poynting, F.S.A. Subscriptions may be sent to the Rev. Dr. William R. Huntington of Grace Church, New York City.

—A bust of Keats was unveiled in Hampstead Church on July 16, by F. H. Day, secretary of the American Memorial Committee. Edmund Gosse responded to Mr. Day's explanation of the movement to place the bust in the church. He read a letter from Swinburne and a sonnet by Theodore Watts, and Lord Houghton, Sidney Colvin, and F. T. Palgrave spoke.

—It may not be generally known that George Meredith is still chief literary adviser to Chapman & Hall. It was he who discovered Olive Schreiner. Mr. Meredith, unlike most of the leading novelists, is a strong Home Ruler. His daughter, who is a very familiar figure in society, is about to marry a brother of Mr. Julian Sturgess.

—Dr. Friedrich Paulsen's important work, The Universities of Germany, which has been done into English by Prof. E. D. Perry of Columbia College, will be published by Macmillan & Co.

—That excellent novel, Diana Tempest, is passing into a third edition. The author, Miss Cholmondeley, is, we understand, the daughter of a country clergyman, the rector of Hodnet, in Shropshire.— The Bookman.

—There is to be a new edition of Jane Austen's works, illustrated by Hugh Thomson. The novels will be issued in single volumes.

—Mr. Benjamin Kidd is employed in the civil service. He is still young, thirty-five, and though Social Evolution is his first work of any length, his record in scientific study and research is already considerable. Articles from his pen, not all of them signed, have appeared in the Nineteenth Century, Review of Reviews, the English Illustrated, Cornhill, Longman's, and other magazines and reviews. His book was begun nearly six years ago, and he worked at it continuously, that is, he did something on the subject every day. A good many of the ideas, which he subsequently followed up and eventually developed, came to him from a prolonged study of colonies of social insects. For years Mr. Kidd kept several colonies of both bees and ants in his former rooms in a central part of London. The subject has been of keen interest to him all his life. A comparative study, he found, brought out the fact that social efficiency amongst the social insects is purchased at the expense of the gradual specialization, subordination, and degeneration of the individual. In some species this produces extraordinary limits and produces a remarkable series of phenomena. A new and special factor, however, is introduced in human society, the reason of the individual leading him to resist the tendency to subordination. Hence arises a large class of phenomena quite special to human society. Mr. Kidd followed the Weismann controversy from the beginning with great interest, and almost from the outset saw that it must have a most profound influence on our social philosophy. His views on the subject were contributed to the Review of Reviews. Four years ago he saw Dr. Weismann at his house in Freiburg, in Baden, and had a long and interesting interview with him. The great German scientist is now taking an interest in the German translation of Mr. Kidd's book. — The Bookman.

—Midst the Wild Carpathians, a novel by Maurus Jókai, has been translated from the first Hungarian edition by Mr. Nisbet Bain, and is to be published immediately by Messrs. Chapman & Hall.

—The Cambridge University Press have arranged for the publication of a historical series under the general editorship of Mr. G. W. Prothero of King's College. The volumes of the series will be of moderate size, and will be adapted to the requirements of University Extension students as well as of more advanced readers. The first volume, The Revolutionary and Napoleonic Era, 1789–1815, will be by Mr. J. H. Rose of Christ's College; this will be followed by The Europeans in India, by Mr. H. Morse Stephens of Balliol College, Oxford, and by a history of Germany from 1815 to 1871, by Mr. J. W. Headlam, fellow of King's College. Other volumes will follow.

—A complete edition of Mr. Austin Dobson's poems is also announced. Much hitherto unpublished matter will be included. The volume will be illustrated with etchings by Lalauze of Paris, and some copies will be issued with the plates in two states. This very handsome and desirable edition of Mr. Dobson's charming work will be published in the autumn.

—Before leaving this country to spend his sabbatical year abroad, it is expected that Prof. Barrett Wendell will have completed his book, William Shakspere: a Study in English Literature.

— England, it is to be feared, does not greatly honor her historians. Histories are referred to with becoming gravity in speeches on education and in review articles; but the dust they gather on the shelves is too seldom disturbed. The paper on the "Centenary of Edward Gibbon" which Mr. Frederic Harrison contributes to the current number of the Nineteenth Century has, therefore, peculiar force and appropriateness. Most people are ready to aver that the Decline and Fall is a great book, but not a very large number even of those who are well educated could give a satisfactory reason for the faith that is in them. Yet there is no doubt that in the strictest sense the work is one of the chief glories of English literature. There is, perhaps, no English historian of the first rank of whom so little is known as of Gibbon. He left delightful memoirs, but they tell little, for, with all his apparent frankness, Gibbon had the knack of keeping a secret. His friend and executor, Lord Sheffield, was intrusted with valuable letters and autobiographic documents, but they have not been made public. Milman saw the manuscripts on the express condition that he should not publish anything they contained. Later biographers, such as Mr. Leslie Stephen and Mr. J. Cotter Morison, have been denied access to the precious papers. Now, however, the Royal Historical Society is about to celebrate the centenary of Gibbon, and possibly may be able to prevail on the present holder of the manuscripts to publish them in whole or in part. There can be no doubt that the lack of personal information about the historian of the Roman Empire has seriously militated against his popularity with the masses. If his private history were as well known as the histories of Johnson and Carlyle are, possibly the Decline and Fall might be read more than it is. We commend Mr. Harrison's article to all who are in doubt as to Gibbon's merits as an historical writer. — Publishers' Circular.

— Literature is not, as a rule, largely represented in the pensions charged upon the English Civil List. It is therefore gratifying to find in the list of pensions which have been granted during the last year quite a number of them are "in consideration of services" more or less intimately connected with the writing of books. Of these we may mention the following: Prof. T. W. Rhys Davids, £200; Mr. T. H. S. Escott, £100; the Rev. Wentworth Webster, £150; Dr. T. Gordon Hake, £65; Miss M. Betham-Edwards, £50; Mrs. K. S. Macquoid, £50; Mrs. Edersheim (in recognition of the merits of her late husband, Dr. Edersheim), £75; Mrs. E. B. Mozley (in recognition of the merits of her late husband, the Rev. T. Mozley), £75; the sisters of the late John Leech, an addition of £35; and the two daughters of the late Rev. Stephen Hawkes, £25 each.

— The Life of Heinrich Heine which Dr. Richard Garnett has been preparing may be expected shortly. It is to be published by Mr. Heinemann, uniform with the edition of Heine's Works which Mr. C. Godfrey Leland translated.

— Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. will issue in the course of the next few weeks a new Anglo-Saxon Dictionary for the Use of Students, by Dr. Clark Hall. The work, which is mainly based on the glossaries accompanying Anglo-Saxon texts, readers, etc., that have appeared in England, America, and Germany during the last ten or fifteen years, has been in preparation for a considerable time.

— Messrs. A. & C. Black propose to publish a new dictionary of the Bible before the end of 1896. The work was originally planned by the late Prof. Robertson Smith, who hoped nearly to the last that he might be able to take a leading part in its preparation. Last February, finding that Professor Cheyne agreed with him as to the nature of the book that was wanted, he transferred his share in the editorial management to him, the co-editor being Prof. Robertson Smith's old friend and associate in the work of the Encyclopædia Britannica, Dr. J. Sutherland Black. The new dictionary will not, however, be without contributions from the late Prof. Robertson Smith, many of whose articles in the Encyclopædia will probably be incorporated in it after they have been revised by personal friends. Besides a number of our own scholars, some well-known foreign specialists will be represented, including Profs. Nöldeke, Tiele, Stade, Wellhausen, Kautsch, Budde, Spitta, and Jülicher, with Profs. Francis Brown, G. F. Moore, and C. H. Toy to represent the United States. — The Academy.

— The centennial anniversary of the birth of William Cullen Bryant will, of course, be celebrated on November 3 next, but as not all of those whose presence is desired can be present at that date, the ceremonies at Cummington, Mass., will take place on August 16, as a more convenient day. It is well known that the Bryant homestead is on a hill between Cummington and West Cummington. The exercises will be held in a shady grove not far from the house, and will be presided over by Bryant's son-in-law, Mr. Parke Godwin, whose own residence adjoins the wood. Mr. Edward Brown of Elmwood, Ill., is to be the orator; Dr. Robert Collyer will offer prayer; Mr. John H. Bryant of Princeton, Ill., himself a poet, will be present and participate. Other invited speakers include Dr. Holmes, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Professor Norton, Charles Dudley Warner, ex-Senator Dawes, Pres. Stanley Hall, the Rev. John W. Chadwick, Joseph H. Choate, George W. Cable, and Governor Greenhalge.

— A bibliography of the writings of Robert Browning is now being prepared by Mr. Thomas J. Wise. The volume, which is to be uniform with Mr. Wise's Complete Bibliography of the Writings of John Ruskin, will consist of five divisions — the first dealing with first editions, the second with separate issues of single poems, the third with collected editions, the fourth with the poet's published letters, and the fifth with Browningiana.

— Professor Maspero's great work on the Dawn of Civilization (Les Origines), treating of Egypt and Chaldea, will appear some time in the autumn, simultaneously in Paris, London, and New York. It will consist of over eight hundred pages, copiously illustrated with drawings and maps made expressly for the work. The English translation will be edited by Professor Sayce.

— Max O'Rell's new book, La Maison John Bull et Cie, will be published in England by Messrs. F. Warne & Co. In this volume the witty cosmopolitan describes his experience during recent sojournings in India and in many of the British colonies.

— The late Prof. Robertson Smith has left his letters and manuscripts to be dealt with by his brother, Mr. C. Michie Smith (Madras), and Dr. J. Sutherland Black. A new and considerably revised edition of his Religion of the Semites, on which he had been engaged for some months before his death, is being prepared for the press by Dr. Black, and will be published by Messrs. A. & C. Black in the autumn.

— Messrs. Macmillan & Co. will publish shortly a book on The Unemployed, by Mr. Geoffrey Drage, secretary to the Labor Commission. It is divided into four parts: (1) introduction, presenting a classification of agencies dealing with the unemployed; (2) what has been done hitherto to solve the problem; (3) nature and causes of the present distress; (4) what can be done in the future to solve the problem.

— Macmillan & Co. have just ready a new book by John Ruskin, consisting of "Letters to a College Friend," written during the years 1840–1845, and containing many characteristic utterances, notably an essay on "Death before Adam Fell;" two new volumes of the Palestine Exploration Fund, A Mound of Many Cities, an account of the excavations of Tel el Hesy, by Frederick Jones Bliss, and Judas Maccabæus and the Jewish War of Independence, by Claude Reignier Conder; Turgenev's Rudin, translated from the Russian by Constantine Garnett, being the first volume of a new translation of the great Russian's works; and a third cheaper edition, with a new preface, of Benjamin Kidd's remarkable book, Social Evolution. Among their recent publications are Ernest F. Henderson's History of Germany in the Middle Ages, Hints on Driving, by Capt. C. Morley Knight, and Aspects of Modern Study, a collection of university addresses by Lord Playfair, Canon Browne, Mr. Goschen, John Morley, Max Müller, the Duke of Argyle, and others.

— The Congregational Sunday-School and Publishing Society will issue in September The Comprehensive Concordance to the Holy Scriptures, by Rev. J. B. R. Walker, which is described as a practical, convenient, accurate text-finder, with unessential words omitted and all serviceable words retained. There is only one alphabet for all words, including proper names. Proper names are accented, and fifty thousand more references are given than in Cruden. It is based on the authorized version, with an introduction by M. C. Hazard, Ph.D.

— Mr. T. Fisher Unwin will publish shortly The Revolution of the Twentieth Century, by Henry Lazarus. Seeing the rate at which forecasts of the new century are being prepared, it seems as though its whole history will have been written before the century has even commenced. — Publishers' Circular.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

Harper's Magazine

AUGUST.

166 Pages; 78 Illustrations.

Old Monmouth.

By Julian Ralph. With 10 Illustrations by W. T. Smedley and Victor Bernstrom.

The Editor's Story.

By Richard Harding Davis.

Up the Norway Coast.

By George Card Pease. With 7 Illustrations by T. de Thulstrup, and a Map.

The Serenade at Siskiyou.

A Story. By Owen Wister.

A Few Edible Toadstools and Mushrooms.

By W. Hamilton Gibson. With 17 Illustrations by the Author.

The Golden House.

A Story. By Charles Dudley Warner. Part II. With 5 Illustrations by W. T. Smedley.

Heimweh.

A Story. By Elsie S. Nordhoff.

Chapters in Journalism.

By George W. Smalley.

Step-Brothers to Dives—A Moral without a Story.

By Louise Betts Edwards.

My First Visit to New England.

By William Dean Howells. Fourth Part. (Conclusion.) With 8 Illustrations.

Stubble and Slough in Dakota.

By Frederic Remington. With 8 Illustrations by the Author.

Vignettes of Manhattan. VIII.

A Vista in Central Park. By Brander Matthews. With 3 Illustrations by W. T. Smedley.

The Inn of San Jacinto.

A Story. By Zoe Dana Underhill.

Trilby.

A Novel. By George du Maurier. Part VIII. (Conclusion.) With 16 Illustrations by the Author.

Poems.

By Alfred Perceval Graves, Marrion Wilcox, and Charles G. D. Roberts.

Editorial Departments as usual.

Subscription, $4.00 a Year.

Booksellers and Postmasters usually receive Subscriptions. Subscriptions sent direct to the publishers should be accompanied by Post-Office Money Order or Draft. When no time is specified, Subscriptions will begin with the current number. Postage free to all subscribers in the United States, Canada, and Mexico.

Harper & Brothers'

MIDSUMMER BOOKS.

Perlycross.

A Novel. By R. D. Blackmore, Author of "Lorna Doone," "Springhaven," etc. 12mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75. (Fourth Edition Now Ready.)

Carlotta's Intended, and Other Tales.

By Ruth McEnery Stuart, Author of "A Golden Wedding," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

The Maiden's Progress.

A Novel in Dialogue. By Violet Hunt. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00. (Nearly Ready.)

Music Hath Charms.

A Novel. By V. Munro Ferguson ("V"). Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25. (Nearly Ready.)

Out of Step.

A Novel. By Maria Louise Pool, Author of "The Two Salomes," "Roweny in Boston," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25. (Nearly Ready.)

Our Home Pets:

How to Keep Them Well and Happy. By Olive Thorne Miller. Illustrated. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

The Potter's Thumb.

A Novel. By Flora Annie Steel. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

A Prodigal in Love.

A Novel. By Emma Wolf, Author of "Other Things Being Equal." Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Theatricals.

Two Comedies: "Tenants"—"Disengaged." By Henry James, Author of "Essays in London and Elsewhere," "Daisy Miller," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Uncut Edges, $1.75.

Literary and Social Silhouettes.

By Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen. With Portrait. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00. (Harper's American Essayists.)

An Interloper.

A Novel. By Frances Mary Peard, Author of "Catherine," "The Swing of the Pendulum," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

A Traveler from Altruria.

Romance. By W. D. Howells, Author of "The Coast of Bohemia," "The World of Chance," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.50.

Pastime Stories.

By Thomas Nelson Page. Illustrated by A. B. Frost. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Harper's Black and White Series.

New Issues: The Garroters. Farce. By W. D. Howells. (Nearly Ready.)—Five O'clock Tea. Farce. By W. D. Howells.—Three Weeks in Politics. By John Kendrick Bangs. Illustrated. 32mo, Cloth, 50 cents each.

The above works are for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by Harper & Brothers, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, Canada, or Mexico, on receipt of price. Harper's Catalogue will be sent to any address on receipt of Ten Cents.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

LAWRENCE
Public Library,
LAWRENCE

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 SOMERSET STREET
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy
BOSTON 11 AUGUST 1894 Vol. XXV No. 16 Whole No. 512

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY'S

BULLETIN OF

· NEW · PUBLICATIONS ·

History of the Consulate and the Empire of France.

12 Volumes.

By L. A. Thiers, ex-Prime Minister of France. Translated from the French, with the sanction of the author, by D. Forbes Campbell. An entirely new edition, printed from new type and illustrated with thirty-six steel plates printed from the French originals.

This great work is one of the foremost historical productions of the age. The first volume appeared in 1845, and the work was completed in 1860. The only good edition of the English translation has long been out of print, and the present publishers, in connection with an English house, have brought out a limited edition to meet the demand of the libraries and book-buyer. The last volume of this sumptuous edition has just been issued. Subscriptions will be received for complete sets only by all booksellers and the publishers.

Now complete in 12 octavo volumes, with 36 Steel Plates. Cloth, $36.00; half morocco, gilt top, $60.00.

My Pretty Jane!

By Effie Adelaide Rowlands.

"'My Pretty Jane!' however, needs no adventitious recommendations of any kind. It is a charming story—interesting from its first page to its last; pure, yet full of intense human passion; picturesque, and at times thrilling, yet restrained in temper and language; full of intense and sometimes painful emotion, and yet suffused with the purity of the English home and with a gentlewoman's delicacy of thought and feeling. It is mainly a story of jealousy—the conflict between a straightforward, self-sacrificing, and gentle woman, and another type of femininity—the hard, selfish, ambitious woman who sells her heart for money, social position, and power. At times the situations reach an intensity of tragedy."
—T. P. O'Conner, in The Sun (London).

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Peter's Wife.

By "The Duchess" (Mrs. Hungerford).

"'The Duchess' has well deserved the title of being one of the most fascinating novelists of the day. The stories written by her are the airiest, lightest, and brightest imaginable; full of wit, spirit, and gayety, yet containing touches of the most exquisite pathos. There is something good in all of them."—London Academy.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

My Paris Note-Book.

By the author of "An Englishman in Paris."

"As for interesting items, they crowd every page of this extraordinary set of reminiscences. Rolling off intimate anecdotes of the most celebrated personages with almost contemptuous familiarity, the Englishman in Paris tells us what we could not possibly have known without him."—Chicago Herald.

12mo, cloth, $1.25.

The History of the French Revolution.

Volume I.

By Louis Adolphe Thiers, ex-Prime Minister of France. Translated, with Notes and Illustrations from the most authentic sources, by Frederick Shoberl. New Edition, printed from new type, with 41 illustrations on steel engraved by William Greatbach.

In France this work was received with enthusiasm and adopted without hesitation as the standard authority. It took some time before England viewed it in the same light, but its value has now long been tested by time and popularity. This present edition is uniform with the new edition of Thiers's "History of the Consulate and the Empire of France," and is to be published in monthly volumes, commencing September, 1894.

5 volumes. 8vo, Illustrated with 41 Engravings on Steel. Cloth, $3.00 per volume; half morocco, $5.00 per volume.

The Autobiography of a Boy.

Passages selected by his friend, G. S. Street. (450 copies only printed.) 150 printed for America. The title-page from a design by C. W. Furse.

"'The Autobiography of a Boy' is a genuine bit of humor. It is delicious."—Boston Advertiser.

"Mr. Street's portrait of the amazing and amusing young prig, selections from whose confessions are supposed here to be made by a friend, is wrought with a most delicate humor. The irony is never laid on too thick. It is indeed evident that Mr. Street has a certain measure of that sympathy with his hero which is indispensable to successful delineation."—Pall Mall Budget.

8vo, cloth, $1.25 net.

Every Inch a Soldier.

A new novel by John Strange Winter, author of "Bootle's Baby," "Aunt Johnnie," etc.

"'Every Inch a Soldier,' by John Strange Winter, adds another to the list of wholly charming stories that this author has written. The humor is unforced and graceful, and the pathos is true and sweet. There is something more of dramatic incident in this novel than the author has given in her earlier works, but it is always discreet and never verges on the sensational. Those who have read and enjoyed the other books from the same source will find no falling off in the qualities that have won for their writer so deserved a repute as a gifted story-teller."—Boston Gazette.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

An Initial Experience, and Other Stories.

Edited by Captain Charles King.

"Captain King is a graceful and vigorous writer. His novels are sure to be out of the common run. He depicts military life on the frontier with a fidelity that has won much praise; his romance is always pure and sweet."—Boston Beacon.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

For sale by Booksellers generally, or will be sent by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of price.

715 and 717 MARKET STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

D. APPLETON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

THIRD VOLUME OF

Memoirs Illustrating the History of Napoleon I,

From 1802 to 1815. By Baron CLAUDE-FRANÇOIS DE MÉNEVAL, Private Secretary to Napoleon. Edited by his Grandson, Baron NAPOLEON JOSEPH DE MÉNEVAL. With Portraits and Autograph Letters. In three volumes. 8vo, cloth, $2.00 per volume. Volume III. now ready.

The third volume treats of the ill-fated Russian expedition, the collapse of the Peninsula, the invasion of France by the allied powers, the abdication and banishment to Elba, of Marie Louise and her unfortunate child, of the Congress of Vienna, the return from Elba, Waterloo, and the exile in St. Helena. The interest of this intimate narrative by one who was in daily association with Napoleon as his private secretary steadily increases, and this concluding volume with its wealth of dramatic pictures will be found most absorbing from beginning to end.

An Introduction to the Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.

With a Biographical Sketch. By WILLIAM HENRY HUDSON, Associate Professor of English Literature in the Stanford University. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

". . . Those who would really understand Mr. Spencer's ideas must themselves go to his writings. But experience on the platform and in private conversations has shown me that something may be done to smooth the way for untrained feet. . . . If the Introduction serves to bring others under the more immediate influence of a teacher to whom my own personal debt is so great, its existence will be amply justified."—From the Preface.

Discourses, Biological and Geological.

By THOMAS H. HUXLEY. The eighth volume of the author's Collected Essays. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

CONTENTS.—A Piece of Chalk. The Problems of the Deep Sea. Some Results of the Expedition of H. M. S. "Challenger." Yeast. The Formation of Coal. The Border Territory between the Animal and the Vegetable Kingdoms. A Lobster, or the Study of Zoölogy. Biogenesis and Abiogenesis. Geological Contemporaneity and Persistent Types of Life. Geological Reform. Palæontology and the Doctrine of Evolution.

George Mandeville's Husband.

By C. E. RAIMOND. No. 148, Town and Country Library. 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

For the last year the women have had the upper hand in fiction, but a reaction appears to have begun with the appearance of this striking story. We have heard a great deal of the "revolt of the daughters." This novel offers a vivid if not inviting picture of the "advanced woman" and the effects of her teachings, and its appearance at this time is certain to provoke abundant discussion and criticism. The book is due to a well-known writer whose identity is concealed under a nom de plume.

Vashti and Esther.

A Story of Society Today. No. 149, Town and Country Library. 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

"The novel is readable and amusing, and one that depicts, with no sparing hand, a heartlessness prevalent in fashionable society and imparting some taint to even its more amiable members."—London Spectator.

Mrs. Limber's Raffle;

Or, A Church Fair and its Victims. By WILLIAM ALLEN BUTLER. 12mo, cloth, 75 cents.

This brilliant little satire, by the author of "Nothing to Wear," appears now under his name in a revised and enlarged form.

For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers.

D. APPLETON & CO.,
72 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.

The Round Robin Reading Club.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF SYSTEMATIC STUDY OF LITERATURE.

Winter Session opens January, 1894.

The object of this organization is to direct the reading of individuals and small classes through correspondence conducted by competent specialists, who will furnish lists of books, criticise papers, and personally assist each member. Having no limits imposed by a given system, the Club is free to meet the needs of those who desire to read for special purposes, for general improvement, or pleasure, and to supplement University Extension Work. For particulars address

Miss LOUISE STOCKTON,
4213 Chester Avenue, Philadelphia.

Noah Farnham Morrison,
SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,
877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.
Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

THE MANUSCRIPT MARKET.

Expert assistance to authors in placing their MSS. to the best advantage is given by THE WRITER'S LITERARY BUREAU (established in 1887), which is prepared to undertake every kind of work required between author and publisher. Honest advice and frank criticism of MSS. by competent readers given when desired; MSS. typewritten, revised, and sold on commission. Before sending MSS. write for circular giving terms and send ten cents for a sample copy of THE WRITER, the only magazine in the world devoted solely to explaining the practical details of literary work. Address The Writer's Literary Bureau, P. O. Box 1905, Boston, Mass. Mention the Literary World

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets,	- -	$16,014,000.00
Liabilities,	-	$13,808,000.00
Surplus,	- -	$2,206.000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of TRAVEL, SPORT,

OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24 500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address
Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

FITCHBURG RAILROAD,

Hoosac Tunnel Route.

SARATOGA.

On and after June 18, 1894, the special

Fast Express Train,

Parlor Car attached, will be run daily, Sundays excepted, leaving

Boston 9.00 A. M.,

Stop at Greenfield for dinner, arriving at

Saratoga 3.30 P. M.

For tickets and further information apply at 250 Washington Street, Boston.

J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

From Philadelphia Times, April 20th, 1892.

LARGE ORDERS FOR TYPEWRITERS.

The Government Orders Remington Typewriters in Large Quantities.

Special Telegram to THE TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 18.

The United States Government is the largest user of typewriters in the world. Upwards of two thousand Remingtons are employed in the several departments at Washington, and perhaps one-fifth as many of other different kinds, making a grand total of nearly twenty-five hundred; and the Remington Company is constantly receiving requisitions from the government for additional machines.

The Remington has been adopted also for government use in England France, Germany, Russia, Canada, Australia, etc.; indeed in nearly every country in the world.

15 SCHOOL STREET, BOSTON.

There is but one FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH, ITALIAN,

Actually Spoken and Mastered in Ten Weeks, without leaving your homes, by the Meisterschaft System. 550th Thousand. Pupils taught as if in the presence of the teacher. Terms for membership, $5.00 for each language. All questions answered and exercises corrected free of charge. Specimen copy of Part One, any language, sent free on receipt of 2 cent postage stamp.

Meisterschaft

Meisterschaft Publishing Co.

No. 196 Summer Street,
Boston, Mass.

System

FRANK T. SABIN'S CATALOGUE of FINE and RARE BOOKS, ENGRAVINGS, AUTOGRAPHS, etc. (52 pp.), is NOW READY, and will be sent on application.

118 SHAFTESBURY AVE., LONDON, W.

The Literary World

Vol XXV BOSTON 11 AUGUST 1894 No. 16

CONTENTS

Letters to a College Friend 243
Primitive Civilizations 243
The Ebb Tide 244
The History of Trade Unionism 244
Saint Francis of Assisi 245
Russian Institutions 245
Letters of Franz Liszt 246
Church's Life of Cromwell 247

Poetry:
  Apologia pro Scriptis Suis. Austin Dobson . 248
  To America. Richard Garnett . . . 248
Cock Lane and Common Sense 248
The Apostolic Age of the Christian Church, 248
Fiction:
  The Romance of a Transport 249
  The Light of Other Days 249
  Sarah: a Survival 249
  Parson Jones 249
  The Thing That Hath Been 249
Minor Notices:
  Centenary History of South Place Society . . 249
  Specimens of Greek Tragedy 250
  The Great Indian Epics 250
  The Ills of the South 250
  Varieties in Prose 250
  Steps into Journalism 250
  Primary Elections 250
  An Introduction to the Philosophy of Herbert Spencer 250
Correspondence 251
Periodicals 251
News and Notes 252
Publications Received 256

LETTERS TO A COLLEGE FRIEND.*

THE great interest which John Ruskin aroused in the minds of his own generation, and which in part still lingers to influence the rising generation, makes almost anything from his pen valuable from one point of view or another. One great reason why Ruskin's influence has been so widespread as to win the attention even of those who differ greatly from his conclusions and from his rules of life is the wonderful truthfulness to his own nature and character which he always displays in everything which he says, writes, or does. This quality of absolute sincerity gives a value to the least of Ruskin's writings not common in our posé, self-conscious, latter-day literature. It is remarkable that he should have lived to see the principles of art for which he worked and which he preached so thoroughly embodied in accepted thought that they have become axioms, until his own credit is almost hidden by the success of the objects which he sought.

Mr. Ruskin's letters to a college friend, just published by his consent, are interesting as showing the development of his character, although there is little or nothing which is new in them. For the most part they were written during his first journey to Italy, where he was sent by his doctor on account of serious lung trouble. Ruskin's opinions of Rome in 1840 are very original: "As for ancient Rome, it is a nasty, rubbishy, dirty hole — I hate it. If it were all new and set up again at Birmingham not a soul would care twopence for it." One of the most substantial letters in the volume gives Ruskin's views on the best drawing master in England in 1840 and the surest methods for obtaining facility in sketching. Of course his admiration for Turner breaks out irrepressibly from time to time. He thus advises his friend: "Take Turner's engravings to bed with you and look at them before you go to sleep till you dream of them; and when you are reading, and come to anything that you want to refer to often, put a little Turner in to keep the place."

The freshness and enthusiasm of these letters is their chief charm. In every line one reads Ruskin's pure joy in life, in art, and in nature. Every lover of him should read them, not expecting anything new or strikingly original, but because they explain a little more clearly the character which, almost as much as his mental ability, has made for Ruskin the place he holds in English thought.

PRIMITIVE CIVILIZATIONS.*

MISS SIMCOX, who is the author of a very thoughtful and scholarly work on Natural Laws, gives the above comprehensive title to her economic treatise on the ground that "the history of civilization is, in great measure, the history of the progressive appropriation by mankind of the various resources of the natural world. To know what men do and what they have is to know practically all that history can tell us about what they are." A complete history of ownership would indeed imply a complete history of civilization. Declining this impossible task, Miss Simcox has taken in hand the sufficiently difficult labor of stating in readable form, and in accordance with the ablest and latest authorities which her wide and careful culture opens to her, the leading facts concerning the economic life of ancient Egypt and Babylonia and of China, ancient and modern. These are the most primitive conditions which we can be said to really know, our knowledge of what came before them being chiefly inference.

Miss Simcox devotes four hundred of these closely printed pages in her second volume to China, which she portrays in its present form as well as in its many centuries of slow and moderate development. "Ownership in Egypt" is the subject of half as many pages in the first volume, and "Ancient Babylonia" of somewhat fewer, while a miscellaneous book entitled "From Massalia to Malabar" considers much more briefly the Phœnicians, the Etruscans, Crete, Sparta, Ancient Arabia, and various other "archaic communities." Over this wide field Miss Simcox, who nowhere pretends to be a specialist, follows the safe method of holding to the latest and most exact researches of modern scholarship. It must have required long years of industrious pains to reduce into such a well-ordered whole so vast a mass of material. The author easily impresses her readers as one of the ablest and most judicial writers of her sex, and as one whose style and judgments need no masculine label to commend these two volumes to a wide reading by those who would draw from history an economic moral for our own complicated society. She well says in closing her introduction:

> We do not doubt the power of posterity to combine the realization of family affection and social well-being, as shadowed forth in the earliest civilized states, with the possession of political freedom and activity as demanded by the heirs of Græco-Roman thought; while we believe the lasting character of both gains can be best assured if accompanied by a clear vision of spiritual realities, such as was sought and sighed for by Semitic seers.

Miss Simcox is here referring to her primary distinction between the modern world and the ancient states of which she treats, that "the civilization of the great civilized states of antiquity was domestic, and the civilization of European states political; that is to say, in ancient Egypt and Babylonia, and with some qualifications in China, the relations of family life and the details of domestic administration were entirely civilized and humane." Political life, on the other hand, is only as old as the Grecian and Roman cities.

It is not possible for the reviewer to give an adequate idea of the solidity of these two volumes in a short space. The specialist in Oriental lore would alone be competent to criticise the innumerable details of the exposition. We can here only heartily commend the work to the attention of economic students, indicating its general scope and making a few quotations to show its quality. In the chapter on the Egyptian economic order Miss Simcox says:

> The economy of ancient Egypt may be summed up in two words — forced labor and subsistence wages. The word which Egyptologists translate "subject" means literally "eater of rations." Both property and industry were more developed in Egypt than in any surviving community where the political superior as such is the chief or sole employer of labor. . . . The immunity of China and Egypt from the worst forms of economic oppression is due to the fact that the state never fell into the hands of a wealthy class that had tacitly entered on the inheritance of a politically powerful class. In Egypt wealth and power were possessed by individuals who were held individually responsible for their use, and were subject to the censorship of a class which was highly organized, highly esteemed, and not richly endowed with individual wealth. . . . There was then in the typical domestic kingdoms no aristocracy of arms, of birth, or of wealth. Society was sta-

---

* Letters to a College Friend. By John Ruskin. Macmillan & Co. $1.50.

* Primitive Civilizations; or, Outlines of the History of Ownership in Archaic Communities. By E. J. Simcox. Two vols. Macmillan & Co. $10.00.

> tionary, and perhaps less highly organized than in lands more subject to revolution; but, on the other hand, it suffered less than these from the over-stimulation or over-nutrition of a single organ at the expense of the whole body politic.

The main tendency of Miss Simcox's learned and impartial study is to remind one that we may have much yet to learn from these ancient civilizations which endured for thousands of years and in the case of China still endure:

> Archaic and primitive as it is, Chinese civilization has a vitality which we shall find it the less difficult to respect when we realize its kinship with those of the most famous empires of the world's most ancient history; and from a study of contemporary China we shall also learn to regret something of social and economic wisdom that was lost to the Western world with the fall of Thebes and Babylon and has not yet been wholly rediscovered. . . . "The most civilized country [says M. G. E. Simon] is that in which, upon a given territory, the largest possible number of persons have succeeded in procuring and in distributing as equally and cheaply as possible the greatest amount of well-being, liberty, justice, and security." He does not hesitate to claim this distinction for China. . . . Industry is all but universal, and a comfortable share in the fruits of industry is all but universal also.

While she draws from her wide survey of dim antiquity and modern China the faith that all may be comfortable, Miss Simcox holds that the surest way to this end is to respect natural aristocracies, and she concludes with these pregnant words:

> The course natural to the multitudes is to make things, to contract marriages of affection, and to revere the wisdom of the wise, who succeed in interpreting those laws of heaven and earth which regulate the satisfaction of human instincts. And the pursuance of this course holds out, unless human nature has altered in five thousand years, the best prospect of social and economic welfare to the multitudes of the West, as well as to the ancient nations, versed in all the wisdom of the Egyptians and the learning of the Chaldeans.

THE EBB TIDE.*

MR. ANDREW LANG laments that modern novels "are becoming tracts on parish councils, free love, and other inflammatory topics." He deplores the "thrifty plan of giving us sermons, politics, fiction, all in one study or sandwich." Holding these sound notions, he ought to be charmed with this brilliant novelette. It is like a breath of salt sea air after the warm, enervating breezes of the inland; like a song sung by an artist coming after an evening of amateur performances.

The tale opens with a vivid description of three men, all at the ebb tide of their lives. In a clear-cut, brilliant, literary style, using the fewest words possible, the writers present to us three strongly drawn characters. They are all poor maimed creatures, moral wrecks, washed up like driftwood on the shores of a Pacific island. First, there is the burly sea captain, thoroughly human and born for ship life; but he yielded to the temptation of drink, and on his first voyage ran his ship on a rock and lost her. After that he did not dare go home to his family, and went from bad to worse. Closely tied to him by the bond of common misery and disgrace is Herrick, a university man. Educated for a gentleman, but thrown on his resources, he found himself wholly incompetent to earn his own living; and, after losing one position after another, and his own self-respect also, he drifted into a state of pauperism, if not of crime. The last of the trio was a poor, vile creature, who had lost all remnants of mankind and clung like a barnacle to the sea captain, trying by every known means to drag him down to his own low level.

Thrown up by apparent chance on this Pacific isle were these three homeless, purseless, degraded specimens of humanity. Never even in Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde has Stevenson drawn stronger characters than these. Their conversations are wonderfully characteristic, each keeping his own individuality to the bitter end. The sea captain is nautical even in his cups; while Herrick constantly quotes Latin for his own satisfaction, and apparently it increases his self-respect. The villain of the party is always so desperately debasing in his points of view that he becomes unconsciously humorous.

Just at the moment when the condition of the three men is becoming almost desperate the captain has a streak of luck. A schooner comes to shore in need of three officers — the former captain and two mates had died of smallpox at sea. There is no one but the disreputable captain fit to take her to her port, and he offers his companions positions on board with him. The vessel was loaded with champagne, and bound for San Francisco. But the captain wickedly planned to take her to Peru, sell her and her cargo, and return home after dividing the profits. At first Herrick refused to be one of the conspirators, but the captain finally won him over, and the vessel started on her infamous voyage. The captain soon lost all control of himself and the ship, and spent day and night in carousing. He had only one companion, for Herrick was not with him, and tried in vain to keep him sober. Finally, when the ship had nearly gone to pieces, and the captain had, in a drunken delirium, ordered most of the provisions thrown overboard, Herrick mastered up enough manliness to threaten the captain with instant death if he did not reform. The captain first resented the advice and ordered up more champagne, but when the remainder of the bottles were all found to be filled with water his senses returned and he at last realized the true condition of the ship. With no provisions, no water, and no cargo, what hope was there for either ship or crew? Just at this moment of desperation land came in sight. The captain found himself close by the shore of a small Pacific island supposed to be uninhabited, and situated far away from the course of most vessels. This island the writers picture in glowing colors: "The very fish were painted like the rainbow and billed like the parrots." Here the captain felt sure that he should be able to find a new cargo for his schooner. An English flag floated on the island and a few shanties were visible. Besides their exquisite description of this picturesque island the writers find opportunity for drawing a wholly new type of man, half missionary and half smuggler. His character is an excellent study, and incident follows incident from this point in the story until the close of the book. The tropical background, the original characters, and the novel situations hold the reader enchanted from beginning to end. Only a very blasé novel reader can put the book down unfinished.

THE HISTORY OF TRADE UNIONISM.*

THIS solid volume, the best on its subject now before the world, is a notable example of coöperation of a husband and wife in authorship. Mr. Sidney Webb and Mrs. Webb (as Beatrice Potter) have both contributed significant writings to the social literature of the day, but this new work is by far their most substantial achievement. It is to be followed by another on the problems of all kinds raised by the trade unions and the answers already given, or to be given, in the judgment of the authors. As Mr. and Mrs. Webb belong to the same school of Fabian socialism one element of impartiality is lacking which might be present in case of a wider divergence of their views. They candidly inform the reader, in their treatment of the present "New Unionism," that they are thus biased, and it is not at all unlikely that they are writing this part of the history too soon, and expecting too much permanence for this latest development in a very changeable body. But in the far larger part of their history Mr. and Mrs. Webb deserve the highest praise for the industry and carefulness of their research, the fairness of their conclusions, and the moderation of their tone.

"A Trade Union, as we understand the term," the authors say in their first sentence, "is a continuous association of wage-earners for the purpose of maintaining or improving the conditions of their employment." They make too much, it seems to us, of the mistake they attribute to Dr. Brentano and Mr. G. Howell, of deriving this kind of association directly from the Gilds. A general resemblance is really all that is asserted by the three authorities. The proper Trade Union (not "trades union," for this means a union of trades, not of the members of a trade, like our American Knights of Labor) began with the eighteenth century. From that time to the present Mr. and Mrs. Webb expound its varied history in a narrative which continually refers to original sources, wherever these exist, and is steadily readable, much beyond the usual work on economic history. They spend most of their time on the present century, in which the laws against combination of laborers have been gradually done away, reciting in turn the labors of Francis Place, the New Model of 1843–1860, the enlightening report of the Royal Commission, and the socialistic conversion of the latest years. The history is recorded in all the detail that is desirable, and is varied by sketches of the men who have been prominent in this noteworthy development of organized labor.

---

*The Ebb Tide. By Robert Louis Stevenson and Lloyd Osbourne. Stone & Kimball. $1.00.

*The History of Trade Unionism. By Sidney and Beatrice Webb. Longmans, Green & Co. $5.00.

The Trade Unionists of Great Britain now number about a million and a half—about four per cent of the whole population, and probably about twenty per cent of the "adult male manual-working class." But the strength of the movement is largely due to the fact that the trade unionists are not scattered evenly over the country, but are massed "in certain industries and districts in such a way as to form a powerful majority of the working-class world." Thus in Lancashire the cotton-spinners' association "includes practically every competent workman engaged in the trade." So the boiler-makers, the colliers, and the lace-makers are highly organized, while in numerous occupations trade unionism is, on the contrary, practically unknown. About seven hundred and fifty thousand are miners and workers in the cotton manufacture or in the engineer's business; common laborers and women workers are, on the whole, non-unionists, although one hundred thousand women out of more than two million are nominally unionists. There are also unions of teachers and domestic servants. A further source of strength is the large number of former unionists who have fallen out, but are still in sympathy.

> Moreover, the Trade Unionists not only belong to the most highly skilled and best paid industries, but they include, as a general rule, the picked men in each trade. The moral and intellectual influence which they exercise on the rest of their class is, therefore, out of all proportion to their numbers.

The most picturesque and at the same time one of the most valuable parts of this volume is the account of trade-union life, some twenty pages long, by Mr. F. W. Galton, based on his own experience. One may easily infer from this friendly but candid narrative that Mr. and Mrs. Webb have a not unnatural bias toward the unions which has colored their narrative unconsciously. This picture of trade unions from the inside shows that they have many features of "politics" in the bad sense of the term, and that the demagogue and the spouter have too much influence in ordering strikes and fomenting bad feeling toward the employers. Mr. and Mrs. Webb point out the rich field for observation of the phenomena of Democracy afforded by the trade unions, with their use of the mass meeting, the council of delegates, the ballot, the initiative and the referendum, and all the other methods of representation and action. At the present day, also, "the Trade Union world, with its million of electors and its leadership of labor," is "an effective political force in the State," and what it will do "is, on the whole, the most momentous question of contemporary politics."

In their second volume Mr. and Mrs. Webb will handle this problem among others. We would suggest to them a careful survey of the state of public opinion in this country consequent upon the late Chicago strike. Trade Unionism in England has been better organized and more conservative than here; but in both countries the question of their duties to the public, now that they have acquired such great power to do harm, has not been sufficiently handled. It is one which seems very rarely, if ever, to occur to the leaders of strikes. Doubtless the task next before us as a law-abiding people is to make plain that organized labor has responsibilites as well as powers, and to define these in equitable laws.

SAINT FRANCIS OF ASSISI.*

We must express our thanks to the translator for translating and to the publishers for publishing this very thorough, scholarly, and eloquent biography of the great Franciscan, the founder of the Franciscan Order, the sweet-spirited, simple-hearted Francis of Assisi. We know of no life of him in English which can compare with this from the French; the English rendering is generally excellent, and bears evidence of faithfulness and accuracy. The author we judge to be a French Roman Catholic of open, broad, and liberal sentiments. He writes of realities with precision and of mysteries with faith, but with a naïveté which is characteristic of the best French literature, and with a sweet simplicity of feeling which befits the subject.

The value of the work is enhanced by copious extracts from original documents, by abundant footnotes and references to authorities, and by an exhaustive critical review at the end of the sources from which materials are derived. There is a critical study in one chapter of the famous stigmata or wounds of Christ, which St. Francis is alleged to have received in his own body; another chapter contains his curious "Canticle of the Sun;" another describes in detail the Rule of the order; another compares it with its rival, the Dominican. Santa Clara, St. Francis's sister associate, if we may call her so, is pleasantly sketched in as an accompanying figure. The narrative throughout is enlivened by many bits of legend, whose originality and freshness are delightful. The state of the Church at the beginning of the thirteenth century is shown as a sort of background. The style is clear and strong, often brilliant, and runs occasionally into terse, apothegmatic utterances, which leave more than a passing impression. Behind all constantly is the bright and glowing Italian landscape, the mountain blues of the Apennines, the softer rounded outlines of her vine-clad hills, the romance and the poetry and the sunshine of the only land in which such a plant as the character of Francis could spring up.

It is all like an idyl—the dissolute boy; the sudden, swift, radical conversion; the opposed and obdurate parent; the utter self-renunciation and consecration; the poverty, the humility, the devotion; the castigation of self; the absorption in the ills and woes of humanity; the giving up all for Christ; the rapt hours of worship; the ecstasies and visions; the friction with the ecclesiastical authorities; the love of animals; the happy intercourse with the birds; the tenderness for all need and suffering; the vivid realization, always and everywhere, of God in his world; the loving service of humanity for Christ's sake; the triumphant death. Wasted, such a life? Who says it? Mistaken? Whose mistake, after all, is greater, his or ours? The good of such a book as this at such a time as this may be manifold. We should be the last to fling it aside saying, "This is mediæval; no use for such sainthood in these stirring times." Would to God we had a little more of it!

The book is published in uniform style with Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs' masterly work on Bernard of Clairvaux, and belongs by its side. They make a notable pair, and may their number increase. Let us have St. Francis de Sales next.

RUSSIAN INSTITUTIONS.*

The second volume of M. Leroy-Beaulieu's masterly work on Russia has been published with commendable promptness. We observe with pleasure that Madame Ragozin's translation appears to have been submitted to a careful revision by some hand more to the English manner born. A rare infelicity like "fishing craft" (for industry) and "longanimity" alone reminds us that we are not reading a work translated by a native. In his first volume, which we reviewed fully on its appearance, the author described the country and the agriculture and commerce of Russia. Here he handles its "institutions," which are summarized in the half-title as "administration, general and local; bureaucracy; police; provincial assemblies and municipal councils; administration of justice and courts; the press and its censorship; the revolutionary party and political reforms." It is in the discussion of such grave matters that M. Leroy-Beaulieu especially shows the fairness, discrimination, and sympathy which have joined with his comprehensive knowledge to make him one of the first of living authorities on all things Russian. The volume has the highest interest for the student of contemporary politics and sociology, and it deserves to stand beside Mr. Bryce's great volume on our own country for its judicial spirit and its friendly insight. We select but a few points for quotation from the riches of these five hundred pages.

---

* Life of Saint Francis of Assisi. By Paul Sabatier. Translated by Louise Seymour Houghton. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50.

* The Empire of the Tsars and the Russians. By Anatole Leroy-Beaulieu. Translated from the third French edition with annotations by Zénaïde A. Ragozin. Part II. The Institutions. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.00.

M. Beaulieu starts, of course, with the mir:

> The mir's originality lies in its antiquity. The communal régime is wholly Russian, wholly national, which is a rare thing in Russia. It is not, like so many other institutions of the empire, a copy or an imitation. . . . The commune was born and grew up on the spot. It is, properly speaking and setting autocracy apart, the only indigenous institution, the only living tradition the Russian people can boast.[1] . . . This commune was not constructed by the law; it is anterior to the law, and the law has nothing to do with it, except recognizing it and registering its existence. [There is a lack of intermediate gradations.] The peasant commune and imperial autocracy are Russia's two great historical forces. The trouble is that between these two extremities of the old Slavic state there is, from top to bottom, not a glimpse of any truly national institution, no growth spontaneously spirited out of the soil, none that has taken root in it. . . All that lies between tsar and peasant, between autocracy and commune — landed interest, tchinòvnism, old nobility, nascent burgherdom — separates, isolates them.

So the mujiks are wont to say: "It is high up to God and far off to the Tsar." "We cannot reach to Heaven with our mind nor to the Tsar with our hand."

M. Beaulieu brings out clearly the peculiar household representation in the mir assembly, where each family has a vote, which may be cast by a widow or a wife whose husband is absent. These communes are at once the evidence and the product of the "rare aptitude for self-government" attributed to the Russian, "if by this word is meant the faculty of constituting and ordering, without anybody's interference, an organized and self-controlling society." The artél, the simple coöperative society, shows the same faculty at work; it "may be described as a voluntary and temporary commune." Madame Ragozin has inserted a valuable appendix giving quite full details of the constitution of these artéls, especially as they exist among the Cossacks of the Ural in the fishing business. The principle and the practice are fundamentally the same as the share plan, elsewhere so common in this industry, exhibits.

M. Beaulieu's candor is shown in his treatment of venality, the notorious vice of the Russian bureaucracy:

> The hideous portrayals of the secret vices of tchinòvnism should not blind us to the fact that in the land of autocracy venality perhaps does less harm than it causes in freer and more cultured countries, such as the United States of America. Very sad to say, official immorality has even repeatedly turned out beneficial to the people's intelligence and morality. . . . Official venality has long been, together with the lack of uniform management in a given direction, the only means of attenuating military despotism.

The chapters on the press are of even peculiar interest. M. Beaulieu ascribes great importance to the press in spite of the censorship, concerning which he tells several amusing incidents. His own articles in the Revue des Deux Mondes, for example, were cut out bodily by the censors instead of being blackened, but they were read just the same by all the educated people in the capital who cared to procure the pages cut out. The censorship is, indeed, a peculiar affair. Under Alexander II "the most radical works on philosophy and political economy — though not on politics — especially the most noted treatises on socialism, were allowed to enter and to be translated," such as Karl Marx's Capital; while Herbert Spencer, Darwin, Renan, and Heine were shut out or badly mutilated!

M. Beaulieu remarks on the evil influence of the censorship on literature proper. Commenting on the long vogue of "tendency literature" he says:

> Nowhere in the world doth art for its own sake, and — what is more to be deplored — science as science, truth and beauty for their own sake "have so little hold on the public mind." . . . What was appreciated above all in a literary work was its social bearing, the theory, the system it illustrated. It is easy to see what harm such a peculiarity must have done a literature otherwise rich, deep, powerful, which without this fad might have been second to none in this century, and which, even as it is, probably is the greatest of the age as regards the novel.

M. Beaulieu finds two reasons "why the emancipation of the written thought would do more good and less harm in Russia than almost in any other country. The first is that there is no dynastic question, no dissension about the fundamental form of government; that an immense majority of the nation is in all classes at one on that one principle, and therefore there can be no systematic and purely negative opposition, except in the ranks of extreme revolutionists. The second reason is that under an autocratic régime the press is the only means it has to influence its government and almost the only means by which its rulers can find out the needs and wishes of the nation." In the closing chapter on "Revolutionary Agitation — Political Reforms" this most competent judge thus sums up:

> Russia seems to us in a position which will compel her to enter the road of modern liberties at some time more or less distant. By what door it is not for us to dictate to her, or to foretell the course of coming events. From a foreigner this would be the height of presumption. What we do know is that it is high time to make a start, that the way will be long and hard, that short cuts which might do for others would be dangerous to her, because she is too massive and ponderous to climb the steep and narrow paths which small and more agile political individuals might undertake with impunity.

LETTERS OF FRANZ LISZT.*

THESE two handsome volumes contain little that will attract the unmusical world, while of much interest to musical folk. The six hundred and sixty letters, many of them brief, are not the work of a born letter-writer, and they refer so exclusively to musical matters that their general human interest is small. Liszt numbered the Abbé Lamennais, Schumann, Chopin, and even George Sand among his correspondents, but he is occupied in writing to them all with concerts and his own compositions so largely that it would not require a great space to reprint all of the passages of wide concern. We note that in writing to Brockhaus of the Conversations-Lexikon Liszt wished it understood that he was not a follower of St. Simon, although interested like Heine and other men of letters in St. Simon himself. Rubinstein, a frequent correspondent, he was in the habit of addressing as "Van II," on account of his resemblance to Beethoven. Liszt, by the way, as one of the early letters shows, defrayed nearly all, if not all, of the cost of the monument to Beethoven at Bonn — a matter of fifty or sixty thousand francs. Here is a passage of importance on the same great composer:

> For us musicians Beethoven's work is like the pillar of cloud and fire which guided the Israelites through the desert — a pillar of cloud to guide us by day, a pillar of fire to guide us by night, "so that we may progress both day and night." His obscurity and his light trace for us equally the path we have to follow; they are each of them a perpetual commandment, an infallible revelation. Were it my place to categorize the different periods of the great master's thoughts, as manifested in his Sonatas, Symphonies, and Quartets, I should certainly not fix the division into three styles, which is now pretty generally adopted and which you have followed; but simply recording the questions which have been raised hitherto, I should frankly weigh the great question which is the axis of criticism and of musical æstheticism at the point to which Beethoven has led us — namely, in how far is traditional or recognized form a necessary determinant for the organism of thought? The solution of this question, evolved from the works of Beethoven himself, [1] Always excepting the artél for industrial and laboring associations.

---

* Letters of Franz Liszt. Collected and edited by La Mara. Translated by Constance Bache. Two volumes. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $6.00.

> would lead me to divide this work, not into three styles or periods — the words style and period being here only corollary subordinate terms, of a vague and equivocal meaning — but quite logically into two categories: the first, that in which traditional and recognized form contains and governs the thought of the master; and the second, that in which the thought stretches, breaks, recreates, and fashions the form and style according to its needs and inspirations. Doubtless in proceeding thus we arrive in a direct line at those incessant problems of authority and liberty. But why should they alarm us? In the region of liberal arts they do not, happily, bring in any of the dangers and disasters which their oscillations occasion in the political and social world; for, in the domain of the Beautiful, Genius alone is the authority, and hence, Dualism disappearing, the notions of liberty and authority are brought back to their original identity. Manzoni, in defining genius as "a stronger imprint of Divinity," has eloquently expressed this very truth.

A letter to Buloz in 1840 exhibits Liszt's appreciation of the honor paid him by his Hungarian fellow countrymen:

> In your Revue Musicale for October last my name was mixed up with the outrageous pretensions and exaggerated success of some executant artists; I take the liberty to address a few remarks to you on this subject. The wreaths thrown at the feet of Mesdemoiselles Elssler and Pixis by the amateurs of New York and Palermo are striking manifestations of the enthusiasm of a public; the sabre which was given to me at Pest is a reward given by a nation in an entirely national form. In Hungary, sir, in that country of antique and chivalrous manners, the sabre has a patriotic signification. It is the special token of manhood; it is the weapon of every man who has a right to carry a weapon. When six of the chief men of note in my country presented me with it amidst the acclamations of my compatriots, whilst at the same moment the towns of Pest and Oedenburg conferred upon me the freedom of the city, and the civic authorities of Pest asked His Majesty for letters of nobility for me, it was an act to acknowledge me afresh as a Hungarian, after an absence of fifteen years; it was a reward of some slight services rendered to Art in my country; it was especially, and so I felt it, to unite me gloriously to her by imposing on me serious duties and obligations for life as man and as artist. I agree with you, sir, that it was, without doubt, going far beyond my deserts up to the present time. Therefore I saw in that solemnity the expression of a hope far more than of a satisfaction. Hungary hailed in me the man from whom she expects artistic illustriousness, after all the illustrious soldiers and politicians she has so plentifully produced. As a child I received from my country precious tokens of interest and the means of going abroad to develop my artistic vocation. When grown up, and after long years, the young man returns to bring her the fruits of his work and the future of his will, the enthusiasm of the hearts which open to receive him must not be confounded with the frantic demonstrations of an audience of amateurs. In placing these two things side by side it seems to me there is something which must wound a just national pride and sympathies by which I am honored.

Liszt says little, as a rule, of his family affairs, but this extract from a letter to Schumann is pleasant as an exception:

> As to the Kinderscenen, I owe to them one of the greatest pleasures of my life. You know, or you don't know, that I have a little girl of three years old, whom everybody agrees in considering angelic (did you ever hear such a commonplace?). Her name is Blandine-Rachel and her surname Moucheron [little fly]. It goes without saying that she has a complexion of roses and milk, and that her fair golden hair reaches to her feet — just like a savage. She is, however, the most silent child, the most sweetly grave, the most philosophically gay in the world. I have every reason to hope also that she will not be a musician, from which may heaven preserve her!
>
> Well, my dear Monsieur Schumann, two or three times a week (on fine and good days!) I play your Kinderscenen to her in the evening; this enchants her, and me still more, as you may imagine, so that often I go over the first repeat twenty times without going any further. Really I think you would be satisfied with this success if you could be a witness of it!

CHURCH'S LIFE OF CROMWELL.*

THE great protector of England has not been fortunate in his biographers, with one exception. Too many commonplace writers especially seem to consider it their duty today to render him justice, and they seek to do this by accepting, as a whole, Carlyle's view and filling out their books with a needless history of Cromwell's times, particularly needless after Mr. Gardiner. Mr. Church, whose volume is the result of six years' leisure, was led to the task by the need of diversion from a personal misfortune. His interest in Cromwell is apparent and his industry is conspicuous, but one regrets to see in this handsome volume few other indications of qualification for the exacting labor of doing full justice, and only justice, to so complex and intricate a character. It is not enough to say that Cromwell was not an ordinary hypocrite. As one of his army opponents said, when he was most ready with words of piety he was surely preparing to strike under the fifth rib, all for the glory of God — and the incidental exaltation of Oliver Cromwell. Mr. Church has by no means the equipment for unriddling so baffling a psychological problem as his career and his character present.

Nor has the author such discrimination in his historical comparisons as to give one confidence. He says, for instance:

> His political domination was not surpassed by the ephemeral sway of Napoleon, and in martial supremacy he was equal to Cæsar. Individually his pure patriotism, his sacrifice to duty, his public wisdom, and his endeavor for the right course in every difficulty gave him a transcendent character, which in the history of dangerous epochs suggests but two men who are worthy to be compared with him as righteous rulers — Washington and Lincoln. Among the world's heroes he stands high above all the rest, because the results of his illustrious performances are of more enduring benefit to mankind. . . . By the law of necessity the government had fallen upon his shoulders. . . . As he trod on in the strict line of duty he perceived, with crushing sorrow, that his burden afforded neither joy to himself nor gratitude to his people.

This, to use Mr. Church's own mediocre style, is making Cromwell "a most unique figure" indeed. The author should receive full acknowledgment of his conscientiousness, but he has too evidently undertaken a work beyond his ability, and has only added one more to the many unsatisfactory biographies of this most difficult subject. We cannot praise even his industry without one or two qualifications. He asserts that there is no monument to Cromwell in England, apparently in ignorance of the statue at Manchester, at least ten years old, and he has taken the purely conventional view of Lilburne and the "Agreement of the People of England," to which Professor Borgeaud has lately done justice. The plan of Naseby battle, by Rushworth, and the noble portrait of the protector after Lely are the principal illustrations of a finely printed volume.

---

*Oliver Cromwell. A History. By Samuel Harden Church. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.00.

—Edmund Yates, the well-known journalist, critic, and novelist, died suddenly of apoplexy in London on May 19. He was the son of the actor, Frederick Yates, was born in London July, 1831, and began business life in the London post office, but soon devoted himself entirely to newspaper work and general literary pursuits. He was dramatic critic of the London Daily News, was editor of Tinsley's Magazine, and a leading contributor to All the Year Round. In 1874 he founded his famous London society journal, The World, which he edited to the end of his life. He also contributed to leading New York dailies. He was the author of several plays and numerous successful books. The first of the latter was My Haunts and Their Frequenters, published in 1854. Among his most popular novels were Broken to Harness, 1864; Business of Pleasure and Running the Gauntlet, 1865; Kissing the Rod, 1866; Wrecked in Port, 1869; and The Yellow Flag, 1874.

—Charles-Marie Leconte de l'Isle, the French poet, died on July 17. He was born on the island of Réunion October 23, 1818, but settled in Paris early in life. A follower at first of François Fourier, the socialist, Leconte de l'Isle relinquished that philosopher's dreams of a millennium for the study of the Greek ideals and of Oriental pantheism. His works include Poèmes Antiques (1852), Poésies Nouvelles (1854), the two bundles being collected as Poésies Complètes in 1858, Poèmes Barbares (1862), Poèmes Tragiques (1884), and translations of Theocritus, Anacreon, Homer, Hesiod, Æschylus, Horace, Sophocles, and Euripides. He was elected to the Academy in 1886, succeeding to Victor Hugo's fauteuil.

—At a recent meeting of the Council of the English Authors' Society it was resolved that: "The Council, after taking the opinions of several prominent novelists and other members of the society, and finding them almost unanimously opposed to the continuance of the three-volume system, considers that the disadvantages of that system to authors and to the public far outweigh its advantages; that for the convenience of the public, as well as for the widest possible circulation of a novel, it is desirable that the artificial form of edition produced for a small body of readers only be now abandoned; and that the whole of the reading public should be placed at the outset in possession of the work at a moderate price." A very large majority of opinions received, including those of many well-known novelists, was in favor of the resolution. Only one opinion was opposed to it.

The Literary World

BOSTON 11 AUGUST 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

Apologia pro Scriptis Suis.

"ON DOIT DES ÉGARDS AUX VIVANTS." — VOLTAIRE.

"What is it, then," some reader asks,
"What is it that attaches
Your fancy so to fans and masks,
To periwigs and patches?

"Is Human Life today so poor,
So bloodless, you disdain it,
To 'galvanize' the Past once more?"
— Permit me. I'll explain it.

This Age, I grant (and grant with pride),
Is varied, rich, eventful;
But, if you touch its weaker side,
Is prone to be resentful.

Belaud it, and it takes your praise
With air of calm conviction;
Condemn it, and at once you raise
A storm of contradiction.

Whereas with these old Shades of mine,
Their ways and dress delight me;
And should I trip by word or line,
They cannot well indict me.

Not that I mean them harm; I seek
To steer 'twixt blame and blindness;
I strive (as some one said in Greek)
To speak the truth with kindness;

But, should I fail to render clear
Their title, rank, or station,
I still may sleep secure, nor fear
A suit for defamation.

— Austin Dobson, in Longman's Magazine.

To America.

(AFTER READING SOME UNGENEROUS CRITICISMS.)

What though thy Muse the singer's art essay
With lip now over loud, now over low?
'Tis but the augury that makes her so
Of the high things she hath in charge to say.
How shall the giantess of gold and clay,
Girt with two oceans, crowned with Arctic snow,
Sandaled with shining seas of Mexico,
Be pared to trim proportion in a day?
Thou art too great! Thy million-billowed surge
Of life bewilders speech, as shoreless sea
Confounds the ranging eye from verge to verge
With mazy strife or smooth immensity.
Not soon or easily shall hence emerge
A Homer or a Shakespeare worthy thee.

— From Poems by Richard Garnett.

COOK LANE AND COMMON SENSE.*

FROM Letters to Dead Authors to ghosts is a very easy step, and the weird fascination of Mr. Andrew Lang's subject is so great that we can only wonder that his last volume is not more interesting. It is not, however, a wholly new publication, for several of these articles have appeared before in magazines.

The past and present evidence in favor of the psychological phenomena popularly known as ghosts is the subject of the whole series of essays. Mr. Lang, without adopting what he himself calls the "pooh-pooh tone of voice," and without committing himself to any belief in raps or table-turning, still finds a curious historical fact — worth careful consideration — in the evidence that in all nations, in all ages, and in all stages of civilization a belief in spirits has been held by a considerable number of people, and always manifested in the same signs and wonders. "The rapping trick is one of the oldest things in the world." It is on account of the antiquity of the belief in ghosts and the extraordinary similarity which all ghost stories bear to each other that Mr. Lang has been curious enough to investigate them.

Savage spiritualism, ancient spiritualism, comparative psychological research, haunted houses, second sight, and ghosts before the law are some of the fascinating subjects of the chapters here. The strange thing is that Mr. Lang, with such a popular theme and with his own charm of style — which is always great — should have so little that is interesting to tell us. His ghost stories are all old to us and of the most conventional order. His argument that the age of a ghost story of a certain type is a point in favor of its truth does not seem sound. The folk-lore and myths of all nations are much alike, but not, therefore, necessarily true.

Mr. Lecky, in his History of Rationalism, insists that as enlightenment advances belief in all such matters, from fairies to miracles, declines. But Mr. Lang thinks that "belief or disbelief does not depend on education, enlightenment, or pure reason, but on personal character and genius. . . . Religious and irreligious crises both tend to beget belief in abnormal occurrences. Religion welcomes them as miracles divine or diabolical. Skepticism produces a reaction, and "where no gods are, specters walk."

> If we are savages, then Vuis and Brewin beset the forest paths and knock in the lacustrine dwelling perched like a nest on reeds above the water; tornaks rout in the Eskimo hut, in the open wood, in the gunyeh, in the Medicine Lodge. If we are European peasants, we hear the Brownie at work and see the fairies dance in their grassy ring. If we are devoutly Catholic, we behold saints floating in mid-air, or we lay down our maladies and leave our crutches at Lourdes. If we are personally religious and pass days in prayer, we hear voices like Bunyan; see visions like the brave Colonel Gardiner or like Pascal; walk environed by an atmosphere of light, like the seers in Iamblichus and like Mrs. Carlyle's ancester, Welsh, the son-in-law of Knox. . . . If we live in a time of witty skepticism, we take to the magnetism of Mesmer. If we exist in a period of learned and scientific skepticism, and are ourselves trained observers, we may still watch the beliefs of Mr. Wallace and the experiments witnessed by Mr. Crooks and Higgins.

The thesis of this volume is that, the world over, the physical condition of persons who exhibit most freely the accepted phenomena is identical. Mr. Lang finds that "uniform and recurrent evidence vouches for a mass of phenomena which science scouts," and that "their invariably alleged presence in attendance on the same minor occurrences is at least a point worthy of examination." If there is so much smoke, Mr. Lang thinks that there must be some fire. "Spirits may not exist, but the universal belief in their existence may have had its origin, not in normal facts only, but in abnormal facts."

Many of Mr. Lang's stories are trivial and absurd, and lead us to the conclusion that if, all the world over, ghosts have always been of such little account, the modern world has not much to learn from psychological research. There is a great deal of wearisome repetition in the different essays and considerable padding. On the whole, although Mr. Lang always writes agreeably, this is the least worthy of all his contributions to literature. It is chiefly a compilation, and the little which Mr. Lang has to say might have been said in condensed form in a volume one fifth of this size.

THE APOSTOLIC AGE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.*

THIS volume is the first in a new series of the Theological Translation Library, issued in England by Williams & Norgate, in which Keim's Life of Jesus, Baur's Apostle Paul, and several other works of the most noted liberal theologians of Germany were issued. Profs T. K. Cheyne and A. B. Bruce are the editors of this series, and the names of an Oxford and a Scotch Free Church professor as sponsors show that a decided change has taken place in the attitude of the Church toward "German rationalism." Professor Bruce's short preface indeed discriminates Dr. Weizsäcker from Baur as without that "rigor" of which Matthew Arnold accused the latter, with all his "vigor." Dr. Weizsäcker represents the Tübingen school with the natural modifications of the thought and study of another generation; and Professor Bruce very properly declares this account of the primitive Christian Church one "of exceptional value, exhibiting, as it does, not merely the learning we expect in a first-class German author, but a moderation and soundness of judgment which are by no means common in Germany or anywhere else. It has the merit of being not only able and masterly, but extremely interesting. . . . The style is luminous and easy."

---

* Cock Lane and Common Sense. By Andrew Lang. Longmans, Green & Co. $2.25.

* The Apostolic Age of the Christian Church. By Carl von Weizsäcker. Translated from the second and revised edition by James Millar, B.D. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.00.

This first volume of two contains three books, the subjects of which are the earliest Jewish Church, the Apostle Paul, and the Pauline Church. Dr. Weizsäcker's exposition in the first book is grounded upon views of the resurrection and of the character of the Book of Acts, which Professor Bruce is aware will meet earnest dissent from many readers; "but even then it will be found that the author's treatment is scientific in spirit and reverent in tone." This being the case, no sincerest believer in the fully historical character of the narratives of the resurrection of Jesus or of those in the Acts of the Apostles can be injured by reading so candid and scholarly a presentation as is here made. Concerning the first the author says:

> In view of the condition of these manifold and contradictory narratives, we must admit that we can have no precise knowledge of the course of events. Our only genuinely historical source, the words of Paul, does not supply the want. One thing alone is firmly established — that a momentary experience convinced the disciples that Jesus lived and was in their midst. This fact, a fact of their faith, is all that history has to tell us.

Concerning a matter frequently mentioned in these days of discussion of social problems, the alleged communism of the early Church, Dr. Weizsäcker holds it to be proved that

> It was the assistance of the poor, and not a community of goods, which was carried out by the early Christians. The general description of the offerings brought for the purpose is strongly supported by the instance of Barnabas, which the author plainly obtained from tradition and which probably formed the groundwork of his whole description. But even the narrative of Ananias may have been founded on history. It is clear that such individual cases of great services were well remembered and were told long afterwards. This shows, of course, that they were not of every-day occurrence, but were stamped on the memory as phenomenal.

At the same time, this early Christian society,

> Of all the parties, more or less religious, of contemporary Judaism, most nearly resembles the society of the Essenes. What distinguishes it from the latter is not merely the difference in doctrine about the means of attaining righteousness, but also, and in an equal degree, the different form of the society. The Essenes, through their binding rules and their suppression of individualism, were from their very nature an order of limited extent. In the new society the moral obligation of liberty reigned and disclosed an unlimited future. It was precisely the belief in the brief duration of earthly existence that contributed most to found an enduring world-religion.

In external form the new series of translations is much superior to its predecessor. Paper, print, and binding are more attractive, and a work of considerable size, by the use of a different style of page, is brought into two convenient volumes instead of being spread into three of the translation. Mr. Millar has done his work well; and altogether this series of translations of very able German works, presenting the "liberal" view of theology, is entitled to a hearty welcome alike from those who receive and from those who do not receive its characteristic doctrines.

FICTION.

The Romance of a Transport.

A "romance," indeed, by Clark Russell, and when we have written his name as author, there is little else needing to be said. No living writer is so at home upon the sea, and no author not living has surpassed him in the depiction of the grandeurs, the perils, the excitements, the charms, of life at sea. In this book we have a story of adventure on a transport ship bound from England to the colonies in the early part of the century. The heroine is a vigorous English girl, and her lover a captain, misconvicted of crime and sentenced beyond seas. We will not spoil the narrative for the reader by further disclosing the plot, but it is an ingenious one, and very vividly and powerfully wrought out. Of course it is hardly a probable story, but much of it "might have been." The fault is diffusiveness; the "yarn" is too much "spun out." But it is clean, wholesome, fresh, and breezy, and will hardly be left unfinished by any one who begins it. — Cassell Publishing Co. $1.00.

The Light of Other Days.

This is Mrs. Forrester's latest novel. The first part of it is unpleasant and the last part is painful. But the purpose is good throughout, and if the book could fall into the hands of those only who need its lesson we should think it might be edifying. The trouble is that it will fall into hands of readers who do not need its lesson. The plan of the story, the scene of which is laid amongst the fast set in London, is to place in contrast over against each other a happily married couple, wedded for love, and an unhappily married couple, wedded for money. Marital flirtations, intrigues, and quarrels are depicted on the one side, and marital affection, trust, and fidelity on the other. The life led by Alandale and Victoria is certainly sweet and inspiring, and if the Vansittarts and Erlesmeres and others like them could learn the beauty and worth of it we should all feel that a point had been gained. But couldn't Mrs. Forrester have brought things to a happier conclusion? — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

Sarah: a Survival.

Why Sydney Christian calls his or her English heroine a survival we cannot tell. The willful, spoiled child of luxury has survived the past, and we have no reason to expect that she is going to die out with this century. The discipline of life softened Susan's angles, and after various sad disappointments and crushing sorrows she grew into a lovely and lovable woman. The love making in the book is more sentimental than usual, and Sarah falls in love with a business man, who is supposed to be much below her in rank. The most original part of the novel is the picturesque description of the château en Espagne, which Sarah's lover had furnished for himself. It was situated in the Basque country, and the bits of Spanish landscape make a pretty background for the English lovers. The story is too long, and reminds us of a house to which the owner adds numberless bay windows and verandas. The author did not seem to know when to stop; he or she is apparently a novice in the art of story-telling. — Harper & Brothers. 50c.

Parson Jones.

The English parson has been overdone in fiction; and, although Florence Marryatt describes life in a Welsh parsonage and the home life of Parson Jones with considerable cleverness, she is out of her element when she begins to tackle theological problems. In Parson Jones' mother she draws her best character. The doting parent has never been better depicted, and her adoring attitude towards her commonplace son is evidently a study from life. Parson Jones, weeding his flower beds and tending his lilies, is quite in his element — a real character; but when he begins to fall in love, and have doubts about the thirty-nine articles, he loses his identity at once. The book has no particular literary merit, but is readable. — Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

The Thing That Hath Been.

The head master of Dulwich College, one of the oldest and largest of the great English public schools, has written here a very curious novel of public school life. Mr. Arthur Herman Gilkes, in spite of a peculiarly arid style, has succeeded in making his story arouse interest and sympathy. The Thing That Hath Been is certainly not a book which will amuse anyone. It is a crude novel, and singularly ill arranged in all its details; but the character of the hero, John Martin, is very remarkable, and Mr. Gilkes has analyzed it with great vigor. John Martin believes that the absolute standards of truth and righteousness are meant to be put into the actual working of every-day life, as firmly as Tolstoï does, and he lives up to his principles in his public school work in a way very inconvenient to his companions. Whatever may be thought of Mr. Gilkes' conclusions, his novel cannot be read without interest. — Longmans, Green & Co.

The cleverest part of the little farce, Wanted, a Copyist, by W. H. Brearley, which is suitable for private theatricals, is its sarcasm directed against antiquated legal forms of expression which have become precedents and its hits at feminine variability and editorial preferences, as, for instance, that a man should commit suicide in the afternoon so that the morning papers may have exclusive publication. The plot consists of amusing complications which arise out of an editorial advertisement for help, to which forty answers are received. — Cassell Pub. Co. 50c.

MINOR NOTICES.

Centenary History of South Place Society.

South Place Society in London is a small but distinguished organization, established in Parliament Court Chapel, Artillery Lane, in 1793 by the Rev. Elhanan Winchester. He was born near Boston, Mass., and became a Unitarian. His successor was the well-known W. J. Fox, perhaps the most noted Liberal Christian preacher of his generation in England. He was a man of unusual eloquence, a philanthropist, and a literary critic of great insight. He was the warm friend of Browning, early recognizing his genius, and the list of distinguished people who either frequented his chapel or were otherwise attached to him is very long. It is welcome news to learn that his widow is preparing a full biography of him. In the time before its appearance the two addresses which Mr. Moncure Conway devotes to Fox and his ministry will be an appreciative memorial. Mr. Conway has himself served the society twenty-one years, and has likewise come into contact with very many of the truly great men of the day. One name inseparably associated with the society is that of Sarah Flower Adams; the first draft of "Nearer, my God, to thee" is given here in facsimile. She was a ward of Mr. Fox, and her sister, Eliza Flower, was supposed to have deeply interested the affections of John Stuart Mill. Portraits of Mr. Fox, the two Flowers, and Mr. Conway are inserted in a little volume which has a peculiar value, not only as a record of change from a Unitarian to an Ethical Culture basis, but also and chiefly as a sympathetic tribute to Mr. Fox and his helpers. — London: Williams & Norgate.

Specimens of Greek Tragedy.

Prof. Goldwin Smith's name has been much in evidence this last year or so. In these two volumes he displays his fine classical scholarship and his good command of English blank verse. He foresees the gradual supersession of Greek as a study, and desires to spread wider the knowledge of the glories of its literature. He has accordingly brought into these two neat volumes faithful and sober translations of portions of the three great dramatists. He has laid under contribution all the tragedies of Sophocles and all but one of those of Æschylus; Euripides, on most of whose plays he draws, occupies the second volume entirely. The general introduction, of moderate length, and the brief introduction to each author and each selection have the tone of moderation throughout. The language of Æschylus the editor criticises as "sometimes too swelling and even bombastic." The choruses are mostly omitted, and he has rather a low idea of their importance — the chorus being, in his eyes, only "the libretto of a chant accompanied by dancing." Of Euripides he says: "There is no reason for saying that he preached moral skepticism or impiety. Probably he did not intend to preach anything, but to please his popular audience and to win the prize. . . . Perhaps he had his moods; he was religious when he wrote The Bacchae." Professor Smith's version is not one to call forth enthusiasm in the reader, while its merits are not few. But, to accomplish his aim of keeping the masterpieces of Greek literature safe in the regard of the many who are not to study the originals, we think that complete translations of the dramas are far preferable to selections. Especially in the case of the two earlier dramatists the moderate extent of their work renders condensation or selection a rather superfluous office. — Macmillan & Co. $2.50.

The Great Indian Epics.

Under this title Mr. John Campbell Oman, who is a professor of natural science in the government college at Lahore, has compiled a readable summary of the stories of the Ramayana and the Mahabharata. Professor Oman is not a Sanskrit scholar, and his epitomes are therefore founded on the translations by European and Indian scholars. He considers that the work of the latter class has a unique value, as they are "orthodox Hindus possessing a competent knowledge of English, and their aim has been to produce English versions of their sacred poems as understood and accepted by themselves and by the orthodox Indian world today." The enormous bulk of the Indian epics renders condensation a necessity for the Occidental reader, who desires only a general knowledge of them. Professor Oman's volume, some 225 pages in length, has all the needful introductory matter, and his condensation seems to have been skillfully done. — Macmillan & Co. $1.50.

The Ills of the South.

Charles H. Otken, LL.D., the author of this depressing account of the condition of the Southern States of our Union, writes from Summit, Miss. Beginning with the state of things in 1865, he shows fully the bad influence of the credit system in vogue; the advantage given to merchants by the lien law; the over-production of cotton; the under-production of food crops and live stock; the degeneration, rather than progress, of the negroes, and their inefficiency as farm laborers. Dr. Otken believes that the two races cannot subsist permanently side by side; hence the one remedy is colonization. He calculates that 300,000 negroes a year could be transported to Africa and given a start there at an outlay in thirty years (for the present 9,000,000) of $525,000,000. But he does not anywhere show how the annual increase in population is to be prevented, and otherwise his simple calculation is of no value. At the end of thirty years a large negro population would still inhabit the South. Dr. Otken must try again, if things are as bad as he paints them. We incline to believe that his picture is far too dark in its colors. In the meanwhile we note with pleasure his frequent declaration that, so long as the negro is with us, he must be educated and treated kindly and fairly in all respects. The negro problem will probably yield more to moral agencies than to deportation plans. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

Varieties in Prose.

The widow of William Allingham, the poet, has published, in accordance with her husband's wish, these three volumes of his prose writings, which he had fully prepared for the press. The first two volumes are given to the "Rambles of Patricius Walker" — a somewhat affected title — which were published in other forms. They are the agreeable record of the wanderings of a man fond of nature and of common life through various parts of England more especially associated with men of letters — Dean Prior with Herrick, Canterbury with Chaucer, Wilton with Sidney, Bemerton with George Herbert, Ayr with Burns, Winchester with Keats, Moor Park with Swift, Dorsetshire with William Barnes, and Farnham with Cobbett. These essays dwell upon the authors, as well as describe the present condition of the country. The third volume contains seven "Irish Sketches," six literary essays, and a play — "Hopgood & Co." Allingham's prose is by no means so distinguished as his verse, and these fugitive pieces are little more than ephemera. But for those who like pleasant, leisurely reading, combining travel and literary reminiscence, these Varieties will supply entertainment. An attractive portrait of the poet, with a book in his lap, is reproduced from a drawing by his wife in 1875. — Macmillan & Co.

Steps into Journalism.

Mr. E. L. Shuman, a gentleman of much experience in journalism, has not intended to invite young men and women into the difficult field of working for the press, but to give hints and cautions to those who are determined to enter it. He therefore describes in a readable manner the work of the reporter, the correspondent, the interviewer, and newsgatherer, the methods of the editorial room, and "specials;" discourses of women in newspaper work; gives a miscellaneous chapter to errors of all sorts; touches on magazine and novel writing; and, of course, ends with the usual "hifalutin'" about the "mission of the press." Mr. Shuman describes various practices which he reprobates but declares are common, and which are hard to reconcile with the final eulogies on the press as a moral agent. We should like his little book better if he had thrown more weight into a perfunctory condemnation of the chief faults of our daily press — such as its sensationalism and disregard of individual privacy; but, as it stands, it is a lively and instructive book, which will profit any aspirant and be of use even to experienced writers on the press. — Evanston, Ill.: Correspondence School of Journalism. $1.25.

Primary Elections.

Mr. Daniel S. Remsen's "study of methods for improving the basis of party organization" is a concise, rational, and practical little volume in the Questions of the Day series. He has carefully studied existing methods, which promote the strength of party committees and fatten the boss, as they prevail in the various States, and he proposes improvements all along the line of primary activity, many of which have been put into practice in this city. Mr. Remsen advocates small primaries, without nominating committees — candidates to be named in writing by a certain number of members — voting to be secret on a blanket ballot. There should be no roll of membership, and, most of all, voting should be proportional, so that each vote will count. For carrying out these reforms sets of rules are given in the appendix. Mr. Remsen may be too sanguine in his expectation of increasing greatly the number of voters at the primaries, but there can be no rational objection to the trial of his suggestions. Most of them will undoubtedly approve themselves in practice. The most efficient means of securing good nominations is enough independence in the ordinary party man to make him refuse to vote for an improper nominee. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.

An Introduction to the Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.

It is a little remarkable now that the work is done, and very well done, that none of Mr. Spencer's many followers has sooner thought of writing a popular introduction to his philosophy. More or less popular works on evolution itself are common and numerous. But Prof. W. H. Hudson of the Leland Stanford, Jr., University has at last written the desirable volume which most beginners in the philosophy of evolution need. He first gives a sketch of Mr. Spencer and his earlier work preparatory to the synthetic philosophy, and then, in four chapters, he considers the philosophy, sociology, and ethics, and the religious bearings of the first. Professor Hudson has not attempted an epitome of the many formidable volumes which make up Mr. Spencer's scheme, but he puts the man before us and presents the leading ideas in a style much more attractive than Mr. Spencer's own. All this is done from the standpoint of a disciple, and criticism is not to be found here in any proportion. But the work of friendly exposition has been done excellently well. Now will some one write the much-needed small volume of a more critical nature, that shall discriminate between Mr. Spencer's real contribution to thought and his failures and mistakes? Such work has been well done in this or that direction, but no one book of moderate dimensions yet contains a critical review of the whole Spencerian scheme. — D. Appleton & Co. $1.25.

American Authors, the handbook of American literature prepared by Mildred Rutherford of Athens, Georgia, will be chiefly interesting to most people, we imagine, from its rather amusing examples of zeal for Southern authors and their works. It seems that "the names of over two hundred writers belonging to the Old South [before the war] have been preserved. Of these as many prominent ones can be mentioned as lived and wrote during the same period at the North, although there were good reasons why their printed works should not have been as many." It is not surprising, in view of this kind of sectional estimate, that A. A. Lipscomb has ten pages allotted him, out of 750 or so, being more than Emerson or Hawthorne gets; while Jane Tandy Cross and Octavia Le Vert and other un-notabilities are also made prominent. The compiler should have subjected her work to a severe revision, eliminating at least one third of her authors and her pages, and keeping some kind of proportion in her treatment. As it stands, industry is almost the only qualification for such a manual that this writer plainly shows. — Atlanta, Ga.: Franklin Printing and Publishing Co.

The Navigator's Pocket-Book, arranged by Captain Howard Patterson, is published in a neat pocket volume, in red edges and blue covers. In dictionary form, it gives information calculated to make it "a complete guide and instructor." As Seaboard, a nautical paper, puts the matter, it "contains four hundred exhaustive definitions, in addition to all the practical rules for working middle-latitude, Mercator's and great circle sailings, as well as finding the ship's place by numerous chart considerations, and the latitude and longitude by dead reckoning and by the sun, moon, planets, and stars, and all these are worked according to short, simple, and reliable methods. The book also deals with the arithmetic of navigation, compass deviation, nautical astronomy, the instruments employed, law of storms, manner of keeping the log-book, magnetism, logarithms, the measurement of altitudes, Sumner's method, time, weather, etc. Another very valuable feature of this invaluable work is the fact that a fine set of danger-angle tables is to be found in the back of the book." — Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00 net.

The recent woman suffrage agitation in New York, incidental to the revision of the State Constitutional Convention, has a small literature of its own — naturally of ephemeral character. Dr. Mary Putnam-Jacobi is well known as an able practitioner, but her contribution to the subject is not calculated to raise her reputation with those not already convinced. "Common Sense" Applied to Woman Suffrage takes its title from Thomas Paine's famous pamphlet, but its whole temper is alien from the statesmanlike spirit Paine showed. Dr. Jacobi, in fact, whenever she seems ready to discuss her theme practically on the grounds of benefits to society to be expected from giving the suffrage to women, sheers off to dilate on such vague matters as "the development of the personality," and the like. Her language to those of her own sex (the vast majority) who do not desire the ballot is not of a character to make us expect an increase of "sweetness and light" in politics when women vote. If Dr. Jacobi would discuss the gains to politics of a practical character which could be proved to follow from such an extension of the suffrage, and discuss these in a special, concrete, and sober manner, she would do much more for her cause. (G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00). — The little skit entitled The Women's Conquest of New York pictures a city in which women control all the spoils of office, in a kind of female Tammany, Bridget O'Dowd being mayoress. An appeal to the primitive natural law of physical force soon ended this régime in 1908. — Harper & Brothers. 25c.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the Literary World:

My attention is called to a letter addressed to Dr. W. J. Rolfe, which, although personal and not literary in character, is printed in the department of Shakespeareana in the Critic of this date. This letter is signed by four persons, who attach to their names the titles of certain offices which they allege that they hold in the Shakespeare Society of New York. Neither of these four persons is at present a trustee of that society, only one of them has even a colorable claim to membership in good standing therein, and one of them is not a member at all! Not one of them has been present at a meeting or council of that society for two years last past, and not one of them has ever contributed one cent to, nor has an interest to the amount of one cent in, the twenty-nine volumes which that society has published nor the eighteen which are now leaving its press. There is no such officer as "chairman of the Executive Committee" of that society. Its charter, indeed, provides for a recording and an assistant recording secretary and also for a corresponding secretary (whose duties are literary only). But there is no officer entitled to describe himself as "secretary of the New York Shakespeare Society."

No attention, therefore, need be paid to the performances of these persons, nor to any statement which they may feel moved to make concerning the Shakespeare Society of New York, especially to their statement that that society has not "authorized" the supplementary volumes of the Bankside Shakespeare, or that L. L. Lawrence, clerk of the Publication Committee of that society, is taking subscriptions to those volumes without authority.

APPLETON MORGAN,
President of the Shakespeare Society of New York.
New York City, July 14, 1894.

To the Editor of the Literary World:

I am in receipt of a note from the Rev. George Arbuthnot, vicar of Holy Trinity Church, Stratford-on-Avon, England, the church of the Shakespeare graves, in which he says: "I am hoping to visit the States this autumn, and am bringing with me a number of views of the church and birthplace, with the idea that there are some Shakespeare clubs who would be glad to have a lecture on the home of Shakespeare by one who has lived here for fifteen years and had the charge of his grave for that period. . . . I should make no charge for my services, but should require a lantern and lime light, with a competent lanternist to be provided. I sail on September 22, until which time my address is here [Stratford-on-Avon]."

I cannot doubt that in many American towns there are those who will gratefully avail themselves of the Rev. Mr. Arbuthnot's kind offer, which I venture thus to make public.

Respectfully yours,
EDWARD ABBOTT.
Cambridge, Mass., July 26, 1894.

PERIODICALS.

The August Century is a little below the average in merit. "Washington in Winter," by Mr. Marion Crawford, is chiefly valuable for the illustrations. The two timely articles on the "Woman's Suffrage Question" go over the same old ground, and have no new points to make on either side. The selections from the correspondence of Edgar Allan Poe hardly seem worth printing. "Dr. Morton's Discovery of Anæsthesia" reads like a thrilling story, and Th. Bentzon's "Conversation in France" is a charming essay. "Walking as a Pastime" has some sensible advice to offer; and the short stories, especially "P'tit Matinic' Monotones," are refreshingly good — far better than the second numbers of the continued stories.

In McClure's Magazine for August a paper of personal recollections, by S. H. M. Byers, does for General Sherman what the notable series of papers published in the May number did for General Grant, making manifest in all his strength and graciousness of character the actual man. A notable series of portraits of Sherman accompany the article. Prof. Henry Drummond's new book, The Ascent of Man, is regarded by Dr. Washington Gladden "as one of the latest and most striking phenomena in the world of thought," and under the title of "The New Evolution" he devotes a paper in this number of McClure's to showing what the book signifies. The whole subject of the moral bearings of evolution is ably reviewed, and the conclusion of Professor Drummond enforced, that not selfishness, but love, is the law of nature as well as of morality. Besides the Sherman portraits, there are series of portraits of President Garfield and Louise Chandler Moulton.

In the August number of the Forum Mr. D. McG. Means, a New York publicist, writes on the "Principles Involved in the Recent Strike," reviewing the whole trouble in a calm, dispassionate manner; Mr. Henry Holt, under the title "Punishment of Anarchists and Others," recommends that professed anarchists be declared outlaws and exiled, under pain of instant death should they return—this without waiting for them to commit a crime; Mr. John Brooks Leavitt writes about the "Criminal Degradation of New York Citizenship" as manifested in the recent disclosures made to the Lexow Committee; he points out the terrible fact that the quality of our American citizenship is being destroyed in the mad rush for wealth, and urges all good citizens to combine together to obtain honest municipal government; Mr. Henry Charles Lea, in an article on "The Increase of Crime and Positivist Criminology," calls attention to the alarming world-wide increase of crime, and urging the necessity of a prompter and more rigorous method of punishing our criminals; Mr. Isaac L. Rice contributes an article on the "Legalized Plunder of Railroad Properties: the Remedy," in which he describes the despotic methods by which some of our great railroads have been exploited for the benefit of their presidents and directors to the great loss of the stockholders, and suggests a remedy for these evils; Mr. Sylvester Baxter replies to Mr. Godkin's article in the June Forum, telling "How the Bills of Socialism Will be Paid;" Pres. G. Stanley Hall, under the title "The New Psychology as a Basis of Education," reviews the whole field cultivated by a complete university department of psychology, showing how necessary to education, and full of promise for religion, this science is now fast becoming; and Prof. E. W. Scripture describes, in an article which he calls "Methods of Laboratory Mind-Study," some of the interesting pyschological experiments which he conducts in his laboratory at Yale; "Englishmen: How They Spend Their Money," by Price Collier, tells in an entertaining way how John Bull disburses his cash; and, lastly, "The Pay of Preachers," by H. K. Carroll, compares the salaries paid by the different religious sects in America to their preachers with the pecuniary compensations of other professions.

Three of the original articles in the August Review of Reviews are devoted to Canadian topics. A sketch of the Hon. Wilfrid Laurier, the leader of the Canadian Liberal party, is contributed by Mr. William B. Wallace; "Canada's Political Conditions" are described by the Hon. J. W. Longley, attorney-general of Nova Scotia; while the editor of the magazine, Dr. Albert Shaw, writes on "Toronto as a Municipal Object Lesson." Each of these articles is full of information about affairs beyond our northern border. A timely article is that by Prof. Henry C. Adams on "The Railway Situation." The writer, from his connection with the Interstate Commerce Commission, is well qualified to write on this subject with discrimination and authority. A discussion of labor troubles and their possible remedies is from the pen of the New Zealand minister of labor, the Hon. W. P. Reeves. The article shows an accurate knowledge of the history of recent strikes, particularly those of England and the United States, as well as the labor difficulties of the Australian colonies. The writer declares unreservedly in favor of compulsory arbitration. The chief topic of editorial discussion is the recent railroad strike. The motives of the dispute are candidly considered, and the conclusion is reached that the leaders of the American Railway Union have done great harm to the cause of organized labor, besides inflicting untold injury on an innocent public. At the same time the opinion is advanced that arbitration would have been greatly to the advantage, as well as credit, of the Pullman Company.

The radical reduction in the price of Romance, from twenty-five to ten cents a copy, resulted immediately in a great increase of its sales, four editions of the July issue being required to meet the demand. It is safe to predict still larger sales of the August number, as the public only needs to know of such an opportunity to buy the best of stories — ten of them, for a dime — and it is sure to improve it. The special feature of this issue is a group of mystery stories, the first of which is the famous Heaphy ghost story, unknown to this generation, but the source of much wonder and delight thirty years ago. The two other tales of this group are original and striking. Besides these there are one of Alphonse Daudet's charming fantasies, a pretty summer love story by Herbert D. Gallaudet, an extraordinary tale by Stanley J. Weyman, a boy's story by Hetta L. H. Ward, and others equally attractive.

Richard Burton's poem, "Haying," occupies the first page of the New England Magazine for August, with an accompanying picture by Sears Gallagher. The gossipy article on "The Quaint North Shore," by Frank T. Robinson, is illustrated by a score of sketches by Charles H. Woodbury. Mrs. Kate Gannett Wells' story, "Another's Child," has its scene on this same North Shore; and Mrs. Higginson's poem, "The White Dunes," is a seashore poem. Very interesting to many people concerned with the summer outing question will be the charmingly illustrated article on Prince Edward Island, by Neil McLeod, a resident of the snug little island. A valuable illustrated article is that on William Morris Hunt, by Miss Helen M. Knowlton. Hunt was in many respects the greatest painter America has had. Miss Knowlton, who was his friend and pupil, and who has before given us much of value about him, tells the story of his life and work, with reproductions of many of his best works. Another illustrated article is that by Miss Bacon, on "A Southern Normal School." An article of still greater educational value is that on "The Public Library Movement in the United States," by Joseph L. Harrison, of the Albany Library School. No other magazine article has shown in so comprehensive a way the amazing growth of the public library movement in the last fifty years and how important a factor the library is becoming in our general social life. "Boston — the City of God," by Rev. Charles G. Ames, is a lecture given in the recent course before the Good Citizenship Society in Boston, on "A More Beautiful Public Life." Mr. Ames believes not only in making Boston a city of God, but in making every city that, and his directions as to how to bring it about are very trenchant. Dorothy Prescott's clever story, "A Castle of Ice," is continued; and there is a story by Mrs. Lillie Chace Wyman, entitled "Araminta Passmore's Wrestle with Philosophy," which will stir up discussion among the mind-cure people. One of the most valuable papers in the number is that by Edward Everett Hale, on "The New England Congregational Churches," showing in Mr. Hale's strong way the great part played by this free church polity in the general development of freedom and self-government in America.

La Revue de Paris, in its twelfth issue, for July 15, offers an agreeable mélange of grave and gay. Pierre Loti contributes a story, "La Mosquée Verte," and the second part of Prosper Mérimée's "Letters to the Princess Julia" is given. The subject of G. Herelle's "The Romancier Socialiste en Italie" is Francesco Mastriani. The second part of H. Rabusson's "Monsieur Cotillon," and the fourth of F. Fabre's "Mon Ami Gaffarot," show how large a part fiction plays in French reviews. M. H. Blerzy discusses "L'Agriculture Moderne" at length.

In the Overland Monthly for August a Hawaiian story, "Kaala, the Flower of Lanai," by E. E. Carey, and an installment of Rounseville Wildman's "Panglima Muda" are the principal pieces of fiction. The "Four Women Writers of the West," of whom Mary J. Reid discourses briefly, are Misses Coolbrith, Thomas, Murfree, and French. "Two City Girls' Experience in Holding Down a Claim" is an interesting narrative, by L. E. M. Smith, and Mr. C. H. Shinn writes profitably "Among the Experiment Stations."

The Critical Review of Theological and Philosophical Literature, now in its fourth volume, is a valuable aid to the scholarly clergyman desirous of keeping abreast of the literature of the day in theology and philosophy. The July number opens with a cautious review of Professor Drummond's Ascent of Man, by Professor McKendrick of Glasgow.

In the Cosmopolitan for August "Marie Antoinette in Petit Trianon," "Coaching Trips out of London," "A Summer Tour in Alaska," "Outflanking Two Emperors," and "The English Napoleon" are the leading illustrated articles. Valdés' novel, "The Origin of Thought," and Mr. Howell's letters from Altruria are continued, and there is the usual variety of other matter.

The July Portfolio is a monograph, by William Sharp, on Fair Women. It is of a rather rapturous nature, and most of its value is in the numerous quotations about beauty and woman. The many illustrations would have been improved by including women of several more nationalities.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— Dr. Conan Doyle will visit the United States in the autumn, and while here will deliver a series of lectures on the younger British writers. It is not Mr. Doyle's present intention to give any readings from his own works, although he may change his mind.

— Dr. James Strong, S.T.D., LL.D., professor emeritus of exegetical theology in Drew Seminary, died at Round Lake, N. Y., August 7. He was one of the revisers of the English Version of the Bible in 1881; he was a joint editor of McClintock and Strong's cyclopedia of Biblical, theological and ecclesiastical literature; he published a Harmony of the Gospels in both English and Greek, and Greek and Hebrew grammars, and within a few weeks past had finished a concordance of the Bible, which took him thirty-six years to compile.

— At one of Mrs. Moulton's charming "at homes" we met Michael Field, the poet. It was a strange introduction. Instead of the broad-browed, piercing-eyed, masculine lineaments, and stalwart frame naturally associated with such a name, we found — two gentle, almost timid ladies, both unmarried, an aunt and a niece, who admitted the pious literary fraud of stealing a man's name. "Why," we asked of the niece, "did you do it?" "Because," she replied, simply, "when we began many years ago to publish our joint productions women had not made the way in literature they have since. It seemed desirable to suppress the fact that we belonged to the weaker sex in order to get a hearing. It is quite otherwise now." We thought of George Eliot, who made the same excuse. Then we talked of the newest school of poets, and found that one half of Michael Field at least was of sound conservative views in poetry. "And what of the new woman fictionist?" we asked the other, the elder, partner. "I do not like her much. Her attitude towards maternity displeases me." We should have liked to hear more, but the opportunity of a long chat is rarely found at social functions. — Literary World, London.

— The Woman's Book, which Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons are about to publish by subscription, will confine itself exclusively to subjects in which American women are interested. Among the subjects treated are, for instance, "Occupation for Women;" "Housekeeping;" "Women in the Business Affairs;" "Social Life and Wages;" "The Training of Children;" "Books and Reading." Among the contributors are the names of W. O. Stoddard, Mrs. Burton Harrison, and Thomas W. Higginson. The volume will be profusely illustrated by a number of distinguished artists, among them Albert Lynde of Paris, who will design the frontispiece.

— A banquet was recently given by a number of Englishwomen upon the occasion of their changing the name of their club from the "Literary Ladies" to the "Women Writers," and to this dinner both Mrs. Humphry Ward and Mrs. Haweis were invited. Neither of the guests attended, but sent notes of regret instead. Both seized the opportunity to express themselves on women's clubs, and both disapproved — Mrs. Haweis apparently because, as she said, "men are perfectly adorable," and Mrs. Ward because she condemned sex distinctions in literature. She did not wish, she said, to see sex emphasized in literature, but rather she desired to see "the neutrality of the pen—the sexlessness of intelligence."

— A Story of Courage: Annals of the Georgetown Convent of the Visitation, by George Parsons Lathrop, will be published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

— Gen. Bradley T. Johnson, the author of General Washington, is a Marylander of the Revolutionary family, the head of which nominated George Washington to be commander in chief, and was in time made by him Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States and Secretary of State, and with whom for fifty years there was constant, familiar, and confidential intercourse. He commanded the Maryland line in the army of Northern Virginia as a trusted lieutenant of Lee and Jackson, and gave the best of his life to the service of Virginia as soldier and as senator. His connection and sympathy with Virginia have been hereditary and intimate, and his environment, therefore, has peculiarly qualified him for the preparation of this biography of Washington, published in in the Great Commanders series by D. Appleton & Co.

— Professor Osgood will soon publish a translation of the famous "Prisse" papyrus, which dates from about 3350 B.C. and is preserved in the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris. This book, which is the second oldest book in the world (the oldest being the newly discovered "papyrus," dating from 3760 B.C.), comprises sixteen pages, and is divided into forty-four chapters. Its title is Precepts of Ptah-hotep, Viceroy of Assa, King of the South and North. An interesting feature of the book is that the name "God" occurs sixteen times and each time in the singular.

— In accordance with the general hope, Mr. S. R. Gardiner is continuing his History of England in the Seventeenth Century beyond the death of Charles I. The first volume of a new series, dealing with the Commonwealth and the Protectorate will be published by Messrs. Longmans & Co. in the course of the autumn. Messrs. Longmans also announce a continuation of the Memoirs of the Verney Family During the Civil War, compiled by Lady Verney from the letters at Claydon House, and illustrated with portraits and woodcuts.

— Walter Pater, who died at Oxford, Eng., July 30, was born in London in 1839. He belonged to Queen's College, Oxford, of the class of 1862, and for nearly thirty years has been a constant and distinguished contributor to literature, particularly in the department of the higher criticism. His first work was a study of Coleridge, contributed to the Westminster Review. Following this came The Renaissance, Marius the Epicurean, Sensations and Ideas, Appreciations, Imaginary Portraits, and, the most recent, Plato and Platonism, which promptly reached a second edition both in England and America. Mr. Pater's articles on Coleridge and Rossetti in Ward's English Poets attracted considerable attention, and recent magazine articles like "The Beginnings of Greek Sculpture," "The School of Giorgione," and "The Marbles of Egina" have added to his rank as a man of letters.

— On the occasion of the coming of age of University Extension Messrs. Macmillan have published, under the title of Aspects of Modern Study, the annual addresses given to students of the London Society at the Mansion. These addresses are nine in number, for the custom was first instituted in 1886. Lord Playfair this very year dealt with "The Evolution of University Extension as a Part of Popular Education;" and Canon Browne, in 1892, with "The Future of University Extension in London." After these two the other addresses are arranged in chronological order, being of a general nature. Mr. Goschen — who spoke extempore — chose for his subject, "Hearing, Reading, and Thinking;" Mr. John Morley, "The Study of Literature" — reprinted in his Studies in Literature (1891); Sir James Pagat, "Scientific Study;" Prof. Max Müller, "Some Lessons of Antiquity;" the Duke of Argyle, "The Application of the Historical Method to Economic Science;" Bishop Westcott, "Ideals;" and Professor Jebb, "The Influence of the Greek Mind on Modern Life." If this volume cannot altogether compare with the Rectorial Addresses delivered at the University of St. Andrews, it is at least welcome as a permanent record of those who have associated themselves with a successful popular movement. — The Academy.

— Capt. Charles King, according to the Book-Buyer, has entirely given up the use of the pen in his literary work, and escapes all the drudgery of authorship by the use of the phonograph. He whispers his pretty love stories into the attentive and responsive funnel of his phonograph, the cylinders of which are then handed over to a stenographer, and the stories transferred to a typewritten sheet.

— Gen. Lew. Wallace's forthcoming novel will be of a semi-political character, and will treat of incidents which happened in the United States.

— As a memorial of Miss C. M. Tucker, the zenana missionary so well known as A. L. O. E., a lady of England, the Christian Literature Society for India are raising a special fund of five hundred pounds, in order to republish (with illustrations) all her works for Indian readers, and to translate them into a larger number of languages than is at present the case.

— Macmillan & Co. have in press a new edition of Mr. Balfour's Defence of Philosophic Doubt, which has been talked about for some time.

— A very remarkable woman bade good-by to England last week. Miss Pauline Johnson, whose volume of poems Elkin Mathews & Lane are going to bring out, is a Red Indian, from the Canadian side beyond Toronto. Miss Johnson, whose handsome, intelligent face is charactistic of her nationality, is a tall woman, with the grace and dignity of motion which is the birthright of the American Indian. She is no darker than many an Englishwoman. She has achieved much success as a reciter and lecturer, and is very interested in social questions. — Literary World, London.

— THE DEAD LEVEL. — American Literary Man: "The great novel of the age will be written by an American. The fact is, I myself could write it at any time if I desired to do so." Cynical Friend: "Then why in thunder don't you do so?" American Literary Man: "Simply because I feel constrained to write down to the level of the American girl, who is the principal reader of novels nowadays. As another great American writer has recently said, 'she is the iron Madonna who strangles in her fond embrace the American novelist — the Moloch upon whose altar he sacrifices willingly or unwillingly his chances of greatness.'" — New York Tribune.

— August Dillmann, the great Semitic scholar, died at Berlin on the 4th of July, at the age of seventy-one. Professor Cheyne writes of him in the Academy as follows: "Dillmann and Schrader were both pupils of Ewald, and carried on that tradition of a philological treatment of theological documents which Ewald himself joined with Gesenius to initiate. But if it was at Göttingen that Dillman caught his enthusiasm for the study of languages and of the Bible, to Tübingen and Berlin he owed a full scope for learned labor. Like Schrader he was induced by Ewald to take up Ethiopic; his Ethiopic grammar and dictionary, and his edition of part of the Ethiopic Old Testament and of the Book of Enoch, have won for him the abiding gratitude of students of that interesting language. Quite lately Dillmann expressed his hope of revising his text and translation of Enoch. Dillmann's Old Testament commentaries are well known. His restless energy in bringing out new editions of them, in some respects thoroughly up to date, was a perpetual surprise to younger scholars. The study of Hexateuch criticism owes much to him; and, if it was provoking to some of his opponents that one so clear-sighted could not join them in their revolutionary theories, it surprised and touched them when they saw him, from sheer love of truth, making concessions which seemed to them next door to complete surrender. As a theologian he held the cautiously progressive views which might be expected from a disciple of Ewald. His dissertation on prophecy may still be read with instruction. But it is as a historical scholar and a philologist that he will be remembered."

— The Third Folio Shakespeare was sold at a recent sale in London for $2,175, which is the largest price ever paid for this particular edition.

— Ginn & Co., Boston, announce for immediate publication, Mediæval Europe: 800 to 1300 A. D., by Ephraim Emerton, Ph.D., professor of history in Harvard University and author of An Introduction to the Study of the Middle Ages. This work will be a continuation of the author's Introduction to the Study of the Middle Ages, and will be arranged upon the same general plan. Its aim will be not so much to present a complete narrative of details as to call the attention of students to the most important political, social, and religious institutions of Continental Europe during the Middle Ages proper.

— Mr. Gladstone's translation of the Odes and Carmen Sæculare of Horace will be published in September or October next.

— The literary historian, Herr Heinrich Düntzer, who celebrated last week his eighty-first birthday, has completed an exhaustive monograph on J. H. Merck, who exercised such a remarkable influence on the development of Goethe's genius.

— A new novel by "Maarten Maartens" will be printed serially in Harper's Bazar during the first part of 1895. The author, Mr. J. M. W. van der Poorten Schwartz, has removed his residence from "Kasteel Lunenburgh," Neerlangbrock, to the Château de Zuylestein, near Leersum, also in Holland. In a recent letter to an American friend he expressed himself as much gratified by the tender of honorary membership in the Authors' Club of New York lately made to him. He considered it "a delicate and kindly compliment," which gave him much encouragement. Mr. van der Poorten Schwartz is just thirty-five years old, and not thirty-eight, as stated in various biographical articles. — The Dial.

— Charles Scribner's Sons will shortly launch a subscription book, the Woman's Book, consisting of chapters interesting to the sex, contributed by many well-known writers, both male and female. There will be more than four hundred illustrations. The same firm have in press a new story, Marsena, by Harold Frederic.

— The Athenæum furnishes the following note: "That 'Hamlet' has been more variously treated and illtreated than any other Shakespearean play we all know, but it will be news to our readers that the Hamlet-Problem, as the Germans call it, is shortly to figure in the courts of law. The bone of contention is the priority of a certain ingenious analysis of Hamlet's character. Herr H. Türck, a well-known Shakespearean scholar, maintains that he propounded it first, whilst Prof. Kuno Fischer claims the priority of its excogitation. In consequence of this literary squabble Herr Türck has placed the Hamlet-Problem in the hands of a lawyer. It will occupy the law courts at Munich, Prof. Kuno Fischer's remarks having appeared in a Bavarian paper."

— Francis H. Underwood, United States Consul at Leith, Scotland, died August 7. He was born in Enfield, Mass., January 12, 1825. He was educated partly at Amherst, then taught in Kentucky, read law, and was admitted to the bar. He returned to Massachusetts in 1850, and thenceforward took an active part in the antislavery cause. In 1885 he succeeded Bret Harte as United States Consul at Glasgow, where, officially and socially, he acquitted himself with great credit. He was originally a member of the publishing firm of Phillips, Sampson & Co., and was an active promoter of the Atlantic Monthly. Beside his work on American authors, Mr. Underwood wrote several other volumes, among which are Lord of Himself, Cloud Pictures, and Quabbin, his last. In 1887 the senate of the University of Glasgow conferred the honorary degree of LL.D. upon Mr. Underwood, who was at that time United States Consul at Glasgow. In 1888 he was deposed by President Harrison, and remained three years after his retirement from office in the city of Glasgow, engaged in private business. When President Cleveland was elected for a second term he appointed Mr. Underwood consul to Leith (June, 1893).

— Mr. Stanley J. Weyman began his literary career with short stories. The first of any merit was "King Pepin and Sweet Clive," published in the Cornhill in July, 1883. In the same year another, "The Story of a Courtship," appeared in the English Illustrated, then just starting. To these two magazines he contributed pretty regularly short stories of the Trollope kind, clerical and modern. In 1885, at the suggestion of James Payn, he wrote a long novel on the same lines; it was a complete failure, was declined by several publishers, and finally destroyed by the author. But in the making the writer learned a great deal, and particularly the value of incident and plot and the danger of any divergence from the story; he now thinks that the story is the thing. The main idea of this book he used in The New Rector, published in 1891. In 1887 it occurred to him that the historical story might be revived with some success if the characters and scenes were treated in a modern manner. After a trial story he wrote the House of the Wolf on these lines, his first inspiration coming from a perusal of Baird's Rise of the Huguenots. The author's next effort was Francis Cludde, a story of Elizabeth's day, with foreign scenes; it was published by the Leisure Hour, and as a book in 1891. On A Gentleman of France the author spent the whole of a year, much of the story being derived from the well-known eighteenth century translation of an epitome of Sully's Memoirs. Even a good deal of the style he has derived from this book. Under the Red Robe is one of his recent successes, and My Lady Rotha, just completed, will be published in the fall. The English Illustrated magazine for October will print the first of a series of short stories by Mr Weyman, "From the Diary of a Minister." There are to be twelve of these sketches in all; they are historical in character, and the scene is France in the time of Henry of Navarre. Mr. Weyman is also writing a historical novel of the time of Charles I for early publication. The history of France he considers more picturesque than that of England, its scenes more dramatic, and its characters more romantic. Mr. Weyman proposes to abide by the historical for the present; he thinks that this line has got a bad name only because people have filled such books with lay figures, archæological padding and archaisms, and have discarded flesh and blood. He considers the present school (The Master of Ballantrae, the Silver Spur, and Micah Clarke) a reaction from this. Mr. Weyman has been mainly influenced by four British novelists — Scott, Thackeray, Mr. Blackmore, and Mr. Stevenson. He greatly admires Lorna Doone, and he reads Mr. Stevenson's books again and again. Critics have pretended to find traces of the influence of Dumas in his tales, especially in A Gentleman of France, but it is said Mr. Weyman does not care for the author of Monte Christo and does not read his novels. There is more of Scott than of Dumas in Mr. Weyman's most popular book, as readers of Quentin Durward may judge for themselves. The style is evidently modeled on that of Mr. Stevenson, who, perhaps more than any other contemporary writer, has influenced the younger generation of novelists. But his style has a distinct and original note of his own. Mr. Weyman is thirty-eight years old. He has traveled through France, Spain, Morocco, and all the Barbary States. He has visited Egypt, Sicily, and Italy. In recent years he has taken to hunting. He is of ordinary height, slender, pale, and shortsighted.

— Mr. Fisher Unwin has arranged to publish a translation of M. Jusserand's Histoire Littéraire du Peuple Anglais, on which the author has expended the labor of many years. M. Jusserand's method is quite distinct from that pursued by M. Taine on a similar subject. He has divided it into three historical parts, viz., The Origins to the Renaissance, The Renaissance to Pope, and From Pope to the Present Time. The three parts will be published separately, and the first will appear in the autumn.

— A new translation of Molière's works, by Miss K. P. Wormeley, the translator of Balzac, will bear the imprint of Roberts Brothers.

— Emerson has penetrated into France, his essays on "Self-Reliance," "Compensation," "Spiritual Laws," "The Poet," "Character," and the "Over-soul" having been recently published in an excellent translation. To this translation the Belgian poet, Maeterlinck, has contributed a preface. Among other things he says: "Emerson came to affirm with simplicity this uniform and secret greatness of life. He has surrounded us with silence and wonder. He has marked a ray of light under the step of the artisan coming out of his workshop. He has shown all the forces of the sky and the earth occupied in sustaining the threshold on which two neighbors speak of the falling rain and the rising wind, and above two passers-by who greet he shows us the face of one god smiling in the face of another. He is nearer than any other to our daily life. Of all monitors he is the most attentive, the most industrious, the most honest, the most fastidious, perhaps the most humane. He is the sage of ordinary days, and ordinary days make up the substance of our being. A year or more may flow by without passions, virtues, and miracles. Learn to reverence the little hours of life. If I was able to act this morning according to the spirit of Marcus Aurelius, do not come to call attention to my action, for I know myself that something happened. But if I think I have wasted my day in miserable undertakings, and if you can prove to me that I have yet lived as deeply as a hero, and that my soul has not lost its rights, you will have done more than if you had persuaded me to save the life of my enemy today, for you will have augmented in me the sum, the greatness, and the desire of life, and tomorrow, perhaps, I shall know how to live with reverence."

— Paul Sabatier, the author of the new life of St. Francis of Assisi, which has at once sprung into popular prominence as a scholarly work of prime merit and has also been translated into English, has had an experience with the authorities of the Vatican that is rich and instructive. His La Vie de S. François d'Assise has, by the Index Congregation at Rome, which consists largely of cardinals, been placed on the index of prohibited books. The decree was published on the 8th of June. Now it appears that this book, which is pronounced heretical by the congregation, had before this already secured the blessing of the pope, to whom a copy had been sent, and this blessing had been conveyed to Sabatier, doubtless without knowing that he was a Protestant pastor, by the papal secretary, Cardinal Rampolla. The letter, after acknowledging with thanks the reception of the book by the pope, sends the papal blessing in these words: "Aussi m'a-t-Elle [i. e., Sa Sainteté] ordonné de vous remercier en Son Auguste nom, et de vous announcer qu'Elle vous envoie la benédiction apostolique." Just how a book can be pronounced heretical by the Index Congregation after its author had, for sending it, received the papal apostolic blessing, does not appear to the average mind. Evidently there is somebody in the Vatican who is not infallible. — The Independent.

— Dr. C. M. Campbell writes to the Athenæum: "Being much interested in the works and life of Oliver Goldsmith, and exercised in mind in the matter of his disputed medical degree, I took the liberty recently of writing to Padua University, asking if such a name appeared in their records of graduates, or of alumni even, for the years including those of Goldsmith's Continental wanderings. A most courteous reply was returned to me by the secretary, evidently after careful searching. He says no such name can be found, and seems to think it cannot have been there, if anywhere, the degree was obtained. This rather depressing negative evidence may possibly interest others of your readers besides myself, and so I trouble you with this note."

— Mrs. Helen Campbell has been appointed associate professor in the School of Economics of the University of Wisconsin, to teach social economics and household science. Mrs. Campbell will go to California in the autumn for some special work at Leland Stanford, as well as to enter upon the associate editorship and ownership of the Impress, a paper which Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Stetson has edited thus far as the organ of the Pacific Coast Woman's Press Association. This it will cease to be with the September number, becoming hereafter a sixteen page weekly. Mrs. Stetson will remain its editor. Mrs. Campbell will return to Madison, Wis., for the spring term, giving a short course at Denver University on the way from San Francisco.

— The well-known French writer whose penname is Th. Bentzon, has written a series of articles based on observations made in this country during her visit last winter. These articles are to appear in the Revue des Deux Mondes, under the title "Condition de la Femme aux Etats-Unis."

— Mr. Gilbert Parker will publish a new novel in the autumn. It has already appeared as a serial in the Illustrated London News.

— The late Lord Coleridge left an exceedingly interesting collection of letters in the handwriting of Coleridge, Wordsworth, and Southey, addressed to his father, Sir John Coleridge. They cover nearly the whole of the poet Coleridge's career, and begin with the appeal to buy his discharge from the army.

— Harper & Brothers' recent announcements include Trilby, by George Du Maurier; The Women's Conquest of New York; The Water Ghost, and Others, by John Kendrick Bangs; Out of Step, by Maria Louise Pool; The Fur-Seal's Tooth, a story of Alaskan adventure, by Kirk Munroe; The Maiden's Progress, a novel in dialogue, by Violet Hunt; Music Hath Charms, by V. Munro Ferguson ("V"); Highland Cousins, by William Black; and The Garroters, a farce, by W. D. Howells.

— Copeland & Day will publish ere long a volume of verse by Bliss Carman and Richard Hovey, to be called Songs from Vagabondia. The poems will not be signed — the discovery of each author's identity being left to the reader's critical acumen. The volume, which will be a small 8vo of fifty-six pages, will be illustrated by Mr. Thomas B. Meteyard, and issued in an edition of 750 copies and a large-paper edition of sixty copies, of which fifty only will be for sale. Its English publishers will be Mathews & Lane, London.

— Mr. J. M. Barrie is to be married to Miss Mary Ansell, an actress, who had a part in Mr. Barrie's very successful play, "Walker, London." The young author is ordered abroad for his health, and he will be married before he goes.

— Italy will have a Tasso celebration, April 25 of next year, the tercentenary of the poet's death. A new life of Tasso is being written for this occasion by Prof. Angelo Solerti of Bologna. This book will embody the valuable matter contained in some five hundred documents hitherto unpublished, and will be illustrated with photogravures of all the portraits of which copies can be obtained, besides other interesting memorials. Professor Solerti is also preparing a new and critical edition of the minor poems of Tasso, of which two volumes have been already published.

— The latest number of the Chap-Book contains a quatrain by Thomas Bailey Aldrich, in which the poet defines his attitude towards the present tendency of the muse. Says he:

> I little read those poets who have made
> A noble art a pessimistic trade,
> And trained their Pegasus to draw a hearse
> Through endless avenues of drooping verse.

— The literary output of Germany is greater than that of England, France, and America combined. A German littérateur Dr. A. Roquette, computes that the buyer of a single copy of each German publication during the years of 1869–71 would be compelled to expend the sum of 36,652 marks annually; for 1880 it would have been 65,185; for 1890 the sum would be at 86,797. The increase up to 1890 has accordingly been 136.8 per cent. During the same time the funds at the disposal of the Prussian University libraries have increased 135.2 per cent. That the publications of Germany are of a more solid kind, on the whole, than are those of other countries is seen from the fact that the strictly scientific books published in 1890 would cost about 25,000 marks, or about 29 per cent of the entire literary output. Add to this the same sum for foreign literature, 2,300 marks for secondhand books, 9,000 marks for binding, and Roquette concludes that even the wealthiest German university library, that of Göttingen, still lacks 15,000 marks a year of being able to buy all the learned and scientific works published. — Christian Work.

— A volume of verse under the title of My Lattice Window, by Frederick George Scott, will be issued early in the autumn by William Briggs, the Toronto publisher.

— The last work on which the late Sir Henry Layard was engaged was the condensation of his Early Adventures into one volume, of which he had just finished the revision.

— The Evening Post makes these plain remarks apropos of several recent novels:

> It is precisely because "Iota" indulges in what is euphemistically called "physiological treatment" of several subjects that A Yellow Aster should be relegated to the "unhealthy purlieus of the Heavenly Twins;" the reasons why it should be "deemed bad" were set forth in our review. One of our points was to protest against physiology in novels, partly because we believe that young girls are quite competent to find out the necessity for "love in marriage" without the aid of physiological instruction from more or less indecorous lady novelists, and even that the knowledge come by in such a way will surely do them more harm than good. Physiology in fiction is simply an offense against taste and morals, occasionally palliated by notable literary power, but never justified. Another point in our review, and one that appears to have been very imperfectly made, was to expose the pretense of service to virtue and science made by English novelists who wish to discuss indecencies or improprieties, but do not dare to do so undisguisedly.

— German papers report that the Japanese Professor Mori, who studied in Germany, has translated Goethe's Werther's Leiden into his native language, and that "Young Japan" is crying over the sufferings of the unfortunate lover.

— The Shakespeare press of Westfield, Union County, N. J., will issue on the first day of October, 1894, the initial number of the Bankside Quarterly, a high-class magazine devoted to Shakespeareana and to comtemporary dramatic literature, and thereafter the magazine will appear promptly on the first days of March, June, September, and December in each year. The Bankside Quarterly will be edited by the New York Shakespeare Society, which has retired from the editorial conduct of Shakespeareana, and, while repeating the essential features of a magazine devoted to Shakespearean matters, will add the further experiment of applying to later dramatic literature, the drama of the Restoration, of Queen Anne, of modern times and of our own day, an equivalent scholarship and criticism. Nor will fiction of a high order — preferably that illustrative of dramatic associations — be neglected. Mr. Chas. Falkner, Jr.'s A Man That's Married (a romance in which Shakespeare is the central character), the opening chapters of which in Shakespeareana have attracted admiration, will be continued in the Bankside Quarterly, and upon its completion another will follow.

— Messrs. T. Y. Crowell & Co. have in press for immediate publication a complete edition of the poetical works of Sir Walter Scott, in two volumes, illustrated, with an introduction by Prof. Charles Eliot Norton of Harvard University.

— Mr. A. S. Cody announces that he is preparing a text-book on the practical art of short-story writing, with suggestions as to other kinds of writing.

— The latest publications of D. Appleton & Co. include Occasional Sermons and Lectures, by Rev. John M. Kiely, rector of the Church of the Transfiguration, Brooklyn, N. Y.; and new editions of Appletons' General Guide to the United States and Appletons' Hand-Book of Summer Resorts. They have in press for immediate publication Essays, Biological and Geological, by Thomas H. Huxley; A Rejoiner to Professor Weismann, by Herbert Spencer, reprinted from the Contemporary Review; Memoirs Illustrating the History of Napoleon I, by Baron Claude-François de Méneval, Volume III; General Lee, by Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, a new volume in the Great Commanders series, edited by Gen. James Grant Wilson; and Appletons' Dictionary of New York and its Vicinity, revised edition of 1894.

— Dr. Fennell of Barton College, Cambridge, editor of the Stanford Dictionary of Anglicised Words and Phrases, proposes to compile a National Dictionary of English Language and Literature, in three volumes of about one thousand pages each, to be issued also in fifty monthly parts. It is intended to include all words and phrase-words found in English literature between 1360 A.D. and the present day. The work is to be based on full indexes of several carefully selected authors, including Chaucer, Caxton, Elyot, North, Phil. Holland, Bacon, Pope, Johnson, Burke, Thackeray, Macaulay, and Ruskin. At the same time quotations from hundreds of other authors will be used, many thousands having been already collected, including large numbers dated earlier than the earliest given in any dictionary. Dates of authorship and exact references will be given. The cost is estimated at $80,000, and subscribers are consequently much needed. The subscription, if paid this year, will be only three guineas, or four pounds for the edition in parts.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the LITERARY WORLD are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Economics and Politics.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODERN CAPITALISM. A Study of Machine Production. By John A. Hobson. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25

THE ILLS OF THE SOUTH; or, Related Causes Hostile to the General Prosperity of the Southern People. By Charles H. Otken, LL.D. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

Educational.

ELEMENTARY ALGEBRA. By Charles Smith, M.A. Revised and Adapted to American Schools, by Irving Stringham, Ph.D. Macmillan & Co. $1.10

A PRACTICAL FLORA. For Schools and Colleges. By Oliver R. Willis. American Book Co. $1.50

PRACTICAL LESSONS IN FRACTIONS, ACCOMPANIED BY FRACTION CARDS. By Florence N. Sloane. D. C. Heath & Co. 40c.

SCENES FROM GREEK PLAYS. THE PERSAE OF ÆSCHYLUS. By Rev. F. S. Ramsbotham. Longmans, Green & Co. 50c.

ERRORS IN SCHOOL-BOOKS. Second Competition. Pope Manufacturing Co.

ÆSOP'S FABLES. With Explanatory Notes. English Classic Series. Maynard, Merrill & Co. 12c.

CATALOGUE OF BOOKS PUBLISHED BY D. C. HEATH & Co. 1894. Boston.

CATALOGUE OF GERMAN, FRENCH, SPANISH, AND ILALIAN BOOKS PUBLISHED BY D. C. HEATH & CO.

GREAT TEACHERS OF FOUR CENTURIES. By Ossian H. Lang. E. L. Kellogg & Co. 25c.

THE AMERICAN SYSTEM OF VERTICAL WRITING. Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. American Book Co.

Essays and Sketches.

SUGGESTIVE ESSAYS ON VARIOUS SUBJECTS. By "Ormond." Chicago: Blakely Printing Co. 25c.

COCK LANE AND COMMON-SENSE. By Andrew Lang. Longmans, Green & Co. $2.25

BOOKS AND PLAYS. By Allan Monkhouse. Limited edition. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.50

ASPECTS OF MODERN STUDY. Being University Extension Addresses. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

MR. PICKET-PIN AND HIS FRIENDS. By Pierce Collier. Illustrated E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.00

LETTERS ADDRESSED TO A COLLEGE FRIEND. By John Ruskin. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

Fiction.

THE DISAPPEARANCE OF MR. DERWENT. By Thomas Cobb. F. T. Neely. 50c.

THE QUEEN OF ECUADOR. By R. M. Manley. Illustrated. The H. W. Hagemann Pub. Co. 50c.

THE EBB TIDE. A Trio and Quartette. By Robert Louis Stevenson and Lloyd Osborne. Stone & Kimball. $1.25

A SUPERFLUOUS WOMAN. Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

THE MASK OF BEAUTY. By Fanny Lewald. Illustrated. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

EVERY INCH A SOLDIER. By John Strange Winter. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

A SUMMER BROTHER. By Sophie Bronson Titterington. American Baptist Publishing Society. 90c.

YET SHE LOVED HIM, by Mrs. Kate Vaughn; and JEPHTHAH'S DAUGHTER, by Julia Magruder. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

HIS WILL AND HERS. By Dora Russell. Rand, McNally & Co. 75c.

THE ABBÉ CONSTANTIN. By Ludovic Halévy. Illustrated. Rand, McNally & Co. 50c.

NARCISSA; or, the Road to Rome. In Verona. By Laura E. Richards. Estes & Lauriat. 50c.

ON A MEXICAN MUSTANG THROUGH TEXAS. By Sweet and Knox, editors of Texas Siftings. Rand, McNally & Co. 25c.

THE HOUSE OF THE WOLF. By Stanley J. Weyman. Rand, McNally & Co. 50c.

TWO GENTLEMEN OF HAWAII. By Seward W. Hopkins. Illustrated. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

THE ROMANCES OF ALEXANDRE DUMAS. THE COMPANIONS OF JEHU. Two vols. — THE SHE WOLVES OF MACHECOUL AND THE CORSICAN BROTHERS. Two vols. — THE WHITES AND THE BLUES. Two vols. Little, Brown & Co.

AN EASTER VACATION. By Moira O'Neill. E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.25

THE THING THAT HATH BEEN. By Arthur Herman Gilkes. Longmans, Green & Co.

LOVE AND SHAWL-STRAPS. By Annette L. Noble. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

EDLEEN VAUGHAN; or, Paths of Peril. By Carmen Silva. Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

LOTTIE'S WOOING. By Darley Dale. Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

LIST, YE LANDSMEN! By W. Clark Russell. Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

THE STORIES OF THE RAMAYANA AND THE MAHABHARATA. By John Campbell Oman. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

THE MAIDEN'S PROGRESS. A Novel in Dialogue. By Violet Hunt. Harper & Brothers. $1.00

MUSIC HATH CHARMS. By V. Munro-Ferguson. Harper & Brothers. $1.25

OUT OF STEP. A Novel. By Maria Louise Pool. Harper & Brothers. $1.25

THE BACHELOR OF THE MIDWAY. By the author of "Dr. Jack." Mascot Publishing Co. 50c.

VASHTI AND ESTHER. A Story of Society Today. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

THE YELLOW BOOK. Vol. II. Copeland & Day. $1.50

"WANTED." By Mrs. G. R. Alden (Pansy). Illustrated. Lothrop Publishing Co. $1.50

History.

A HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES. By Allen C. Thomas. D. C. Heath & Co. $1.25

CENTENARY HISTORY OF THE SOUTH PLACE SOCIETY. By Moncure D. Conway. London: Williams & Norgate. $2.00

A HISTORY OF GERMANY IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By Ernest F. Henderson. Macmillan & Co. $2.60

Philosophy.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE PHILOSOPHY OF HERBERT SPENCER. By Wm. H. Hudson. D. Appleton & Co. $1.25

OUR NOTIONS OF NUMBER AND SPACE. By Herbert Nichols, Ph.D. Ginn & Co. $1.10

Poetry, Music, and the Drama.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF GEOFFREY CHAUCER. Edited by Rev. Walter W. Skeat. Vol. III. Macmillan & Co. $4.00 net.

THE TEMPLE SHAKESPEARE. MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING. — LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST. Macmillan & Co. Each, 45c.

THE UNIVERSAL NAME; or, One Hundred Songs to Mary. Selected and arranged by Mrs. E. Vale Blake. Buffalo: C. Wells Moulton.

THE GARROTERS. A Farce. By William D. Howells. Harper & Brothers. 50c.

DRAWING-ROOM DUOLOGUES. By Fred. M. Simpson. Illustrated. London: T. Fisher Unwin.

Religion and Theology.

THE BOOK OF CHRONICLES. By W. H. Bennett, M.A. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.50

THE DAWN OF CHRISTIANITY. By Henry C. Vedder. American Baptist Pub. Society. 90c.

THE FOOTPRINTS OF THE JESUITS. By R. W. Thompson. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.75

Miscellaneous.

CALENDAR BOOK BULLETIN FOR THE SUMMER MONTHS. Lovell, Coryell & Co.

MEMOIRS OF THE INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ANTHROPOLOGY. Edited by C. Staniland Wake. The Schulte Publishing Co. $6.00 net.

PAPER-COVERED BOOKS: A CATALOGUE. San Francisco: W. E. Price.

RAND, MCNALLY & CO.'S POCKET MAPS. NEW YORK. — PENNSYLVANIA. Each, 25c.

THE ISLAND OF NANTUCKET. Compiled by Edward K. Godfrey. Lee & Shepard. 50c.

SCARABS. The History, Manufacture, and Religious Symbolism of the Scarabæus. By Isaac Myer. Edwin W. Dayton. $1.75

RAND, MCNALLY & CO.'S POCKET MAPS. ARIZONA. — INDIAN AND OKLAHOMA TERRITORIES. — COLORADO. — IDAHO. — NEW YORK. Each, 25c.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

LAWRENCE
Public Library,
LAWRENCE MASS.

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 SOMERSET STREET
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 25 AUGUST 1894 Vol. XXV No. 17 Whole No. 513

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

"A Remarkable Book."

FOURTH AND CHEAPER EDITION, WITH NEW PREFACE.

SOCIAL EVOLUTION.

By BENJAMIN KIDD. 8vo, cloth, $1.75.

"The volume . . . owes much of its success to its noble tone, its clear and delightful style, and to the very great pleasure the reader experiences as he is conducted through the strong, dignified and courteous discussion. From a scientific point of view it is the most important contribution recently made to biological sociology."—Independent.

SECOND AND CHEAPER EDITION. BY THE LATE DR. C. H. PEARSON.

NATIONAL LIFE AND CHARACTER: A Forecast.

By CHARLES H. PEARSON, Hon. LL. D. St. Andrews, late Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, and sometime Minister of Education, Victoria. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. Price, $2.00.

"We at once confess that we have here the mature reflections of a man of superior learning and wide information. . . . The book is thoroughly interesting, and stimulat- to a high degree."—Andover Review.

". . . One of the most suggestive and stimulating books that have for a long time appeared."—New World.

"The Temple" Shakespeare.

New Volumes.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING. LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

With Prefaces, Glossaries, etc. By ISRAEL GOLLANCZ, M. A. With Frontispieces in Photogravure, and Title-pages designed by WALTER CRANE. Imperial 16mo. Printed on Van Gelder hand-made paper. in black and red. Cloth extra, flexible covers, gilt top. Price, each, 45 cents. Paste grain roan, limp gilt top. Price, each, 65 cents.

⁂ By permission, the text used is that of the "Globe" Edition, but carefully amended from that of the latest "Cambridge" Edition.

"An exceedingly dainty and enticing edition."—Congregationalist.

New Book by John Ruskin.

Letters to a College Friend, During the Years 1840-1845.

Including an Essay on "Death before Adam Fell." By JOHN RUSKIN, D. C. L., LL. D. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

Already Published.

Verona, and Other Lectures.

Delivered principally at the Royal and London Institutions between 1870 and 1883. By JOHN RUSKIN, D. C. L., LL. D. Illustrated with Frontispiece in color and 11 Photogravure Plates from drawings by the author. 8vo, cloth, $2.50 net.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A HISTORY OF GERMANY IN THE MIDDLE AGES.

By ERNEST F. HENDERSON, A. M. (Harvard), Ph. D. (Berlin), editor of "Select Historical Documents of the Middle Ages" (Bohn). 8vo, cloth, $2.60 net.

"It must be accounted a happy chance that a volume which unlocks so vast a store of the treasures of research gathered by the multitude of workers in the field of German mediæval history should have been presented in the first place to the general reader in this country. The material is thoroughly well digested, and is presented in a singularly lucid and attractive way."—Scotsman.

Just Published.

The Unemployed.

By GEOFFREY DRAGE, Secretary to the Labor Commission. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

"An exhaustive and deeply interesting study of the unemployed question."—Daily Telegraph.

Primitive Civilizations;

Or, Outlines of the History of Ownership in Archaic Communities. By E. J. SIMCOX, author of "Natural Laws," etc. 2 vols., 8vo, $10.00.

"A very valuable contribution to historical knowledge."—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

VOL. I. NEW TRANSLATION.

THE NOVELS OF IVAN TURGENEV.

Translated from the Russian by CONSTANCE GARNETT. In seven volumes. 16mo, cloth extra, gilt top. $1.25 each.

Now Ready. Vol. I. RUDIN. Further volumes in preparation.

"Mrs. Garnett's version of 'Rudin' reads, indeed, with all the charm and ease of an original work, and all true lovers of good literature will feel grateful to her for having so ably accomplished a difficult task."—Publishers' Circular.

Just Published.

Hints on Driving.

By Captain C. MORLEY KNIGHT, R. A. Illustrated by G. H. A. WHITE, Royal Artillery. 12mo, cloth. $1.25 net.

Aspects of Modern Study.

Being University Extension Addresses by Lord PLAYFAIR, Canon BROWNE. Mr. GOSCHEN, Mr. JOHN MORLEY, Sir JAMES PAGET, Professor MAX MULLER, the Duke of Argyll, the Bishop of Durham, and Professor JEBB. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

AUGUST NUMBER NOW READY.

BOOK REVIEWS.

A Monthly Journal devoted to New and Current Publications. Price, 5 cents per number. Yearly subscription, 50 cents.

⁂ The leading article this month is the third of the series of papers by Mr. F. MARION CRAWFORD, entitled "Modern Views of Mysticism.'

MACMILLAN & CO., 66 Fifth Avenue, New York.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

"To teach things rather than names" is the aim of Dr. J. H. Kellogg's SECOND BOOK OF PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE, just issued (80 cents). It is a book for advanced classes, and the author has endeavored to bring within the comprehension of the student important facts not generally treated in school physiologies. Prominence is also given to the branch of the subject relating to the effects of alcohol, narcotics, and other stimulants on the human system. Colored charts and woodcuts help to elucidate the text.

The method of presentation pursued in Dr. W. J. Milne's ELEMENTS OF ALGEBRA is the same as that which is exemplified in his Arithmetics, and which has proved not only pedagogically correct but has also met with general and enthusiastic approval. Milne's Elements of Algebra, just published. Price, prepaid, 60 cents.

PECK AND ARROWSMITH'S ROMAN LIFE IN LATIN PROSE AND VERSE aims to give, in the form of a collection of characteristic extracts from varied sources, a representative survey of Latin letters for the use of those who cannot devote a longer course to the study. The selections are made solely on the basis of their intrinsic interest and their relation to Roman life, and range from the popular songs which antedate written literature, to the Christian Hymns of the third century. To each selection is prefixed a precise account of the author, when known, and his works, with a brief working bibliography. For convenience in sight reading the text is provided with a translation of the more difficult words, and followed by a fuller commentary on special points of interest. Several of the selections have never before been published with an English commentary.

The Report of the Latin Conference of the Committee of Ten favors for first readings in Latin authors whose works have a general interest and a close relation to the life and customs of the people. ARROWSMITH AND WHICHER'S FIRST LATIN READINGS—nearly ready—meets the Committee's requirements. Adapted to second-year work, it is a collection of simple, carefully graded material, wide in its scope and interesting in its matter. The selections deal more with the daily life and customs of the Romans than with their military achievements, and are not confined to any one author or period. Specimen pages may be had by addressing the Publishers.

THE REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF TEN ON SECONDARY SCHOOL STUDIES, pronounced by U. S. Commissioner Harris the most important educational document ever issued in this country, has been printed and published by the American Book Company for the benefit of the National Educational Association. It is supplied, postpaid, at the nominal price of 30 cents.

SMALL AND VINCENT'S INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF SOCIETY ($1.80) is noteworthy as the initial volume of its kind published in this country. It deals with the fundamental facts of society, and is intended to furnish a basis for preliminary instruction in Sociology in American institutions of higher education.

A new aspect is given to the study of Botany in Oliver R. Willis's PRACTICAL FLORA ($1.50). It shows the economic features of the vegetable kingdom, and its relations to our every-day life. Food-producing vegetation and plants that yield articles of use or consumption are described and classified, and to each is appended its history, geography, and other information of economic and commercial interest. It is cordially recommended by Profs. W. G. Farlow (Harvard), Byron D. Halsted (Rutgers), Geo. M. McCloskie (Princeton), Albert P. Brigham (Colgate), and other leading botanists.

The method by observation and inspection, applied to the study of Latin and Greek in President Harper's INDUCTIVE CLASSICAL SERIES, has many advantages which instructors have been quick to recognize and appreciate. Latest issues of the series are repeating the phenominal success achieved by their predecessors.

"Pupils should be helped to help themselves" may be said to be the keynote of Metcalf's ENGLISH GRAMMAR FOR COMMON SCHOOLS (60 cents), just published. In this book pupils are led, first, in the light of their own experience to study the simple facts of language, and then to investigate the more difficult matters of construction and inflection until they arrive at the general laws which govern its structure. Robert C. Metcalf, Supervisor of Schools, Boston, Mass., and Thomas Metcalf, of the Illinois State Normal School, are the authors.

ECLECTIC ENGLISH CLASSICS steadily increase in popularity, due to the high literary quality of the books selected, careful editing, judicious, helpful notes, pleasing appearance, and low prices. Fourteen volumes are now ready, and nearly as many more are announced as forthcoming.

The New York Times says of GUERBER'S MYTHS OF GREECE AND ROME ($1.50): "We recall no recent work in this field more interesting, or which, without being pretentious, will give the reader so quickly and surely a knowledge of classical mythology."

Dr. Emerson E. White has laid the teacher's profession under lasting obligation for his SCHOOL MANAGEMENT ($1.00). Public Opinion says: "It would be well for themselves, their scholars, and the Republic if 'School Management' could be read carefully and thoughtfully by every teacher."

With strong credentials from Europe, Vertical Writing seeks recognition here. Its progress, however, has been retarded by the uncouth, clumsily formed copies heretofore offered. THE AMERICAN SYSTEM OF VERTICAL WRITING, just issued, is the first to present graceful, pleasing, finely executed vertical script forms, providing for teaching the system under the most favorable conditions. $1.00 per doz., prepaid.

The newest text-book for primary instruction in the language is MAXWELL'S FIRST BOOK IN ENGLISH (40 cents). Through the study of simple, interesting sentences, young pupils are trained almost unconsciously to express their thoughts clearly and accurately. With his Introductory Lessons (40 cents), it forms the latest two-book series in English grammar for common schools. His Advanced Lessons (60 cents) is for higher grammar grades and high schools.

The books mentioned in these notes are all published by the American Book Company. They have the largest number and greatest variety of the most popular and reliable text-books for all grades of public and private schools. They make no charge for delivery—any of their books being sent prepaid on receipt of list price. Special terms for first supplies. Catalogues and circulars, also Bulletin of new books, free.

AMERICAN BOOK COMPANY, Publishers,

NEW YORK. CINCINNATI. CHICAGO. BOSTON. PORTLAND, Ore.

September Atlantic

Contains, among other attractions,

PHILIP AND HIS WIFE. XXVI.-XXIX. Margaret Deland.
RUS IN URBE. Edith M. Thomas.
OLD BOSTON MARY: A REMEMBRANCE. Josiah Flynt.
AN ONONDAGA MOTHER AND CHILD. Duncan Campbell Scott.
THE KIDNAPPED BRIDE. Mary Hartwell Catherwood.
THE RELIGION OF GOTAMA BUDDHA. William Davies.
FOR THEIR BRETHREN'S SAKE. Grace Howard Peirce.
UP CHEVEDALE AND DOWN AGAIN. Charles Stewart Davison.
AVE ATQUE VALE. Graham R. Tomson.
FROM THE REPORTS OF THE PLATO CLUB. IN TWO PARTS. PART ONE. Herbert Austin Aikins.
TANTE CAT'RINETTE. Kate Chopin.
A MORNING AT THE OLD SUGAR MILL. Bradford Torrey.
IN A WASHINGTON HOP FIELD. Louise Herrick Wall.
AN ENTERPRISING SCHOLAR. Harriet Waters Preston and Louise Dodge.
A READING IN THE LETTERS OF JOHN KEATS. Leon H. Vincent.
THE NEW STORM AND STRESS IN GERMANY. Kuno Francke.

$4.00 a year; 35 cents a number.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

THE

POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY

FOR SEPTEMBER.

The Imaginative Side of Play. By Prof. JAMES SULLY, M. A., LL. D.

A charming study of the faculty of "making believe," which enters so largely into children's plays.

Commercial Power Development at Niagara (Illustrated.) By ERNEST A. LE SUEUR.

The Falls to be harnessed to the dynamo. An enterprise of enormous possibilities that is now well advanced.

Arctic Temperatures and Exploration. By STUART JENKINS.

A new plan for reaching the north pole based on the experience of surveyors in winter work in British America.

Ethical Relations Between Man and Beast. By Prof. E. P. EVANS.

Shows how the doctrine of the earth and all that is in it being made for man has fostered cruelty to animals.

OTHER ARTICLES:

THE HUMMING BIRDS OF CHOCORUA; BARBERRIES (illustrated); SCIENTIFIC EDUCATION; THE WORK OF DUST; THE NEW MINERALOGY; SCIENCE AS A MEANS OF HUMAN CULTURE; PARASITIC AND PREDACEOUS INSECTS; SEVENTEENTH-CENTURY ASTROLOGY; SKETCH OF GOTTHILF HEINRICH ERNST MUHLENBERG (with Portrait).

CORRESPONDENCE; EDITOR'S TABLE; LITERARY NOTICES; POPULAR MISCELLANY; NOTES.

50 cents a number; $5.00 a year.

D. APPLETON & CO., NEW YORK.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address
Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

"An Epoch-making Book."

THIRD THOUSAND NOW READY.

SOCIALISM and SOCIAL REFORM.

BY

PROFESSOR RICHARD T. ELY, LL. D.,

Author of "The Labor Movement," "Problems of Today," "Taxation in American States and Cities," "Social Aspects of Christianity," etc.

12mo, $1.50.

"Professor Ely differs radically from most of the writers on Socialism, as he is impartial. He does not twist facts to make out a case; he is intent on presenting both sides of every controversy to the reader.

"It cannot fail to broaden the views of every fair-minded person and to inspire interest in a subject which it is of vital importance should be properly understood."—San Francisco Chronicle.

For sale by all booksellers.

T. Y. CROWELL & CO.,
New York and Boston.

"An invaluable book for mothers."

THE CARE OF CHILDREN.

By ELISABETH ROBINSON SCOVIL,

Superintendent of the Newport Hospital and Associate Editor of the "Ladies' Home Journal."

12mo, 348 pages, cloth. Price, $1.00.

"Writes with a full and enthusiastic acquaintance with her subject. . . . A good piece of literary work, written with simplicity, clearness, precision, judgment and tact."

HENRY ALTEMUS, Publisher,
Philadelphia, Pa.

The Literary World

Vol. XXV BOSTON 25 AUGUST 1894 No. 17

CONTENTS

The Maiden's Progress 259
Cruising in the Netherlands 259
Ghazels from the Divan of Hafiz . . . 260
Home Life of the Ancient Greeks . . . 261
Anthropology at the World's Fair . . 261
Vashti and Esther 262
Professor Ladd's Psychology 262
The Garden That I Love 263
Legends of the Micmacs 263

Poetry:

William Cullen Bryant. Julia Ward Howe . 264
The Literary Phase of the Eastern War . 264
London Letter 265

Fiction:

A Pound of Cure 266
Narcissa and In Verona 266
Every Inch a Soldier 266
The Norsk Gopher 266
Old Celtic Romances 266
An Easter Vacation 266
Wanted 266
Drawing-Room Duologues 267
Out of Step 267

Minor Notices:

Balder, the Poet 267
Journal of Martha Pintard Bayard . . . 267
The Footprints of the Jesuits 267
Discipleship: the Scheme of Christianity . . 268
Mr. Picket-Pin and His Friends 268
Wealth and Moral Law 268
Periodicals 268
Correspondence 269
News and Notes 270

THE MAIDEN'S PROGRESS.*

A BRIGHT and clever story is this, relating, in dialogue or monologue, the career of Mary Elizabeth Maskelyne, christened Moderna by Gontram Vere, the poet. She deserves the name, for she is extremely modern in her ways and views. She is not, indeed, a Newnham or a Girton girl, but in all respects she sympathizes with the emancipated of her sex after she has found herself too much out of sympathy with her fiancé, who belongs to a noble family. She accordingly breaks the engagement and goes in for "life," "the development of her personality," "the independence of her intellect," and all the idols of the feminine hour. It is, of course, a somewhat conventional ending that Miss Moderna, who is a girl of fundamental good heart and good sense, comes to; but it is conventional simply because Nature has always had a good deal to say in such cases, and, if what she says is not heeded, she has a very convincing way of her own that shows the "conventions" of love and marriage have deep roots. Moderna's father, a learned professor, declares that "every young girl raises altars to the unknown god" in her religion of humanity, and those who do not worship at such an altar or any other are not going to be the permanent fashion!

Violet Hunt's style is finished and epigrammatic, and it is well varied to suit the various characters, who do not describe each other very much, but are mainly self-revealed. From the first the clever sayings make the reader smile or laugh and lead him easily on. The audacious Peggy, a younger sister of Miss Moderna, declares that "waists are made, not born. I shall soon begin mine. At present I prefer to be comfortable." Verona, the commonplace middle sister hates having "quotations squirted at her." Gontram Vere, the poet, whom Lady Riddell calls "a sort of Cupid gone to seed," after christening the heroine Moderna, tells her:

> You are so intensely, essentially modern. You are of the times; you will grow with the times; you will take the impress of every passing wave of modern thought and yet preserve your individuality. You will never stop growing till you die, like me. You have evolution in you, you know. So few women have.

How Moderna fulfills this prophecy the reader will pleasantly learn from these lively pages. Two of the best things in the book are Professor Maskelyne's letter to his daughter, who has, of course, written a novel and asks his advice about it under a feigned name, and Mrs. Maskelyne's reflections on the mothers of young women who, in Miss Dolly Tremaine's expressions, "go everywhere and see everything and hear everything," and are "in it — right in it — up to our little chins — in the stream of life." Moderna does not find it so delightful as she had expected, and comes to sympathize with Lord Coniston, who has seen a good deal of the world, but has "never seen any good come of the modern spirit of dissatisfied curiosity and restlessness in women who want to be different to other women, who can't conform to what the wisdom of ages has decreed for them. It's bad form to say the least of it."

CRUISING IN THE NETHERLANDS.*

THE value and interest of this little book are out of all proportion to its size and pretension. There are but two hundred pages of it, and its style is extremely artless and simple; but there is not a superfluous line nor a wasted word in it, and it suffices to give a better idea of scenery and life in Holland than could be had from many a larger and much more self-important volume. The author is an English yachtsman, who, having extensively explored those curious water ways of the home land, the Norfolk Broads, turned his prow across the channel and spent several seasons in sailing through and through the canals and meres of Holland and across the shallow and stormy Zuyder Zee, weaving a network of maritime routes which covered a good part of the Low Countries and took in most of the local points of fame and picturesqueness in its ample meshes. At one time he and his wife were in the chartered steam yacht, Atalanta, of sixty feet length, ten feet beam, and drawing five feet of water. Again they were in his own sailing yacht, the Chrysalis, thirty-feet long, nine feet beam, and drawing only four feet nine inches. The Chrysalis was succeeded by the Speedwell, a somewhat larger craft, with generous accommodations for a small party, built to the owner's order, and so adapted to his wants in every particular. Happy the man and wife who can devote the long days of June to cruising about under conditions like these in so quaint and curious a country as Holland!

A country shall we call it? Is it not rather almost a gridiron of water ways with interspaces of land? How many of our readers remember Hans Brinker of the Silver Skates? A land of rivers and lakes and canals, of broad estuaries opening up from the sea, through which from north to south and from east to west one can go afloat in almost any direction without once setting foot on solid ground. The land of Amsterdam and Rotterdam and all the other "dams;" of Haarlem and Leyden and Utrecht; of Bergen-op-Zoom and Noordwijk aan Zee; of Hoogstraeten and Schoonhoven; and a host of other places, whose outlandish names Motley's histories have made as familiar to us as household words.

Then there is that Zuyder Zee, broad and shallow as breadth is often shallow, with its outpost sentinels of Texel, Vlieland, Terschelling, and Ameland, and its incomparable islands of Urk and Marken, its sweeping winds out of the North Sea, and its downlook into the basin-like meadows that lie beyond its heavily dyked borders.

Then there are the lumbering Dutch "schuyts" and other vessels, with their scrubbed oak fittings and shining ornaments of brass; the trim, neat villages, where every Saturday is a universal cleaning day; the fat cattle, always black and white, feeding in the rich lowlands under the dykes; the stout, stocky peasants, with their golden helmets and bright kerchiefs and long, straight, yellow hair; the military rows of poplars, prim and stiff; the fantastic windmills; the tall and massive church towers; the crowded quays; the ponderous drawbridges; the men with their wide breeches and the children with their clanking wooden shoes; the mud and the tide and the scud from the sea.

---

* The Maiden's Progress. A Novel in Dialogue. By Violet Hunt. Harper & Brothers. $1.00.

* Cruising in the Netherlands. By J. Christopher Davies. London: Jarrold & Sons.

Take Urk for an example of the picturesque in Holland, that low little island in the Zuyder Zee off the mouth of the River Issel — a mile and a half long and half a mile broad, with a lighthouse at one end, a crowd of houses in the middle, and at the other end a low, green marsh, where cows and sheep are feeding. It is Saturday and the good fisherfolk are coming in with their boats, for there is no fishing from Urk on the Lord's Day. There is a long, narrow entrance to the harbor between two curving piers, with seven feet of water to anchor in and a hard bottom. The landing place is a "hard," covered with boats and drying nets. A crowd of men and boys gather curiously around the strangers. Fine fellows are the men of Urk, tall, strong, and hardy — men and boys dressed alike in wooden shoes, thick knitted stockings, and breeches to the knees. Here is a girl of Urk:

> Her waist — well, she hasn't one; no Dutch peasant has. There is not only no narrowing between the shoulders and the hips, but there is a decided broadening all the way, and the ultimate breadth is wonderful. The dress is a green or red woolen outer petticoat, with a sort of all-round woolen pinafore, rather than dress, of a purple or dark green; a close-fitting body, with tight sleeves nearly down to the elbow, and fitting close round the neck. On the head is a cap, black at the top, but with a broad white band round the lower part of it.

How many forms, outlines, and colors enter into the Holland picture! Stone piers projecting far into the sea; sometimes a slight haze, making the sky a grayish-blue, full of diffused light; again dense layers of mist on the horizon; sailing vessels of every conceivable size and description passing to and fro; bells ringing out musically over the scene; old city gates, massively and strikingly ornamented; long bridges crossing the canals; bright cafés on their shores; green, grassy banks; sheep being sheared; cows being milked; barges laden with great masses of rich brown peat; women in their showy and fine churchgoing costume; fowl houses like dolls' houses; tides racing through the sluices; narrow channels marked by buoys; sullen storms in the distance; dolphins gamboling in the water like kittens; great steamers plying to London; market places piled with produce; huge locks at the rise and fall of the canals; little mirrors projecting from the sides of the windows; boys fishing for roach; tree trunks painted blue or pink up to the branches; sharp-peaked roofs and red gables; brass milk pails; sheep wearing canvas overcoats; pigs being towed to the shambles; shady parks; shows of tulips; vast steam pumping stations; storks' nests in the tops of the chimneys; "washing boxes" filled by buxom women; children singing psalm tunes in their schoolrooms; and so forth and so on. Canals are not the only channels of communication in Holland. There are railways and tram cars, and the visitor is not by any means confined to water or to his own private vessel under steam or sail.

Mr. Davies has certainly given in this little book, which, by the way, is agreeably light to hold, a most vivid and alluring picture of the country and one that will helpfully supplement Baedeker. There is a fairly good map at the outset and a plentiful supply of illustrations, made evidently from photographs taken with the handy kodak or hawk-eye, though the engraving of these is poor. But altogether it is a capital and useful book on Holland. We lay it away for the future.

GHAZELS FROM THE DIVAN OF HAFIZ.[*]

"SWEET is the colored wine and the companionship of the beloved. Hafiz, who has lost his heart, will always believe this creed." Those who will may find in these words, which are the keynote of all Hafiz' songs, the acme of mysticism, but for most of us it is easier to believe them the simple utterance of a pleasure-loving man, dowered above all other Eastern poets with the glow and fire of poetic materialism. Less philosophic than Omar Khayyám, Hafiz surpasses him in human touch and sympathy; indeed, in spite of the Orientalism of all his imagery and symbolism, Hafiz, in his roistering humor, has far more points in common with François Villon than with Omar Khayyám's calm fatalism.

Mr. Justin Huntly McCarthy has for the first time given Hafiz in an adequate form to English readers. In the preface he says: "It is my hope not to have marred too greatly the harmony of some of those songs by my versions or perversions, to use the phrase affected by Edward Fitzgerald. They do not profess to compose a 'crib;' they only attempt to show within a little space something of the splendor of a great work." Mr. McCarthy has rendered into really beautiful English prose one hundred and thirty-eight of the ghazels of Hafiz, and the excellence of his workmanship gives his versions many claims to comparison and companionship with Edward Fitzgerald's Omar Khayyám.

Of Hafiz' life nothing is known with certainty, except that he was born in the beginning of the fourteenth century and lived nearly to its end. Of his thoughts on life we have the evidence of his countless and deathless songs. "A brace of good companions, a flagon of wine, leisure, and a book and a corner of the garden — I would not barter this state either for this world or that which is to come." This is Hafiz' philosophy, which certainly has a more jovial sound than Omar Khayyám's aspiration, and is almost as far removed from it as from that of Thomas à Kempis, "I have sought peace everywhere and have never found it save in a little corner with a little book." The monk needed nothing but the "little book;" Omar Khayyám "a book of verse and thou" to make paradise of the wilderness; but Hafiz must have a brace of boon companions, leisure, a whole flagon of wine, and a snug corner of the garden to satisfy him, and of all these luxuries the wine was the most important. This requirement sounds through most of Hafiz' verse. "I have turned back through mistake from the street of the tavern; kindly throw me back into the path of righteousness." We fancy this is a mistake which Hafiz never made more than once, for he never bewails it again, and tells us often that, "On the last day, Hafiz, even though the wine cup be in thy hand, thou mayest be borne away to paradise — even from the street of the tavern."

But Hafiz has other praises to give besides his constant exaltation of the wine cup. Friendship is the theme of some of his loveliest verse: "From the street of my friend bloweth the soft breeze of the dawning year, with whose help, if thou wishest it, thou mayest light the lamp of thine own heart." "This messenger, who has arrived from the country of my friend, has brought from the secret letter of my friend an amulet for my life. He giveth me a token of the greatness of my friend. I have given him my heart for his glad tidings, but I feel shame for my poor counters which I scatter on the way of my friend."

Sometimes friendship fails Hafiz and then he cries: "In none can I find friendship; what hath become of those who were my friends? The rose hath lost its color; what is become of the spring breeze? Thousands of roses have bloomed, but no song of a bird has arisen; whither are the nightingales gone? This land was once named 'The City of Friends,' 'The Place of Loved Ones.' How hath friendship ceased utterly? What hath become of the friends of the city?"

One of the ghazels is so beautiful as a whole that we must quote it entire: "I went forth into the garden to gather the rose of the morning, when, on a sudden, sounded in my ears the song of the nightingale. Unhappy as myself, tortured with his passion for the rose, he filled the sward with the voice of his wailing. Long I paced the walks of the garden considering the case of the rose and the nightingale. The rose became the friend of the thorn, while the nightingale was still the constant lover — the one is ever unaltered, the other is changeful. The voice of the nightingale pierced my heart until I was so stirred that I lost all power of patience. Many a rose hath bloomed in this garden, yet no one hath plucked a rose without being wounded by its thorn! O Hafiz! cherish no hope of happiness in this world, for with its thousand imperfections it can display no perfect excellence."

---

[*] Ghazels from the Divan of Hafiz. Done into English by Justin Huntly McCarthy. Published by David Nutt, London. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00.

Of spring and love Hafiz has written perhaps his finest verses, although no whole poem in Mr. McCarthy's selection can compare with the one quoted above. "Welcome and joyful greeting to the coming of the rose and the wild rose; the joy-dispensing violet has come, and the lily hath brought its purity. Heart, my heart, lament not that, even as the rosebud, thou art inclosed within thine own deeds, for the morning breeze brings soft winds to unloose all bonds." "In the land of love set not foot without one to lead thee, for he is lost who walketh this road without a guide. The road of love is a road without end and in which there is no help save to abandon our souls. Behold the might of Love! how in his pomp and splendor he dared, beggar though he be, to break off a fragment of the crown of royalty. On the day of resurrection, when I shall lift up my head from the dust of the grave, the scar of my madness after thee shall be in the core of my heart."

These quotations will show a little of the store of beauty of image and language to be found in Hafiz through the medium of Mr. Justin McCarthy's excellent translation. The reader who will turn the pages of this book for himself will find a new kingdom of poetry opening before him, whose beauty has been heretofore a matter of hearsay. Hafiz is his own apologist to those who condemn his philosophy of life: "Drink wine to the sound of the harp and do not be sorry; and if any one tell you, 'Do not drink wine,' say, 'God is forgiving.'" "Write not my name with reproach as a drunkard, for who knows what Fate hath written on his brow? Turn not thy feet away from the bier of Hafiz, for though steeped in sin he may yet be welcomed in heaven."

HOME LIFE OF THE ANCIENT GREEKS.*

THIS excellent outline of the life of the ancient Greeks is substantially confined, as the author tells us, to the Athens of the sixth to the fourth centuries B. C., since most of the material is derived from the Attic literature and art of that time, while other parts of Greece are known in much less detail. Professor Blümner confines himself strictly to facts, giving inference a small place and imagination none at all in his straightforward and unadorned narration. Only rarely does he quote from the lyric poets or the dramatists the passages from which his particulars are drawn. His five hundred pages are enough, therefore, to contain an account of Greek social life sufficiently full for all ordinary curiosity. Most of the two hundred illustrations are well reproduced from vase paintings, and Miss Zimmern has done good work in her translation.

Professor Blümner thinks it advisable to begin, not with the infant, but with costume; and this requires a long chapter to clear up the disputed points about a matter in which the Greeks differed so greatly from modern times. He then follows a sort of chronological order for a few chapters, through education, marriage, daily life, meals, and social entertainments to sickness, death, and burial. The remainder of the fifteen chapters treat miscellaneous topics, such as music and dancing, public festivals, the theater, war and seafaring, agriculture, trade, handicraft, and religion. The low estimation set upon trade in Greece is well known:

> The tradesman seemed to him [the cultured Greek] contemptible because he was influenced only by desire of gain and all his striving was to get the advantage over others. The profit and wealth accruing to so many Greek states from trade was not sufficient to decrease the prejudice against money-making occupations; even the common people were not able to understand that the merchant, on account of the risk of injury or even loss of his goods, changing conditions of price, and all his own trouble involved, was obliged to demand a higher price for his wares than what had been originally paid by himself; and the opinion that the merchant's business was based on love of gain and deceit was so common that even a philosophical intellect like Aristotle's was under the influence of this prejudice.

Professor Blümner properly emphasizes the fundamental position of slavery in Greek civilization, where seven slaves to six persons were considered a very modest allowance:

> All the social and economic conditions of antiquity are based on the institution of slavery, and without it would have been impossible; in fact, slavery is so closely interwoven with the whole life of antiquity that even the political development of the ancient nations and their achievements in the domain of art and industry would be inexplicable without the existence of a large slave population. . . . The injurious influence of this part of the population, who were chiefly barbarians, was felt in many different ways; and . . . we cannot hesitate to affirm that the speedy fall of Greece from her political and social height and the sad picture she offered under Roman dominion was due, among other causes, in very great part to the institution of slavery.

The position of women was largely conditioned by this prevalence of slavery. Their secluded condition in Athens was shown in the use of the tortoise as the symbol for domestic life; while the men were occupied abroad most of the time, but not in what modern men call business. The seclusion of women made the rise of romantic love a slow growth. Aphrodite Urania, "the type of heavenly, intellectual love" was much less worshiped than Aphrodite Pandemus, the type of sensuous love. The same cause may well have been responsible in large degree for the great inclination of Greek women to drink.

The humanity of Greek religion is well known; it was the opposite of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism:

> Greek religion possessed no dogmas; the priest's duty was only to perform certain rites and ceremonies, and these were easily learned. Consequently the priesthood in Greece was limited to no age and no sex; boys and girls, youths and maidens, men and married women, could perform priestly functions for a long or short period. The essential requirement was legitimate birth and participation in the community; . . . bodily purity and moral character were also required.

One fine consequence of such a faith is seen in the serenity of the Greek view of death as shown in the reliefs on the tombstones:

> Whether it is a scene from real life that is represented by art, or the bitter last farewell, or whether it is any hint of the life in a future state, which last is by no means uncommon, these reliefs are always distinguished by their moderation in the expression of pain and a peaceful feeling of calm and worthy expression of sorrow, which can but have an elevating effect even on those who have grown up in the views of Christianity.

ANTHROPOLOGY AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.*

OF all the many congresses held at Chicago last year that devoted to anthropology has, if we are not mistaken, been reported in the most prepossessing form. The volume named below, somewhat less than four hundred pages in length, is finely printed in a good-sized type, more familiar in foreign books than in those of English or American authorship, on excellent paper, with broad margins and rough edges, and bound in heavy blue covers with a gilt top. The editor is the competent Mr. Wake of Brooklyn, who is only to be reproached with passing over a few misprints, like Guirnet for Guimet.

With Dr. D. G. Brinton's presidential address, which opens the volume, we incline to more fault-finding. It is, on the whole, an able and convincing paper on the importance of the nation, as contrasted with the tribe, "as an element in anthropology." The central thought is thus expressed:

> The individual is, indeed, the true purpose of the state. Its aim distinctly is that he, or she, as an individual, shall be provided with, and protected in, the greatest amount of personal liberty—in this being in the utmost contrast to consanguine governments, where the individual is nothing, the tribe everything.

But when Dr. Brinton goes on at once to accept "the definition of morality which Hovelacque and Herve offer . . . as the only one which anthropologists can recognize, that it is the principle of organization for the purpose of satisfying the physical and intellectual needs of all men," one is led to inquire whether "intellectual" here means emotional, æsthetic, and spiritual, as well as scientific; if it does not, then the definition is very inadequate. A remark made soon after concerning the universal inferiority of women in all lower conditions of society needs much qualification to suit the facts.

---

* The Home Life of the Ancient Greeks. Translated from the German of Prof. H. Blümner by Alice Zimmern. Cassell Publishing Co. $2.00.

* Memoirs of the International Congress of Anthropology. Edited by C. Staniland Wake. Schulte Publishing Company. $6.00.

Among the contents of the volume—which have unusual variety and general interest in comparison with most collections of a similar nature—we note, as having peculiar attraction, the papers on the anthropology of the North American Indian, by F. Boas; the anthropometry of American school children, by G. M. West; aboriginal American mechanics, by O. T. Mason; cave-dwellers of the Sierra Madré, by C. Lumholtz (who pays his respects to the late Lieutenant Schwatka's writings on the subject as "a gross piece of humbug"); natural history of flaked stone implements, by W. H. Holmes; love songs among the Omaha Indians, by Alice C. Fletcher; ritual regarded as the dramatization of myth, by W. W. Newell; the fall of Hochelaga, by H. Hale; the scope and method of the historical study of religions, by M. Jastrow, Jr.; and museum collections to illustrate religious history and ceremonials, by C. Adler. There is much other matter that deserves a wide reading from its skillful presentation of the latest knowledge on topics of archæology, ethnology, folk-lore, religion, and linguistics.

VASHTI AND ESTHER.*

"SOCIETY today," as the anonymous author of Vashti and Esther describes it, or "society up to date," as the comic papers put it, is certainly a very fearful and wonderful thing. Dodo gave us inklings of the doings of the English Fouart set, and all the good people on this side of the Atlantic and on that held up their hands in horror. Since then we have been flooded with Dodoesque fiction; and if we are to believe the fiction-mongers, as Abraham said to the angel, "peradventure there be fifty righteous within the city" in all the fashionable set, but certainly not more. We, however, are not so pessimistic as the writers of modern novels, and to us there seems a great sameness in the superfluity of naughtiness which it is the fashion of the day to describe.

Vashti and Esther as a title naturally leads one to expect an unhappy wife and an unfaithful husband, and one is not disappointed. The scene is laid in an English country house where the hostess always "pairs her guests," i.e., as the anonymous author carefully explains, she invites the man who is in love with each married woman of the company. So inveterate is Lady Hope's habit of "pairing" that her house is called "the ark." This is evidently the joke of the book, for it is introduced several times. When not "pairing," the guests of Lady Hope play practical jokes and the women snub each other.

After reading Vashti and Esther carefully we are convinced that Dodo had many good points. It certainly had action—it may have been bad action, but at least it was action, while Vashti and Esther might much better have had the end put first and stopped in the middle. There certainly is a moral to the story, but it is after the fashion of the Delphic oracles. Every man must decide for himself on its teaching and no two will agree. But to give the devil his due there is a certain cleverness of character-drawing here. The Duchess of Skye is quite evidently drawn from life, but as the reviewer's acquaintance with duchesses is strictly limited to fiction it is impossible to say from whom this charming old lady is drawn. She is, however, the only really well-bred person in the book—we were about to say the only respectable person; but though the heroine has, alas! the fatal gift of making all the cardinal virtues seem odious, we cannot deny her the attribute of well-earned respectability.

LADD'S PSYCHOLOGY.*

PROFESSOR LADD has an invincible partiality for writing treatises of inordinate length—a length which is commonly due to a plain inability to say a thing well once and then say something else. Instead of this he has the fatal habits of expanding commonplaces until they seem to him, apparently, to be novelties and of restating the same facts ad nauseam, especially in the form of what he considers "laws"—most of his "laws" reminding one forcibly of his own ridicule of any attempt to prove the principle of identity that "A is A" (p. 483), "the very principle itself" being assumed, if not "at every step," then most of the time.

The preface declares the author's determination to present the science of psychology in terms of actual life, "as it appears in the light of all the resources" of modern knowledge, and with the idea of development constantly in mind. These are excellent principles, and the treatise that follows is largely true to them, and it deserves great praise for the admirable qualities of extreme industry, entire fairness of temper, and scientific determination to see the thing as it is. But surely it was not necessary for Professor Ladd himself to assure us at once that "the points of view, the order of treatment, the discussion of the particular topics, are all independent and thoroughly the author's own," and that "there is not a page and scarcely a line of this treatise which does not show that all its material has been wrought anew into a distinct and characteristic organism of truth." One may be pardoned for conceiving something of a prejudice against a volume so ostentatiously self-recommended. Originality, of view or of statement, is much less characteristic of this writer than a wordiness—very little desirable however new it may be in the literature of psychology. Endeavoring to correct such a prejudice the reviewer finds, as he goes on reading, that the author is in truth entitled to favor because of such good points on the descending of the so-called faculties which "can at most only. . . indicate the different modes of behavior or forms of functioning which discriminating consciousness assigns to the one subject of all psychical states," and the broad division of the matter handled into "most general forms, elements, and development of mental life." But few, whether specialists or not, will go so far as to recognize the element of independence on the author's part in every page, letting alone every line. This is one of those extreme statements of which another example is the assertion (p. 422) that "what is called science is—all of it—very largely the work of constructive imagination—scarcely less largely so than is the work of the artist in words or tones or colors." The measure of truth in such a statement may be found presented in its real proportion in Tyndall's well-known lectures or in Prof. C. C. Everett's writings. In attempting to show that scientific observation, even, is largely the work of imagination Professor Ladd strains the latter term unduly. His own deficiencies in power of condensed scientific statement, one may say, can be seen at once by a comparison of his four pages on the psychological differences of the sexes with the recent treatment of the same subject by Mr. H. Ellis in his valuable book on Man and Woman.

One would like, being shut out from the possibility of a long review of such a treatise as this, to examine in some detail the closing pages, in which Professor Ladd distinguishes four principles "which belong to all development of the mental life of man; and every state of consciousness and every form of so-called faculty, in every stage of its formation, appear to conform to these principles . . . of Continuity, Relativity, Solidarity, and Teleological Import." But even where this sweeping statement is weakest—as regards the existence and extent of the "principle of Teleological Import"—we must refrain from further criticism. It is much to be regretted that Professor Ladd's positive contributions to psychology appear at such a disadvantage of presentation with a great surplus of words. One may hope that like some of his preceding works this one will be "boiled

---

Vashti and Esther. A Story of Society Today. D. Appleton and Co. 50c.

* Psychology, Descriptive and Explanatory. A Treatise of the Phenomena, Laws, and Development of Human Mental Life. By George Trumbull Ladd. Pp. xiii, 676. Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.50.

down," so that there will be more sugar and less water in the contents; there is sugar enough, certainly, to make the fortune of a book of good size.

◆

THE GARDEN THAT I LOVE.*

MR. ALFRED AUSTIN is one familiar with the flowers of language. He has long cultivated the soil of thought and has reared the blooms of speech. His lyrical, narrative, and reflective poems came first, and then followed his treatment of tragedy, even to singing in numbers the story of Lucifer and of Fortunatus the pessimist. In this volume his medium is prose, but it is prose which is florid in the best sense; it is a talk about the gorgeous things in nature, heaven, earth, and air. Walking amid the old gardens in the sunny swards centuries old, amid the trellises and embowered cottages of rich and venerable England, he discourses charmingly upon the flowers and the features of the garden. It is not a large garden that the author loves, but one that is small and well tended. He knows the difference between the garden which is owned by the one who cultivates it and one which is tended by paid labor. He discusses alternately the flowers and the poets, meanwhile saying sweet and suggestive things about fair maidens and serene women. One is reminded of the Japanese cha-no-yu (tea — hot water), in which only things most æsthetic were done and matters of art and beauty were discussed. The author has Veronica before him, and she, of course, is seated before teacups of exquisite design. These, both the maiden and the keramics, he praises gracefully. Nevertheless he is the true Englishman, very dogmatic on the subject of teas and salads. He thinks that the best of women are more anxious how a thing shall look than what it shall be, yet he flatters his maidens and women friends by suggesting that Veronica is a typical female who contrives to "combine honest substance with graceful seeming."

From artistic teacups and the nectar of Bohea Mr. Austin moves on to Wordsworth and the classic gods and goddesses. He mingles felicitously his prose and poetry, flitting like a butterfly from the real flower, of petal, stamen, and perfume, to the glories of English poetry. Between the cakes, the peaches, and iced-coffee spoons, the paths, borders, and flowers, and the bric-a-brac and furnishings of the splendid English homes, and the realms of literature, one finds here admirable suggestions as to conversation, home decoration, culture through reading, and horticulture. It is not a book calculated to make people real flower lovers to the extent of taking in hand the trowel and the hoe, but it is a capital drawing-room or boudoir book. It is handsomely dressed in binding, print, and paper, and the numerous illustrations are well executed, effective, and suggestive. In a word, it is just the book for late summer or early autumn reading, when outdoor and garden life is not yet over, but when the pleasures of these are tempered by reflections which have not yet become melancholy.

◆

LEGENDS OF THE MICMACS.*

THE collector of these eighty-seven legends of the Nova Scotia tribe known as the Micmacs was born in that province, in 1810, and educated, he says, "in the greatest university of all time, ancient or modern — a building as large as all outdoors and that had the broad canopy of heaven for a roof." He "graduated" from a winter evening school after three terms when eleven years old, mastered arithmetic by himself seven years later, and took his first lesson in English grammar at twenty-three. For this he paid three dollars, and after learning it started and taught a couple of classes of his own at two dollars a pupil. He combined the work of a stone mason and the study of Latin, and in 1834 was ordained as a Baptist minister and began to study Greek and Hebrew, the pursuit of languages becoming a passion with him. When he was seventy-six he was asked if he could speak and write a dozen languages, and he replied:

> I could twenty years ago, but perhaps I should have to refresh my memory somewhat to do it in my seventy-sixth year. Twenty years ago I knew English, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, French, Italian, German, Spanish, Modern Greek, Micmac, Maliseet, and Mohawk. I am a little rusty now, but I could then read Latin, French, Italian, and Spanish almost as well as English. . . . Do you ask which is my favorite language? Micmac. Why? Because it is one of the most marvelous of all languages, ancient or modern — marvelous in its construction, in its regularity, in its fullness — and it is the language in which I have, perhaps, done the most good. It is a language into which I have translated the Bible and in which I have been privileged to preach the gospel to thousands of semi-savages.

It was in 1846 that Mr. Rand dedicated himself to the missionary work, incited by a remark of a professor at Acadia College, in that time of foreign mission sentiment, that the heathen at home needed looking after. It was the strange policy of that period to keep the Indians ignorant and uncivilized. Mr. Rand accordingly had to spend much of his time in the woods and in the wigwams. The professor alluded to did not even dare to allow him the use of an unoccupied room in the college in which to take lessons from an Indian in his language "for fear of affecting the prosperity of the college!" Today these same Indians live like white people, and have schools, houses, and books in their own tongue. Indians and negroes sit side by side with whites in the common schools and academies, and Acadia College is wide open to them. Dr. Rand practiced successfully for the last twenty-five years of his life "the Müller system of living by faith," having previously had a nominal salary of two hundred pounds a year, "saddled with one condition — provided I could get it" — from the Micmac Missionary Society. This "Elihu Burritt of Canada" died in 1889, after an old age of remarkable vigor spent in compiling his Micmac dictionary of more than forty thousand words and on various other publications relating to his beloved Indians, for whom his devoted life was given. His diversion from literary work was the ax and the wood saw. "I would like," he said, "to have a race with Mr. Gladstone with the ax; I think I could compete with him as well at chopping as at Latin versifying" — alluding to his volume of a hundred Modern Latin Hymns.

It may be the fault of the reviewer, not a specialist in folk-lore, that Dr. Rand himself is more interesting than his legends, though he discovered Glooscap, the mythical being who is "the most Aryan like of any ever evolved from a savage mind," according to Mr. Leland. But from a literary point of view these legends are certainly composed after a wrong method. Dr. Rand wrote them out in English from memory, aided by brief notes made as they were recited to him in Micmac. The circumstances of his education did not favor that simplicity of style which is the charm of folk-lore, and consequently the language employed is bookish and the effect artificial to a degree. Thus, to take an example, in the story (lxviii) of Tŭmĭlkoontaoo, or Broken Wing, we find these expressions used instead of the simpler words we should expect: "resided," "reduced by hunger," "intervening spaces," "adverse to eel-spearing," "dispersed the scum," "next project," "powerful soporific," "olfactory organs," and "specific for the headache." Surely no Indians ever talked in this learned dialect! Dr. Rand did not, again, have the story-telling talent, and his legends are lacking in other qualities as well as in simplicity of language. These defects do not, however, injure them for the folk-lorist who is intent on the substance of the tales. He will welcome this volume, finely printed at the University Press through the generosity of the late Professor Horsford, and give it an honorable place in that highly honorable literature due to devoted missionaries who have carefully studied the languages and customs of the people to whom they came to minister spiritual things.

◆

— Yale University has recently conferred upon Mr. E. C. Stedman her highest honorary degree, that of LL.D. Yale is Mr. Stedman's own university.

---

* The Garden That I Love. By Alfred Austin. Macmillan & Co. $2.50.

* Legends of the Micmacs. By the Rev. Silas Tertius Rand, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D. Wellesley Philological Publications. Longmans, Green & Co.

The Literary World

BOSTON 25 AUGUST 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

William Cullen Bryant.

[READ AT THE BRYANT COMMEMORATION BY JULIA WARD HOWE.]

The Age its latest decade shows,
The wondrous century nears its close,
Revealing in its fateful span
Unwonted ways of good to man.

Imprisoned vapor speeds its course;
Flies, quick with life, the electric force;
Nature's demonic mysteries
Are angels now that aid and please.

But dearer far to human ken
The record of illustrious men,
The gifts conveyed in measures wrought
Of noble purpose and high thought.

* * * *

Above the wild industrial din,
The race a hundred goals to win,
The gathered wealth, the rifled mine,
Still sounds the Poet's song divine.

The skill that marshals myriad hands
For manhood's tasks in many lands
Attunes her anvil by the lyre
And forges with Promethean fire.

O Master of imperial lays,
Crowned in the fullness of thy days!
One heart that owned thy gracious spell
My reverend mien remembers well;

For mine it was, ere fell the snow
Upon this head of long ago,
My modest wreath to intertwine
With richer offerings at thy shrine.

A guest upon that day of days,
How leapt my heart to hymn thy praise!
Yea, from that hour my spirit bore
A high content unknown before.

The Past engulfs those echoes fond,
Thou and thy mates have passed beyond;
And that fair festival appears
Dim through the vista of long years.

But Love still keeps his watch below
When fades from sight the sunset glow,
And at the challenge of thy name
Stirs in each breast the loyal flame.

Still battling on the field of Life,
We break from the unequal strife—
From task or pastime hasten all
As at a vanished leader's call.

Within the shadow of thy tent
We read again thy testament,
Review the treasure which thy Art
Bequeathed to enrich thy country's heart.

No gift whose precious bloom can fade,
No holocaust on false shrine laid—
A legacy of good untold,
August as oracles of old,
The wingèd word that cannot die,
The world-transcending prophecy.

THE LITERARY PHASE OF THE EASTERN WAR.

REAL war by the Chinese or Coreans seems paradoxical. In no countries in the world is peace more talked about, constantly expressed, and even flaunted in placard, motto, idiograph, book, pamphlet, and tract than in the Middle Kingdom and the Outpost State. Furthermore China delights in applying names meaning peace to her country and rulers. China is a country that is drunk with ink. The dissipation of the learned class consists of literary carousals, worship of logograms, adoration of books and of the chief editor, compiler, transmitter, and wholly unoriginal founder of the literary cult—Confucius. The soldier receives little honor. In China "arms yield to the gown and laurels are of less account than lore." The youth who excels at the competitive literary examination stands higher than the valiant and veteran general. The military examinations are more or less a farce; but, such as they are, it was not until the present Manchiu dynasty came to the throne that military officers had even the honor of examinations or the science of war any recognition. Even as it is the colonels, generals, and military advisers are men who are more familiar with grinding out poetry or building literary roads to success, paved with phrases from the classics, than with tactics or strategy. Now great China, utterly unprepared for war, seventeen out of her eighteen provinces unequipped and unfurnished, is suddenly called to confront the problem of strife with little Japan, which has a modern army and navy. The great boneless giant, whose eyes are fixed on the centuries before Confucius, having long defied and despised her island neighbor, now stands like Goliath before the young athlete.

The American commodore, Matthew Calbraith Perry, who "opened" Japan to the world, used to have a favorite saying, which still lingers in our navy. While strenuous for ship hygiene and plenty of good food and clothing for his men this father of the American steam navy used always to provide abundance of mental pabulum. He used to say that both soldiers and officers should have "provisions to sustain the mind." The libraries on board his ships, especially on the old steam frigate Mississippi, to say nothing of the Susquehanna, Powhattan, and other ships in the Asiatic squadron, were among the best in the whole navy. The Japanese have been close imitators of Perry's mental and literary, as well as naval and diplomatic, tactics. In 1876 they sent a fleet to Corea modeled almost exactly on the American squadron of 1853, which, in Yedo Bay, fired only sunrise and sunset guns, yet won their point. Now we find a splendid modern navy, with an army that is European in everything except in blood and language, quickly transporting several whole army corps to the peninsula. Of course in literature (only) Japan is a "Land of Great Peace," "The Country of Peaceful Shores," and the like. Nevertheless her internal history, from the dawn of written records to the opening of the seventeenth century, is that of camps and war, rebellions and their quelling, and Japan is, and has always been, the land of swords and armor. Furthermore the story of the relation of Corea and Japan is that of alternate fighting and trading, war and peace, usually with missionaries, art, and new ideas going from Corea into Japan, and ships filled with jingoists, warriors, pirates, and invaders going from Japan to Corea. Still further, in many a Corean campaign the Japanese and Chinese swords have crossed, blood has flowed in streams, heads have been piled up in mimic mountains, while Corea has been devoured by the war locusts of either country.

What may be the literary provision for the Chinese army, largely gathered from the scum of the population, we do not know, but the provision of books for the Japanese army is noticeable. The literary treatment of the greatest Japanese invasion of Corea (1592–1597) is very ample, and we can say, from the experience of many hundred hours spent over it, that it is very interesting. The style of the Japanese writers on this theme is worthy of all praise. Besides those men who have written, long after the struggle, on their comfortable mats and writing tables at home, there are preserved not a few captivating narratives in rapid and vivid style by eye-witnesses and combatants. We are not surprised, then, to learn that the Japanese Government, in July, 1894, ordered several thousand copies of the history of the invasion of Corea, by Hidéyoshi, entitled Corean Affairs in the Eras of Bun-roku and Kei-cho (1592–1599). This book is to be distributed among the soldiers in Corea, partly to fan their already kindled patriotism and partly as a cure for possible nostalgia. The Japanese know well what homesickness is, and some of the most pathetic passages in the native histories tell of the "heart pain" suffered by the soldiers after long absence from wives and children and how they felt "cold in the heart" when bad news was added to their homesickness. A new bureau has very recently been established in the War Department in Tokyo for the management of all affairs relating to those private, public, and civil associations which have been already organized by the hundreds for aiding the soldiers in Corea. This bureau will take charge of contributions in money and in personal and literary supplies for the brave boys now encamped in the land of tigers, ginseng, horsehair hats, and flabby government. This new bureau is called the Juppei-bu, a new verbal novelty which even our very latest dictionary of Chinese-Japanese words, by Mr. J. H. Gubbins (which sets forth the ten thousand new coinages of words since 1870), does not enable us to dissect, and which without the Chinese characters we are unable to translate, though we have our guesses.

As to Corea itself it is a land of books and scholars. Critical Chinese learning is very prevalent, and, to the endless delight and pride of the natives, several Corean books have been reprinted in China. Corea was the first land in the far East to have a true vernacular alphabet—not a syllabary nor collection of idiographs or modified logograms, but of real phonetic characters. Her literature is very voluminous, though of its value beyond the boundaries of the peninsula the experts in all the world (numbering less than a dozen) can hardly tell. The abundant historical literature is preserved in written or manuscript copies in private libraries, and the official historical records are purposely kept in various parts of the kingdom in order to avoid extinction by fire. The historical novel exists and is very popular in Corea. There are also love stories, folk-lore, and easy narratives for the people, but printed in most execrable style. In the place of the circulating libraries which are so common in Japan there are reading guilds or large associations in the cities and provinces, which possess whole libraries and keep them moving from hand to hand and eye to eye under proper regulations. The Coreans, however, know little concerning the art of book illustration, though editions de luxe are not unknown. In answer to our inquiries we have the answer, confirmatory of our own observations and suspicions, that there are no signs whatever of a literary revival in Corea at present. The Corean gentlemen with whom we talked in Chicago last summer are still infatuated with the idea that there is no serious learning or literature outside of the Chinese or beyond Corean books written in the Chinese character. The cultivation of a Corean vernacular style or literature is still considered beneath the dignity of the grave scholar.

Looking at the subject as it lies between the Atlantic and Pacific shores this is the time when the writings of Americans on Corea are being thoroughly utilized by the newspaper press, and most copies of Mr. Percival Lowell's, Mr. Carles', Mr. Gilmore's, Dr. Allen's, and the undersigned's books have, within the last few weeks, lost all the dust which floats and settles in public as well as private libraries. Whatever be the issue of the present conflict it is likely that Americans will know more of Chinese Asia during the next six months than they have ever cared to learn before.

W. E. Griffis.

Ithaca, N. Y.

LONDON LETTER.

THE unveiling of the American memorial to Keats in Hampstead Church was one of the last events before the exodus of London literary folk to the moors or the sea and of Americans from the dusty heat of London in August. Keats lived at Hampstead during the days when he was writing his great poetry and suffered there the sickness of his passion for Fanny Brawne; so Hampstead, though neither his birth nor death place, is, after all, the fittest goal for this graceful American offering. Hampstead, though so much of it is flaring suburb, keeps spots of the greenness and rusticity it knew when the century was young, and Hampstead Church still looks over a wide expanse of country green amid its ancient trees. Most of the men and women of letters still in London were present at the unveiling of Miss Whitney's statue. At one side of the nave sat Mr. F. Holland Day, Mr. Arthur Waugh, Mr. Gosse, Lord Houghton, Prof. Sidney Colvin, and two American writers — Mrs. Burnett and Mrs. Moulton. Mr. and Mrs. Piatt were there, also, to represent American poetry. Among others present were Mr. Lang, Mr. Zangwill, Mr. John Davidson, Mr. W. B. Yeats, Mr. Aubrey Beardsley, Mr. Lecky, Mr. Theodore Watts, Mr. Frederick Wedmore, Mr. H. D. Traill, and other literary persons. Literary Englishwomen were represented by Mrs. Meynell, Mrs. W. K. Clifford, and Madame Sarah Grand. There was a brace of publishers in Mr. Heinemann and Mr. John Lane. Lord Houghton was of the speakers, as were Mr. Sidney Colvin, Mr. Francis Turner Palgrave, and Mr. Gosse, and, of course, Mr. Fred Holland Day, that enthusiastic Keats student, to whose praiseworthy energy the memorial is chiefly due. Mr. Swinburne had intended to be present, but was unfortunately prevented.

The books will be rather thin for a month or two; with the falling of the leaves they will again be drifting about our library tables. A couple of tendency novels have been published which are strong and rather unpleasant. These are The Story of a Sunless Heart, by an anonymous writer, and Joanna Traill, Spinster, by Miss Annie Holdsworth. The last is the first issue of Mr. William Heinemann's Pioneer series, which one may take for granted from the title is to give us some startling things. To make a successful novel now it is only necessary to write on forbidden subjects and to pretend to a great profundity about them. Any literary quality is quite unnecessary in the novels of the day, when the most conspicuous successess are Dodo and A Yellow Aster. Ability would seem rather to make for failure in these novels, for Keynotes, which was really brilliant through all its audacity, is yet in a very modest number of thousands.

Irishwomen seem unfortunately to be supplying the specially undesirable stuff at present in demand in the novel market. The author of A Yellow Aster and "George Egerton" are both daughters of the Green Isle — one hopes not at all representative ones. It is some consolation to know that the downfall which threatens the three-volume novel may somewhat spoil the market for productions of the Yellow Aster type. Meanwhile some Irishwomen are devoting themselves to literature with honest love and reverence. I visited the other day at her home at Raheny, near Dublin, Miss Jane Barlow, whose new book, Kerrigan's Quality, has recently been published in its American edition by Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co. of New York. Miss Barlow has the modesty and simplicity of genius. Her home is an old two-story house, covered with roses in bloom amid the heavy creepers. A portion of the house, from which "The Cottage" takes its name, is a veritable cottage, with a mud wall and thatched roof. The little lawn is full of old trees and flowers. Miss Barlow's mother and sister are enthusiastic florists, and their greenhouses keep them well supplied with flowers during even the winter season. When I visited Miss Barlow last it was early February, but the room was full of violets, the fresh earth-scent keen among the exotic odors of the hothouse plants. The other day wonderful roses had taken the place of the violets. A little bush of deep-pink roses from "The Cottage" is now blooming in my London garden. We call it "the Jane Barlow." At Raheny I saw the room where Miss Barlow works near her father, her little table full of papers — a small, feminine edition of his larger one. The room is characteristically big and airy. Miss Barlow confided to me once that her ideal of a working room would be a very large, bare room, with some books and an empty table and one chair — the latter so that the intrusive visitor should not stay long. I imagine most of us would have this inhospitable ideal for a working room. Miss Barlow has nearly enough short stories to make a second volume of Irish Idylls. The new volume, judging from the specimens I have seen, will have the qualities of the old, with more of the delightful humor which peeped forth too sparingly in the Irish Idylls. Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton are just about to issue the English edition of Kerrigan's Quality, Miss Barlow's first attempt at a long story. The American edition you have already reviewed. Kerrigan's Quality seems to me not altogether a success, despite the splendidly powerful writing in the early chapters. The "quality" seems to be rather dragged in to make up a story, and their creator has scarcely made them live. But the book is sufficiently good not to discourage us in our hope that Miss Barlow will yet give us the Irish novel we are anxiously expecting.

Mr. Barrie's marriage with Miss Mary Ansell, who played in his "Walker, London," is now an accomplished fact. Mrs. Barrie is at present in Italy nursing her distinguished husband back to health after his severe illness in the spring of this year. The portraits show the lady as of great beauty, there being something about her exquisite face, wild and sweet, suggesting a country flower rather than anything that might have bloomed in the heat of the footlights. It will be remembered that Mr. Barrie's heroine in When a Man's Single, which people persist in taking for autobiography, was named Mary — the sweetest of all feminine names. Mr. Barrie therein described the lady as one who never wore beads or little shining things on her dress. It is to be hoped Mrs. Barrie takes note of this and also that she permits her husband to clean out his pipe with her hairpins.

A curious little book is before me — Homeward Songs by the Way, by "A. E." This is published by a new Dublin publisher, Mr. Whaley, as he chooses to call himself, of Dawson Chambers. Mr. "Whaley," by the way, as Mr. Charles Weeks, published an interesting volume of poems with Mr. Fisher Unwin last year. There is something strangely interesting about "A. E.'s" little book. Side by side with an intense feeling for nature there is a rapt, mystical note and a curious utterance which proves "A. E." a student of all philosophies and especially of the mystical Eastern creeds. Perhaps the most interesting thing of all is the strange communion with natural things that seems to possess the writer, as in this:

Here the tempest stays its guile,
Like a big, kind brother, plays,
Romps, and pauses here awhile
From its immemorial ways.
Now the silver light of dawn,
Slipping through the leaves that fleck
My one window, hurries on,
Throws its arms about my neck.

Darkness to my doorway hies,
Lays her chin upon my roof,
And her burning seraph eyes
Now no longer keep aloof.
And the ancient mystery
Holds its hands out day by day,
Takes a chair and croons with me
In my cabin built of clay.

The occult poetry of this little book will not appeal to a large audience perhaps, but through its beauty there is a sense of quietude and calm that will touch those who have ears for such poetry with a sense of benediction. It has something of the transcendant beauty of Blake with sanity added. There is less art in it than one imagines the writer to be capable of if he were not so fraught with a message as to be careless of the manner of its delivery. It is quite possible that this little gray book may be the sign of a new and important poet to come.

I don't know who Ella D'Arcy may be, but I should like to draw your attention to her "Poor Cousin Louis" in the second issue of Math ews & Lane's Yellow Book. This story is almost brutally powerful, and wrings the heart intolerably to read it. But the writer seems to me the most interesting discovery of the Yellow Book so far, and her future work will greatly interest us, though I hope she will not be always so harrowing.

KATHARINE TYNAN HINKSON.

FICTION.

A Pound of Cure.

By its twofold title Mr. William Henry Bishop's "story of Monte Carlo" suggests its motif. The circumstantial minuteness of the narration produces the effect of biography. While the characters are few and by no means striking the tale is interesting in its development of events, and becomes, by implication, a strong plea against gambling. The scenery, as well as the moral atmosphere, of Monte Carlo is skillfully indicated. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.

Narcissa and In Verona.

The author of Captain January scores a fresh success in the pretty little book of eighty pages called Narcissa, or the Road to Rome. In Verona. There are two stories, and the background of each is that wonderful State which produces ice in winter and granite in summer. It is the State of Maine, but nevertheless it has in it several old world and classic names of places. Narcissa is a young damsel who left school before she had advanced in history beyond the battle of Lexington, but having a picture of ancient and eternal Rome on the wall before her eyes she has also many a day dream concerning the future, when she expects to see it. When, therefore, a young peddler tells her about Rome (which is in Maine) and jokes about his name, Romulus, the maiden inquires whether the young man's namesake lived in the American Revolution, but finds it hard to believe his description of the Rome which is "all rock when it isn't mud, and all mud when it isn't rock." Nevertheless, in spite of old half-uncles and hostile female characters, Romulus Patten finds the way to Rome by marrying "Narcissy," and the story ends happily.

The plot of "In Verona" reminds one of Bret Harte's story of the awful feud which two miners had over the saleratus, the cause of which one of them confessed in dying whispers years afterward on his dying bed. Two spinster daughters, who divide their mother's property, even to the separation of the lefts and rights in shoes and stockings and to the snipping asunder with scissors of a hair bracelet, live in different houses and never speak to each other for ten years. Nevertheless the "help" they hire has in it the far-off element of unity and concord. "Bije" is a Romeo and "Betsey" is a Juliet, and, besides the lover's ogling of the beloved through a knothole in the fence, there comes in time, despite the wrath of the Misses Bute, the flight of Betsey and her dark-eyed lover. In due time a visit of the happily married couple and a sweet little baby secure the melting of two sisterly hearts that were like icebergs and their flow into one stream of love and reunion. They occupy the old house, while the new home next door is rented by Romeo and Juliet, of Verona, Me., U. S. A. Both stories are capital, full of sweetness, sunshine, dainty wit and pathos, touching the springs of laughter and of tears. — Estes & Lauriat. 50c.

Every Inch a Soldier.

Although the lady who calls herself John Strange Winter cannot reasonably be expected to duplicate her popular success, Bootles' Baby, yet she has a good deal of knowledge of the ins and outs of British garrison life to draw upon for her stories. One cannot help comparing and contrasting our own Mrs. Custer's clear and informing pictures of the actual American soldier's life on the Plains and this English picture of what might be called the "still life" of the army. Mrs. Stannard knows all about the cavalryman's boots and uniform. She is thoroughly acquainted with routine and red tape. She also knows the common soldier's limitations, as well as the officer's accomplishments. She can record the exact rate of the heart-beat of the village girl who dances for the first time with a lancer. Outside of a certain routine of experience and the shallows of ordinary garrison life she does not seek to penetrate. In this latest story her merits and limitations are equally manifest. The opening chapter describes a splendid young cavalry officer, Phil Jervis. This handsome man of the spurs and gauntlets gets into serious trouble; he is actually charged with murder — the murder of a woman. He is convicted, but only through circumstantial evidence. Nevertheless our author contrives to get him out of the bad tangle, and everything turns out just as an orthodox novel reader wishes it. Furthermore, as usual, John Strange Winter is as familiar with the feminine heart as she is with the exterior of Tommy Atkins and his captain, and in this book she shows how very artful and wicked some women can be. In its slang and local references the book is thoroughly English. Altogether it is a pretty fair story. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

The Norsk Gopher.

A better title might have been found for this book. It is the story of a Norwegian boy in Dakota, so named by the young American friends with whom he lived. Little Nils was a hero, self-denying and faithful and made to win friends. He figures prominently in many thrilling adventures peculiar to wild life in the far West. The youthful settlers, Andy Parker and his sister Edna, are fair types of a class full of enthusiasm over religious work. Except that their piety is too obtrusive, unnaturally so, they are companionable and agreeable. The book was probably written for the Sunday-school library and will find many interested readers. — Hunt & Eaton. $1.00.

Old Celtic Romances.

Dr. P. W. Joyce is well known as a profound Gaelic scholar, and has already made both students and general readers indebted to him through his writings on Ireland. He has done well to reissue in a second edition this handy manual of Celtic fiction. From the preface to the revised and enlarged edition we are glad to find that he is still at work. He has added one additional tale to this collection. The introduction contains some interesting information in regard to the original manuscripts of the stories, and there are explanatory notes in the appendix, besides a glossary of proper names; the reader has thus a well-furnished chamber of imagery in which to enter and enjoy himself. The ancient institution of professional story-telling has not been entirely banished from Scotland and Ireland by printing. Even to this day in the south of Ireland neighbors, friends, and folks, young and old, gather around the kitchen fire in winter or in a barn on summer's evenings to listen to some local shanathie reciting one of his innumerable Gaelic tales. Partly from the manuscripts and partly from the memories of the story-tellers this book has been compiled. The stories are here and there decorated with stanzas of poetry. In them we find certain standard elements common to the world of Celtic romance, such as the children turned into white swans, the stupid giants and the lively Jacks, while the cooking spit and the fireplace play a great rôle. It is evident, also, that from prehistoric time the pig has been a very dear friend of the Celtic man. There are also islands of red-hot animals and other islands in which all kinds of canny and uncanny things take place, while down under the waves are weird and wonderful palaces of wealth and splendor. Evidently the old gods and goddesses of Druidism, banished by the entrance and prevalence of Christianity, have fled oceanward and in aerial regions and subterranean caves keep up their merry existence, despite all the new things that go on in the modern world, which evidently does not move very profoundly the Gaelic peasants. The stories will not only interest the children, but will please also the scholarly reader who insists upon touching the literary substance underneath the shadow. — Macmillan & Co. $1.75.

An Easter Vacation.

This is one of those sweet, clean English stories, a little after the pattern of Annie Keary's, well suited to any but a vitiated taste. The author, Moira O'Neill, has evidently associated with gentlewomen and understands the natures of pure-minded, refined English girls. The delicacy, confiding love, and mutual regard in the relations between the mother, Mrs. Forsyth, and her captivating daughters, Phillis and Maisie, are exquisitely shown. The little freckled Mac, who brings about the happy dénouement for his tutor, Mr. Trevor, is a precious boy, so strongly individualized that the reader can believe in him as a real being. Such a natural, pleasing, bright story, with a healthful tone and no lack of interest, is a treat after the superabundance of feverish, hysterical fiction. — E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.25.

Wanted.

Mrs. G. R. Alden ("Pansy") has taken an unusual theme for her latest story in presenting the cause of the stepmother. The heroine, Rebecca Meredith, who has been her widowed father's intimate friend and comrade since her mother's death, revolts at the entrance of a second wife into the household. She goes forth to seek her fortune and earn her livelihood. The record of her experience is an interesting and eventful one. She has charge of a child in a family where there is a mystery about the relations of the parents, explained eventually when it becomes known that the wife is an opium eater. Rebecca, after severe mental struggle, sees her own conduct in the true light, appreciates her noble and sweet stepmother, and in the end assumes the same relation herself. — Lothrop Publishing Co. $1.50.

Drawing-Room Duologues.

Mr. Fred. M. Stimpson, one of the contributors to the Yellow Book, has published eight clever little acting comedies which he calls by the above title. Why "duologues" rather than "dialogues" we fail to see, unless it is for the same reason that the book is "pictured by Maurice Greiffenhagar" instead of being "illustrated." The comedies are all clever and very well fitted for private theatricals, for which they are especially written, being arranged by Mr. Stimpson so that no stage setting is required other than the ordinary drawing-room furniture. The plots are well conceived and the dialogue crisp and full of action. The volume should be a boon to those interested in private theatricals, as the mise en scène is so simple that the plays could be given without the slightest trouble in any house. — London: T. Fisher Unwin.

Out of Step.

The many admirers of Miss Maria Louise Pool's Two Salomes will welcome a sequel, in which Miss Pool continues her interesting analysis of character influenced by environment in one direction and by heredity in another. In Out of Step she brings Salome back to New England, and after a struggle with her latent New England conscience Salome marries Moore. Her marriage brings her happiness, but gradually she begins to see that Moore and she cannot be always happy, since she cannot bring herself to regard abstract truth as he does; and, realizing that this vital point of difference between them will gradually wean his love away from her, she decides that she will let death cut the Gordian knot for her, and refuses to go South although ordered there by her doctor. Mrs. Keats Bradford is introduced as influencing Salome strongly. It is always a dangerous experiment for an author to write a sequel to a popular novel, but Miss Pool has been unusually successful in this attempt. We cannot praise too highly the care with which she elaborates even the most minor characters in her stories. Her knowledge of New England people is great, and although she lacks the delicacy and artistic quality by which Miss Wilkins charms us her characters have a more robust interest. — Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

In Jessie's Three Resolutions, by Mary E. Bamford, the American Baptist Publication Society has issued an earnest story, showing what a young girl prevented by home duties from going to distant countries may accomplish in behalf of foreign missions and the evangelization of her neighbors. Propagandism could hardly be more zealous or ingenious. The glow of devotion and brotherly love that pervades the book inspires deep respect, though the reader may protest against the belief expressed in a reference to "millions and millions of lost souls who have never so much as heard of a Saviour." Many items of intelligence as to the progress of Protestant, and particularly Baptist, missions are interwoven in the narrative, often as direct quotations from authentic sources. — American Baptist Publication Society. 90c.

It is fitting that the clever sketches in Van Bibber and Others should be presented in an attractive paper-cover edition for the traveler's entertainment. Even in a second reading their crispness, geniality, and gentle satire may easily make one forget the discomforts of dog days. Van Bibber's bonhomie and pluck, his ingenuity, and his mild absurdities throw a charitable glow over the jeunesse dorée that he represents and inspire the hope that he will presently shake himself into a fuller comprehension of his duties as an American citizen. As for "the others" on whom Mr. Richard Harding Davis has cast his keen glance we, who have once met Hefty Burke, the patron of art, and Eleanore Cuyler, do not forget them, and yet we take up the book in its new summer garb and smile again in renewing our acquaintance with them all. — Harper & Brothers. 60c.

My Two Wives, in the Unknown Library, does not compare favorably with most of its predecessors. It is in two parts — "My First Wife, By Her Second Husband," and "My Second Wife, By Her First Husband." Both are excellent studies of character — the designing and dominating Mrs. Masterman (rightly named) and the affectionate Matilda ("Tilly," "Titty"), who became her successor; but the narrative lacks brilliance and vivacity. — Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

The little book in the Unknown Library entitled Chaperoned is a story told in letters, most of which are written by a young girl at a watering place to her ambitious mother at home. Although somewhat commonplace it has the merit of good intentions, and virtuous counsels prevail over worldly ones. — Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

The tales of love, adventure, and garrison life in An Initial Experience, and Other Stories are for the most part written by officers in the United States Army. The brief one by Capt. Charles King, giving title to the book, describes a young soldier's first night march and includes a pleasant glimpse of General Hancock. Two of the longer ones, by R. Monckton-Dene, deal somewhat tragically with the lawless life of Australian miners. "The Lost Pine Mine," by Alvin Sydenham, is a terse, serio-comic Arizona sketch. An element of comedy is conspicuous in several other stories. While the writers differ as to literary skill the collection, as a whole, will be pronounced very readable. Obviously it should not be included in the advertising list of "novels by Captain King." — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

MINOR NOTICES.

Balder, the Poet.

This little sheaf of poems, by George Herbert Stockbridge, represents grain grown on varied fields. The supreme subject of love comes first to our hand and then follow the songs which love requires. There are also didactic, sentimental, and reflective poems, and the author, if not the reader, enjoys also humorous and dialect poems. Mr. Stockbridge's touch is light almost to daintiness; his thoughts are not profound, but they are clear, and he touches varied emotions. One of the noblest poems is that entitled "Faith." The modernness of his thought is shown in the verses entitled "Columbus" and in a sonnet, "A Master Tragedy." In "Immortality" the four sides of the modern view of life, that of the agnostic, the materialist, the transcendentalist, and the poet, are expressed in well-fashioned lines. If not calculated to stir the pulses these poems are enjoyable for their fine literary form and admirable finish. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.

Journal of Martha Pintard Bayard.

This tasteful little volume, edited by S. Bayard Dod, contains the three years' record of the life in London, 1794–1797, of an affectionate, sensible, sprightly, and devout young woman. She was the wife of Samuel Bayard, who was appointed by Washington the agent of the United States to prosecute claims under the Jay treaty; he was so successful as to recover over ten million dollars for illegal and unauthorized captures "of American ships on the high seas by English cruisers." The young couple were of Huguenot descent, and the husband's family name has since had a distinguished place in American history. The happy young wife and mother records the incidents of a tempestuous voyage, the landing at Falmouth, and the quiet life led in London. The Barbaulds and the Aikens appear to have been the only literary people she encountered, but the journal is valuable fully as much for the light it sheds on the writer's character as for its accounts of London life and travels about England. — Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.

The Footprints of the Jesuits.

The author of this solidly written and solidly printed book of five hundred or more pages is the Hon. R. W. Thompson of Terre Haute, Indiana, an ex-Secretary of the Navy of the United States and the author of The Papacy and the Civil Power. The history of the Jesuits is a large subject and one on which it would be difficult to write without pride, prejudice, or passion. One must either extol them or abuse them, according to his point of view. Mr. Thompson believes that the aim, spirit, and methods of the Jesuits are as foreign to the true character of the Roman Catholic Church as they are detestable to Protestants, and that they seriously menace the integrity of the civil institutions of the United States. He would constrain Roman Catholics, if possible, to decline Jesuit leadership and influence, showing them that they can be as patriotic and loyal citizens as Protestants without disrespect to, or weakening of, their spiritual obligations as members of the Church of Rome. This is a sound distinction and a highly important one to make. It is, we think, logical and demonstrable by the pages of such a record as this, which constitutes a good, short exposition of the Jesuit system and history. Loyola himself in his person and ministry, the constitution and government of his notorious society, its wonderful organization and discipline, its movements and achievements in Europe and the East, the suppression and reëstablishment of the order, its practices, teachings, and intrigues are the main lines of the volume. Mr. Thompson speaks a strong word in behalf of the public schools and the importance of keeping them free from Jesuit control. He calls Monseigneur Satolli a "vice-pope," and he considers that the bishop of Rome has no idea of relaxing his claim to jurisdiction in the United States. The book is strongly but temperately written and is marked by learning and candor. — T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.75.

Discipleship: the Scheme of Christianity.

This English book, by the unnamed author of The King and the Kingdom, is an independent and, to some extent, original analysis and interpretation of the teachings of Jesus Christ in the Four Gospels. The rules and principles of life and action laid down in the discourses of our Lord have, in the author's judgment, no parallel in ethics. Care and understanding are requisite, he observes, not only to apprehend them, but to put them in practice. Patient sufferance and self-denial are the marks of the career to which the Master summons his disciples. We stand amazed at the sublime audacity of the Teacher, for his injunctions run contrary to the views of human nature. The spirit, therefore, which he seeks to inculcate is of supreme importance, and by the light of that spirit we are to enter cautiously and reverently into the meaning and application of the teachings themselves. Under the guidance of general principles such as these the author goes forward with an examination and classification of the teachings of Christ under these fifteen heads: Discipleship, Socialism, Forgiveness, Righteousness, Baptism and Confirmation, Resurrection, the Spiritual Body, God, Jehovah, Miracles, Demons, the Church, the Sabbath, Salvation, and the Mother of Jesus. The author throughout thinks for himself, and though his readers will by no means always think with him he will force them to do their own thinking and to do a good deal more of it. The book will render an excellent service if it does nothing more than send people back to the life and teachings of our Lord for their authority in religion. — London: Williams & Norgate. $1.00.

Mr. Picket-Pin and His Friends.

Mr. Picket-Pin is a Sioux Indian in Dakota, real or imaginary. Mr. Price Collier, the author of the book which bears this name as its title, has for his object in its one hundred and fifty-seven pages to paint a picture of the North American Indian in his present condition and prospects. We have a faint recollection of having heard Mr. Price Collier's name before, but who he is or what he is we do not remember. The book is of English manufacture, and shows about as much knowledge of and sympathy with the subject to which it relates as are usually found in the Englishman's book about anything American, though Mr. Collier is an American. It aims to be bright and succeeds in being smart; it tries to be funny, with the result of being flippant. If it were serious in its tone we could read parts of it with a sense of reproof, but its tone is that of caricature. As a delineation of the vices of the Indian and his demoralization, it is extravagant; as a criticism of the civil and religious help that has been extended to him, it is cynical and captious. Mr. Collier seems to know nothing of the really good side of the Indian character and of the really important results of work among and for the Indians. He has written a travesty which does him little credit and is fitted to do much harm in quarters where the truth is not known. There are scores of Indian missionaries and teachers, of every Christian denomination and of none, who would cry out with indignation at the representations in these pages. The wonder to us is that the firm of E. P. Dutton & Co. should have lent their imprint to it. — $1.00.

Wealth and Moral Law.

Pres. E. B. Andrews of Brown University gives this name to his course of six lectures on the Carew foundation at the Hartford Theological Seminary. In treating wealth, trusts, economic evils due to legislation and to social conditions, and socialism, he always keeps moral considerations prominent, as well as in his closing address on "wealth and character." He has an excellent way of recognizing the morality of legitimate business and wealth accumulation, while insisting on the strict application of the moral law to realized wealth. "It is no sin to get rich or to be rich," but the chief sin of omission with the wealthy is idleness and of commission waste in luxury. Trusts and such combinations have come to stay, being natural developments of modern industry. Legislators, by reforming high tariffs and by taxing property more equitably, can do much in the way of progress; but individuals, by refraining from gambling and like attempts to get something for nothing, can do more. The presumption between the State and the individual is almost always with the individual, and this rules out the Fabian socialists as well as those of a stricter type. The one force that will repress undue reproduction is character, and this must come into play in the whole social field to advance justice and harmony. These lectures, both in matter and in manner, are a refreshing contrast to much that calls itself Christian Socialism, but is in truth very unchristian and very antisocial in its influence. Readers of Professor Herron, for example, should take up these sober and judicial lectures and learn what a well-equipped economist, who is also a moralist, says about character and property. — Hartford Seminary Press. $1.00.

The volume on The Books of Chronicles in the Expositor's Bible series is by Prof. W. H. Bennett of Hackney and New College. He is apparently quite in harmony with the prevailing views among Old Testament critics on the character of Chronicles, which he adapts to those who may not yet be able to receive them in all their strength. "The times were uncritical," he says, "and so our author was occasionally somewhat easy of belief as to the enormous magnitude of ancient Hebrew armies and the splendor and wealth of ancient Hebrew kings; the narrow range of his interests and experience gave him an appetite for innocent gossip, professional or otherwise. But his sterling religous character is shown by the earnest piety and serene faith which pervade his work. If we venture to turn to English fiction for a rough illustration of the position and history of our Chronicles the name that at once suggests itself is that of Mr. Harding, the precentor in Barchester Towers." It is evident that Professor Bennett has no fear of a heresy trial before his eyes in making such comparisons with so-called profane literature! — A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.50.

Mrs. E. Vale Blake has conceived the happy idea of selecting and arranging a hundred of the best "songs to Mary." But The Universal Name, the title given to the collection, is not in good taste, claiming too much as it does and suggesting the divine name. "The Sweetest Name" would have been much better. Mrs. Blake errs in inserting too many of her own compositions, and her short preface is full of bad grammar — "of she whom we call Mary" and "Christendom, including the United States" are but two of the blunders on a page. While many songs proper have been addressed to a Mary, the wonder is that so few really good poems are to be found here, and of these Burns wrote the larger number. Dr. Parsons' "American 'Ave Maria,'" Cowper's addressed to Mary Unwin, the old song "My Mary," W. Lyle's "'A' for Mary," Byron's "To Mary," and Allingham's "Lovely Mary Donnelly" well-nigh exhaust the list of those directed to a Mary. Others referring to her are more numerous if not better. — Buffalo: C. W. Moulton.

The third volume of Prof. W. W. Skeat's fine edition of The Complete Works of Geoffrey Chaucer brings it halfway toward completion. The book opens with the "House of Fame," in which, as the introduction shows, Chaucer was more indebted to Dante than in any other poem — "perhaps more than in all his other works put together." Then follows the "Legend of Good Women," which has "several points of peculiar, I might also say of unique, interest. It is the immediate precursor of the 'Canterbury Tales,' and enables us to see how the poet was led on towards the composition of that immortal poem." The two forms of the prologue are given, one above the other. Then comes the prose "Treatise on the Astrolabe," which the editor has provided with plates. More than a hundred pages are devoted to an "Account of the Sources of the Canterbury Tales," divided into the nine groups. The critical notes and other editorial matters are, as before, abundant. — Macmillan & Co. $4.00 net.

One of the volumes of the Dilettante Library has Oliver Wendell Holmes for a subject, and he is considered as the man, poet, novelist, autocrat and teacher, and doctor in five chapters, interspersed with poems and supplemented by a bibliography. It is a much-in-little book, so to speak — so well proportioned and discriminating that the genial poet himself could hardly find fault with it. Difficult though it must have been to keep from overpraise and to treat a living character with delicacy the author, Mr. Walter Jerrold, has done his work creditably to himself. He is an admirer of Dr. Holmes, very plainly so; but who is not? — Macmillan & Co. 90c.

Mr. Edward K. Godfrey's book of solid information, The Island of Nantucket, is a complete guide to that noted place, now such a favorite resort in the summer time. Mr. Godfrey should not, however, have been contented to issue in 1894 a book first published in 1882 without revision, for there has been much progress on the island in twelve years. — Lee & Shepard. 50c.

* * *

PERIODICALS.

The complete novel in the September number of Lippincott's is "Captain Molly," by Mary A. Denison, and deals with the philanthropic work of the Salvation Army. The heroine, a banker's daughter, leaves a luxurious home to dwell for a time in Paradise Flats. The three short stories are "Josef Helmuth's Goetz," by Frederick R. Burton, Will N. Harben's "The Sale of Uncle Rastus," and "On Second Thoughts," by Lalage D. Morgan. Laura A. Smith writes of "Songs of the Battle-Field" and gives specimens of them, music as well as words, from many lands. "How I Found the Baron," by Edward Wakefield, describes a queer piece of semi-political history. In "Head-Lines" W. T. Larned collects and comments on some of the worst liberties of the American press. "The Evolution of the Heroine" is a pleasant literary essay by Prof. H. H. Boyesen. The "Human Horses," treated of by Walter Rogers Furness, are the jinrikisha bearers of Japan. F. K. Henry writes of "Inconsistent Franchises" in the mingling of trusts with insurance. In "Talks with the Trade" the editor discusses "Writers and Typewriters." The poetry of the number includes a sonnet by Titus Munson Coan and quatrains by Frank Dempster Sherman and Charles G. D. Roberts.

Prof. James Sully of University College, London, heads the list of contributors to the September Popular Science Monthly with the second of his Studies of Childhood, dealing with "The Imaginative Side of Play." He shows by means of many incidents how strong is the power of "making believe" that enters so largely into children's plays. An enterprise of enormous possibilities is described in an illustrated article by Ernest A. Le Sueur under the title "Commercial Power Development at Niagara." The preparations for harnessing the falls to the dynamo are now well advanced. This number contains another of the charming sketches of outdoor life by the late Frank Bolles, its subject being "The Humming Birds of Chocorua." There is an evolutionary study of "Barberries," by Frederick Le Roy Sargent, in which the general reader will be surprised to see how much of interest can be found in so common a plant. The various parts of the bush are illustrated from original drawings. In "Ethical Relations between Man and Beast" Prof. E. P. Evans shows how the doctrine of the earth and all that is in it, being made for man, has fostered cruelty to animals. Mr. Stuart Jenkins, who has had experience in winter work on a Canadian survey, sets forth a new plan for reaching the north pole under the title "Arctic Temperatures and Exploration." In "Parasitic and Predaceous Insects" the method of fighting insects that are destructive to vegetation by means of others that are harmless is described by Prof. C. V. Riley. "The New Mineralogy" is described by G. P. Grimsley. Dr. H. E. Armstrong writes on "Scientific Education." Dr. P. Lenard describes "The Work of Dust." Other articles are "Science as a Means of Human Culture," by Floyd Davis, and "Seventeenth Century Astrology." There is a sketch with portrait of one of the earliest American botonists, the Lutheran pastor, Dr. G. H. E. Muhlenberg. In the editor's table "Social Disturbances" and "Endowment of Research" are discussed.

A short and rather unique story, "Sir Simon's Courtship," leads off in Macmillan's for August. Mr. George Saintsbury begins a series of articles on the historical novel, which he is to consider from Xenophon down to Scott. The third paper on the beginnings of the British Army relates to artillery and engineers. "Glenbanagh" is an unpleasant episode of wild Irish life, and "The Witch of Zell," which further represents the fiction of the number, is a dramatic bit, with Zetland for a background. Mr. Secretary Thurloe is the subject of a comprehensive biographical sketch by an anonymous writer. Other unsigned papers are "The Unconscious Humorist" and "The Post-Office Packets," a forgotten chapter in naval history, which will be a surprise to many readers. The French Republic and her New Allies are gravely treated by C. R. Roylance-Kent, completing the list of solid articles. The engaging paper in the number is on William Cotton Oswell, being the address delivered by Judge Hughes at Rugby School in June of the present year. It is reminiscent, picturesque, and delightful.

The American contribution to the Fortnightly Review for August bears a noted American family name, but it is not calculated to elevate our reputation among sober thinkers. Mr. Brooks Adams finds that the "Gold Standard . . . apparently strikes at the root of the social system" and is responsible for nihilism, anarchism, and socialism! A lecture given in London in 1860 by Turgénieff, on "Hamlet and Don Quixote," is well translated by Miss Lena Milman. Mr. John Law describes "A Week on a Labor Settlement" in New South Wales. "The Boer Question," by Mr. H. H. Johnston, "A Visit to Corea," by A. H. Savage-Landor, "Bookbinding, its Processes and Ideal," by T. J. Cobden-Sanderson, "Government Life Insurance," by Sir J. Vogel, and "The American Sportswoman," by Miss E. C. Barney, will attract various readers. Miss Barney makes a strong showing for the athletic American girl.

In the Contemporary Review for August the talk with Sir George Grey, reported by Mr. James Milna, on "The Federation of the English-Speaking People," will excite friendly comment on this side of the water; the formation in time of an Anglo-American Council for the consideration of questions arising between the Greater Federated Britain and ourselves is most desirable. Mr. Andrew Lang takes up the cause of ghosts and associated phenomena in his paper on "The Witch of Endor and Professor Huxley." Mr. Robert Donald makes a strong plea for "Municipal Pawnshops," and Mr. Clem Edwards takes an optimistic view of "The Policy of Labor." Mr. W. M. Conway's "Alpine Journal," the late Miss Edwards' discussion of "The Art of the Novelist," and Mrs. Barnett's vigorous paper on "The Home or the Barrack for the Children of the State" are some of the other valuable contributions.

Mr. Gladstone always seems to us at his weakest as a theologian, and his paper on "The Place of Heresy and Schism in the Modern Christian Church" in the Nineteenth Century for August is not an improvement on his former writings in this line, but it is a new proof of the width of his interests and the elevation of his mind. Can one imagine an American statesman treating such a subject seriously and worthily? A first paper of two on "Mutual Aid in the Mediæval City," by Prince Kropotkin, is an admirable exhibit of the collective spirit outside of the labor field proper. Mr. Le. Gallienne contributes a feeling dialogue, entitled "Death and Two Friends." Mr. J. S. Jeans prognosticates more evils to come after "The Labor War in the United States." Professor Mahaffy states "The Present Position of Egyptology," and Professor H. Geffcken opens "The War-Chests of Europe" for our inspection.

The Yale Review for August is the strongest number of this improving periodical that we have seen. It contains a wise statement of "The Limitations and Difficulties of Statistics," by Carroll D. Wright, which is especially to be commended to amateur writers on sociology; a friendly account of the much-abused "Constitutional Union Party of 1860," by Prof. Charles F. Richardson; an instructive presentation of "Theories of Mixture of Races and Nationalities," by Prof. Richmond Mayo-Smith, an expert in this field; a biographical paper on "Prince Henry the Navigator," by E. G. Bourne; and a trenchant discussion of "The Bimetallic Theory" in its recent phases, by Prof. H. W. Farnam. The editorial comment and the book reviews are pithy and judicial.

A notable contribution to the literature of questions which have borne heavily on the conscience of the public this last winter is Mr. J. G. Brooks' paper on "The Future Problem of Charity and the Unemployed" in the Annals of the American Academy for July. Mr. Brooks recognizes the bitter feeling against "charity" among the trade-unionists and the bearing of the socialistic movement on philanthropy. His practical recommendations include employment bureaus, graded work tests for applicants, trade schools, and farm colonies and workshops for those able but unwilling to work. "Peaceable Boycotting," by Chester A. Reed, "The Significance of a Decreasing Birth-Rate," by J. L. Brownell, and "Rent and Profit," by C. W. Macfarlane, are the other articles.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Early Post Office: A Request.

To the Editor of the Literary World:

The story of the early American post office is hidden in scattered papers, manuscript and printed. It attaches in most cases to allusions dealing with postmasters and mail riders. In case any reader of this journal has any knowledge of such allusions, especially prior to 1775, I should be grateful for a communication to that effect. Up to 1775, I may add, this country had but three or four mail routes — the great route from Portland, Me., to Savannah, Ga.,; the route from New York, via Albany and Montreal, to Quebec; the inception of the route from Philadelphia to Pittsburg; and the ocean route from New York to Falmouth, England. The first of these mail routes began in 1693, the ocean mail route in 1755. Even the name of an early postmaster or mail rider will be welcome, so will copies of early postmarks; and I may add that I have no information upon Head Lynch and Elliot Benger, who were our Postmasters-General from 1739 to 1753. They appear to have been Virginians. The subject has great interest, as the history of the postal service is the history of our trade and wealth. The post office was the greatest of all American pioneers. It is hoped that the fragments of this story may be got together, and the humblest fact will be valued. The builder of a palace may use rubble.

C. W. ERNST.

Back Bay Post Office, Boston, Mass., Aug. 11, 1894.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— M. Félix Dubois' work, Le Péril Anarchiste, has been translated by M. Ralph Derechef. M. Derechef will expand his work, which will be illustrated freely from anarchist propaganda. The translator has, moreover, added a chapter on English anarchism.

— John Fiske's History of the United States for schools will be published this month by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. It exhibits in a striking form those qualities which have given to Mr. Fiske's earlier works their great popularity — a charming style, clearness of narration, historical accuracy, and breadth of view. It is a graphic and exceedingly interesting presentation of the story of our country, in simple phraseology. It gives an insight into certain phases of the history of our land which usually escape the notice of the school historian — such as the life and customs of the people and the literary and industrial annals of America. It contains full bibliographical lists and aids to collateral reading. Suggestive topics, directions, and questions add to the value of the book. These were prepared by Frank A. Hill, late head master of the Cambridge High Schoo and recently appointed secretary of the Massachusetts Board of Education, whose work of a similar nature in Fiske's Civil Government was universally commended. The appendix contains several unique features. In ddition to the constitution and instructive tables may be mentioned a bibliography of State histories, with fuller and more careful statements in regard to the derivation of the names of the States than have ever before been made; a bibliography of successive historical epochs; a list of novels, poems, songs, etc., relating to American history; a minimum library of reference; an interesting and simple account of the changes in dates incident to the adoption of the Julian and Gregorian Calendars; and remarks about standard time in the United States and Canada. The history is made in the best style of the bookmaker's art, substantially bound, printed on the best paper, and supplied with an abundance of maps and illustrations which are historically reliable and admirably executed.

— Henry Altemus of Philadelphia has just published a handbook on The Care of Children, by Elisabeth Robinson Scovil, superintendent of the Newport Hospital and associate editor of the Ladies' Home Journal. The author's hospital experience has familiarized her with the ills, aches, and accidents that are constantly occurring in a child's life, noting the symptoms that require watching, and suggesting the simple yet sufficient remedies that are to be employed until a physician's services are essential.

— J. Selwin Tait & Sons announce as ready for issue: Before the Gringo Came, by Gertrude Atherton, a series of stories of the old picturesque Californian days before the advent of the Gringo, or American, destroyed its romance; a new novel by John Strange Winter, A Seventh Child, the heroine of which is endowed with the "uncanny" gift of second sight; and The Untempered Wind, by a new author, Miss Joanna N. Wood, a young Canadian lady. The promised cheaper and unabridged fourth edition of the Sandow book is now ready for issue.

— Vashti and Esther, a brilliant story of the English society of the day, has just appeared in Appleton's Town and Country Library.

— The town of Cummington was thronged with distinguished visitors August 16, upon the occasion of the centennial observance of the birth of the poet, William Cullen Bryant. The exercises were held in a beautiful grove a few rods beyond the Bryant homestead, where Mr. Bryant passed the last twelve summers of his life and where, too, he passed the days of his youth and early manhood. In the woods which lie adjacent to the old mansion house "Thanatopsis" was written, and near by the rivulet of which he wrote still goes murmuring to the larger stream. There were many prominent authors and men who have won fame and reputation in the various walks of life among those who gathered to do honor to Mr. Bryant's memory. The address of welcome was delivered by Lorenzo H. Tower, librarian of the Bryant library, on behalf of the townspeople. Parke Godwin of New York, who was associated with Mr. Bryant many years and who married his eldest daughter, was the presiding officer of the day. The oration was delivered by Edwin R. Brown of Elmwood, Ill., a native of Cummington. John Howard Bryant, now eighty-seven years of age, the only surviving brother of the poet and himself a poet of recognized ability, read his brother's poem, "The Rivulet," and two compositions of his own — "A Monody," written in 1878, just after the death of William Cullen Bryant, and "At Eighty-Seven," written for the occasion. Addresses were also given by John Bigelow, Prof. Charles Eliot Norton of Harvard University, Charles Dudley Warner, G. Stanley Hall, Rev. John W. Chadwick of Brooklyn, George W. Cable, and H. S. Gere, the veteran editor of the Hampshire Gazette, in which paper Bryant's first poem was published, when he was ten years old. Letters were received from Dr. O. W. Holmes and ex-Senator Dawes. In his letter Dr. Holmes after regretting that a recent illness did not allow him to attend, said:

> Thirty years ago I had the privilege of being present at a great meeting held in New York to greet Mr. Bryant on his seventieth birthday anniversary. He was the oldest of that group of poets whose names were already familiar to all American readers. If such an office had existed he would have been dean of the guild of our native poets. Emerson, Longfellow, Whittier, and Lowell were all living then and in full possession of their varied powers.
>
> As I recall him on that occasion he seemed as one belonging to the past. His venerable aspect was like the ideal of the bard as Gray has pictured him. I need not quote the lines, which recur to all who remember Bryant in his later years. Though his life was handed over to us from a bygone century, though he looked to the younger crowd around him as if he had strayed from another world into that of today, no man was more keenly alive to the thoughts and doings of his time than William Cullen Bryant.
>
> At the meeting on his seventieth birthday anniversary Bryant was in a vigorous condition of mind and body. He might, perhaps, have lived into his ninth or tenth decade had he not been in dangerously good health. But, trusting to his strong constitution, he would not spare himself. He forgot the limitations of threescore and ten, and nature reminded him of them in a fatal message.
>
> As a patriot his name belongs with those of the "Sons of Liberty" of the century in which he was born. As a man of letters he deserves an honorable place among those of the scholars of his time. As a poet he has shaped his own monument:
>
> Marbles forget their message to mankind;
> In his own verse the poet lives enshrined.
>
> A breath of noble verse outlives all that can be carved in stone or cut in bronze. In his poems, inspired by nature, Bryant has identified himself with her perennial life. In singing of death he has won the prize of immortality.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe read a poem written for the sixtieth birthday anniversary of the poet, to which she had added several stanzas appropriate for the centennial occasion. John W. Hutchinson, the only surviving member of the famous family of singers, was present at the exercises and by invitation sang "Old Friends Are the Truest."

— By the death of Mr. Walter Pater Oxford has lost one of its formative spirits. He was born in London in 1839, and was sent to King's School, Canterbury. As an undergraduate he was at Queen's College, where he only took a second class in Literæ Humaniores; but three years afterwards he was elected to a fellowship at Brasenose, and as dean, tutor, and lecturer he remained the most vigorous intellectual force in the college till the last. Only those who did not know him well used to wonder that the tone of the stronghold of athleticism was not distasteful to him; in reality the Greek ideal, with its aim after askesis — a very favorite word with him — reconciled him to the sports which he would have been the last man to join. The delicate balancing of words and sentences, which was the marvel of those who saw the corrected and revised and rewritten notes for his lectures, was always subordinate to the thought which he desired to express, and which was itself so attractive and clear that it inspired that æsthetic movement which his good sense would have preserved from the absurdities into which it fell. Marius the Epicurean was his masterpiece, but Imaginary Portraits, Appreciations, and the Plato and Platonism of last year all added to his reputation. He wrote numerous magazine articles and essays, which it may be hoped will be collected and published in volume form. — Literary World, London.

— Mr. Hall Caine's new novel, The Manxman, which has been running serially in the Queen, will be published in book form by Mr. Heinemann, probably in August. In view of the recent discussion about three-volume novels at the circulating libraries it is interesting to learn that it has been decided to issue the book in a single volume of more than four hundred well-printed pages. Messrs. Appleton & Co. have purchased the American rights, and the book will also appear simultaneously in the colonies, at Leipsig (in the English Library continental form), and in a German translation.

— Messrs. Stone & Kimball announce in the Chap-Book that on August 1 they discontinued their Cambridge office, and will hereafter do all their business from the Caxton Building, Chicago. This also means that Mr. Bliss Carman will follow them, and what is New York's and Boston's loss will be Chicago's gain.

— A new and complete Concordance or verbal index to words, phrases, and passages in the dramatic works of Shakespeare, with a supplementary concordance to the poems, by John Bartlett, A.M., which has been in preparation for over twenty years, will be published early in September by Macmillan & Co. The name of the editor of The Dictionary of Familiar Quotations is a sufficient guarantee that this new concordance has been compiled with great care and accuracy, and the number of pages, containing altogether some four hundred thousand entries, is evidence that the book is far more comprehensive and complete than any other volume of the same nature. An important feature which distinguishes this volume is that references are given, not only to acts and scenes, but to the lines as numbered in the Globe edition of Shakespeare, from which this concordance was prepared. It will be issued in one volume of nineteen hundred pages.

— Messrs. T. Y. Crowell & Co. will add to their Illustrated Library a complete translation of Dumas' Monte Christo, in two volumes, with illustrations by Frank T. Merrill. They have also nearly ready a two-volume edition of Dumas' Three Musketeers, translated from the latest edition, with two hundred and fifty illustrations by Maurice Leloir.

— Prof. W. M. Conway, the author of the great work Climbing and Exploration in the Karakorum Himalayas, which has just been published by D. Appleton & Co., is the vice-president of the famous Alpine Club, and he has added a brilliant page to its records by climbing the highest peak yet ascended, in addition to other achievements of his remarkable expedition.

— Mr. George Meredith's new novel, Lord Ormont and his Aminta, will be published in America by the Scribners about the middle of August. It is said to be one of the great novelist's best stories and likely to surpass the expectations of even his warmest admirers. An English reviewer describes it as "a novel for which the lover of literature will do well to put up his hands and, in the words of the old grace, 'be truly thankful.'" Another new story by Mr. Meredith, entitled "The Amazing Marriage," will be published serially in Scribner's Magazine, beginning in an early number.

— Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish in the new edition and all subsequent editions of Mr. Crockett's novel, The Raiders, a glossary of nine pages, prepared by Mr. Patrick Dudgeon of Cargen, Galloway.

— Mlle. de Lamartine, the niece of the great author, recently died in Paris, at the age of sixty-three. She was her uncle's companion and comfort during the last years of his life, when he was struggling with poverty, and after his wife's death, in 1863, she cared for him alone until his death in 1869.

— Professor Blackie seems to have discovered the secret of perpetual youth. On July 28 he celebrated his eighty-fifth birthday at the lovely Perthshire village of Pitlochrie, and, save for a touch of asthma, was almost as hale and sprightly as ever. The villagers joined in congratulations to their distinguished visitor, who declared he felt very well indeed.

— The Religion of India, by Professor Hopkins, is in the press of Messrs. Ginn & Co.

NEW NOVELS.

By a New Writer.

Major Joshua.

By FRANCIS FORSTER. Crown 8vo., cloth, $1.00.

"In 'Major Joshua' Mr. Francis Forster has brought before us one of the most curious and interesting, though certainly not one of the most admirable, characters in recent fiction. . . . One can scarcely believe that such an excellent story as 'Major Joshua' is a first effort."—Dundee Advertiser.

"The charm of the book, however, is largely in the unique character of Major Joshua, whose name is Robinson. He is a person whose chief business is to attend to other people's business. An imperturbable old busybody who looks upon matrimony as a huge joke, he makes a tremendous amount of mischief, but always in a grimly humorous sort of way."—Boston Beacon.

"Major Joshua Robinson is a new character in literature. . . . He can hardly be called the hero of Francis Forster's new novel, since he is not of the stuff of which heroes are made; but the author makes him the prominent figure in a very delightful story."—Boston Advertiser.

"It is more interesting than nine-tenths of the novels now written, since it deals with unusual but not unnatural people, and analyzes their motives and emotions in a remarkably clever way. . . . Mr. Forster has written a book which people will think about."—Detroit Press.

By the author of "A Bride from the Bush."

The Unbidden Guest.

By E. W. HORNUNG. With Frontispiece and Vignette. Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.00.

BY JOHN TRAFFORD CLEGG.

David's Loom:

A Story of Rochdale Life in the Early Years of the Nineteenth Century.

Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.00.

"The story is a tragic one, and powerful as such, while its humorous passages in the Lancashire dialect are by far its best parts. . . . It is a deeply interesting story, and has real literary merit."—Scotsman.

Longmans, Green, & Co.,

Publishers, 15 East 16th St., New York.

Noah Farnham Morrison,
SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,
877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.
Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

FITCHBURG RAILROAD,

Hoosac Tunnel Route.

SARATOGA.

On and after June 18, 1894, the special

Fast Express Train,

Parlor Car attached, will be run daily, Sundays excepted, leaving

Boston 9.00 A. M.,

Stop at Greenfield for dinner, arriving at

Saratoga 3.30 P. M.

For tickets and further information apply at 250 Washington Street, Boston.

J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

There is but one FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH, ITALIAN,

Actually Spoken and Mastered in Ten Weeks, without leaving your homes, by the Meisterschaft System. 550th Thousand. Pupils taught as if in the presence of the teacher. Terms for membership, $5.00 for each language. All questions answered and exercises corrected free of charge. Specimen copy of Part One, any language, sent free on receipt of 2 cent postage stamp.

Meisterschaft System

Meisterschaft Publishing Co.

No. 196 Summer Street,
Boston, Mass.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - - $16,014,000.00
Liabilities, - $13,808,000.00
Surplus, - - $2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.
OFFICE:
Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

ADVERTISING RATES:
First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son

Harper's Magazine

SEPTEMBER.

166 Pages; 74 Illustrations.

The Royal Marine: An Idyl of Narragansett Pier. By BRANDER MATTHEWS. Part I. With 4 Illustrations by W. T. SMEDLEY.

A New England Prophet. A Story. By MARY E. WILKINS.

Where Time Has Slumbered. By JULIAN RALPH. With 10 Illustrations by FREDERIC REMINGTON.

Riding to Hounds in England. By CASPAR W. WHITNEY. With 18 Illustrations.

The General's Bluff. By OWEN WISTER. With 3 Illustrations by FREDERIC REMINGTON.

Early Summer in Japan. By ALFRED PARSONS. With 18 Illustrations by the Author.

The Tug of War. A Story. By W. E. Norris.

Some Records of the Ice Age About New York. By T. MITCHELL PRUDDEN. With 7 Illustrations.

The Origin of a Great Poem ("Thanatopsis"). By JOHN WHITE CHADWICK. With 3 Illustrations.

The Golden House. A Story. By CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER. Part III. With 6 Illustrations by W. T. SMEDLEY.

Editor's Study. By CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER.

Full Page Illustration. By DU MAURIER.

Editor's Drawer. With Introductory Story by HEYDEN CARRUTH.

Subscription, $4.00 a Year.

Booksellers and Postmasters usually receive Subscriptions. Subscriptions sent direct to the publishers should be accompanied by Post-Office Money Order or Draft. When no time is specified, Subscriptions will begin with the current number. Postage free to all subscribers in the United States, Canada, and Mexico.

Harper & Brothers'

LATEST BOOKS.

Trilby. A Novel. By GEORGE DU MAURIER, Author of "Peter Ibbetson." With 120 Illustrations by the Author. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75. (Ready September 7.)

The Fur-Seal's Tooth. A Story of Alaskan Adventure. By KIRK MUNROE, Author of "Raftmates," "Canoemates," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

In Old New York. By THOMAS A. JANVIER, Author of "The Aztec Treasure-House," etc. With Illustrations and Maps. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75.

The Water-Ghost and Others. By JOHN KENDRICK BANGS, Author of "Coffee and Repartee," etc. Illustrated. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Micah Clarke. His Statement. By A. CONAN DOYLE. New Illustrated Edition. Post 8vo. Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75.

A Scarlet Poppy and Other Stories. By HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Perlycross. A Novel. By R. D. BLACKMORE, Author of "Lorna Doone," "Springhaven," etc. 12mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75.

Pembroke. A Novel. By MARY E. WILKINS, Author of "A New England Nun," etc. Illustrated. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

Out of Step. A Novel. By MARIA LOUISE POOL, Author of "The Two Salomes," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

The Maiden's Progress. A Novel in Dialogue. By VIOLET HUNT. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00.

Carlotta's Intended, and Other Tales. By RUTH McENERY STUART, Author of "A Golden Wedding," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

The Potter's Thumb. A Novel. By FLORA ANNIE STEEL. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

A Prodigal in Love. A Novel. By EMMA WOLF. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Literary and Social Silhouettes. By HJALMAR HJORTH BOYESEN. With Portrait. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00. (Harper's American Essayists.)

The above works are for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by HARPER & BROTHERS, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, Canada, or Mexico, on receipt of price. HARPER'S CATALOGUE will be sent to any address on receipt of Ten Cents.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 Somerset Street
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 8 SEPTEMBER 1894 Vol. XXV No. 18 Whole No. 514

Charles Scribner's Sons' New Books.

GEN. W. T. SHERMAN and SEN. JOHN SHERMAN.

THE SHERMAN LETTERS.

With Portrait. Crown 8vo, $3.00.

This correspondence between General Sherman and his brother extends from the former's West Point days until 1891. It is unique in furnishing a familiar and intimate record of the events of American history during that period, with the frank comments on the incidents and the actors in them by two persons, themselves participants, and men of extraordinary penetration and power.

*

GEORGE MEREDITH.

LORD ORMONT AND HIS AMINTA.

12mo, $1.50.

"It is equal to anything Mr. Meredith has ever done. It is romantic, plausible, dramatic, pregnant with philosophy, and far-reaching in its survey of human motive."—London Times.

*

NAPOLEONIC MEMOIRS.

THE PASQUIER MEMOIRS.

Edited by Duc D'Audiffret Pasquier. With Portraits. 3 vols. 8vo, each $2.50. Vol. III. now ready, completing the set.

"It will ever be in the first grade of the memoirs for which French literature is incomparable."—N. Y. Times.

*

PAUL SABATIER.

LIFE OF SAINT FRANCIS OF ASSISI.

Translated by Louise Seymour Houghton. 8vo, $2.50.

"A very welcome book. A record, admirably written and fraught with the deepest interest, of one who was a great, good, and an intensely human man."—Philadelphia Press.

*

GEN. A. W. GREELY.

THREE YEARS OF ARCTIC SERVICE.

An Account of the Lady Franklin Bay Expedition of 1881–84 and the Attainment of the Farthest North. New and Cheaper Edition. Fully Illustrated. 1 vol. 8vo, $5.00.

"The most important work on Arctic matters that has been published in any country for many years."—Boston Herald.

*

THOMAS STEVENS.

AROUND THE WORLD ON A BICYCLE.

With over 200 Illustrations. New and Cheaper Edition. 2 vols. 8vo, each $2.50.

"As interesting as a novel."—The Critic.

*

MRS. CHRISTINE TERHUNE HERRICK.

THE CHAFING-DISH SUPPER.

12mo, 75c.

In this little book Mrs. Herrick has exploited the many varied capacities of the chafing-dish, advising when and how to use it, with valuable suggestions concerning the materials employed, and the preparation of an extensive chafing-dish menu.

*

MRS. ALICE MORSE EARLE.

COSTUME OF COLONIAL TIMES.

12mo, $1.25.

An alphabetically arranged glossary with introductory matter and comments descriptive of the costumes of Colonial America. It comprises a fuller list of items than has ever been published, and the subject is presented in the author's well-known attractive style.

*

PROF. BARRETT WENDELL.

WILLIAM SHAKSPERE.

A Study in Elizabethan Literature. 12mo, $2.00.

"Barrett Wendell has come to be recognized as standing in the very first rank of our American essayists."—Boston Advertiser.

*

MRS. H. M. PLUNKETT.

JOSIAH GILBERT HOLLAND.

A Memoir. 12mo. Illustrated. $1.50.

"A model biography, and a valuable and delightful addition to biographical literature."—Boston Advertiser.

*

ROBERT BRIDGES.

OVERHEARD IN ARCADY.

Dialogues about Howells, James, Aldrich, Stockton, Davis, Crawford, Kipling, Meredith, Stevenson, and Barrie. With 65 Illustrations. Third Edition. 12mo, $1.25.

"A very delightful volume."—The Outlook.

*

NEW VOLUMES OF SHORT STORIES Each 12mo, $1.00.

MARSENA AND OTHER STORIES. By Harold Frederic.

A POUND OF CURE. A Story of Monte Carlo. By William Henry Bishop.

SALEM KITTREDGE AND OTHER STORIES. By Bliss Perry.

TALES OF THE MAINE COAST. By Noah Brooks.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 153-157 Fifth Ave., N. Y.

"A REALLY GREAT NOVEL."

The Manxman.

By HALL CAINE, author of "The Deemster," "Capt'n Davy's Honeymoon," "The Scapegoat," etc. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

"'The Manxman,' we may say at once, confirms the author's claim to rank among the first novelists of the day. . . . The story is constructed and worked out with consummate skill, and, though intensely tragic, is lightened by some charming desciptions of scenery and local customs. The characters, even the minor ones, are closely studied and finely executed, and show a deep experience and knowledge of human nature, in its lighter as well as darker aspects, such as only a master hand could faithfully have drawn."—London Literary World.

"In truth it is Hall Caine's masterpiece, and the congratulations are pouring in upon him from right and left. . . . The story had only been issued a few hours when Mr. Gladstone wrote to the Isle of Man to express his admiration for the new success."—London correspondence of The Critic.

"It is difficult not to speak with what may seem indiscriminate praise of Mr. Hall Caine's new work." . . . —London Daily News.

"The book, as a whole, is on a rare level of excellence—a level which we venture to predict will always be rare."—London Chronicle.

"A singularly powerful and picturesque piece of work, extraordinarily dramatic. . . . Taken altogether, 'The Manxman' cannot fail to enhance Mr. Hall Caine's reputation. It is a most powerful book."—London Standard.

"The story will assuredly rank with Mr. Caine's best work and will obtain immediate favor with the lovers of strong and pure romance."—London Globe.

"A story that will absorb thousands of readers and add rare laurels to the reputation of its author. . . . A work such as only a great story-teller could imagine. . . . A really great novel."—Liverpool Post.

"The most powerful story that has been written in the present generation."—Edinburgh Scotsman.

"A book the construction and execution of which very few living European novelists could excel. The fullness of the texture in this last novel, the brilliancy of the successive episodes, the gravity and intensity of the sentiment, the art with which the ever-deepening central tragedy is relieved by what is picturesque and what is comic—all this has only to be seriously considered to be highly appreciated. 'The Manxman' is a contribution to literature, and the most fastidious critic would give in exchange for it a wilderness of that deciduous trash which our publishers call fiction."—Edmund Gosse, in St. James's Gazette.

Timar's Two Worlds.

By MAURUS JOKAI. Authorized translation by Mrs. HEGAN KENNARD. No. 150, Town and Country Library. 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

"'Timar's Two Worlds' may not only be regarded as the author's masterpiece, but as a masterpiece of European literature."—London Athenæum.

"As charming as it is original; full of freshness and color."—London Telegraph.

"A powerful romance. . . . A book which most competent judges will acknowledge to be Jokai's masterpiece."—London Chronicle.

A Victim of Good Luck.

By W. E. NORRIS, author of "Matrimony," "Mademoiselle de Mersac," etc. No. 151, Town and Country Library. 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

This is a new novel of genuine importance and interest, which is characterized by all the ease of expression, charm of manner and constant good taste that the author's readers have grown to expect. "A Victim of Good Luck" is a strong example of the admirable art of one of the most popular modern novelists.

For sale by all booksellers; or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers,

D. APPLETON & CO.,
72 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.

OUR SEPTEMBER BOOKS.

MOLIÈRE'S DRAMATIC WORKS.

A new edition. Translated by KATHARINE PRESCOTT WORMELEY. With a preface by Balzac; criticisms by Sainte-Beuve; portraits by Coypel and Mignard, and decorative title-pages. Half russia, $1.50 per volume.

Vol. I. THE MISANTHROPE; LE BOURGEOIS GENTILHOMME.
Vol. II. TARTUFFE; LES PRECIEUSES RIDICULES; GEORGE DANDIN.

IN PRESS.

Vol. III. LES FEMMES SAVANTES; LE MALADE IMAGINAIRE.
Vol. IV. L'AVARE; DON JUAN; LES FACHEUX.

A SAINT.

PAUL BOURGET. From the "Pastels of Men." Translated by Katharine Prescott Wormeley. With 12 illustrations by Paul Chabas. Square 12mo, parchment paper covers, $1.00.

"'A Saint' takes us to higher and healthier levels of life. The central incident is indeed a miracle—the eternal miracle of a soul's regeneration."—The Spectator.

A MONK OF THE AVENTINE.

By ERNST ECKSTEIN. A Novel. Translated from the German by Helen Hunt Johnson. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

An excellent translation of a curious and interesting story.

JOLLY GOOD TIMES TO-DAY. By MARY P. W. SMITH. A continuation of the "Jolly Good Times Series." Illustrated by Jessie McDermott. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

One of the brightest of this series.

THE LITTLE LADY OF THE HORSE. By EVELYN RAYMOND. With 21 illustrations by Merrill. Small 4to, cloth, $1.50.

A character quite new to fiction.

LAST WORDS. A Final Collection of Stories. By JULIANA HORATIA EWING. Illustrated. A new and cheaper edition, uniform with our edition of Mrs. Ewing's books. 50 cents.

THE KINGDOM OF COINS. A Tale for Children of all Ages. By JOHN BRADLEY GILMAN. Illustrated by Merrill. A new and improved edition. Small 4to, 60 cents.

At all Bookstores Sept. 15.

Roberts Brothers, Publishers, Boston.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - -	$16,014,000.00
Liabilities, -	$13,808,000.00
Surplus, - -	$2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.

Will Publish September 15:

The Diary of Anna Green Winslow, a Boston School Girl of 1771.

Edited, with a Preface and many notes, by ALICE MORSE EARLE, author of "Customs and Fashions in Old New England," etc. With Illustrations, including a Facsimile of the Diary, a Miniature of the School Girl, Portraits, etc. With quaint antique cover design. 16mo, $1.25.

Poems, New and Old.

By WILLIAM ROSCOE THAYER, author of "The Dawn of Italian Independence," editor of the "Harvard Graduates' Magazine." 16mo, $1.00.

This volume contains several striking and attractive lyrics, and a series of what may be regarded as adaptations from Hafiz, "Echoes from a Garden."

English and Scottish Popular Ballads.

Edited by Prof. FRANCIS J. CHILD of Harvard University. An Edition de Luxe, strictly limited to one thousand copies. In ten parts, each part containing about 250 pages. Part IX., imperial quarto, $5.00 net.

Continental History.

A group of books covering important epochs in the history of several European nations, principally France and Italy. Including

1. FRANCE UNDER THE REGENCY. With a Review of the Administration of Louis XIV. By JAMES BRECK PERKINS.
2. THE EVE OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION. By EDWARD J. LOWELL.
3. THE FIRST NAPOLEON: A Sketch, Political and Military. By JOHN C. ROPES. With Maps and Appendixes.
4, 5. THE DAWN OF ITALIAN INDEPENDENCE: Italy from the Congress of Vienna, 1814, to the Fall of Venice, 1849. By WILLIAM R. THAYER. With maps. (In two volumes.)
6. THE RECONSTRUCTION OF EUROPE. A Sketch of the Diplomatic and Military History of Continental Europe, from the Rise to the Fall of the Second French Empire. By HAROLD MURDOCK. With an Introduction by John Fiske, and Maps.

6 vols., crown 8vo, each $2.00; the set, cloth, in box, $12.00; half calf, gilt top, $21.00.

Riverside Reference Library.

Five volumes containing a vast amount of information, clearly stated and in form convenient for reference. Including

1. BENT'S FAMILIAR SHORT SAYINGS OF GREAT MEN.
2. DR. CLARKE'S EVENTS AND EPOCHS IN RELIGIOUS HISTORY.
3. WHEELER'S COURSE OF EMPIRE.
4. WHEELER'S DICTIONARY OF NOTED NAMES OF FICTION.
5. WHEELER'S FAMILIAR ALLUSIONS.

5 volumes, crown 8vo, each $2.00; the set, cloth, in box, $10.00; half calf, $17.50.

Sold by all Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by
HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

The Literary World

Vol. XXV BOSTON 8 SEPTEMBER 1894 No. 18

CONTENTS

Songs from Dreamland 275
Ludlow's Memoirs 275
Lord Ormont and His Aminta 276
The Baptists in New England 277
The Evolution of Modern Capitalism . . 277
The Unbidden Guest 278
No Enemy (But Himself) 279
Mrs. Piatt's Poems 279

Poetry:

Walter Pater. Michael Field 280
Apollo in Paris. Theodore Watts . . . 280
Celia Thaxter 280
The Manxman 280

Fiction ·

Music Hath Charms 281
David's Loom 281
George Mandeville's Husband 281
Mrs. Limber's Raffle 282
A Cumberer of the Ground 282
A Change of Air 282

Minor Notices:

Sweet Alyssum 282
A Book of Song 282
Books and Plays 282
Fiske's History of the United States . . 283
A History of Germany in the Middle Ages . 283
Oriental Studies 283
The Vedânta Philosophy 283
Christianity and Evolution 283
Periodicals 284
News and Notes 284
Publications Received 287

SONGS FROM DREAMLAND.*

DESPITE the title of Miss May Kendall's new book, not many of her songs and poems have that shadowy, indefinite quality that we are apt to associate with dreamland. Her visions are of the kind that we all know now and then, no matter how prosaic our lives have become. They picture to us no romantic, unsubstantial raptures, but just the common comfort and earthly happiness that lie only a little beyond our reach. The unbefriended city drudge lifts his eyes from the ledger and the shopgirl pauses in her toil to board in fancy the phantom train that will take them beyond the city's tumult for their well-earned holiday; the painter who exhibits in the gallery sees the red stars flying around his picture and believes that one of them will hit it some day; the acid man in the stained glass factory wonders how it would do to hoard a part of the weekly twenty shillings for the sake of the sand-blast girl who works in the same room, and yet he remembers all the time that for the workingman life is a risk, and he dare not put his dream into words:

From ruby, orange, or from blue,
  The letters stand out clear as pearl.
The fellows say they never knew
  So smart a sand-blast girl.

Many of these verses are not especially poetical, but there is a fresh, human quality about them that one likes, and here and there a happy turn of expression or thought illumines a poem that at first seems almost commonplace. There are some quite good humorous poems, but even better are two or three that might be called vers de société, delicately balanced between smiles and sighs. Such is "A Festival," which bewails the fate of two who were separated for "two mortal hours" at a dinner by a lawyer and a dean, and of which the last stanza runs as follows:

Purgatory seemed our doom.
  Now we turn regretful eyes
To that dreary dining room,
  And it looks like Paradise.
For we know, who see tonight
  Time and Fate step in between,
Barriers how brief and slight
  Were a lawyer and a dean.

None of the poems is so serious as to bring even a passing heartache, but occasionally deeper notes are touched, as in "Love and Matter" or "A Leader." As an example of these we quote "A Song" entire:

To your silence, my king,
  They bring you white flowers;
  For the love that was ours
I've no blossom to bring.

They shall wither away,
  Though their fragrance be sweet.
  In the dark at your feet
Let a living soul stay.

LUDLOW'S MEMOIRS.*

THIS fine library edition of the noted Memoirs of "leveling Ludlow" would seem to answer every demand and be definitive. Its title to be more complete than its predecessors rests, so far as the text is concerned, only upon the restoration of the passages concerning Lord Shaftesbury, which Isaac Littlebury, the original editor, suppressed in 1698 because of his friendliness for that time-serving nobleman. These passages, which have no particular historical value but throw some additional light on Sir A. A. Cooper's character, were first printed by Mr. W. D. Christie, in 1871, in his Life of Shaftesbury; they were derived from Locke's manuscripts, but Mr. Christie could not explain how the philosopher came into possession of the suppressed passages, and Ludlow's manuscript cannot be traced. The great value of this present edition resides in the excellent introduction of some seventy pages and the numerous footnotes which Mr. Firth has added to a careful reprint; he has also furnished fourteen appendixes, giving Ludlow's pedigree; his account to Parliament in 1650; matters relating to his elections in 1654 and 1660; a sketch of the civil war in Wiltshire, supplementing his own narrative; a large collection of letters relating to his services in Ireland in 1651–1654; others concerning his command there in 1659–1660; the interesting correspondence of the English exiles in Switzerland after the Restoration; the epitaphs of the regicides at Vevay; and other minor matters. An elaborate index fills fifty pages. Mr. Firth shows the characteristics of a model editor in the appropriateness and brevity of his notes and in the impartiality of his biographical introduction, and he has thus increased the obligation which readers of English history acknowledge because of his previous books.

Edmund Ludlow, born in 1617 at Maiden Bradley, in Wiltshire, belonged to a wealthy and honorable family, and was one of the most thoroughgoing and sincere converts to republicanism that the tyranny of Charles I made among the men of rank and title. At Oxford, where he took his B.A. in 1636, he showed that pertinacity in holding to one idea at a time which afterwards distinguished him. A hostile pamphleteer tells this story:

> It happened upon a time this positive Sir was engaged in argument about "Species Intentionales" and "Reales," or some such like topick, for he confidently affirmed something to be real which was very far from it. The good Doctor endeavored to convince him by the following instance:
>
> "The fox, wagging his tail and seeing its shadow upon the wall, said it was an horn; was that an horn?" quoth he to Ludlow.
>
> "Yes, it was a horn, a real horn."
>
> Wherein he so pertinaciously persisted as the old man fell into a little passion and put an end to that debate with this resolve, "Well, if it be an horn, then toot it, you fool, you." At the same contradicting rate he went on in the whole course of his life, and, tho' as heavy as lead, as stiff as iron, would bend to none.

The more judicial Mr. Firth remarks hereupon, "It might fairly be added that even in his later life Ludlow did not always discover the difference between shadows and realities."

At the Inner Temple Ludlow obtained a smattering of law, and made a contract with two other parties to pay them fifty pounds apiece if they should procure him a wife worth at the time of his marriage four thousand pounds, with a ten per cent commission on every additional thousand pounds. The civil war prevented, it is probable, the consummation of this sentimental contract, and the romantic Ludlow had to content himself, in 1649, with a wife whom he first mentions in speaking of the investment of her dowry, which was, sad to say, less than the minimum he had fixed upon. Ludlow's political and martial record is more attractive in modern eyes than his business-like conception of matrimony. With his father, Sir Henry, he took up arms on the side of the Parliament:

> The question in dispute between the king's party and us being, as I apprehended, whether the king should govern as a god by his will and the nation be governed by force like beasts, or whether the people should be governed by laws

---

*Songs from Dreamland. By May Kendall. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.75.

*The Memoirs of Edmund Ludlow, Lieutenant General of the Horse in the Army of the Commonwealth of England, 1625–1672. Edited, with Appendixes of Letters and Illustrative Documents, by C. H. Firth, M.A. Two volumes. Pp. lxix, 548, and 571. Macmillan & Co. $9.00.

made by themselves and live under a government derived from their own consent.

Ludlow distinguished himself greatly by his stubborn defense of Wardour Castle, the only place holding out for Parliament in 1644. He was made prisoner, but soon exchanged, and encountered bad fortune with his regiment of horse. His Memoirs have little value for the general history of the time, excepting the accounts of the battle of Edgehill and the second at Newbury. But "none of the memoirs of the period—except, perhaps, Mrs. Hutchinson's life of her husband—give so lively a picture of what may be termed the every-day life of the war. Ludlow has been reproached for chronicling petty skirmishes and trivial incidents, but it is by recording such things that he holds up to us the very form and pressure of the times. The chief actor himself is a typical specimen of the local leaders of the early part of the civil war—men without regular military training, but of boundless courage and devotion to their cause, owing their commands originally rather to territorial influence than military skill, but gradually acquiring the latter from the hard teaching of experience." War was waged by both sides at this time as by gentlemen, not by fanatics, as Guizot has said, but Ludlow became more extreme as the struggle went on. He was elected to Parliament in 1646, and was always one of "the Commonwealth party," as Lilburne styled them, "the honest men of the Parliament" who were set upon bringing in a republic. Ludlow was a poor speaker, but he steadily voted with the minority against compromise with Charles. He was active in Pride's Purge, and signed the death warrant of the king without scruple. In 1650 he went over to Ireland as second in command, a statesman as well as a soldier being needed there. His narrative of the reconquest is like his narrative of the war in Wiltshire. After the expulsion of the Little Parliament "Ludlow was Cromwell's bitterest and most unyielding opponent." After six weeks' imprisonment he was kept under strict surveillance by the protector. He went to Ireland again as lieutenant general in command in 1659, and returned to do his utmost against the Restoration, but in vain. He escaped to Vevay, where he was the object of numerous plots fostered by the base home government, but frustrated by the friendly diligence of the Swiss authorities. His old enemies constructed an imaginary Ludlow much more formidable than the real man:

> Through good and evil fortune Ludlow had remained faithful to republican ideals; his devotion had never hesitated, his constancy never been seduced. Therefore the few stern fanatics, whom no reverses could teach and no odds dismay, regarded him as their destined leader. His unbending obstinacy had become a virtue. The field was lost, but "the unconquerable will," linked with the "courage never to submit or yield," might yet overthrow the triumphant and careless conqueror. Ludlow possessed these qualities, and they did not perceive how much he lacked. He had not the fertility in resources, the readiness to seize opportunities, the skill to organize conspirators, the willingness to lead forlorn hopes, which make a good leader of revolts. His courage was rather active than passive in its nature, and his mind was slow to adapt itself to new situations. But as yet neither the republicans had discovered that their hopes were hollow nor the government that their fears were unfounded.

More fortunate than John Lisle, his fellow regicide, who was assassinated, Ludlow lived in Switzerland from 1662 to his death in 1692. He went over to England in 1689, but the Whigs would not allow a regicide to return, so he went back to Vevay. His Memoirs were written, it is supposed, between 1663 and 1672, at which year they abruptly conclude. They begin with 1625, but first become detailed in 1641. "The narrow life and the bitter passions of the exile are faithfully reflected in their pages. It would be too much to expect from a man in his position a calm and unprejudiced estimate of the acts of his political opponents; it is sufficient that his facts are fairly accurate and that he does not intentionally misrepresent." Mr. Firth quotes at length Guizot's characterization of Ludlow, to whom he concedes all the praise that is due to honesty and sincerity. We can only quote a few lines from Carlyle's more vivid, if less impartial, judgment apropos of the Vindication of Cromwell:

> The anonymous critic explains to solid Ludlow that he, in that solid but somewhat wooden head of his, had not perhaps seen entirely into the center of the universe and workshop of the destinies; that, in fact, Oliver was a questionable uncommon man, and he, Ludlow, a common, handfast, honest, dull, and, indeed, partly wooden man—in whom it might be wise to form no theory at all of Cromwell.

Yet he concludes:

> Adieu, my solid friend; if I go to Vevay I will read thy monument there, perhaps not without emotion after all.

LORD ORMONT AND HIS AMINTA.*

AFTER the publication of One of Our Conquerors there was little said about Mr. Meredith's greatness as a novelist. That novel was a grievous disappointment to even his best friends. It was loudly heralded and much talked about before it appeared. After its publication there was a great deal of ridicule from the author's critics and a discreet silence on the part of his friends. It was dreary and unprofitable, and clever people have said that no man or woman actually survived its perusal. After this bitter disappointment the Meredith cult was ridiculed by unsympathetic critics more than ever, and many meaningless passages culled from his works found their way into print and were made the subject of much sarcasm.

It is therefore with great pleasure that Mr. Meredith's admirers proclaim that Lord Ormont and His Aminta ranks among his very best novels; perhaps it is destined to be the most popular of all. We will not say that it is wholly free from its author's peculiar and exasperating faults of style, and we will not promise any beginners on his novels that the first chapters of the book are easy reading; but certainly the writer has a story to tell and tells it with the novelist's skill, the essayist's wit, and the poet's beauty of style. There is no overcrowding of the canvas with characters, there is no overburdening of the plot with incidents, and Mr. Meredith does not allow himself to be drawn aside from his main lines by any side issues. The book has not the philosophic purpose or the wide range of character which made The Ordeal of Richard Feverel so tremendous, nor has it the sparkling brilliancy which dazzled us in Diana of the Crossways, but, after we once get hold of the threads and learn to know the characters, it is wonderfully interesting.

The novel begins with a description of a boys' school, and the hero appears first in the light of a schoolboy lover. We see him in the youthful hero-worshiping stage. Lord Ormont is his hero and Aminta is his first love. In the early chapters, bewildering and irritating as they are in point of style, Mr. Meredith accomplishes his purpose and brings his chief actors quickly before us. Those who forgive the few puzzling passages in these first chapters will have a feast of rare enjoyment before the book closes. A passage such as we find on the fifth page, differentiating the dark girl from her fair sister, is, we confess, hard to bear patiently, unless we are content to admire the writer as a verbal acrobat:

> Some of the boys regretted her not being fair. But, as they felt and sought to explain, in the manner of the wag of a tail, with elbows and eyebrows, to one another's understanding, fair girls could never have let fly such a look; fair girls are softer, woolier, and when they mean to look serious overdo it by craping solemn; or they pinafore a jigging eagerness, or hoist propriety on a chubby flaxen grin, or else they dart an eye, or they mince and prim and pout, and are sigh-away and dying-ducky, given to girls' tricks.

The character of Lord Ormont, the military hero on whom the enthusiastic schoolboy and his adored Aminta lavished all the wealth of admiration which their young hearts held, is strongly drawn; he is unlike any other of Mr. Meredith's creations; and as an English nobleman, with all the strength and all the weakness of his class, he is an admirable type. "A chivalrous gentleman up to the bounds of his intelligence," Lord Ormont was stronger in will and muscle than in brain. He had a great sense of honor, but not a fine sense of what was honorable. His views of women and of politics were old-fashioned, and his intense class feeling colored all his opinions and limited his horizon in every direction; yet he had a kind of instinctive nobility which made him a representative Englishman of the old school — one that his countrymen need not be ashamed of.

---

* Lord Ormont and His Aminta. By George Meredith. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

Lady Charlotte, Lord Ormont's sister, is another original addition to Mr. Meredith's gallery of women portraits, and her strong, proud nature, warped on many sides, is drawn with rare skill. Aminta is a less complete character. The author purposely lets us see her possibilities and watch her in the process of evolution. She has not quite the brilliancy of Diana, but she has a certain consistent earnestness behind her varying moods which Diana lacked.

The plot of the story and its morals may raise almost as great a hue and cry as Mr. Hardy's Tess. Much of it is unnatural, and the end is almost abnormal. Aminta, Lord Ormont's young wife, neglected by him and refused recognition by society, runs away with her old schoolboy lover, who comes by chance to be her husband's private secretary. So far there is nothing unusual, but the daring unconventionality of the writer appears when the two illegal lovers go to Switzerland and there start a model school for boys. To this school, some years later, the deserted husband sends his grandson. Now, for the sake of society, the marriage tie cannot be lightly broken, and in any country these two lovers would be social outcasts. In setting them up as instructors of youth Mr. Meredith will rightly call down the disapproval of all right-minded people on his head; but the disapproval of the whole world will not affect him, however; he has chosen to go his own way and to stand apart from the rules and regulations of society, and the most impossible and abnormal part of his book is, we must confess, the most interesting. Mr. Meredith's conception of the world is a poet's conception, far away from the realist's of today. In his poet's world Lord Ormont would have been generous towards his young wife and seen her conduct from the standpoint of ideal justice perhaps; but in the world of today these things cannot be — all these socialistic dreams of free love must do harm to society. We doubt, however, if this book will do much injury, for Mr. Meredith's audience is an intellectual, not an emotional, one.

No one can read "A Marine Duet" without a thrill of pleasure, and the whole chapter called "Lovers Mated" is a poem. The passage that ends, "He had gone, and the day lived again for both of them — a day of sheer gold in the translation from troubled earth to the mind," is as exquisite as any Mr. Meredith has ever written. The pictorial imagery, the ingenious metaphors, and the brilliant epigrams scattered all through Lord Ormont unquestionably prove the author a man of genius. Indeed, the greatness of the writer, rather than the greatness of any one of his books, must impress the student of all his novels.

Let critics battle as they will over the question which troubles the editor of the London Spectator greatly, whether Mr. Meredith is a good story-teller or not, one point all will agree upon — in almost all his novels, surely in Lord Ormont and His Aminta, the reader is brought into close contact with a man of genius. This of itself makes the reading of his last book an experience not often to be repeated. Every one criticises Les Miserables as a novel, but every one enjoys the intimacy with Hugo's rich, luxuriant, poetic mind. Never has Mr. Meredith's genius been more evident than in this latest novel. It is artistic, it is dramatic, it is absolutely original, and it makes an ineffaceable impression on the mind. By its side Marcella seems commonplace. No novel has been published for years which will bear closer scrutiny and more careful reading. Mr. Meredith is to be felicitated; so is the reader who has the perusal of Diana of the Crossways, The Ordeal of Richard Feverel, and Lord Ormont and His Aminta before him.

THE BAPTISTS IN NEW ENGLAND.*

THIS unassuming volume is the first of five "district histories" in which the story of the Baptist Church in as many divisions of our country is to be told. Rev. Dr. Burrage has the advantage of his colaborers, in that Roger Williams, the great apostle of the faith, falls within his province. It is not, however, the purpose of this series to give anything but a plain, straightforward narrative of the history of the denomination. Dr. Burrage does not, therefore, present any detailed picture of the life and work of Williams; but he properly inserts the revocation of the decree of banishment, passed by the Massachusetts General Court in 1676, forty-one years later, to give the Puritan Commonwealth its due. It is instructive to compare the career of Williams after his settlement of Rhode Island — when, in the words of a Baptist authority, "he went out of the church, left his little congregation behind, preached when and where he could, and became a 'seeker' the rest of his days" — with Emerson's characterization of himself as "an eternal seeker, with no past behind him."

Any one who desires to find the chief facts in the annals of the Baptist body of New England simply set forth, without excessive eulogy, as well as without endeavor after literary art, will do well to turn to Dr. Burrage's plain, unvarnished tale. He has the story to recite of a great religious body which is now numerically the strongest in the city of Boston, whence its first preachers were banished three hundred years ago, and where Obadiah Holmes suffered for his faith a whipping that "was grievous, as the spectators said, the man striking with all his strength (yea, spitting on his hands three times, as many affirm) with a three-coarded whip, giving me therewith thirty stroaks," but, when he was released, could say to the magistrates, "You have struck me as with roses." The fortunes of Brown University properly occupy an important place, and it is a notable fact that the first Sunday school in New England was established by Mr. Samuel Slater, the pioneer cotton manufacturer of America. This was in 1796 or 1797, and the step was taken for the benefit of the children of his employees. The association of a lottery with the building of the church in Providence in 1774 was more characteristic of the time.

Dr. Burrage prefixes to his impartial narrative an excellent motto from the pen of Rev. Dr. S. L. Caldwell; it expresses the spirit in faithfulness to which the Baptist body, in an age of theological unrest and intellectual questioning, may well expect to continue an honorable career:

> Different statements of truth, different forms of worship, an altered outward life, there may be; but the spiritual affections, the sense of duty, the charity, the penitent trust, the divine desire, the hatred of wrong, the faith in the unseen, which constitute true religion, belong to all generations.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODERN CAPITALISM.*

THE Contemporary Science series continues to justify its existence and to bring credit upon its editor and its contributors. This latest volume, by the author of Problems of Poverty, is not so distinctively as Mr. Ellis' recent book on Man and Woman a notable performance in a field where the scientific method has been but little applied, but it is a careful, studious and well-balanced book, deserving high praise. Mr. Hobson has wisely limited his subject, as his sub-title denotes; he does not enter into the financial aspects of the development of modern capitalism, but restricts himself to the industrial field, assigning a central place to machine production as the most characteristic phenomenon. He is aware that this position is to some extent deceptive, but there is a practical necessity for selecting "some clearly appreciable standpoint."

---

* A History of the Baptists in New England. By Henry S. Burrage, D.D. American Baptist Publication Society. $1.25.

* The Evolution of Modern Capitalism: A Study of Machine Production. By John A. Hobson, M.A. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

Concrete capital Mr. Hobson defines as consisting "of all forms of marketable matter which embody labor. Land or nature is excluded except for improvements; human powers are excluded as not being matter; commodities in the hands of consumers are excluded because they are no longer marketable. Thus the actual concrete forms of capital are the raw materials of production, including the finished stage of shop goods, and the plant and implements used in the several processes of industry, including the monetary implements of exchange. Concrete business capital is composed of these and of nothing but these." Capital being thus defined as is usual in the business world, "the chief material factor in the evolution of capitalism is machinery. The growing quantity and complexity of machinery applied to purposes of manufacture and conveyance and to the extractive industries is the great special fact in the narrative of the expansion of modern industry."

Mr. Hobson naturally begins his study with a chapter on "the structure of industry before machinery," in which he considers such matters as the slight importance of the foreign commerce of England in the earlier part of the eighteenth century, the feeble elements of cohesion inside the country itself, the self-sufficiency of the small communities, and the fixation of capital and labor in particular localities and businesses. After explaining in some detail the senses in which a "machine" as different from a "tool" is used, he shows "the order of development of machine industry" and the great advantages which England enjoyed in the political situation that coincided with the great evolution of machinery in the years 1790–1820 especially. He notes the falsity of a common notion:

> The history of these textile inventions does a good deal to dispel the "heroic" theory of invention — that of an idea flashing suddenly from the brain of a single genius and effecting a rapid revolution in a trade. No one of the inventions which were greatest in their effect — the jenny, the water frame, the mule, the power loom — was in the main attributable to the effort or ability of a single man; each represented in its successful shape the addition of many successive increments of discovery; in most cases the successful invention was the slightly superior survivor of many similar attempts. "The present spinning machinery which we now use is supposed to be a compound of about eight hundred inventions. The present carding machinery is a compound of about sixty patents."

Under this development of machinery the amount of capital needed increases faster than the number of hands to be employed, and the division of labor leaves Adam Smith's "famous pin manufactory, with its ten separate processes, far behind. In a modern shoe factory in the United States there are sixty-four distinct processes. . . . The American machine-made watch is the product of three hundred and seventy separate processes." The multitude of patrons of the immense distributing shops in our large cities will mark with interest the cause assigned for their growth: "Finding that goods advertise one another manufacturers are frequently induced to add new departments to their business, expanding the scope and variety of their productions. In retail trade this tendency is widely operative."

With the increasing pressure of competition between great firms Mr. Hobson finds that profits can be obtained in two ways only:

> A successful firm must either be in possession of some trade secret, patent, special market, or such other private economy as places it in a position of monopoly in certain places or in certain lines of goods, or else it must make some arrangement with competing firms whereby they shall consent to abate the intensity or limit the scope of their competition.

Hence arises the trust as the logical culmination of competition, the object being to obtain monopoly prices since competitive prices were ruinous. Mr. Hobson's study of trusts is free from those hysterics into which so many writers of socialistic tendencies are apt to fall. After considering the effects of machine production in intensifying industrial depressions he discusses its influence on the demand for labor, taking this favorable view on the whole:

> So long as a community grows in numbers, so long as individuals desire to satisfy more fully their present wants and continue to develop new wants, forming a higher or more intricate standard of consumption, there is no evidence to justify the conclusion that machinery has the effect of causing a net diminution in the demand for labor, though it tends to diminish the proportion of employment in the "manufacturing" industries; but there is strong reason to believe that it tends to make employment more unstable, more precarious of tenure, and more fluctuating in market value.

Mr. Hobson treats the question of the effect of machinery on the mental and moral status of the work people in the same fair way. He believes that "the surest support of the 'economy of high wages' is the conviction that it will operate as a stimulus to industry through increased consumption," and that the economic future of the working classes depends largely upon their growing tendency "to employ their higher wages in progressive consumption." His discussion of "women in modern industry" is especially interesting and candid. He shows the tendency of machinery to favor the employment of women, as of children also — their low wages being fixed by the same general disadvantages as those under which children and low-skilled men lie. The very evil effect of factory work for women upon the home life is "a tendency antagonistic to civilization," and it should be further counteracted by legislation or by public opinion.

Mr. Hobson's general conclusion is that there is need of "a growing social control over modern machine production in cases where that production is left in the main to the direction of individual enterprise," and he takes a moderate collectivist position in reference to "natural monopolies" and the industries controlled by trusts, without being rigorous or dogmatic. "It is to improved quality and character of consumption that we can alone look for a guarantee of social progress;" in other words, the working people of today must rise as others have risen before them. "The highest goods are essentially at once individual and social," and their importance becomes greater as civilization advances. But idleness, whether in poverty or in luxury, is anti-social; and Mr. Hobson quotes with approval the forcible saying, "Life without work is guilt; work without art is brutality." His volume belongs to that sane literature of sociology in which facts are studied closely and prophecy is moderate, and it should do much good in clearing away false rhetoric and sophistry wherever it goes.

THE UNBIDDEN GUEST.*

WHETHER or not the attempt to make a heroine out of a woman who has "all the virtues except the one technically known by that name" is justifiable is a question we will leave to the writers of "Trilby and the World," the series of letters discussing the subject in one of the best-known Boston newspapers, which seem to us to have been written more by way of calling attention to the possible immorality in Mr. Du Maurier's beautiful story than in order to register a moral protest. It suffices to say that the heroine of The Unbidden Guest is another such as Trilby, and that the beauty of her character in other things is what Mr. Ernest William Hornung wishes his readers to dwell on, and not upon her great lack.

The scene of Mr. Hornung's novel is laid in Australia, and his character sketch of the unsuccessful farmer, whose one ideal is the boyhood friend whom he left thirty years before in England, is excellent, firm, and sympathetic. The story opens with the farmer's receiving a letter from his friend saying that his daughter is on her way out from England and will visit him. The daughter comes, with a letter of introduction, and is welcomed for her father's sake, but soon they learn to love her for her own. She is certainly not at all what they expected. She uses strange expressions and much slang; she does many things which they had not expected of "a young lady from home;" but her nature is so warm-hearted and lovable that they cannot help loving her. Then the real Miss Oliver appears, and the heroine, poor "Missy," is discovered to have been only a ballet girl who has picked up Miss Oliver's letter of introduction in the streets and had delivered it, at first only as a joke, not meaning to stay at the farm, but who had been so charmed by the simple, wholesome life, which she had never known before, and by the warm welcome she received, that she had stayed on and on. There is much pathos in the description of Missy's life at the farm and the admiration and wonder with which she enters into the simple daily life of hard work and purity, such as she has never seen until now. When she leaves the farm the influence does not cease. "No, you can't have known what it was to me to have lived here for two months, even as a cheat and a liar. There's worse things than cheating and lying, Bella; there's things that cheating and lying's a healthy change after! But never mind all that."

---

*The Unbidden Guest. By E. W. Hornung. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.00.

This life on the farm was to Missy what "Little Billee" and his friends were to Trilby; and to us it seems that the moral protest of such books is a higher one than that which calls into notoriety the implied evil of Missy's and Trilby's earlier lives, barely referred to by Mr. Hornung and Mr. Du Maurier, and totally forgets to dwell upon the moral lesson which they both inculcate. If the lesson which the Christian religion most enforces is true, if the noblest of all spiritual truths is that spiritual influence and example may enter into the blackest of human lives and regenerate them into new righteousness and purity, then it seems to us that there has been enough talk about the "insinuating immorality" of books which try to teach this lesson.

NO ENEMY (BUT HIMSELF).*

THERE is a time-honored tradition that a book-reviewer has no happier moments than those in which he sits down to pillory an unfortunate author, and, dipping his pen in gall and bitterness, writes the first cutting sentences of a scathing review. Keats and his famous critic, Lord Byron, and the Scotch reviewers are the supports and buttresses of this tradition; but notable as are these instances, and time-entrenched as is the legend, we maintain that in this milder mannered age some few critics may be found who have not lost the milk of human kindness. When we opened No Enemy, by Elbert Hubbard, we thought, in spite of some vagaries of style, that we had hit upon an original book. We passed over the fact that the hero "looked like a combination of brigand and archbishop," and that he belonged to a type which "some way children never confide in," because of the sense of humor and strength with which Mr. Hubbard told his story; but when we came to the hackneyed development of the plot and the weak ending our disappointment was the greater because we had hoped that at last we had found an American novel by an unknown author to which praise could be given with a clear conscience.

The hero of No Enemy, John Hillard, makes a bet that he will go from New York to St. Louis as a tramp. In winning his wager he becomes so enamored of the tramp's life that he returns to it again and again. His adventures are described with a sense of humor which makes the first half of the novel unusually amusing reading, especially at this time when we are hearing and reading so much about "tramping" as a profession.

If Mr. Hubbard could have been content to keep his story on these lines he would have written a good book and one which it would have been a pleasure to recommend, but he was overcome by a weakness for conventional romanticism. He needs must make his tramp adopt a small boy whom he finds on one of his tramping expeditions. Even this had been a pardonable fault, so well is the beginning of the book written, had he not turned the small boy into a girl in disguise, with whom the tramp eventually falls in love. After this Mr. Hubbard sinks lower and lower into the romantic quagmire. The tramp loses a leg, the girl becomes blind; she develops marvelous musical talent, to say nothing of surpassing beauty. At last the author decides that he had better make an end of his hero and heroine, that "the force of nature" can no farther go in bewildering changes; so he has the lame hero lead the blind heroine to Brooklyn in search of flowers, and on the way home the hero, crazy with grief because the heroine will not love him, drowns himself and her by walking her over the end of the wharf when she thinks he is leading her into the ferryboat.

MRS. PIATT'S POEMS.*

A NEW two-volume edition of Mrs. Piatt's poems, beautifully printed and bound, has been published in London, and affords good opportunity for comparing her earlier and later work and for studying more satisfactorily the various phases of her verse. This edition includes almost everything that has been hitherto printed, except those poems in her last volume, entitled An Enchanted Castle. Mrs. Piatt is everywhere and always herself. Her eager, willful, half playful, half pathetic strain is common in no other of our poets. She writes out of her own heart and is like nobody else in essence, although occasionally an abrupt turn or ending reminds one of Mrs. Browning, or a quaint, mystical allusion recalls Christina Rossetti. Her poems are spontaneous and lyrical. In many moods she would be much less satisfying than Miss Edith Thomas, and for the utterance of general thoughts one might turn rather to Helen Hunt; but in a certain kind of expression, in a natural, vivid reflection of woman's life and fancy — gay, thoughtful, sad, by turns — she is unexcelled.

Mrs. Piatt is at her best in poems that reveal subtle, tender moods, inevitable and genuine in a woman's home life, that may yet seem foolish or fantastic to the busy, practical worker, who brushes up against the outside world daily, lives mainly in the present, and is done with dreaming. One of her best-known poems illustrates this. The woman who has been fortunate — that is, has come into wealth after her youth is past — remembers how she fretted away the early days, mindless of the truer happiness at hand. This thought is common enough, it is true, but not often has it been expressed with more faithful simplicity:

O, if I only could have back my boys,
  With their lost gloves and books for me to find,
Their scattered playthings and their pleasant noise. . . .
  I sit here in the splendor growing blind,
With hollow hands that backward reach, and ache
  For the sweet trouble that the children make.

Mrs. Piatt puts into words true mother-thoughts common to many. The intense, unreasoning longing to hold one's children close just as when they were little; to remember just how the baby faces looked and smiled that have changed so gradually, so imperceptibly into the faces loved today; such passionate grief as comes by the reading of the sorrow of another mother, even though it be Andromache in exile; the sudden self-reproach for undeserved blessings; the strange fear in her heart as she watches the ragged tramp outside and remembers even in present happiness that

Nights darken down on heads of gold
Till wind and frost try wandering men —

all these are in the poems, and the emotion is not vague but real, not affected but genuine. The woman whose anguish beat itself out in such words as "No Help" could well write the other poems too. Closely akin to this is Mrs. Piatt's insight into child life and fancy. Her children are real children and their thoughts are their own. Many of the poems, however, are too sad for children themselves — "Hiding the Baby" and "The Story of Little Henry," for instance. The narrative and dramatic poems are original and effective, such as one likes to read aloud in the home circle, sure that they will be enjoyed. Many have been widely copied that are no better than others less familiar. Perhaps it is only fair in closing this notice to quote the epilogue which expresses the writer's modest hope:

Sweet World, if you will hear me now,
  I may not own a sounding lyre
And wear my name upon my brow
  Like some great jewel quick with fire.

But let me, singing, sit apart,
  In tender quiet with a few,
And keep my fame upon my heart,
  A little blush-rose wet with dew.

---

* No Enemy (But Himself). G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

* Poems. By Sarah M. B. Piatt. Two volumes. Longmans, Green & Co. $3.50.

The Literary World

BOSTON 8 SEPTEMBER 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

Walter Pater.

[JULY 30, 1894.]

The freshness of the light, its secrecy,
Spices, or honey from sweet-smelling bower,
The harmony of time, love's trembling hour
Struck on thee with a new felicity.
Standing, a child, by a red hawthorn tree,
Its perishing, small petals' flame had power
To fill with masses of soft, ruddy flower
A certain roadside in thy memory;
And haply when the tragic clouds of night
Were slowly wrapping round thee, in the cold
Of which men always die, a sense renewed
Of the things sweet to touch and breath and sight,
That thou didst touch and breathe and see of old,
Stole on thee with the warmth of gratitude.

— Michael Field, in the Academy.

Apollo in Paris.

(TO THE FRENCH ACADEMY ON THE ELECTION OF M. J. M. DE HÉRÉDIA.)

I.

Spires, roofs, and towers gleam in the sunset's glow
Till Paris burns like some old poet town
That draws Apollo's radiant presence down
By music mounting from his sons below.
Methinks he greets you, fearless men who know
His sons and guard them, lest their sire's renown
Be dimmed when bastard fingers clutch the crown
Of him, our Lord of light, and lyre, and bow.

As when he scared the hordes who sacked old Rome
That day he soared above his temple-dome
When gods were fleeing the voices of the Vandals,
I see him now whose song keeps heaven immortal;
I see him now, he shines above your portal,
Phœbus from golden curls to golden sandals!

II.

With limbs of light I see the song-god stand
Flushing your roof! He knows your hands are strong
Against his foes, the brazen-throated throng
Whose breath is blight to beauty in every land;
"Foes of my foes," saith he, "who dare withstand
The great coarse voice that works my children wrong,
Ye crown Hérédia with the crown of song
Heedless of all save Art's divine command!

"He sings the past — the beauty that hath been;
I love him, I — remembering those bright days
Before the world grew gray of Vandal haze,
When gods might mix with men of godlike mien
And maids with lovesome eyes of mortal sheen,
Sweet goddesses of earth with Woman's ways:

III.

"I love the song-born poet, for that he Loves only song — seeks for love's sake alone
Shy Poesie, whose dearest bowers, unknown
To feudaries of Fame, are known to me."
So saith the god, in tones which seem to be
That music of the sunset richly blown
When sinks the sun-god from his sinking throne
Within the burnished bosom of the sea.

He soars away, a star in rosy air;
But see! the memory of his presence there
Lives where he stood. Yea, though a god hath fled,
Leaving a fading memory scarce beholden,
A true god's very shadow glimmers golden
With lovelier light than mortal brows can shed.

ENVOY.

The poet sings what Nature dreaming saith,
But still his bride is Art — that starry wife
From shores where music of the gods is rife.
She teaches him the strain that conquereth,
Whether he touch the lyre or breathe his breath
Through flute of Phœbus or through Pan's wild fife;
Whether of Man he sing or Nature's life,
Or shining sward beyond the dykes of death.

Yet, though he asks but this, the bride's acclaim;
Though not Fame's trumpet nor the wreath of Fame
Can give the bridegroom joy whose bride is Art,
He grieves when bastard brows are crowned with flowers
On New Parnassus, noisy as a mart,
Remembering Poesie within her bowers.

— Theodore Watts, in the Athenæum.

CELIA THAXTER.

IN the death of Mrs. Celia Thaxter, on August 26, American literature has lost one of its sincerest singers and the Isles of Shoals, now a famous summer resort, one who was at once their laureate and their historian. The deep human interest which she gave those bleak islands by her gracious personality is now a memory only, and the Isles will henceforth be destitute of their strongest attraction for lovers of true poetry, of whom many have found the poet greater than her song. Celia Laighton was born in Portsmouth, N. H., June 29, 1835. Her father took up his residence on Appledore Island when she was a small child, and here she became a singer of the sea and the shore. She was married at sixteen to Levi L. Thaxter of Watertown, after a brief but romantic courtship, in which the self-willed father found he could escape the tax-gatherers far more easily than he could the determined lover!

Mrs. Thaxter spent a large part of her subsequent life on Appledore, where home affections, poetry, music, and flowers filled the days. As all of her many readers know, she wrote in verse that is at once simple, tender, melodious, and thoughtful, of every aspect of the island life. She afforded another proof of the rich harvests that reward the loving cultivation of a narrow field. A hundred aspects of the sea and the sky and the island and the mainland; the secrets of the Shoals flowers and the plain heart of the very weeds even; the varied fortunes of the little sandpiper and his bird fellows; summer and its glories, winter and its tempests — all these were her theme. To what nature gave and she discerningly and gratefully received she added the joys of noble music, the manifold delights of her "island garden," and the pleasant distraction of troops of friends and casual visitors, to all of whom she gave a winning hospitality. Her sudden death in the full vigor of life must send more than one of her readers back to those poems in which she bade us bow the head "and take life's rapture and life's ill, and wait." She was "glad to be alive in blissful June" — God's child as well as the little sandpiper, and one whom "the powers of light befriend;" and, passing the breaker's edge and beyond, she now knows many a secret of which the only solution here, as she sung, is patience.

Mrs. Thaxter's books are: Among the Isles of Shoals, Poems, Driftwood, Poems for Children, The Cruise of the Mystery, Idylls and Pastorals, and An Island Garden, illustrated last year by Childe Hassam.

THE MANXMAN.*

MR. HALL CAINE'S latest novel is his greatest. It is so finely conceived and so admirably expressed that one regrets deeply that he should not have practiced more restraint and left somewhat to the reader's imagination in the latter half of the book. There are certain advantages in the three-volume length of the English novel. It allows the novelist large room for introductory matter and for many a detail which has to be suppressed on a smaller canvas. But the danger is that the reader will be tired before the climax comes, if there is one, and the writer fail to produce his due effect by this overloading. If the abandonment of the three-volume method leads the English novelist to condensation, it will doubtless be a great gain on the whole. For the present the one-volume plan is favored, but the style of composition does not alter. Mr. Hall Caine's book, for instance, has 529 pages where 400 would have been far better.

The title might have been more properly "The Manxmen," for there are two heroes — unless Mr. Hall Caine intended Peter Quilliam, not Philip Christian, for the one. The latter is the son of Thomas Christian, who has been disinherited for marrying beneath him. His life is wrecked, as his wife is vain, fretful, and incapable. His only hope is in his son, an uncommon lad in person and in mind. He dies, leaving his example to deter Philip from a similar course. But Peter, who is the natural son of Thomas' brother, and Philip, sworn friends as they are, fall in love with the same girl, Katherine Creegan, the daughter of a pietistic innkeeper. Philip has been at school, so that Peter has gained the girl's heart. Generous to a fault, he asks his intimate to plead his cause with the father:

> Pete mistook Philip's hesitation for a silent commentary on his own unworthiness. "I know I'm only a sort of a waistrel," he said, "but, Phil, the way I'm loving that girl it's shocking. I can never take rest for thinking of her. No, I'm not sleeping at night nor working reg'lar in the day neither. Everything is telling of her, and everything is shouting her name. It's 'Kate' in the sea, and 'Kate' in the river and the trees and the gorse. 'Kate,' 'Kate' 'Kate,' it's Kate constant, and I can't stand much more of it. I'm loving the girl scandalous, that's the truth, Phil."

Philip conquers himself for the time, but he cannot get the father's consent as the lover has no prospects in life. Peter then goes out to the South African diamond fields to make his fortune, leaving Philip to play for him the dangerous part of substitute, after the Manx custom:

---

*The Manxman. A Novel. By Hall Caine. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

> They call him the Dooiney Molla — literally, the "man-praiser;" and his primary function is that of an informal, unmercenary, purely friendly and philanthropic matchmaker, introduced by the young man to persuade the parents of the young woman that he is a splendid fellow, with substantial possessions or magnificent prospects, and entirely fit to marry her. But he has a secondary function, less frequent, though scarcely less familiar; and it is that of a lover by proxy, or intended husband by deputy, with duties of moral guardianship over the girl while the man himself is off "at the herrings," or away "at the mackerel," or abroad on wider voyages.

Kate ripens into a beautiful woman, arch, quick-witted, and fascinating. She comes to love Philip with the love of mature years, and she feels that he loves her. But she knows his ambitions, which his talents do not render unreasonable. Peter was reported dead.

> She saw Philip slipping away from her, but she could not snatch at him before he was gone; she could not speak first; she could not say, "I love you, stay with me." She was a woman, only a woman! How wretched to be a woman! How cruel! But ah! the dear, delicious thought! It came stealing up into her heart when the red riot was nearly killing her. What a glorious thing it was to be a woman after all! What a powerful thing! What a lovely and beloved thing! To rule the king, being the slave, was sweeter than to be the king himself. That was woman's place. It was where heaven itself had put her from the beginning until now. What weapons it had given her! Beauty! Charm! Love! The joy of it! To be the weak and overcome the strong! To be nothing in the battle of life and yet conqueror of all the world! Kate vowed that, come what would, Philip should never leave her.

So when Philip comes to Cæsar Creegan's "Meeliah," or harvest celebration, Kate gives herself to him completely in Sulby Glen.

> When a good woman falls from honor, is it merely that she is the victim of a momentary intoxication, of stress of passion, of the fever of instinct? No. It is mainly that she is the slave of the sweetest, tenderest, most spiritual, and pathetic of all human fallacies — the fallacy that by giving herself to the man she loves she attaches him to herself forever. This is the real betrayer of nearly all good women that are betrayed. It lies at the root of tens of thousands of the cases that make up the merciless story of man's sin and woman's weakness. Alas! it is only the woman who clings the closer. The impulse of the man is to draw apart. He must conquer it or she is lost. Such is the old cruel difference and inequality of man and woman as nature made them — the old trick, the old tragedy.

Peter returns, rich and unsuspecting, and Philip, torn by ambition, love, and duty to his friend and his father's memory, thinks to make things as right as possible by parting with Kate, and both are to remain unmarried. It is a heart-rending scene when they separate:

> His heart bled, his heart cried, but he uttered no sound. They were side by side. She let his hands slip from the tips of her fingers, and drew silently away. At three paces apart she paused, but he gave no sign. She climbed the low brow of the hill slowly, very slowly, trying to command her throat, which was fluttering, and looking back through her tears as she went. Philip heard the shingle slip under her feet while she toiled up the cliff, and when she reached the top the soft thud on the turf seemed to beat on his heart. She stood there a moment against the sky, waiting for a sound from the shore, a cry, a word, the lifting of a hand, a sob, a sigh, her own name "Kate," and she was ready to fly back even then, wounded and humiliated as she was, a poor torn bird that had been struggling in the lime. But no; he was silent and motionless, and she disappeared behind the hill. He saw her go, and all the light of heaven went with her.

Kate still has pride enough left not to force Philip to marry her by telling him what might well happen. She marries Peter, expecting every hour that Philip will come to claim her for himself. Peter, who retains the fullest confidence in them both, takes her to his home, where her failures as a housewife are conspicuous. But

> Pete held up his hands in admiration at all her failures. She had thought it would be easy to be a good wife to a good husband. It was hard — hard for any one, hardest for her. There are the ruins of a happy woman in the bosom of every over-indulged wife.

The tragedy deepens. Kate at last tells Philip that the child which has come is his, and she flees to him. The brave, heroic Peter tries to shield her from blame by pretending that he has sent her to England on a visit, by writing letters to himself from her, and the like. Kate tells Philip that he must announce her death to Pete, and he does.

> When a man who is not a criminal is given over to a deep duplicity of life he will clutch at any lie, wearing the mask of truth, which seems to shield him from shame and pain. He may be a wise man in every other relation, a shrewd man, a far-seeing and even a cunning man, but in this relation — that of his own honor, his own fame, his own safety — he is certain to be a blunderer, a bungler, and a fool. Such is the revenge of nature, such is God's own vengeance!

The last fifth of The Manxman is occupied in developing with extreme detail and, as we have intimated, to the exhaustion of the reader, this Æschylean motif. Philip attains the height of his ambition, while the friend of his heart has been foully deceived by him and Kate has left him in self-sacrificing devotion. The close of the novel is intensely dramatic; would that one could say it is as true to the probabilities of life and character as is Mr. Hall Caine's vivid exposition of Manx men and women of the ordinary sort; their customs and manners, their dialect, their thoughts and cares, their logic and their religion are set before us in all the naturalness of life. The Manxman is a great novel, with all its faults, and Mr. Hall Caine's place among the first novelists of our time is confirmed by it.

* * *

— John Veitch, the Scotch philosopher and literary critic, died at Peebles, September 3. Born at Peebles, Scotland, October 24, 1829, his first production, in 1850, was a translation of Descartes' Discourse on Methods, and three years later he made selections from the same author's Principles of Philosophy. In 1855 Mr. Veitch was appointed to the professorship of logic, metaphysics, and rhetoric in the University of St. Andrews. He was honorary joint editor with Professor Mansel of Oxford of the Lectures on Metaphysics and Logic of Sir W. Hamilton, Bart., published in 1859–60. In 1864 Professor Veitch was made professor of logic and rhetoric in the University of Glasgow. In 1869 he published a Memoir of Sir W. Hamilton.

FICTION.

Music Hath Charms.

There is some cleverness in this study of a thoroughly selfish man and woman, and both Victoria and Dawnay are well drawn. Victoria is a girl of great beauty, with a wonderful voice, accustomed to receive the devotion of men and women — a devotion which she never returns. She is an egotist, but a captivating one. Dawnay is her intellectual equal, and refuses to become her slave. The interest of the story centers in the play of forces between the two natures. Dawnay succumbs to Victoria's music, but refuses to bend his mind to hers. She subdues his emotional nature, but his reason revolts. There is considerable subtlety in their relationship, and masculine and feminine selfishness are admirably exhibited in the hero and heroine. The conversations are epigrammatic, if not always natural, but the last chapter is morbid, sensational, and unworthy of the rest of the book. V. Munroe-Ferguson, the author of Betsy, is responsible for the story, and the scene is laid on English soil. — Harper & Brothers. $1.00.

David's Loom.

We have an impression that Mr. John Trafford Clegg, who has written various poems and novels — some of them under the pseudonymn of "Th' Owd Weighver" — is a Lancashire artisan, and that his volumes have no small popularity in his native country. One is not justified in expecting thoroughly artistic work from a writer who has probably had many obstacles to overcome of an unusual nature. But the first few pages of this story, told by Lawrence Holt, a cripple whose musical and literary abilities have profited by his bodily misfortune, are so good that one is disappointed to find such a falling off at once in skill when he introduces Mr. Holt, his father, and in the unnaturally bookish dialect in which Lawrence and his sister Ellen talk. This dialect is at first amusing, but soon becomes very tiresome. David Grindrod and his son Stephen, on the other hand, talk their native Lancashire and act in a very human manner. David's first loom is destroyed by his fellow workmen, the scene being the ignorant Rochdale of the early nineteenth century. He completes it again, but to the profit of others. Stephen is killed in a duel, and David takes bloody revenge on the murderer. Despite its somber plot and the artificiality of much of the conversation, the story has value as a picture of life and thought among the weavers of Lancashire in the days when they fought blindly against the advent of labor saving machinery. — Longmans, Green & Co. $1.00.

George Mandeville's Husband.

"George Mandeville" is a woman who writes novels of woman's influence under a man's name. Her husband is an unfortunate artist who is forced by his overbearing wife to give up his career for the benefit of hers. There is a great deal that is amusing in the description of George Mandeville's Sunday receptions, where every one who comes has done something for "the cause of woman." George Mandeville herself is a little overdone, but is still a clever caricature of the literary woman of the day, with her articles on "Man's Inhumanity" and "Woman the Saviour." "C. E. Raimond" has done very well with the subject of "the cry of the husbands," as we may call the object of the book, but had the author been a little more guarded against over-exaggeration the novel would have had more force. — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Mrs. Limber's Raffle.

Messrs. Appleton & Co. republish under the author's name the story of Mrs. Limber's Raffle, which, published anonymously twenty years ago, obtained a large circulation. Mr. William Allen Butler prefaces the republication of his story with a brief account of his reasons for writing it at a time when lotteries and raffles were far more common than at present. The account of Mrs. Limber's raffle is rather didactic according to the standard of the present day, but it is still interesting. Mr. Butler's character sketches are excellent, and Mrs. Limber and the Limber children, the rector of St. Parvus and his wife, are all very true to life. Although the moral of the story is less important to us than to the readers of twenty years ago, the book is no less amusing and quite well repays the time spent in reading it. — D. Appleton & Co. 75c.

A Cumberer of the Ground.

Miss Constance Smith has written an interesting novel — one of considerable strength as novels go, and one that will not be forgotten immediately after reading. It is the record of a life whose destiny it was — to quote from the motto on the title-page — "to finish nothing; to leave the feast on the table and all the edges of life ragged." Yet he was a brave, self-contained soul, tender to the weak, stern with himself, faithful to the highest needs of the one woman he loved. He was not what critics sometimes call "a woman's hero," but a man like unto others — impatient and faulty, but capable of rising to nobleness. His colonel's wife called him "a trifle morbid and very bad tempered," but he was no Rochester. The plot is simple and the characters few. — Harper & Brothers. 60c.

A Change of Air.

"Anthony Hope," author of The Prisoner of Zenda, is certified by the American publishers' preface to his latest book to be Mr. Anthony Hope Hawkins of London, "a lawyer, as other good romancers have been before him. . . . His profession and politics are his chief concern, and literature a diversion in his leisure hours." He certainly makes it a diversion for his readers. A Change of Air is a clever bit of philosophic comedy, having, nevertheless, a decidedly tragic element. The young poet who is its most conspicuous figure is deftly made over from a reckless, revolutionary radical into an orderly member of society, appreciative of charms that long experience has tested and conserved. The plot concerns itself chiefly with his love story, and incidentally with two others. Some of the situations are piquant and original. The author's skill is so largely dramatic that his characters, whether major or minor, speak for themselves with vivacity. Dale Bannister's change of attitude is speedy and inconsistent, yet it is made to seem quite probable. He is not a hero, and to the dispassionate reader he does not seem sufficiently distressed by the madness to which his defection pushed a disciple who had accepted his early doctrines with a thoroughness greater than his own. But his friends love him, and his wife will never know that we admire her more than himself. The portrait of Mr. Hawkins contained in this volume is grave and refined, as befits a genial satirist who would explore Bohemia, Philistia, and Arcadia. — Henry Holt & Co. 75c.

A story in which love and highway robbery are chief elements is not likely to be dull, even if the narrator were less expert than M. G. McClelland. In The Old Post-Road we have a little sketch of Maryland life in stagecoach days. Of the two principal figures one is a spirited girl, the other a man of turbulent nature who, although a gentleman by birth, belongs to a band of highwaymen. This fact is revealed to the very eyes of his betrothed through a companion's malice. Lest she should be summoned into court as a witness, she vanishes from sight until after the trial of her lover, and presently enters a convent. The priest who receives her confession informs the acquitted man of the course to which he owes his life. In deep contrition he renounces his evil ways, and upon inheriting a great estate gives it to the convent in which the woman he loves is praying for him. — The Merriam Co.

The "Duchess" has issued a new chromo romance. This time the title is Peter's Wife. The persons figuring in it bear some resemblance to those of actual life; their pert and nearly constant badinage has a tincture of wit as well as of innuendo; their emotions, whether frivolous or lurid, are somewhat intelligible; their morality is not to be wholly despised, since it conquers their worst temptations. But in the gradual evolution of our race how much longer will these travesties of true literature content a multitude of readers? — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

MINOR NOTICES.

Sweet Alyssum.

Considering these poems as a whole there is little to attract or to hold the reader, and yet they show a womanly heart and high purpose. The thoughts deserve a more poetic setting, but frequently the sense of rhythm and accent seems so lacking as to give a disappointing frame to a conception of real merit. Still there are many degrees of worth in these verses. The more serious poems are far the best, and from them all three or four may be taken that are really very good. Among these we should number "A Dissection," "The Angel of Gethsemane," "Through Leafless Boughs," and perhaps "Our Margaret," which commemorates the life of the New Orleans friend of children and helpless ones, whose statue stands in the center of the city. More easily quoted than any of the others is the quatrain on "Music," and this too happens to be no unfair example of the writer's merits, while the last line affords an example of a rather curious comparison:

Daughter of God or Belial's slave she stands
With fading fillet bound or crowned with stars;
And every soul, as Music soft commands,
Soars or descends, vaulting all earthly bars.

— C. W. Moulton. $1.00.

A Book of Song.

Under this title Mr. Julian Sturgis sends out some musical verses, many of which have appeared in Blackwood's Magazine. One of the lays begins:

Half Greek adown a Highland glen,
And singing to the open sky,
I passed beyond the ways of men,
And found my vale in Arcady.

"Half Greek" is an epithet that very well characterizes the tone of Mr. Sturgis. Witness: "Agathon," "A Song for Galatea," and "A Song of Proserpine." Love songs preponderate, ranging in key from the rhapsody to the vers de société. For the most part they are brief, each presenting some ingenious little conceit in graceful guise. Occasionally the singer's song becomes a picture — for is not the correlation of the arts a real thing? Then we have a crisp sketch — this one, for example:

The breeze, that stayed to pipe and trill
In wires that climb the highway hill,
The fleeting breeze flies fair and free
To frolic with the ships at sea,
And sunstruck like a mirror bright
The chalk cliffs leap to sudden light.

Or we see "Thisbe" who Lives in the smoky city,

Low down by the railway line;
But she asks for no man's pity,
Nor cares for verse of mine.

The fine tribute headed "To the Lady Portia These" is unfortunately marred by the recurrent rhyme of Portia with gay, pay, and the like. But usually Mr. Sturgis is clever in his technique, and sometimes he strikes deep and mellow chords, as in the "Boy's Song of Hope," "After Rain," and "A Song of Earth." The little book is attractively printed on heavy paper. — Longmans, Green & Co. $1.75.

Books and Plays.

Mr. Allan Monkhouse is not a critic of the first order, although he glibly discourses on "the shallow cynicism of Thackeray," "the schoolgirl crudities of Charlotte Brontë," "the dullness of Scott," "the sham passion of Dickens," and "the occasional flat passion of George Eliot." In this volume of reviews he devotes the first two papers to a justification of George Meredith, but we fancy that these criticisms will gain no new admirers for this great novelist. Indeed, Mr. Monkhouse has many of Mr. Meredith's worst faults of style and none of his brilliancy. In speaking of Mr. Meredith's poems the critic says: "The tendency of a difficult writer is to become more difficult. As he has never tempered his expression to the capacity of his readers he becomes with practice more accomplished in a concentration of allusion that satisfies himself." Simplicity seems as far from the style of this enthusiast for Meredith as from that of his accomplished master. That Mr. Meredith is great in spite of his faults, not because of them, few of his critics acknowledge.

"George Borrow," "Turgenieff," "Ibsen's Social Plays," "Three Plays by Mr. Stevenson and Mr. Henley," and "The Politics of Dramatic Art" are the five other chapters in this small volume. Three of these essays have been published in the Manchester Quarterly, and this is a limited edition of four hundred copies of the book itself. Perhaps the last essay is the most original and suggestive. The idea of a "municipal theater," run as a philanthropic or artistic experiment—"a magnificent hobby which would be a good variation from the art galleries, technical schools, and public parks"—is most admirable. A school of farce that will ridicule "what is ephemeral and eccentric in the manners of the day," a school of tragedy which "shall substitute for the mechanism of melodrama and the sentimentalities of domestic drama the labors and crises of the soul," might savor a little too much of the pulpit, but it is nevertheless an experiment worth trying. Some man of great wealth might earn a high reputation by a munificent endowment of such a theater, to be withdrawn in case of its failure to succeed.—London: Elkin Mathews. $1.50.

Fiske's History of the United States.

In our last issue we gave a description, in advance of publication, of this notable schoolbook. Without repeating what was then said we may observe here that the publishers' claims for the volume are fully borne out, both in the literary excellence of the contents and in the mechanical beauty of the book as consisting of so much paper, illustration, and binding. It is a happy day for the schoolboys when a man like Dr. Fiske writes, and a firm with the resources of the Riverside Press publishes, a history of our country for their use. One criticism we think more than one teacher will make, as the result of use of the book by immature minds, is that these will get an exaggerated notion of the author's own importance, both as a historian and as a personality, compared with the persons he treats. Dr. Fiske's own books are so repeatedly named, both by himself and by Mr. F. A. Hill, in the front rank, that a boy might well be excused for thinking that Dr. Fiske leads the line of American historians. This impression would be deepened by the formidable array of Dr. Fiske's titles and memberships in learned societies given on the title page, and by his naïve but quite superfluous addition to the note about the famous Longfellow house, that "my own house . . . stands upon the same estate." In a word, there is too much of Dr. Fiske, in the foreground or the background, for a good schoolbook, and a little revision in the direction of self-effacement would be in good taste. One of the things to be avoided when a noted man of letters writes a schoolbook is the obtrusion of the personal element. On this score one might properly object to the numerous adjectives applied to "my dear friend," Rev. W. G. Eliot, on p. 370. These blemishes are small. They are not such as smaller men are guilty of, and consequently there is the more need of pointing them out.—Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.

A History of Germany in the Middle Ages.

Mr. Ernest F. Henderson, who has edited a volume of Select Historical Documents of the Middle Ages, is a very industrious student of the sources of German history, and thoroughly acquainted, it would seem, with the immense mass of matter the Germans themselves have written about it. He naturally believes that Englishmen and Americans should know more of it. But his statement that Mr. Bryce's "essay," as he calls it, The Holy Roman Empire, "is, as it was meant to be, the merest fleeting sketch," strikes the reader oddly, if he merely compares the bulk of these two books—not so very inferior in Mr. Bryce's case. In the higher qualities of the historian The Holy Roman Empire is very far superior to Mr. Henderson's volume. This does, indeed, give many details not to be found there, and these are enough to make the work welcome, especially as it is founded on such careful study of all the documents. But Mr. Henderson shows no gifts beyond the ordinary for historical narration, and his chief title to honor would appear to be that of a reliable compiler in a field little trodden by English or American students. There are other American writers whose studies in German history, though less exhaustive, have been more worthy of comparison with Mr. Bryce's notable book.—Macmillan & Co. $2.60.

Oriental Studies.

The Oriental Club of Philadelphia proves a worthy title to existence in this neat volume, containing thirteen essays selected from those read in the first five years of its existence, 1888–1894, with detailed information concerning the club itself. The book is a "modest contribution to Oriental philology and archæology," which will please the scholar by the sobriety and thoroughness of its discussions; while others who have an intelligent general interest in these two topics will not find the treatment formidable, but will gain much light on the special points taken up. The exceptions are the two papers on "The Aryan Name of the Tongue" and "The Change from Surd to Sonant in Japanese Compounds," which only philologists will be likely to read. On the other hand, Mr. Stewart Culin's "Literature of Chinese Laborers," Professor Barton's "Native Israelitish Deities," Professor Jastrow's "A Legal Document of Babylonia," Professor Hopkins' "Holy Numbers of the Rig-Veda," Mrs. Stevenson's "The Feather and the Wing in Early Mythology," and Professor Haupt's "Book of Ecclesiastes" are at once readable and instructive. Mrs. Stevenson concludes her study of the widespread symbolism of the feather and the wing with the lesson "that one should be cautious in drawing conclusions as to ethnic affinities, or even contact and influence, from any similarity in the methods used by various races to express ideas that seem more or less common to mankind." This is a caution which those who hastily derive Christianity from Buddhism, because of the many resemblances of the two religions, need to keep in mind.—Ginn & Co.

The Vedânta Philosophy.

Prof. F. Max Müller's three lectures on the philosophy of the Upanishads are, like all his other writings, very agreeable reading. They were delivered to the usual mixed audience at the Royal Institution last March, and are "popular" in the good sense of the term. They present a lucid outline, from a sympathetic point of view, of a scheme of thought which has many points of contact with the pantheism of Spinoza and later thinkers. Readers of Emerson, in particular, would do well to gain a clear and connected idea of this system, at once so profound and so poetical. All students know that Max Müller is to be followed with caution, but on the main lines of his exposition here he is in harmony with other scholars, and it would be difficult to find another guide equally skillful in the presentation of matters so difficult as the origin of the Vedânta philosophy, its doctrine of the Soul and of God, and its similarities and differences by the side of European philosophies. Whatever qualifications in detail the specialist may think it necessary to make in this friendly exposition, he would probably agree with the lecturer that "the quintessence of the Vedânta philosophy has been well formulated in one short line—'Brahman is true; the world is false; man's soul is Brahman and nothing else.' And then he adds, 'There is nothing worth gaining, enjoying, or knowing but Brahman alone, for he who knows Brahman is Brahman.'" The New Testament passages expressive of the same fundamental idea we do not need to give here.—Longmans, Green & Co. $1.75.

Christianity and Evolution.

Rev. James Iverach is professor of apologetics and exegesis in the Free Church College of Aberdeen. His book is another exposition of the readjustment between science and religion. It has always been the case that wherever the presence of absolute law has been discovered many have rashly concluded that therefore the absence of God is proved at the same time. The day, however, seems to have passed when theologians, even those who still seem to separate their thought about the nature and life of Jesus Christ by a sharp dividing line from their thought on all other subjects, shrink from belief in evolution considered as a method by which God works. Professor Iverach states the issue to be, not between evolution and special creation, but between evolution under the guidance of intelligence and purpose and evolution as a fortuitous result. Granting that evolution is "the highest scientific generalization to which the mind has yet attained, and that in it we have a law of the widest working," he yet believes that the claims of this philosophy have been stretched beyond all warrant, especially as it has been taken into the spheres of ethics and religion. In successive chapters he takes up the theory in all departments of science, examining its weak places and illustrating, as by the Spencer-Weismann controversy, the disagreements between its prominent advocates. He disputes the theory only where it claims to be all-sufficient, and he asserts that so far as it is definitely established it has no quarrel either with belief in the existence of God (an assertion in which most evolutionists would agree as we understand them) or even with supernatural revelation. He considers revelation itself as "slow, evolutionary, progressive, always related to the natural," and he adds to this statement the belief that it was complete in Christ and that then redemption in essence was realized.—Thomas Whittaker. 75c.

The General Catalogue of Bowdoin College, which has been prepared by the librarian of the institution, Mr. George T. Little, at the joint request of the boards of trustees and overseers, is an octavo of two hundred and sixteen pages, neatly printed, and, we need not to say to any who know Mr. Little, intelligently and accurately compiled. It contains (1) a historical sketch of the college and its medical school, about one hundred pages long, indexed and illustrated; (2) a catalogue of officers and faculty and of alumni since the founding of the college; (3) a list of non-graduate students by classes; (4) an index of names. The pictures of the buildings lend attractiveness to the book. It is a pity that portraits of the distinguished presidents of Bowdoin could not have been included. The binding in white and green is in excellent taste; the whole work is well done, and it is well that it has been done. We congratulate the young and energetic president, Dr. Hyde, upon the vigor and prosperity of Bowdoin. The price of this catalogue, one dollar, is very low.

To the numerous studies of the Acts of the Apostles Rev. Henry C. Vedder has added another. The chapters were published serially in the Baptist Union of Chicago, and were taken as a course of study by the five thousand young people connected with the Baptist Young People's Union of America. In the preface the author enumerates the distinctive principles of the Baptist denomination and states the object of his book to be that of showing the grounds for this belief by a "careful and candid study of apostolic times in the full light of the latest Biblical and historical scholarship." There are many references to supplementary reading at the end of each chapter. — American Baptist Publication Society. 90c.

The world moves on so rapidly that it seems late for a book on the Chicago Exposition of 1893; but the little book on that subject by Hildegarde Hawthorne, pleasantly entitled The Fairest of the Fair, justifies itself by its general typographical daintiness, its pretty woodcuts, and its bright and sparkling manner. As a reminiscence we give a guess that it will attract the eye of many who visited the Fair, that it will at once engage their attention to its inviting pages, and that not a few of them will read it through from beginning to end and live over again their delights in the White City, now, alas! a faded vision of the past. It is written with singular vividness and graphic fidelity. — Philadelphia: Henry Altemus.

The papers which Mr. Edwin Reed published in the Arena some time since have now reached their fifth edition in book form. They are entitled A Brief for the Plaintiff, Bacon vs. Shakspeare, and present the fallacious arguments in support of the Baconian theory so succinctly and ingeniously that the book interests even when it may not convince. A few pages of comments on it are included at the end. President D. C. Gilman, for instance, would label the book "extra hazardous" and put it out of the reach of the unsophisticated, while others seem to agree with Octave Thanet, who writes, "Almost thou persuadest me to become a Baconian." The book is handsomely bound in white leather. — De Vinne Press. $1.50.

The Money of the Bible, written by George C. Williamson and published as one of the By-paths of Bible Knowledge series, is a convenient handbook containing much interesting information. It is a compilation from standard works on Biblical numismatics, or Jewish coins, and summarizes for popular use information that has hitherto been accessible only to those acquainted with rare books, frequently in foreign languages and more or less technical in expression. It is illustrated by numerous woodcuts and facsimile representations. — Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.00.

PERIODICALS.

The leading article in the September Harper's illustrates the subject of "Riding to Hounds in England," a sport which has its picturesque and historic interest, but one which we hope will never become nationalized in America. The pictures to this article are numerous and spirited, and will delight lovers of horses and dogs. In another illustrated article Mr. T. Mitchell Prudden furnishes "Some Records of the Ice Age About New York," showing how the ancient glaciers have ground and polished the rocks in the Central Park and on the Hudson's banks. Alfred Parsons pleasantly sketches with pen and pencil the fascinations, floral and otherwise, of "Early Summer in Japan." Julian Ralph's studies of life and character among the mountains of Virginia, under the apt but not very distinct title of "Where Time Has Slumbered," are entertaining. Bryant and his "Thanatopsis" are the subject of a short paper by John W. Chadwick. Mr. Warner, Mr. Mathews, Mr. W. E. Norris, and Mary E. Wilkins supply the fiction. Mr. Du Maurier's masterly "Trilby" is the editor's first topic in his Study.

"Philip and His Wife" are evidently approaching a final separation in the Atlantic for September. Whether Mrs. Deland will let them go their opposite ways is a question. Mrs. Catherwood and Miss Kate Chopin furnish two interesting stories, "The Kidnapped Bride" and "Tante Cat'rinette." Miss Grace H. Peirce's "For Their Brethren's Sake" is a touching tale of love and devotion during the plague in 1665. Mr. Josiah Flynt pictures "Old Boston Mary," a noted vagrant. A Swiss mountaineering paper, by C. S. Davison, "Up Chevedale and Down Again;" "In a Washington Hop Field," by Louise H. Wall; "An Enterprising Scholar," by Misses Preston and Dodge; "Rus in Urbe," prose and verse, by Miss Edith M. Thomas; "The Religion of Gotama Buddha," by William Davies; "A Reading in the Letters of John Keats," by Leon H. Vincent; and a first paper of "Reports of the Plato Club," by Herbert A. Aikins, make out a varied number, with "A Morning at the Old Sugar Mill," by Bradford Torrey.

In Scribner's Magazine for September Mr. F. Marion Crawford writes of Bar Harbor from the point of view of one who has seen most of the summer resorts of the world and has spent considerable time at Bar Harbor viewing it as an outsider. Thomas Nelson Page begins a two-part war story called "Little Darby," in which he again shows his power of sympathetically depicting Virginia character and scenery. Mrs. James T. Fields has a chapter of entertaining literary reminiscences, suggested by books in the library of Mr. Fields. It has portraits of Milton, Johnson, and Thackeray. Dr. Carl Lumholtz has another paper on the Tarahumari of Mexico, the American Cave-Dwellers, among whom he has spent several years. The old-fashioned quilts and coverlets of our grandmothers are described by Mrs. Fanny D. Bergen, under the title "The Tapestry of the New World." Octave Thanet concludes her sketches of American types with some descriptions of "The People of the Cities." The fiction includes "Electrician-in-Charge," a short story with a new and original situation, the action taking place in a lonely cable house at a South American station. There is also a real sailor's yarn, told in the dialect of an old salt who took part in the battle of the Alabama and Kearsarge, by Gaston Fay, entitled "The Folly of Mocking at the Moon." The serial, "John March, Southerner," describes a marriage in Dixie. Philip Gilbert Hamerton writes of Checa, a Spanish artist whose striking picture, "An Unlucky Meeting," is the frontispiece of the number. There are poems by Harriet Prescott Spofford, Inigo Deane, and others.

The Forum for September opens with Hon. T. M. Cooley's able address on "The Lessons of Recent Civil Disorders," in which he shows the limits of arbitration. Prof. F. G. Peabody finds little to lament in the decrease in "The Proportion of College-Trained Preachers." Mr. Edward Atkinson briefly considers "Present Industrial Problems in the Light of History." Rev. Dr. J. H. Barrows shows some of the cheering "Results of the Parliament of Religions." Mr. Frederic Harrison finds that "Macaulay's Place in Literature" is that of "a magnificent literary artist," not that of a great historian. Mr. J. H. Gore has a short paper on "The Profit-Sharing Labor Unions of Antwerp," and Mr. J. A. Riis another on "How to Bring Work and Workers Together." "Teaching by Travel," "The Pay of Physicians and Surgeons," "Child-Marriage and Widows in India," and "University Training and Citizenship" are the other topics of the number.

The general impression made by Volume II of the Yellow Book (ordinary folk would call it No. II) for July is of extreme affectation on the part of most of its artists and callow crudity on the part of many of its writers. Mr. Henry James is not crude, of course, but his story, "The Coxon Fund," is not in his best vein, and one would say that he could learn something from the restraint of the fine portrait of him by John S. Sargent. Mr. Walter Crane's "Renaissance of Venus" is about the next best thing in the art of the volume, while Miss Ella D'Arcy's story of "Poor Cousin Louis" has more strength and promise than any other contribution. The juvenility of the greater part of the work in art or in letters, here given to a world evidently expected to be astonished, is almost incredible. — Copeland & Day. $1.50.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— The beloved Autocrat of the Breakfast Table passed the eighty-fifth milestone in his long life's journey on August 29. He has become the undoubted autocrat of American literature today, and the news of his health and happiness fills multitudes of hearts with pleasure. The Boston Advertiser reports that he takes a "constitutional" of a mile every morning and a drive every afternoon. Dr. Holmes says:

> The burden of years sits lightly upon me as compared with the weight it seems to many less advanced in age than myself. But after threescore years and twenty the encroachments of time make themselves felt with rapidly increasing progress. When one can no longer hear the lark, when he can no longer recognize the faces he passes in the street, when he has to watch his steps, when it becomes more and more difficult for him to recall names, he is reminded at every movement that he must spare himself, or nature will not spare him the penalties she exacts for overtaxing his declining powers. The twelfth septennial period has always seemed to me as one of the natural boundaries of life. One who has lived to complete his eighty-fifth year has had his full share, even of an old man's allowance. Whatever is granted is a prodigal indulgence on the part of nature.
>
> I am often asked whether I am writing my autobiography, to which my answer is: I am in the habit of dictating many of my recollections, some of my thoughts and opinions, to my secretary, who has in this way accumulated a considerable mass of notes. Many of these will be interesting to my family and intimates, some of them, perhaps, to a wider public if I should see fit to make use of them or leave them to be made use of by others. It is the one thing a person long past the active period of life can do with ease and pleasure; and, in the midst of much that might as well, perhaps, perish with the writer, will, not improbably, be found memoranda deserving of permanent record.

— Messrs. Methuen have undertaken the publication of a new edition of Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. The book will be edited by Mr. J. B. Bury, fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, who will provide introductions, notes, and appendixes such as may be necessary to bring Gibbon's work up to the standard of recent research.

— His Majesty the Czar of Russia has written a volume of Recollections of the Crimea. M. Paul Ollendorff, the publisher in Paris, has been bringing out lately a French translation of the work under the title Souvenirs de Sébastopol, recueillis et rédigés par S. M. I. Alexandre III, Empéreur de Russie. An English edition of the handsome volumes recently published in Russia, containing the Czarewitch's account of his tour round the world, is in preparation.

— Miss Kingsley, a daughter of Charles Kingsley, has been lecturing in London. Her sister, Mrs. Harrison, who writes under the pseudonym of "Lucas Malet," is about to bring out a new novel. Her last romance, the Wages of Sin, was published four years ago.

— Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. will publish September 15: The Diary of Anna Green Winslow, a Boston School Girl of 1771, edited, with a preface and many notes, by Alice Morse Earle; Poems, New and Old, by William Roscoe Thayer; and English and Scottish Popular Ballads, edited by Prof. Francis J. Child of Harvard University, édition de luxe, limited to one thousand copies, Part IX.

— We are glad to hear that the collection of such of Mr. Pater's scattered writings as are suitable for permanent preservation, which we expressed a hope of seeing two weeks ago, is to be made. The work is one which, in the case of a man who so consistently refused to publish anything but his very best, will require most delicate discrimination, and we are glad that it has been undertaken by so competent a friend as Mr. Shadwell of Oriel. We are not so certain that a good result will follow the compilation of a memoir, which is also contemplated, from contributions by a number of friends. Experience shows that this method tends to a looseness of arrangement and proportion which would be peculiarly unsuitable to a memento of one whose whole life was a protest against these common faults of the time. — Literary World, London.

— Eugene Lawrence died in New York on August 17. He was born in 1823, and graduated from the College of the City of New York in 1841. Although he was also a graduate of the Harvard Law School and practiced law with success in Boston and New York, he soon abandoned that profession for the more congenial pursuit of letters; and for three years he was professor of history at Columbia College. Until his death he was a liberal contributor to the literature of the day. The more noteworthy of his publications are: Historical Studies; Lives of Hume, Gibbon, and Cowper; Smaller History of Rome; The Jews and Their Persecutors; The Mystery of Columbus; and Columbus and His Contemporaries. Mr. Lawrence was intimately associated with the house of Harper & Brothers as a writer of books and a contributor to their periodicals. His Harper's Primers must be added to the list of his most popular works.

— Fritz Reuter's widow, who has just died, has bequeathed to the German "Schiller-Verein" their beautiful villa on the Reuterweg, lying at the foot of the Wartburg Hill just outside of Eisenach. The house itself is, as Hermann Grimm called it, "the true picture of a genuine Roman villa." In 1851 Fritz Reuter and Luise Kunze were married. He was a poverty stricken school-teacher and she was a penniless governess. But not long after came the glorious days of the Stromtid and the Franzosentid. Though they had no children their married life was a wonderfully ideal one, and in his Urgeschicht' von Meckelnborg Reuter immortalized it and his Luise. Long ago he wrote this epitaph for her,

Sie hat im Leben Liebe gesäet,
Sie soll im Tode Liebe ernten.

— Mr. Austin Dobson will publish, through Messrs. Chatto & Windus, early in the autumn, a second series of Eighteenth-Century Vignettes, and he has also edited for Macmillan & Co. a volume of Old English Songs, which will be illustrated by Mr. Hugh Thomson.

— The novel which Mr. Stevenson has just finished (St. Ives) relates the adventures of a French naval officer who was for a time a captive in a Scotch prison. The Lord Justice-Clerk is almost finished. The story deals with Scotch life in the latter half of the eighteenth century. Both of these books will be published in three-volume form. It is understood that The Ebb Tide is the last of the novels in which Mr. Stevenson will have his stepson, Mr. Lloyd Osbourne, as a collaborator. The latter gentleman is writing a story similar to The Wreckers.

— Mr. F. Marion Crawford's brilliant series of stories of aristocratic life in modern Rome — Saracinesca, Sant' Ilario, and Don Orsino — has been translated into German under the collective title of Eine Römische Fürsten Familie ("A Family of Roman Princes"). The first two parts have already appeared and the third will soon be issued. The work is received with great favor by the German press, though the literary critic of the Vossische Zeitung thinks that its wealth of description and illustration mars its artistic effect. He acknowledges, however, that the characters and their destinies are developed with rare congruity and skill, and congratulates his readers on the pleasure which is in store for them. "Few modern writers of romance," he says, "combine such fertility of invention with so clear an insight into the heights and depths of human feeling and experience."

— Mr. Gladstone's translation into English verse of the Odes of Horace, including the Carmen Sæculare, will be published shortly, in a large crown octavo, by Mr. John Murray, the same firm which issued his first book, The State in its Relations with the Church, just fifty-six years ago. That book was so successful as to pass through four editions in the course of three years.

— Messrs. Dent & Co. of London, whose editions of Jane Austen, the Brontës, and Miss Edgeworth are well known, are about to publish the novels of Miss Ferrier in the same attractive style. They will be published in this country by Macmillan & Co.

— This story is attributed to Emerson: On being asked by a friend what he lectured for he replied, "F-a-m-e." "What do you mean by that?" inquired the other. "Fifty and my expenses."

— Mr. William Michael Rossetti, the brother of Dante Gabriel and Christina Rossetti, will shortly resign the post of Assistant Secretary to the Board of Inland Revenue, in which he has served the British Government for forty-seven years.

— M. Gounod's journal will be published soon. In the same volume will appear a selection from his correspondence, now in the hands of Mme. Gounod and her son.

— The Saturday Review has been sold by Mr. Beresford-Hope to L. H. Edmunds, a wealthy lawyer, who says that he will not change the policy of the paper. The Review is edited by Mr. Walter H. Pollock.

— Mr. Gladstone has promised to write the introductory chapter to a life of Sir Andrew Clark, for many years his physician and friend, and to whom he owes some of his wonderful latter-day strength.

— Mr. Ruskin's Harbors of England, with illustrations by Turner, which has been out of print since 1876, is about to be republished, with an introduction by Mr. Thomas Wise.

— Of Professor Drummond's The Greatest Thing in the World, 312,000 copies have been sold; of his Natural Law in the Spiritual World, 114,000; of his Tropical Africa, 28,000; and of his successful story, entitled Baxter's Second Innings, 25,000 copies. It ought to be added that fully half these sales have been unauthorized and have paid the author no royalty.

— The third volume of Canon Liddon's biography of Dr. Pusey, which has been prepared for the press by the Rev. J. O. Johnston, will be issued in the autumn by the Messrs. Longmans. The fourth and final volume will follow later.

— The University Court of Glasgow has appointed Prof. Henry Jones of St. Andrews to the chair of moral philosophy, vacant through Dr. Edward Caird's removal to Oxford, and Mr. Richard Lodge of Brasenose College to the newly founded chair of history.

— Daniel Vierge, whose clever illustrations of Pablo de Segovia are well known in this country, has just arranged with an American publishing firm to illustrate that masterpiece of fiction, Gil Blas.

— The first number of a new journal for workingmen, the object of which is to teach them to avoid the fallacies of socialism, is to be published shortly in England. Lady Colin Campbell will edit it, and amongst those who have promised contributions are Mr. W. H. Mallock and Mr. W. Earl Hodgson.

— Mr. Edwin Hodder, of the publishing firm of Hodder & Stoughton, has edited a life of John MacGregor, of the Rob-Roy canoe, which will be published in September.

— The death is announced of Mr. Cecil Roberts, author of Adrift in America, at the early age of thirty-four. His life, which was one of hardship and adventure, will be written of by his brother, Mr. Morley Roberts.

— Mrs. W. K. Clifford, the author of The Love Letters of a Worldly Woman and Aunt Anne, talks of making a visit to the United States next winter.

— Arrangements have just been completed for an English edition of the late Professor Dillmann's writings, Messrs. T. & T. Clark of Edinburgh having secured the right of translation. His Commentary on Genesis will probably be the first to appear.

— The Walt Whitman Fellowship, which has its headquarters in Philadelphia, has been extended by the formation of a branch fellowship in Boston. At a meeting held at the Adams House the following preliminary organization was effected: President, Mrs. L. N. Fairchild, Boston; secretary and treasurer, Laurens Maynard, East Weymouth; executive committee, Mrs. L. N. Fairchild, Sylvester Baxter, Rev. W. H. Johnson, Miss Charlotte Porter, Miss Helen A. Clarke, Edward Payson Jackson, Thomas H. Bartlett, Charles E. Pratt, Laurens Maynard. The executive committee was instructed to take steps to effect a permanent organization as soon as possible.

No. 4 of the Fellowship Papers lately issued is "Walt Whitman as Deliverer," by Francis Howard Williams.

— Miss Violet Hunt confirms the prevailing doctrine of heredity. Her father is not only a landscape artist of eminence, but a man of singular brain power in the line of literature. Mr. Hunt is singular, or all but singular, among his artistic confrères as the master of an excellent prose style, as readers of the Nineteenth Century well know. We believe, too, he is alone among British painters in having taken honors at Oxford and being a fellow of his college — a married fellow, of course, for his wife, Miss Hunt's mother, is Mrs. Alfred Hunt, the distinguished and very charming novelist. On her mother's side Miss Violet Hunt comes of a line of scholars and gentlemen in the North of England who have made their mark in the Church and in antiquarian literature. Elle chasse de race therefore, and it is not surprising that, though destined for the easel and palette, Miss Hunt should have turned early to literature. She interrupted the slow processes of education, artistic and literary — as clever and romantic young ladies will — with "copies of verse" which duly appeared in the magazines; but the young littérateur in this country soon learns that the judicious editor and publisher cares a good deal less for rhyme than for reason, and that the prose pen is mightier than the pen that only achieves odes and sonnets. There has latterly been a movement in periodical literature towards short pieces in dialogue, of which movement Miss Hunt took advantage. She had lived all her life in her parents' house in Kensington, among all sorts and conditions of clever men and women — the people whose trade and talk is not of Hurlingham, Sandown, and of Church Parade, but of ideas and the newer movements of thought, and all the current wit and humor of the day. Miss Hunt had, accordingly, lived within sound of much smart dialogue, and, being herself possessed of quick observation, and not poorly endowed with wit, the new literary method was exactly suited to her, and she quickly showed herself to be one of the smartest dialogue writers of the day. It is a way of telling a story which many of our younger writers have attempted, and in which very few have succeeded. That Miss Hunt's is among the most brilliant of the successes of the day no one who reads her Maiden's Progress will deny. — Literary World, London.

— A correspondent would like information concerning a poem in which a storm comes up and the king orders the ship to be run ashore. His daughter asks a sailor what is the best to do, and the sailor says run out to sea, but that the king has ordered otherwise. Thereupon the daughter says she could steer the ship, and forthwith heads it toward the open sea. The sailor exclaims, "I could sail to h—— with a girl like you!" and the daughter replies, "If you could sail to h——, why not to heaven?" He would be thankful for any clews as to the name or authorship of the poem containing this incident.

— Mr. Arthur Warren, the London correspondent of the Boston Herald, has completed A History of Some Famous English Printers, which will be published, says the Bookman, by the Grolier Club of New York. Mr. De Vinne will print the book, which will contain an abundance of old cuts, ornaments, and reproductions of exquisite title-pages.

— J. B. Lippincott Co. have arranged with M. Zola, it is reported, for the publication of Lourdes in the United States. The book is carefully protected by copyright.

— The English literary papers seem to find it difficult to understand the nature of the Lowell Lectures. The Academy, for example, says that "Mr. Stopford Brooke has been offered and has accepted the Lowell Lectureship at Boston this autumn. His subject will be 'Modern English Literature.'"

— Several volumes of memoirs and reminiscences are promised for publication during the autumn season. One of these, to be published by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co., will be the recollections of Mr. Rudolf Lehmann, the portrait painter. Mr. Lehmann was born seventy-five years ago, and has known a large number of the most celebrated artists and authors of the past half century, so that his reminiscences should be particularly interesting. Another work of this kind will be a life of Dean Buckland, the celebrated geologist and father of Frank Buckland, which is written by the dean's daughter, Mrs. Gordon. Another will be Dr. Samuel Smiles' long-promised Life of Josiah Wedgewood, and yet another will be a translation of Lady Blennerhassett's Life of Talleyrand by Frederick Clarke. — Publishers' Circular.

— Here is an agreeable story which Mark Twain is quoted as telling about himself: It gave him real pleasure, he said, to hear that his works were almost the only thing which Mr. Darwin read during the last year of his life, till he heard that Mr. Darwin suffered from a kind of mental atrophy and was forbidden to read anything but absolute drivel.

— G. P. Putnam's Sons add to their announcement for the summer season, as follows: Miss Hurd: An Enigma, by Anna Katharine Green; Found and Lost, by Mary Putnam Jacobi; The Life and Correspondence of Rufus King, comprising his letters, private and official, his public documents, and his speeches, edited by his grandson, Charles R. King, M.D., in five large octavo volumes; The Story of Venice, from the earliest times to the fall of the republic, by Alethea Wiel, in the Story of the Nations series; Cicero, and the Fall of the Roman Republic, by J. L. Strachan Davidson, M.A., the tenth issue of the Heroes of the Nations series; and The Flute Player, and Other Poems, by Francis Howard Williams, in which most of the poems will be published for the first time.

— In the large Acworth rose quartz bowlder, which has been the only monument above the grave of Ralph Waldo Emerson, in Sleepy Hollow Cemetery, since his death twelve years ago, the long anticipated memorial tablet has lately been inserted. It has two panels — the upper one adorned with five finely executed China aster rosettes, and the lower one bearing this inscription:

> "Ralph Waldo Emerson. Born in Boston, May 25, 1803. Died in Concord, April 27, 1882.
>
> The passive master lent his hand
> To the vast soul that o'er him planned."

The tablet is eighteen inches long and twelve wide, and has a border of rustic twigs. It was cast in New York, of the finest bronze, and the task of having it executed was in the hands of Judge Keyes, for the Emerson family, who are at present abroad. Great interest was felt in the placing of the plate, curiosity hunters eagerly clamoring for chips of the bowlder as souvenirs. The gate which opens into the narrow inclosure in which the grave stands was kept securely locked, so none of the chips were stolen.

— The humorous and interesting lecture which Mr. Frank Lockwood delivered at the Morley Hall, Hackney, last December, on The Law and Lawyers of Pickwick, has now been published from the Roxburghe Press as a daintily got-up small book, with a sketch of Sergeant Buzfuz for frontispiece. No Dickens lover will be content till he has added it to his library. Referring to Dickens' opportunities of acquiring information about lawyers Mr. Lockwood imparts a fact known to very few people, namely, that Dickens actually kept a term or two at one of the Inns of Court; then, finding the dinners disagree with him, he did what few have done — he got back from the Inns of Court some of the money he had deposited. "You are all familiar," said Mr. Lockwood, "with the process which is known as getting butter out of a dog's mouth; I venture to think that that is an easy thing compared with getting money back from an Inn of Court." — Literary World, London

—D. Appleton & Co.'s recent publications include Maxims of Washington, compiled for use in schools, libraries, and all American homes, a new edition; Mrs. Limber's Raffle; or, A Church Fair and its Victims, by William Allen Butler; Timar's Two Worlds, by Maurus Jokai; and A Victim of Good Luck, by W. E. Norris.

—Longmans, Green & Co. have lately issued David's Loom: a Story of Rochdale Life in the Early Years of the Nineteenth Century, by John Trafford Clegg (Th' Owd Weighver); A Book of Song, by Julian Sturgis; A Chapter of Church History from South Germany, being Passages from the Life of Johann Evangelist Georg Lutz, formerly Parish Priest and Dean in Oberroth, Bavaria, by L. W. Scholler, translated from the German by W. Wallis; and The Primitive Church and the See of Peter, by the Rev. Luke Rivington, M.A., Magdalen College, Oxford, with an introduction by the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster.

—Mr. William Morris announces that his Kelmscott Press edition of Chaucer, so long in preparation, is now likely to make an appearance by the middle of next year. He has also in the press a new romance, entitled The Wood Beyond the World, a new edition of his Life and Death of Jason, and a volume of poems by Mr. Theodore Watts.

—Barras' Memoirs, hitherto unpublished, are to swell the Napoleonic revival in France. They will make four volumes, and will be free from the suspicion of doctoring under which Talleyrand's Memoirs labor.

—The Hon. G. Curzon's new book, Problems of the Far East, will deal with the first part of Mr. Curzon's studies and travels in the far East, in Japan, Corea, and China, and will be an attempt to examine the political, social, and economic conditions of those countries and the part played by them in international relationships. The chapters devoted to Corea in particular, which is now attracting attention, will contain an account of the political status of that kingdom. Mr. Curzon's discussion of the similar problems affecting Tonquin, Anam, Cambodia, and Siam, i. e., the countries of the Indo-Chinese Peninsula, will be contained in a later volume.

—The Emperor William of Germany is delighted with Captain Mahan's Influence of Sea Power on History, and says of it: "I am just now, not reading, but devouring Captain Mahan's book, and am trying to learn it by heart. It is a first-class work and classical in all points. It is on board all my ships, and I find it constantly quoted by my captains and officers."

—The Grolier Club will hold an exhibition of American bookplates on October 4–20, and invokes the coöperation of collectors. Old and modern American bookplates, bookplate literature, contemporary portraits of owners and engravers of early plates will be shown, but foreign examples of particular value or interest will also be included. Intending exhibitors should send all communications to Mr. Charles Dexter Allen, who will have special charge, at his address, P. O. Box 925, Hartford, Conn. Mr. Allen's American Book-Plates: A Guide to their Study, with Examples, will be published this fall by Macmillan & Co. in this country, and in England by Bell & Sons, who will add it to their Ex Libris series. The work will contain reproductions of many rare and interesting plates, and also many impressions taken direct from old and recent coppers that have been loaned for the illustrating, and, finally, a numbered list of over nine hundred early American plates.

—Admirers of the novels and poems of Mr. George Meredith will be interested to learn that that author's only daughter was married at Mickleham recently to Mr. H. P. Sturgis of Givon's Grove, Leatherhead, and will join in wishing her a happy married life.

—The latest of Utopias is described by Mr. Henry Lazarus in a volume entitled The Revolution of the Twentieth Century, shortly to be published by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin. The book contains the details of a brand new constitution, as well as an indictment of the old. The evolution of the Salvationists into a grande armée forms a prominent feature in the scheme.

—The Bishop of Peterborough has sent to the press his Hulsean Lectures for 1894. They are to be published by Messrs. Longmans.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the Literary World are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biography.

Memoirs Illustrating the History of Napoleon I from 1802–1815. By Baron Claude-François de Méneval. Vols. II and III. D. Appleton & Co. Each, $2.00

The Life and Correspondence of Rufus King. Edited by his grandson, Charles R. King, M.D. Vol. I. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $5.00

Books for Young People.

Not for Profit. By Fannie E. Newberry. A. I. Bradley & Co. $1.25

Jinny and His Partners. By James Otis. A. I. Bradley & Co. $1.00

Seven Little Australians. By Ethel S. Turner. Ward, Lock & Bowden. $1.00

Tan-Pile Jim; or, A Yankee Waif Among the Bluenoses. By B. Freeman Ashley. Illustrated. Laird & Lee.

Educational.

A History of the United States. For Schools. By John Fiske, Litt. D., LL.D. With Topical Analysis, etc., by Frank A. Hill, Litt. D. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

Geometry for Grammar Schools. By E. Hunt, LL.D. D. C. Heath & Co.

Maynard's French Texts, No. I. La Belle au Bois Dormant; Le Chat Botté. Maynard, Merrill & Co. 20c.

Maynard's German Texts, No. I. Ulysses und der Kyklop. Maynard, Merrill & Co. 25c.

Micah Clarke. By A. Conan Doyle. School Edition. Longmans, Green & Co.

Essays and Sketches.

Walt Whitman as Deliverer. By Francis Howard Williams.

Fiction.

Mad Sir Uchtred of the Hills. By S. R. Crockett. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

The Search for Andrew Field. A Story of 1812. By Everett T. Tomlinson. Lee & Shepard. $1.50

Two Bad Brown Eyes. By Marie St. Felix. The Merriam Co. 50c.

Waverley Novels. Dryburgh Edition. Vol. XXIII. Anne of Geierstein. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

Marsena, and Other Stories of the Wartime. By Harold Frederic. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00

Lord Ormont and His Aminta. By George Meredith. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

The Fur-Seal's Tooth. A Story of Alaskan Adventure. By Kirk Munroe. Harper & Brothers. $1.25

Eyes Like the Sea. A Novel. By Maurus Jokai. Translated by R. Nisbet Bain. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

Found and Lost. By Mary Putnam-Jacobi. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

Only an Irish Boy. By Horatio Alger, Jr. Illustrated. Porter & Coates. $1.25

A Scarlet Poppy, and Other Stories. By Harriet Prescott Spofford. Harper & Brothers. $1.25

The Water Ghost and Others. By John Kendrick Bangs. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $1.25

The Silver Christ and the Lemon Tree. By Ouida. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

Timar's Two Worlds. By Maurus Jokai. Translated by Mrs. H. Kennard. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Mrs. Limber's Raffle; or, A Church Fair and Its Victims. By William Allen Butler. D. Appleton & Co. 75c.

Thy Name is Woman. By Olive B. Muir. G. W. Dillingham. 50c.

George Mandeville's Husband. By C. E. Raimond. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

A Change of Air. By Anthony Hope. Henry Holt & Co. 75c.

The Red Sultan. By J. Maclaren Cobban. Rand, McNally & Co. 75c.

The Old Post Road. By M. G. McClelland. The Merriam Co.

The Unbidden Guest. By Ernest William Hornung. Longmans, Green & Co.

David's Loom. By John Trafford Clegg. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.00

My Pretty Jane. By Effie Adelaide Rowlands. J. B. Lippincott Co.

Peter's Wife. By "The Duchess." J. B. Lippincott Co.

A Cumberer of the Ground. By Constance Smith. Harper & Bros. 60c.

The Siberian Exile. From German of Gustav Nieritz. By Mary E. Ireland. Presbyterian Committee of Publication.

Papa's Own Girl. A Novel. By Marie Howland. Lovell, Coryell & Co. 50c.

No Enemy (But Himself). By Elbert Hubbard. Illustrated. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

Micah Clarke. By A. Conan Doyle. Illustrated by George Willis Bardwell. Harper & Brothers. $1.75

"I Forbid the Banns!" By Frank Frankfort Moore. Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

Magdalena. By Perpetuo Ponslevi. Rand, McNally & Co. 50c.

History.

The Story of South Africa. By George M. Theall. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

Poetry, Music, and the Drama.

The Aztecs. By Walter Warren. Arena Pub. Co.

Poems. By Sarah Piatt. In two vols. Longmans, Green & Co. $3.50

Sweet Alyssum. Poems. By Margaret A. Logan. Charles Wells Moulton. $1.00

A Book of Song. By Julian Sturgis. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.75

Songs from Dreamland. By May Kendall. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.75

Religion and Theology.

History of Baptists in New England. By Henry S. Burrage, D.D. American Baptist Pub. Society. $1.25

The Heroic in Missions. By A. R. Buckland, M.A. Thos. Whittaker. 50c.

Our Bible. By Canon Talbot. Thos. Whittaker. 50c.

Scientific and Technical.

Principia Nova Astronomica. By Henry Pratt, M.D. London: Williams & Norgate; New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.00

A Short Comparative Grammar of English and German. By Victor Henry. Macmillan & Co. $1.90 net.

Travel and Observation.

Cruising in the Netherlands. By G. Christopher Davies. London: Jarrold & Sons. 1*s*, 6*d*.

On Short Leave to Japan. By Capt. G. J. Younghusband. Illustrated. London: Sampson Low, Marston & Co. 6*s*.

In Old New York. By Thomas A. Janvier. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $1.75

Miscellaneous.

The Boy's Own Guide to Fishing. By John Harrington Keene. Lee & Shepard. $1.50

An Introduction to the Study of Society. By Albion W. Small and George E. Vincent. American Book Co. $1.80

Oriental Studies. Selection of Papers read before the Oriental Club of Philadelphia. Ginn & Co.

General Catalogue of Bowdoin College and the Medical School of Maine. Published by the College.

Discourses, Biological and Geological. Essays. By Thos. H. Huxley. D. Appleton & Co. $1.25

Three Lectures on the Vedanta Philosophy. By F. Max Müller, K.M. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.75

The Care of Children. By Elisabeth Robinson Scovil. Philadelphia: Henry Altemus. $1.00

Overland Monthly. Vol. XXXIII, Second Series, January–June, 1894. San Francisco.

The Fairest of the Fair. By Hildegarde Hawthorne. Philadelphia: Henry Altemus. $1.00

The Grouse. [Fur and Feather Series.] Edited by A. E. T. Watson. Illustrated. Longmans, Green & Co

The Round Robin Reading Club.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF SYSTEMATIC STUDY OF LITERATURE.

The object of this organization is to direct the reading of individuals and small classes through correspondence conducted by competent specialists, who will furnish lists of books, criticise papers, and personally assist each member. Having no limits imposed by a given system, the Club is free to meet the needs of those who desire to read for special purposes, for general improvement, or pleasure, and to supplement University Extension Work. For particulars address

Miss LOUISE STOCKTON,
4213 Chester Avenue, Philadelphia.

From Philadelphia Times, April 20th, 1892.

LARGE ORDERS FOR TYPEWRITERS.

The Government Orders Remington Typewriters in Large Quantities.

Special Telegram to THE TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 18.

The United States Government is the largest user of typewriters in the world. Upwards of two thousand Remingtons are employed in the several departments at Washington, and perhaps one-fifth as many of other different kinds, making a grand total of nearly twenty-five hundred; and the Remington Company is constantly receiving requisitions from the government for additional machines.

The Remington has been adopted also for government use in England France, Germany, Russia, Canada, Australia, etc.; indeed in nearly every country in the world.

15 SCHOOL STREET, BOSTON.

THE ONLY FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH, ITALIAN

Actually Spoken and Mastered in Ten Weeks, without leaving your homes, by the Meisterschaft System. 550th Thousand. Pupils taught as if actually in the presence of the teacher. Terms for membership, $5.00 for each language. All questions answered and exercises corrected free of charge. Specimen copy of Part One, any language, sent free on receipt of 2 cent postage stamp.

GENUINE

Meisterschaft Publishing Co.

Summer St.
No. 196
Boston, Mass.

MEISTERSCHAFT

THE MANUSCRIPT MARKET.

Expert assistance to authors in placing their MSS. to the best advantage is given by THE WRITER'S LITERARY BUREAU (established in 1887), which is prepared to undertake every kind of work required between author and publisher. Honest advice and frank criticism of MSS. by competent readers given when desired; MSS. typewritten, revised, and sold on commission. Before sending MSS. write for circular giving terms and send ten cents for a sample copy of THE WRITER, the only magazine in the world devoted solely to explaining the practical details of literary work. Address The Writer's Literary Bureau, P. O. Box 1905, Boston, Mass. Mention the Literary World.

FRANK T. SABIN'S CATALOGUE of FINE and RARE BOOKS, ENGRAVINGS, AUTOGRAPHS, etc. (52 pp.), is NOW READY, and will be sent on application.

118 SHAFTESBURY AVE., LONDON, W.

CALIGRAPH.

GREATEST SPEED.

Best for Manifolding.

100,000 Daily Users.

The only writing machine awarded a gold medal at the Mechanics' Fair, 1890.

THE MOST DURABLE.

Single Case, No. 1,	$70.00
Double Case, No. 2,	85.00
New Special, No. 3,	100.00

For account of speed contests and circulars, address

W. M. BELCHER & CO.,
NEW ENGLAND AGENTS,
36 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

Chicago, Rock Island

— AND —

Pacific Railway.

THE Favorite and Direct Line, furnishing the best facilities and accommodations, at lowest rates, to and from Chicago, Rock Island, Davenport, Des Moines, Council Bluffs, Watertown, Sioux Falls, Minneapolis, St. Paul, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth, Kansas City, Topeka, Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo.

SOLID VESTIBULE EXPRESS TRAINS,

UNRIVALED for splendor of equipment, daily between Chicago and Des Moines and Council Bluffs, and between Chicago and Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, with superb through Dining-Car Service, FREE Reclining Chair Cars and Pullman Palace Sleepers.

THE POPULAR TOURIST LINE to and from Manitou, Garden of the Gods, Pike's Peak, Glenwood Springs, and all the sanitary and scenic resorts of Colorado, offering choice of routes, via Denver, to and from Salt Lake City, Portland, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

FAST EXPRESS TRAINS daily between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul, and to and from all important towns, cities and sections in Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, and Kingfisher and El Reno in the Indian Territory.

For Tickets, Maps, Folders, or desired information, apply at any Coupon Ticket Office, or address

E. ST. JOHN,	JOHN SEBASTIAN,
Gen'l Manager.	Gen'l Tkt. & Pass. Agt.

CHICAGO, ILL.

Artistic Specialties
—IN—
Fixtures
—FOR—Lighting
—BY—
Electricity
—OR—
Gas.

Fine Goods at Fair Prices.

Entirely New Designs for this Season.

Fixtures Made to Order from Special Drawings.

BEAUTIFUL LAMPS
WITH SHADES TO MATCH.

R. HOLLINGS & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers,

523-525 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FITCHBURG RAILROAD,

Hoosac Tunnel Route.

SARATOGA.

On and after June 18, 1894, the special

Fast Express Train,

Parlor Car attached, will be run daily, Sundays excepted, leaving

Boston 9.00 A. M.,

Stop at Greenfield for dinner, arriving at

Saratoga 3.30 P. M.

For tickets and further information apply at 250 Washington Street, Boston.

J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:
Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line,	20 cents.
Other advertising pages,	16 "

Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

Lawrence Public Library, Lawrence Mass.

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 SOMERSET STREET
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 22 SEPTEMBER 1894 Vol. XXV No. 19 Whole No. 515

Macmillan & Co.'s List of Forthcoming Books

BY AMERICAN AUTHORS,

FOR THE AUTUMN OF 1894.

ALLEN.—American Book-Plates. A Guide to their Study, with Examples. By CHARLES DEXTER ALLEN, Member Ex-Libris Society, London; Member Grolier Club, New York. With a Bibliography by EBEN NEWELL HEWINS, Member Ex-Libris Society. Illustrated with many reproductions of rare and interesting book-plates, and in the finer editions with many prints from the original coppers, both old and recent. Imperial 16mo, gilt top.

BALDWIN.—Mental Development in the Child and the Race. By J. MARK BALDWIN, Stuart Professor of Experimental Psychology, Princeton. In two volumes. Vol. I. Facts and Theories.

CATTELL.—A Course in Experimental Psychology. By J. MCKEEN CATTELL, Ph.D., Professor of Experimental Psychology in Columbia College.

CLARK.—Architect, Owner and Builder before the Law. By T. M. CLARK, Fellow of the American Institute of Architects. Square 8vo.

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY Biological Series. Edited by HENRY FAIRFIELD OSBORN, Da Costa Professor of Biology in Columbia College.

VOLUMES I. AND II.

From the Greeks to Darwin. By HENRY FAIRFIELD OSBORN. $2.00 net.

Amphioxus and the Ancestry of the Vertebrates. By ARTHUR WILLEY. With Illustrations. In the Press.

CRAWFORD.—Love in Idleness. With numerous Illustrations. Cranford Series, uniform with "The Vicar of Wakefield," "Cranford," etc. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, $2.00.

The Ralstons. A Sequel to "Katharine Lauderdale." 2 vols., small 12mo, buckram, $2.00.

DE VERE.—Selected Poems of Aubrey De Vere. Edited, with an Introduction, by GEORGE E. WOODBERRY, Professor of Literature in Columbia College.

EMERSON.—History of the English Language. By OLIVER FARRAR EMERSON, Professor of Rhetoric and English Philology in Cornell University.

EURIPIDES.—The Alcestis of Euripides.—Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by MORTIMER LAMSON EARLE, Professor of Greek in Barnard College. Classical Series. 16mo.

FIELDE.—A Corner of Cathay. Studies from Life Among the Chinese. By ADELE M. FIELDE. With Colored Plates from Illustrations by Artists in the celebrated school of Go Leng at Swatow, China. Small 4to, $3.00.

KÁROLY.—Raphael's Madonnas and other Great Pictures, reproduced from the Original Paintings. With a Life of Raphael and an Account of his Chief Works. By KARL KAROLY, author of "The Paintings of Florence." With 53 Illustrations, including 9 Photogravures. Columbier 8vo.

KIMBER.—Text-Book of Anatomy and Physiology for Nurses. Compiled by DIANA CLIFFORD KIMBER, Assistant Superintendent New York City Training School, Blackwell's Island. With Illustrations. 8vo.

McCURDY.—History, Prophecy and the Monuments.—By J. F. McCURDY, Professor in the University of Toronto. I. To the Fall of Samaria. 8vo, $3.00 net.

NICHOLS.—A Laboratory Manual of Physics and Applied Electricity. Arranged and edited by EDWARD L. NICHOLS, Professor of Physics in Cornell University. With Illustrations. Vol. II. Senior Course and Outline of Advanced Work. By G. S. MOLER, F. BEDELL, H. J. HOTCHKISS, C. P. MATTHEWS, and the Editor.

PAULSEN.—Character and Historical Development of the Universities of Germany. By F. PAULSEN. Translated by E. D. PERRY, Professor in Columbia College. With an Introduction by N. M. BUTLER, Professor in Columbia College.

RUSSELL.—Weather and Flood Forecasting Methods. By THOMAS RUSSELL, United States Engineer Office, Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan.

SALT.—Animal Rights Considered in Relation to Social Progress. With Bibliographical Appendix. New Edition, with an Essay on Vivisection in America by Dr. ALBERT LEFFINGWELL. 16mo.

SMITH.—Essays on Questions of the Day, Political and Social. By GOLDWIN SMITH, D. C. L., author of "The United States: an Outline of Political History," etc. New Revised Edition, with Additional Essays. 8vo, $2.25.

Sketch of the Political History of England. By the same author.

VIOLLET-LE-DUC.—Construction. Translated by GEORGE MARTIN HUSS. With numerous Illustrations.

WHITCOMB.—Chronological Outlines of American Literature. By SELDEN L. WHITCOMB. With a Preface by BRANDER MATTHEWS. Uniform with "Chronological Outlines of English Literature," by Frederick Ryland. Crown 8vo, $1.25 net.

WINTER.—The Life and Art of Edwin Booth. By WILLIAM WINTER. New cheaper Edition, with new Frontispiece Portrait in Character (Hamlet). 18mo, gilt top, 75 cents.

The Life and Art of Joseph Jefferson. Together with some Account of his Ancestry and of the Jefferson Family of Actors. By WILLIAM WINTER. With Portraits and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, gilt top $2.25.

ZIWET.—An Elementary Treatise on Theoretical Mechanics. By ALEXANDER ZIWET, Professor in the University of Michigan. Part III. Kinetics. 8vo.

MACMILLAN & CO., 66 Fifth Avenue, New York.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS' NEW BOOKS.

GEN. W. T. SHERMAN and SEN. JOHN SHERMAN.

THE SHERMAN LETTERS. With Portraits. Crown 8vo, $3.00.

This correspondence between General Sherman and his brother extends from the former's West Point days until 1891. It is unique in furnishing a familiar and intimate record of the events of American history during that period, with the frank comments on the incidents and the actors in them by two persons, themselves participants, and men of extraordinary penetration and power.

*

GEORGE MEREDITH.

LORD ORMONT AND HIS AMINTA. 12mo, $1.50.

"It is equal to anything Mr. Meredith has ever done. It is romantic, plausible, dramatic, pregnant with philosophy, and far-reaching in its survey of human motive."—London Times.

*

NAPOLEONIC MEMOIRS.

THE PASQUIER MEMOIRS.

Edited by DUC D'AUDIFFRET PASQUIER. With Portraits. 3 vols. 8vo, each $2.50. Vol. III. now ready, completing the set.

"It will ever be in the first grade of the memoirs for which French literature is incomparable."—N. Y. Times.

*

HENRY KINGSLEY.

RAVENSHOE. 2 vols., 16mo, $2.00.

Mr. James Payn has recently characterized the work of Henry Kingsley as notable for its vigor and dramatic interest, and has stated that the demand for his novels bids fair to eclipse the sale of his brother Charles's. Mr. Payn says: "As a story-teller Charles was inferior to Henry." Ravenshoe is the first issue in an attractive American edition of his novels now in preparation.

*

PAUL SABATIER.

LIFE OF SAINT FRANCIS OF ASSISI.

Translated by LOUISE SEYMOUR HOUGHTON. 8vo, $2.50.

"A very welcome book. A record, admirably written and fraught with the deepest interest, of one who was a great, good, and an intensely human man."—Philadelphia Press.

*

GEN. A. W. GREELY.

THREE YEARS OF ARCTIC SERVICE.

An Account of the Lady Franklin Bay Expedition of 1881–84 and the Attainment of the Farthest North. Popular Edition. Fully Illustrated. 1 vol. 8vo, $5.00.

"The most important work on Arctic matters that has been published in any country for many years."—Boston Herald.

*

THOMAS STEVENS.

AROUND THE WORLD ON A BICYCLE.

With over 200 Illustrations. New and Cheaper Edition. 2 vols. 8vo, $5.00.

"As interesting as a novel."—The Critic.

*

MRS. CHRISTINE TERHUNE HERRICK.

THE CHAFING-DISH SUPPER. 12mo, 75 cents.

In this little book Mrs. Herrick has exploited the many varied capacities of the chafing-dish, advising when and how to use it, with valuable suggestions concerning the materials employed, and the preparation of an extensive chafing-dish menu.

*

MRS. ALICE MORSE EARLE.

COSTUME OF COLONIAL TIMES. 12mo, $1.25.

An alphabetically arranged glossary with introductory matter and comments descriptive of the costumes of Colonial America. It comprises a fuller list of items than has ever been published, and the subject is presented in the author's well-known attractive style.

*

DR. W. G. T. SHEDD.

DOGMATIC THEOLOGY. Vol. III. Supplement. 8vo, $4.00.

The purpose of this supplementary volume is to elaborate more carefully some of the difficult points in specific unity, partly by original explanations by the author and partly by extracts from that class of theologians who have adopted it.

*

PROF. GEORGE B. STEVENS.

THE JOHANNINE THEOLOGY.

A Study of the Doctrinal Contents of the Gospel and Epistles of the Apostle John. By GEORGE B. STEVENS, Ph. D., D. D. 8vo, $2.00.

Similar in method and scope to the author's treatise on Pauline Theology, this work is the first treatise in English purporting to furnish a critical and systematic presentation of the theology of John.

*

PROF. GEORGE T. LADD.

A PRIMER OF PSYCHOLOGY. 12mo, 75 cents.

This volume is not a condensation of a larger work, but is an entirely new book designed by the eminent author especially for elementary study.

*

MRS. H. M. PLUNKETT.

JOSIAH GILBERT HOLLAND. A Memoir. Illustrated. 12mo, $1.50.

"A model biography, and a valuable and delightful addition to biographical literature."—Boston Advertiser.

*

ROBERT BRIDGES.

OVERHEARD IN ARCADY.

Dialogues about Howells, James, Aldrich, Stockton, Davis, Crawford, Kipling, Meredith, Stevenson, and Barrie. With 65 Illustrations. Third Edition. 12mo, $1.25.

"A very delightful volume."—The Outlook.

*

NEW VOLUMES OF SHORT STORIES. Each 12mo, $1.00.

MARSENA AND OTHER STORIES. By HAROLD FREDERIC.

A POUND OF CURE. A Story of Monte Carlo. By WILLIAM H. BISHOP.

SALEM KITTREDGE AND OTHER STORIES. By BLISS PERRY.

TALES OF THE MAINE COAST. By NOAH BROOKS.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 153-157 Fifth Ave., N. Y.

SCRIBNER'S LIST OF FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

POMONA'S TRAVELS. A Series of Letters to the Mistress of Rudder Grange from Her former Handmaiden. By FRANK R. STOCKTON. Profusely illustrated by A. B. FROST. 12mo, gilt top $2.00

THE ART OF THE AMERICAN WOOD ENGRAVER. Letter-press by PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON. Forty Examples printed from the wood on India paper and signed by the engravers, bound in crushed Levant; Letter-press, Bibliography, etc., in accompanying 16mo volume. Edition limited to 100 numbered sets. Each, net 40.00

A SHELF OF OLD BOOKS. By Mrs. JAMES T. FIELDS. Fully illustrated with portraits, autograph facsimiles, etc. 8vo . . . . In press.

POLLY. A Christmas Recollection. By THOMAS NELSON PAGE. Illustrated by A. CASTAIGNE. Small folio . 1.50

A NEW VOLUME OF STORIES. By THOMAS NELSON PAGE. 12mo 1.25

THE ODES OF HORACE. Translated by WILLIAM EWART GLADSTONE. 12mo. In press.

THREE SCORE AND TEN YEARS. 1820–1890. Recollections, by W. J. LINTON. With portrait. 8vo . . 2.00

THE BIRDS' CALENDAR. By H. E. PARKHURST. With 24 illustrations. 12mo, net 1.50

WILD BEASTS. A Study of the Characters and Habits of the Elephant, Lion, Panther, Leopard, Jaguar, Tiger, Puma, Wolf and Grizzly Bear. By JOHN HAMPDEN PORTER. With 8 full-page illustrations from life. Crown 8vo 2.00

HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES. By E. BENJAMIN ANDREWS, D.D., President of Brown University. 2 vols., crown 8vo . . . . In press.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF ERASMUS. By JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE. 8vo 2.50

THE LIFE AND CORRESPONDENCE OF ARTHUR PENRHYN STANLEY. By R. E. PROTHERO and Rev. G. G. BRADLEY. New and cheaper edition. 2 vols., 8vo. 5.00

SELECT POEMS OF SIDNEY LANIER. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by Prof. MORGAN CALLAWAY, Jr. 12mo . . . . In press.

JOHN MARCH, SOUTHERNER. By GEORGE W. CABLE. 12mo $1.50

HENRY KINGSLEY'S NOVELS. An attractive American edition:

- Ravenshoe. 2 vols., 16mo 2.00
- Austin Elliot. 1 vol., 16mo 1.00
- The Recollections of Geoffrey Hamlyn. 2 vols., 16mo 2.00

TRAVELS AMONGST THE GREAT ANDES OF THE EQUATOR. By EDWARD WHYMPER. With maps and 140 illustrations. New and cheaper edition. 8vo . . 4.00

MUSICIANS AND MUSIC LOVERS. And Other Essays. By WILLIAM F. APTHORP. 12mo 1.50

THE MOGUL EMPERORS OF HINDOSTAN. By EDWARD S. HOLDEN, LL.D. Illustrated . . . . In press.

SEA AND LAND. Coast and Deep Sea Phenomena, with Especial Reference to their Relation to the Life of Man. By Prof. N. S. SHALER. Illustrated. 8vo . . . 2.50

THE ENGLISH NOVEL, from Its Origin to Sir Walter Scott. By Professor RALEIGH. The University Series . . . . In press.

HERBART, and Modern German Educational Theory. By CHARLES DE GARMO, Ph.D., President of Swarthmore College. The Great Educators Series. 12mo . 1.00

THE LIFE OF CHARLES LORING BRACE. Chiefly Told in His Own Letters. With portraits. Crown 8vo . . . . In press.

THE RELIGIONS OF JAPAN, from the Dawn of History to the Era of Meiji. By WILLIAM ELLIOT GRIFFIS. (Morse Lectures, 1894.) 12mo . . . . In press.

THE MESSIAH OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. By Prof. CHARLES A. BRIGGS. Crown 8vo . . . . In press.

PAUL'S CONCEPTION OF CHRISTIANITY. By ALEXANDER BALMAN BRUCE, D.D. Crown 8vo . . . 2.00

GENESIS AND SEMITIC TRADITION. By Prof. JOHN D. DAVIS, Ph.D. Illustrated. 12mo . . . In press.

New and Forthcoming Books for the Young.

PICCINO AND OTHER CHILD STORIES. By Mrs. BURNETT. Illustrated by R. B. BIRCH. Square 8vo In press.

THE WAGNER STORY BOOK. Firelight Tales of the Great Music Dramas. By WILLIAM HENRY FROST. Illustrated by S. R. BURLEIGH. 12mo $1.50

IN THE HEART OF THE ROCKIES. A Story of Adventure in Colorado. By G. A. HENTY. Illustrated. Crown 8vo 1.50

WHEN LONDON BURNED. A Story of Restoration Times and the Great Fire. By G. A. HENTY. Illustrated. Crown 8vo 1.50

WULF, THE SAXON. A Story of the Norman Conquest. By G. A. HENTY. Illustrated. Crown 8vo 1.50

THE BUTTERFLY HUNTERS IN THE CARIBBEES. By Dr. EUGENE MURRAY-AARON. With 8 full-page illustrations. Square 12mo 2.00

CZAR AND SULTAN. The Adventures of a British Lad in the Russo-Turkish War of 1877–78. By ARCHIBALD FORBES. Illustrated. 12mo 2.00

THE NORSELAND SERIES. By H. H. BOYESEN.

- Norseland Tales. Illustrated. 12mo $1.25
- Against Heavy Odds and A Fearless Trio. Tales of Norse Heroism. Illustrated. 12mo 1.25
- Boyhood in Norway. Stories of Boy-Life in the Land of the Midnight Sun. Illustrated. 12mo 1.25
- The Modern Vikings. Stories of Life and Sport in the Norseland. Illustrated. 12mo 1.25
- The set, 4 vols., in a box 5.00

THINGS WILL TAKE A TURN. By BEATRICE HARRADEN. Illustrated. 12mo 1.00

THE MAKING OF THE OHIO VALLEY STATES. 1660–1837. By SAMUEL ADAMS DRAKE. Illustrated. 12mo 1.50

OLAF, THE GLORIOUS. A Story of Olaf Triggvison, King of Norway, 995–1000. By ROBERT LEIGHTON. Illustrated. 12mo 1.50

TO GREENLAND AND THE POLE. By GORDON STABLES. Illustrated. 12mo 1.50

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 153-157 Fifth Ave., N. Y.

LITTLE, BROWN & COMPANY'S

Announcement of New and Forthcoming Works.

THREE HEROINES OF NEW ENGLAND ROMANCE.

I. Priscilla, by Harriet Prescott Spofford. II. Agnes Surriage, by Alice Brown. III. Martha Hilton, by Louise Imogen Guiney. With notes on the towns in which they lived, and about 80 Illustrations, including numerous full-page pictures, by Edmund H. Garrett. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $2.00; full morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

A charming volume, dealing with the courtship and marriage of three famous beauties of old colonial times. The stories have been told in prose by three noted American writers, and Mr. Garrett has contributed a number of characteristic illustrations, in which New England landscape, colonial houses, costumes of old time, austere Puritan men and pretty Puritan women greet the eye upon almost every page.

A New Volume of Stories by the author of "With Fire and Sword," "The Deluge," "Pan Michael," etc.

LILLIAN MORRIS AND OTHER STORIES.

By HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ. Translated from the Polish by Jeremiah Curtin. With Illustrations by Edmund H. Garrett. 16mo, white and gold, $1.25.

The scene of two of the stories in this volume, "Lillian Morris" and "Sachem," is laid in the far West of America. The Bull Fight is a sketch rather than a story, and gives a most vivid and powerful description of that favorite amusement of Spain. Angel is a pathetic little story of Polish life.

IN THE SAME STYLE.

YANKO THE MUSICIAN AND OTHER STORIES.

By HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ.

A WOMAN OF SHAWMUT.

By EDMUND JANES CARPENTER.

THE BLIND MUSICIAN.

Translated from the Russian of VLADIMIR KOROLENKO, by Aline Delano.

CARINE.

By LOUIS ENAULT. Translated from the French by Lendo De Kowalewska.

Each 16mo, white and gold, $1.25.

SIX NEW VOLUMES IN THE LIBRARY EDITION OF THE ROMANCES OF ALEXANDRE DUMAS.

I. The Companions of Jehu. 2 vols. II. The Whites and the Blues. 2 vols. III. The She-Wolves of Machecoul and the Corsican Brothers. 2 vols. With 12 etchings and photogravures, and 12 half-tone plates, including historical portraits and original illustrations by E. Van Muyden, Edmund H. Garrett, Félix Oudart, and Frank T. Merrill. 6 vols. 12mo. In box. Decorated cloth, gilt top, $9.00; plain cloth, gilt top, $7.50; half calf, extra, gilt top, $18.00; half morocco, gilt top, $18.00.

These very powerful historical romances will be somewhat of a novelty to readers of Dumas in English. "The Companions of Jehu" and "The Whites and the Blues" both deal with the French Republic under the Directory and with the Consulate of Napoleon. "The She-Wolves of Machecoul" has for its historical theme the last Vendée rising, in the reign of Louis Philippe, and the Duchesse de Berry is its leading historical personage. To this romance has been added a new translation of "The Corsican Brothers," the story upon which was founded the famous play of that name.

Nora Perry's New Book for Girls.

HOPE BENHAM. By Nora Perry, author of "Another Flock of Girls," "A Rosebud Garden of Girls," etc. With 8 full-page Illustrations by Frank T. Merrill. 12mo, cloth, gilt, $1.50.

Miss Perry's books for girls are constantly increasing in popularity, and no writer is more successful in creating wholesome stories which girls read and enjoy. She has hitherto devoted herself to short stories, and the present work is the first from her pen in which her heroine's experiences are given an entire volume. "Hope Benham" is destined to be a favorite.

MISS PERRY'S OTHER BOOKS FOR GIRLS.

A Rosebud Garden of Girls. With 14 Illustrations by F. C. Gordon. 12mo, cloth, gilt, $1.50.

Another Flock of Girls. With Illustrations by Reginald B. Birch and Charles Copeland. Small 4to, cloth, gilt, $1.50.

CENTURIES APART.

A Romance. By EDWARD T. BOUVÉ. With full-page Illustrations by W. St. John Harper. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

A new story with a novel idea. It brings together the laws, manners, customs, and dress of England at the period of the reign of Henry VII., and of America during the Civil War. The scene of the romance is "South England," a hitherto unknown country in latitudes far south. The characters so strangely brought together are in almost everything "centuries apart."

A NEW BOOK ON RIDING.

Curb, Snaffle, and Spur. A Method of Training Young Horses for the Cavalry Service and for General Use under the Saddle. By EDWARD L. ANDERSON, author of "Modern Horsemanship." With 31 half-tone Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

TWO NEW VOLUMES, COMPLETING THE LIBRARY EDITION OF THE ROMANCES OF VICTOR HUGO.

I. "Hans of Iceland." II. "Bug-Jargal," "Claude Gueux," and "The Last Day of a Condemned." With plates. 12mo. Per volume, decorated cloth, gilt top, $1.50; plain cloth, gilt top, $1.25; half calf, extra, gilt top, $3.00; half morocco, gilt top, $3.00.

MEDICAL PAPERS AND ESSAYS.

By HENRY JACOB BIGELOW, A. M., M. D., LL. D. With a Memoir of his Life. Illustrated. 4 vols. 8vo, cloth, $12.00 net.

⁂ The Memoir separately. With portraits. 8vo, cloth, $3.00 net.

NEW AND IMPORTANT VOLUMES IN THE BADMINTON LIBRARY OF SPORTS AND PASTIMES, Recently Issued.

Yachting. By Sir EDWARD SULLIVAN, Lord BRASSEY, G. L. WATSON, LEWIS HERRESHOFF, and other writers. With 48 full-page plates and 253 Illustrations in the text by R. T. Pritchett, and from photographs, together with 8 colored plates of flags, burgees, etc. 2 vols. Crown 8vo, cloth, $7.00; half blue morocco, gilt top, $10.00.

Golf. Fourth edition. Thoroughly revised, with additions. By HORACE G. HUTCHINSON. With contributions by Lord Wellwood, Sir Walter Simpson, Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, Andrew Lang, H. S. C. Everard, and others. Illustrated with 25 full-page plates and 65 cuts by Thomas Hodge and Harry Furniss. Crown 8vo, cloth, $3.50; half blue morocco, gilt top, $5.00.

Big Game Shooting. By CLIVE PHILLIPS-WOLLEY. With Contributions by Sir Samuel W. Baker, Warburton Pike, and others. Illustrated with numerous full-page plates by Charles Whymper, etc. 2 vols. Crown 8vo, cloth. $7.00; half blue morocco, gilt top, $10.00.

CAPTAIN MAHAN'S WORKS.

The Influence of Sea Power upon History. 1660-1783. By Capt. A. T. MAHAN, United States Navy, late President of the War College, Newport. With 25 charts illustrative of great naval battles. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $4.00.

The Influence of Sea Power upon the French Revolution and Empire. By Capt. A. T. MAHAN. With 13 maps and battle plans. 2 vols. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $6.00. The two works together, in box. 3 vols. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $10.00; half calf, extra, gilt top, $17.50.

These great historical works, the importance of which was conceded at the time of their publication, are now in constant demand, and several editions for America and England have been printed within a few months. Honors continue to be heaped upon the author, Oxford University having recently bestowed upon him the degree of D. C. L., and Cambridge (England) that of LL. D. He is now universally admitted to be one of the great modern historians.

LITTLE, BROWN & CO., Publishers, 254 Washington Street, Boston.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS' ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Sketch-Book.

By WASHINGTON IRVING. Van Tassel Edition, uniform in general style with the Holiday editions of "The Alhambra," "Granada" and "Knickerbocker." Two volumes, 8vo, with borders, and 32 illustrations (largely photogravure) from designs by Rackham, Barraud, Church, Rix and Van Deusen. Cloth extra, $6.00; three-quarter levant, $12.00.

Memoirs of the Reign of George III.

By HORACE WALPOLE. Edited by G. F. Russell Barker. Four volumes, 8vo, with 16 portraits in photogravure. Letterpress edition, 1,000 numbered sets, of which 260 sets have been secured for the United States. Per set in cloth extra, $18.00; 25 copies have illustrations printed on India paper, and for these sets the price is $25.00.

The Ariel Shakespeare. (Now Complete.)

Each play is in a separate volume, 3¼ x 5 inches, printed from new type. The text is unabridged, and conforms to the latest scholarly editions. Complete in 40 volumes with 500 illustrations by Frank Howard.

Style I.—Garnet cloth, per vol., 40 cents; per set, in 20 volumes, in box, $16.00.

Style II.—Full leather, gilt top, per vol. (in a box), 75 cents; per set, 40 volumes in box, $30.00.

"For daintiness, beauty and convenience there is nothing in the line of Shakespeariana to equal the Ariel Shakespeare. Unstinted praise must be accorded to this edition."—Boston Times.

The Story of the Civil War.

A Concise Account of the War in the United States of America between 1861 and 1865. By JOHN CODMAN ROPES, author of "The Army Under Pope," "The First Napoleon," etc. To be complete in three parts, printed in three octavo volumes, with comprehensive maps and battle plans. Each part will be complete in itself and will be sold separately. Part I. Narrative of Events to the Opening of the Campaigns of 1862. With 5 maps. 8vo, $1.50.

Holland and Its People.

By EDMONDO DE AMICIS. Vandyke Edition. With 84 illustrations. 8vo, $2.25.

Spain and the Spaniards.

By EDMONDO DE AMICIS. Saragossa Edition. 8vo, illustrated, $2.25.

⁂ The Vandyke Edition of "Holland and Its People" and the Saragossa Edition of "Spain and the Spaniards" are put up together (with jackets) in a box. 2 volumes, 8vo, $4.50; half calf extra, $9.00.

Six Months in the Sandwich Islands.

By ISABELLA BIRD BISHOP. First American edition, reprinted (under arrangement) from the eighth English edition. With 16 full-page illustrations, headpieces, initials and map. 8vo, cloth, $2.25.

The Egyptian Book of the Dead.

The most ancient and the most important of the extant religious texts of ancient Egypt. Edited with introduction, a complete translation and various chapters on its history, symbolism, etc., by CHARLES H. S. DAVIS, M. D., Ph. D. With 99 full-page illustrations from the Turin and the Louvre Papyri, and 25 designs representing the Egyptian gods. Large 4to, cloth, $5.00.

Prose Fancies.

By RICHARD LE GALLIENNE, author of "The Religion of a Literary Man," etc. With portrait of the author, in photogravure. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

About Women: What Men Have Said.

An Every-Day Book. Compiled and arranged by ROSE PORTER. 16mo.

The Artificial Mother.

A Marital Fantasy. By G. H. P. With six illustrations by Van Deusen. 16mo, cloth, 75 cents.

American Song.

A Collection of Representative American Poems, with Analytical and Critical Studies of their Writers. Edited by A. B. SIMONDS. 12mo, $1.25.

Lives of Twelve Bad Men.

Original Studies of Eminent Scoundrels. By Various Hands. Edited by THOMAS SECCOMBE (Balliol College, Oxford). Fully illustrated, 8vo, cloth, $3.50.

Social England.

A Record of the Progress of the People in Religion, Laws, Learning, Arts, Science, Literature, Industry, Commerce and Manners, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. By various writers. Edited by H. D. TRAILL, D. C. L., Sometime Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford. To be completed in six volumes. Per vol., $3.50.

Vol. I.—From the Earliest Times to the Accession of Edward the First.

Vol. II.—From the Accession of Edward the First to the Death of Richard III.

Tennyson.

His Art and Relation to Modern Life. By STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M. A. 12mo, $2.00.

The Story of the Nations.

A series of Graphic Historical Studies. Each narrative is complete in one volume, small 8vo, profusely illustrated and containing maps and plans. Price per volume, cloth extra, $1.50; half leather, gilt top, $1.75. 43 volumes now ready.

The latest volumes are: Sicily, by FREEMAN; Poland, by MORFILL; Parthia, by RAWLINSON; Japan, by MURRAY; Christian Recovery of Spain, by WATTS; Australasia, by TREGARTHEN; South Africa, by THEAL; Venice, by WIEL.

"This is the very plan on which Herodotus and Livy wrote their immortal histories, or rather stories . . . historians who were also superb story tellers, and story tellers who were capital historians, with a sprinkle and twinkle of poetry thrown in for full measure."—N. Y. Critic.

Heroes of the Nations.

Biographical studies of the lives and work of certain leaders of men about whom have gathered the great traditions of the Nations to which they belonged, and who have been accepted as types of the several national ideals. Edited by EVELYN ABBOTT, M. A., Balliol College, Oxford. Large 12mo, fully illustrated; each, cloth extra, $1.50; half leather, $1.75. Now Ready:

Nelson, by RUSSELL; Gustavus Adolphus, by FLETCHER; Pericles, by ABBOTT; Theodoric the Goth, by HODGKIN; Sir Philip Sidney, by BOURNE; Julius Cæsar, by FOWLER; John Wyclif, by SERGEANT; Napoleon, by MORRIS; Henry of Navarre, by WILLERT; Cicero, by STRACHAN-DAVIDSON; Prince Henry of Portugal, by BEAZLEY; Abraham Lincoln, by BROOKS.

"An interesting and most instructive series."—Morning News, Wilmington, Del.

"The fascinating series of 'Heroes of the Nations.'"—Literary World.

Descriptive prospectuses of the "Story of the Nations," the "Heroes of the Nations," "The Ariel Shakespeare" and quarterly "Notes," giving full descriptions of the season's publications, sent on application.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, New York and London.

DODD, MEAD & COMPANY HAVE JUST PUBLISHED.

Domestic Manners of the Americans.

By Mrs. TROLLOPE. 2 vols., 12mo. With 24 illustrations from contemporary drawings, reproduced from the first edition of 1832. Introduction by Prof. Harry Thurston Peck of Columbia College. $3.50.

"Everybody has heard of Mrs. Trollope's famous volume, and it is always quoted as a shining example of misrepresentation; but the statements which annoyed our ancestors will only amuse us and Mrs. Trollope's book is likely to find a large audience among Americans of today."—Jeannette L. Gilder, in The Critic.

ADAM VILLIERS DE L'ISLE.

His Life and Works. From the French of Vicomte ROBERT DU PONTAVICE DE HEUSSEY. By Lady MARY LOYD. 8vo, gilt top, $2.50.

Samantha Among the Colored Folks.

My Impressions of the Race Problem. By MARIETTA HOLLEY (Josiah Allen's Wife). With nearly 100 illustrations by that master delineator of darky life, E. W. Kemble. 12mo, $1.50.

Shylock and Others.

Eight studies by G. H. RADFORD. 16mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

Mr. Radford is widely known as the author of the last, and considered by many the best, essay in the first series of "Obiter Dicta." These are pleasant essays written by one who is not only a lover of good literature and has a thoughtful mind, but who loves common sense and has a shrewd wit.

Glimpses of Four Continents.

The account of a tour in Europe, Australia, New Zealand and North America, made in 1893. By the DUCHESS OF BUCKINGHAM AND CHANDOS. With portraits and illustrations (several in photogravure) from the author's sketches. 8vo, gilt top, $3.50.

The Sherburne Cousins.

By AMANDA M. DOUGLAS, author of "Sherburne House," and "Lyndell Sherburne." 12mo, $1.50.

Witch Winnie at Shinnecock.

Or, a King's Daughter at the Summer Art School. By Mrs. E. W. CHAMPNEY. With illustrations by J. Wells Champney. 12mo, $1.50.

Gypsy Breynton.

By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS. With numerous illustrations. An entirely new edition from new plates. 12mo, $1.50.

No brighter, more wholesome and entertaining book could be put into the hands of girls and boys.

The Empress Eugénie.

The initial volume of "The Secret of an Empire." By PIERRE DE LANO, from the Seventh French Edition. With portrait. 12mo, $1.25.

"The Secret of an Empire" comprises the tragic and burlesque events of the reign of Napoleon III. They are gossipy, but not scandalous, and are based upon new facts and documents.

MRS. OLIPHANT'S NEW NOVEL.

A House in Bloomsbury.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT. 12mo, $1.25.

A story of London life, evincing anew Mrs. Oliphant's skill in constructing a plot of sustained interest and exhibiting her delicate touch in characterization.

SOME FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

MEMOIRS OF THE DUCHESSE DE GONTAUT,

Gouvernante to the Children of France during the Restoration, 1773-1836.

Translated by Mrs. J. W. DAVIS. 2 vols., 8vo, with 13 portraits in photogravure. Cloth, gilt top, $5 00. (Ready Sept. 29.)

⁂ Also, a large paper edition limited to 175 copies for England and America, each volume containing a portrait in mezzotint by S. Arlent Edwards, printed in color and signed by the artist. In full leather binding. $12.00 net.

The Duchesse de Gontaut personally knew Napoleon I., the Duke of Wellington, and many other English and French celebrities during the period dating from the French Revolution down to the Restoration. Her pages sparkle with vivacity, and are full of heretofore unrecorded anecdotes and reminiscences.

Eighteenth Century Vignettes.

Second Series.

With 12 portraits in photogravure. Small 8vo, gilt top, $2.00. (Ready Sept. 29.)

⁂ Also, a large paper edition limited to 250 copies, with impressions of the portraits on Japan paper, and a special title-page and frontispiece (not in the ordinary edition) in photogravure, designed by George Wharton Edwards. In full leather binding, $5.00 net.

Mists.

A Novel. By FLETCHER BATTERSHALL, author of "A Daughter of this World." 12mo, $1.25.

A Daughter of this World.

By FLETCHER BATTERSHALL. Second edition in new binding, uniform with "Mists." 12mo, $1.25.

My Study Fire. Second Series.

By HAMILTON WRIGHT MABIE. 16mo. With three photogravures. $1.50. Also

A New Edition of Mr. Mabie's Previous Books: (Ready Sept. 29.)

Issued also by Dent & Co., London.

My Study Fire.
Under the Trees and Elsewhere.
Short Studies in Literature.
Essays in Literary Interpretation.

Each with three photogravures, in dainty binding, gilt top. Per vol., $1.50.

Mr. Mabie's writings have immensely deepened and freshened the feeling toward literature, and his literary enthusiasm has awakened a new interest in books and inspired fresh appreciation of them in an ever-widening circle of readers.

Corrected Impressions.

By GEORGE SAINTSBURY. 8vo, $1.50.

The Great Writers of the Victorian Age are re-examined in these essays with the purpose of estimating anew in the light of present literary opinion their place in English literature. Their literary value, however, lies not only in the novelty of the plan, but in the original insight which Mr. Saintsbury has contributed to these studies.

A London Rose, and Other Rhymes.

By ERNEST RHYS. Crown 8vo, $1.50 net. (In conjunction with Messrs. Elkin Mathews and John Lane, London.)

The Highway of Sorrow.

A Novel. By Miss HESBA STRETTON. 12mo, $1.25.

In this new venture Miss Stretton enters upon the persecutions of the Stundists, and the book has been written in collaboration with an eminent Russian writer who is authority for the facts stated therein.

A TALE OF TWO CITIES.

By CHARLES DICKENS. With more than fifty drawings by Edmund H. Garrett. 2 vols., 16mo, cloth, gilt top, $3.50. (Shortly.)

⁂ Also, an edition containing special features, limited to 150 copies, both text and illustrations on Japan paper. (Particulars on application.)

Andrew Lang calls "A Tale of Two Cities" one of the three great novels of modern literature. Mr. Garrett has succeeded admirably in catching the spirit of the story and his illustrations have been pronounced the best work he has yet done. A combination of mechanical and artistic excellence makes this one of the most attractive books recently printed in America.

At the Ghost Hour.

From the German of PAUL HEYSE. In four dainty little volumes, with decorations, etc., in unique binding.

The House of the Unbelieving Thomas.
Fair Abigail. Mid-Day Magic. The Forest Laugh.

Sold in sets, or separately: per volume, 50 cents; half calf, gilt tops, per set, $5.00; full ooze calf, in box of same leather, per set, $12.00. (Ready Sept. 29.)

First in the Field.

A Story of New South Wales. By GEORGE MANVILLE FENN. With illustrations. (Copyrighted.) Crown 8vo, $1.50.

Where Honour Leads.

A Sequel to "A Question of Honour." By LYNDE PALMER, author of the Magnet Stories, etc. 16mo, $1.25.

Kitty Alone.

By S. BARING GOULD. 12mo, $1.25.

No poet or novelist has done more for his favorite haunt than S. Baring Gould has done for his beloved Devonshire; but in "Kitty Alone" we have not only a graphic exhibition of native character and landscape, but a drama of life unfolded with all the force and pathos and grim humor the author has heretofore shown.

The Land of the Sphinx.

By G. MONTBARD, author of "Among the Moors," etc. With nearly 200 illustrations by the author. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $4 00.

Brilliant and graphic with both pen and pencil, Mr. Montbard has described Egyptian life and characterized its various phases and aspects with vivid power and fidelity.

A NEW ELSIE BOOK.

Elsie at the World's Fair.

By MARTHA FINLEY, author of the Elsie and Mildred books. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

⁂ Write for complete Descriptive List of our new and forthcoming books.

DODD, MEAD & COMPANY, 5 East 19th Street, New York.

SELECTIONS FROM HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.'S FALL BOOKS.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

Life and Letters of John Greenleaf Whittier.

By SAMUEL T. PICKARD. With Portraits and other Illustrations. 2 vols., crown 8vo, gilt top, $4.00.

This is the authorized biography of Mr. Whittier, arranged for while he was yet living. Mr. Pickard was closely connected with him and has produced a work which the lovers of Whittier will welcome with sincere gratitude.

Familiar Letters of Henry David Thoreau.

Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by FRANK B. SANBORN. Uniform with Riverside Edition of Thoreau's Works. With a full Index. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1.50.

The Life of Frances Power Cobbe.

Written by Herself. With a Portrait. 2 vols., crown 8vo, gilt top, $4.00.

Miss Cobbe is one of the most famous of living English women, and the story of her life cannot fail to be a book of extraordinary interest.

George William Curtis.

An appreciative and admirable account of this knightly man and great citizen, by EDWARD CARY. In American Men of Letters Series. With a portrait. 16mo, $1.25.

Lucy Larcom: Life, Letters, and Diary.

By Rev. DANIEL D. ADDISON. With a Portrait. 1 vol., 16mo, $1.25.

The many friends of Miss Larcom, and all who have found inspiration or helpful suggestion in her writings, will most gladly welcome this book.

Bishop Andrewes.

A new volume in the series of English Leaders of Religion, devoted to one of the greatest preachers in the English Church of about three centuries ago, by Rev. R. L. OTTLEY. With a Portrait. 12mo, $1.00.

A History of the United States for Schools.

By JOHN FISKE. With Topics and Questions, by FRANK A. HILL, Secretary of the State Board of Education, Massachusetts. Copiously illustrated. 12mo, $1.00 net.

Mr. Fiske's perfect mastery of the facts of American History and his genius for stating them make this a very admirable book for schools; and its fullness of information, charm of style, and wealth of maps make it peculiarly attractive to the general reader.

A Story of Courage: Annals of the Georgetown Convent of the Visitation.

By GEORGE PARSONS LATHROP and ROSE HAWTHORNE LATHROP. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

Special Large-Paper Edition, limited to 250 copies, with nine Illustrations, $4.00 net.

The history of the Order of the Visitation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and of this institution, its principles, its work and its achievements, is the subject of this interesting volume. Mr. and Mrs. Lathrop have familiarized themselves with the facts in the remarkable story, and they relate these with the fullest sympathy and most devout admiration. The book will appeal very strongly to those whose associations with the convent and the academy have been intimate, to Protestants as well as Catholics.

Following the Greek Cross: Memories of the Sixth Army Corps.

By General THOMAS W. HYDE, of the Army of the Potomac. With many Portraits of Famous Generals. 1 vol., 16mo, $1.25.

ESSAYS.

From Blomidon to Smoky, and Other Papers.

By FRANK BOLLES, author of "Land of the Lingering Snow," and "At the North of Bearcamp Water." 16mo, $1 25

The Pearl of India.

By M. M. BALLOU, author of "Due East," "Due West," "Due North," "Due South," "Under the Southern Cross," "Equatorial America," "The New Eldorado," "Aztec Land," "The Story of Malta," etc. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

Riverby.

By JOHN BURROUGHS, author of "Wake-Robin," etc. 16mo, daintily printed and bound, $1.25.

Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan.

By LAFCADIO HEARN, author of "Stray Leaves from Strange Literature," etc. With a suggestive cover design. 2 vols. 8vo, $4.00.

Childhood in Literature and Art:

With Some Observations on Literature for Children. By HORACE E. SCUDDER, author of "Men and Letters," etc. Crown 8vo, $1.25.

The Life of the Spirit in the Modern English Poets.

By VIDA D. SCUDDER, Associate Professor of English Literature in Wellesley College. 16mo.

A Florida Sketch-Book.

By BRADFORD TORREY, author of "Birds in the Bush," "A Rambler's Lease," and "The Foot Path Way." 16mo, $1.25.

Latin Poetry.

A companion volume to Mr. Stedman's "Nature and Elements of Poetry," and Professor Jebb's "Greek Poetry," by R. Y. TYRRELL, Professor in the University of Dublin. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

Studies in Folk-Song and Popular Poetry.

By ALFRED M. WILLIAMS, author of "The Poets and Poetry of Ireland," "Sam Houston and the War of Independence in Texas," etc. 12mo, $1.50.

FICTION.

Philip and His Wife.

A strong story with a noble purpose, told with great power and grace, by Mrs. DELAND, author of "John Ward, Preacher," "Sidney," "Mr. Tommy Dove," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

The Chase of Saint Castin, and Other Tales.

A volume of very dramatic Short Stories by Mrs. CATHERWOOD, author of "The Lady of Fort St. John," "Old Kaskaskia," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

Coeur d'Alene.

A powerful story of the riot in 1892 in the Cœur d'Alene mines, with a love story, by MARY HALLOCK FOOTE, author of "John Bodewin's Testimony," "The Led-Horse Claim," "The Last Assembly Ball" and "In Exile." 16mo, $1.25.

Sweet Clover: A Romance of the White City.

A charming and altogether readable novel of the Great Fair, by Mrs. BURNHAM, author of "Dr. Latimer," "Miss Bagg's Secretary," "The Mistress of Beech Knoll," "Next Door," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

The Story of Lawrence Garthe.

A very fresh and engaging novel of New York life, though not a society novel, by ELLEN OLNEY KIRK, author of "The Story of Margaret Kent," "A Daughter of Eve," "Walford," "Ciphers," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

The Great Refusal: Letters of a Dreamer in Gotham.

A romance in which the sentiment is mostly cherished by the "dreamer," who writes in excellent manner of a great many things besides. By PAUL E. MORE. 16mo, $1.25.

POETRY.

Unguarded Gates, and Other Poems.

By THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1.25. A beautiful volume of noble verse, comprising most of the poems written by Mr. Aldrich in the past six years.

Whittier's Poetical Works.

New Cambridge Edition, Complete. From entirely new plates, printed from large type, on opaque paper, and attractively bound. With a Steel Portrait and engraved title. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $2 00; half calf, gilt top $3.50; tree calf, or full levant, $5.50.

This volume presents Whittier's Complete Poems in the same form as the Cambridge Edition of Longfellow's Poems, which has proved exceedingly satisfactory.

Whittier's Poetical Works.

New Handy-Volume Edition. In four volumes, 16mo, printed from beautiful large type, and bound in a simple but very attractive style, and put up in a cloth box, $5.00; half calf, extra, gilt top, $9.75; full morocco, flexible, in leather box, $9.75; full calf, flexible, leather box, $12.75.

This is an entirely new edition, from new plates, and in all respects is like the Handy-Volume Edition of Longfellow's Poems published last year. It has four Portraits.

A Victorian Anthology.

Containing Representative Poems by the Authors discussed in "Victorian Poets." Selected and edited by E. C. STEDMAN. 1 vol., large crown octavo, uniform with the "Cambridge Longfellow." $2.00.

Mr. Stedman has made an inclusive but choice selection from the entire field of British poetry since the beginning, in 1837, of the present reign—the field surveyed and criticised in his "Victorian Poets."

Narragansett Ballads, with Songs and Lyrics.

By CAROLINE HAZARD, author of "College Tom," etc. 1 vol., 16mo, gilt top, $1.00.

Poems, New and Old.

By WILLIAM ROSCOE THAYER, author of "The Dawn of Italian Independence," etc. 16mo, $1.00.

In Sunshine Land.

Charming Poems for Young People, by EDITH M THOMAS. Finely illustrated by KATHARINE PYLE. Attractively bound. $1.50.

Boston, 4 Park Street; 11 East 17th Street, New York.

D. Appleton & Co.'s New and Recent Books.

The Manxman.

By HALL CAINE, author of "The Deemster," "Capt'n Davy's Honeymoon," "The Scapegoat," etc. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

"'The Manxman,' we may say at once, confirms the author's claim to rank among the first novelists of the day. . . . The story is constructed and worked out with consummate skill, and, though intensely tragic, is lightened by some charming descriptions of scenery and local customs. The characters, even the minor ones, are closely studied and finely executed, and show a deep experience and knowledge of human nature, in its lighter as well as darker aspects, such as only a master hand could faithfully have drawn."—London Literary World.

"In truth it is Mr. Caine's masterpiece, and congratulations are pouring in upon him from right and left. . . . The story had only been issued a few hours when Mr. Gladstone wrote to the Isle of Man to express his admiration for the new success."—London correspondence of the New York Critic.

"It is difficult not to speak with what may seem indiscriminate praise of Mr. Hall Caine's new work. . . ." —London Daily News.

"The book, as a whole, is on a rare level of excellence—a level which we venture to predict will always be rare."—London Chronicle.

"A singularly powerful and picturesque piece of work, extraordinarily dramatic. . . . Taken altogether, 'The Manxman' cannot fail to enhance Mr. Hall Caine's reputation. It is a most powerful book."—London Standard.

"The story will assuredly rank with Mr. Caine's best work and will obtain immediate favor with the lovers of strong and pure romance."—London Globe.

"The most powerful story that has been written in the present generation."—Edinburgh Scotsman.

"A book the construction and execution of which very few living European novelists could excel. The fullness of the texture in this last novel, the brilliancy of the successive episodes, the gravity and intensity of the sentiment, the art with which the ever-deepening central tragedy is relieved by what is picturesque and what is comic—all this has only to be seriously considered to be highly appreciated. 'The Manxman' is a contribution to literature, and the most fastidious critic would give in exchange for it a wilderness of that deciduous trash which our publishers call fiction."—Edmund Gosse, in St. James's Gazette.

"A story of marvelous dramatic intensity, and in its ethical meaning has a force comparable only to Hawthorne's 'Scarlet Letter.'"—Boston Beacon.

"A work of rare merit and striking originality. . . . Indubitably the finest book that Mr. Hall Caine has yet produced. It is a noble contribution to the enrichment of English fiction and the advancement of its author's fame." —London Academy.

"It will be read and reread, and take its place in the literary inheritance of the English-speaking nations, like George Eliot's great books."—The Queen.

Memoirs Illustrating the History of Napoleon I,

From 1802 to 1815. By Baron CLAUDE-FRANÇOIS DE MÉNEVAL, Private Secretary to Napoleon. Edited by his grandson, Baron NAPOLEON JOSEPH DE MÉNEVAL. With Portraits and Autograph Letters. In three volumes. 8vo. Cloth, $2.00 per volume.

"The Baron de Méneval knew Napoleon as few knew him. He was his confidential secretary and intimate friend. . . Students and historians who wish to form a trustworthy estimate of Napoleon cannot afford to neglect this testimony by one of his most intimate associates."—London Daily News.

"Méneval has brought the living Napoleon clearly before us in a portrait, flattering no doubt, but essentially true to nature; and he has shown us what the emperor really was—at the head of his armies, in his Council of State, as the ruler of France, as the lord of the continent, above all, in the round of his daily life, and in the circle of family and home."—London Academy.

"Of all the memoirs illustrating the history of the first Napoleon—and their number is almost past counting—there is probably not one which will be found of more value to the judicious historian, or of more interest to the general reader, than these. . . . Méneval, whose memoirs were written nearly fifty years ago, had nothing either to gain or to lose; his work, from the first page to the last, impresses the reader with a deep respect for the author's talent, as well as his absolute honesty and loyalty."—N. Y. Independent.

"These memoirs constitute an important contribution to the understanding of Napoleon's character. They are evidently written in good faith, and as the writer had remarkable opportunities of observation they must be accepted as authentic testimony to the existence in Napoleon of gentle, humane, sympathetic, and amiable qualities, with which he has not been often credited."—N. Y. Sun.

General Lee.

By General FITZHUGH LEE. A new volume in the Great Commanders Series, edited by General JAMES GRANT WILSON. With Portrait and Maps. 12mo. Cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

Here is a popular biography of the great soldier which offers an intimate picture of every side of his life. It is written by his nephew and cavalry commander, a member of his family, who therefore knew him as no outsider could, and a soldier who served under him, understood his strategical conduct of his army and aided in executing many of his plans. As a military and personal biography nothing equal to this has been written. These peculiar qualifications and the convenient size of the book give it, as the publishers believe, an unexcelled rank among the biographies of this class.

An Introduction to the Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.

With a Biographical Sketch. By WILLIAM HENRY HUDSON, Associate Professor of English Literature in the Stanford University. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

"To the special student Professor Hudson's book will be useful as a storehouse of those ultimate facts which lie among the laborious details of Spencer's great work; to the general reader the volume offers an invaluable fund of information which otherwise is hardly accessible to a person whose time is divided among the thousand activities of a busy life."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

New Edition of Professor Huxley's Essays.

Collected Essays.

By THOMAS H. HUXLEY. New complete edition, with revisions, the Essays being grouped according to general subject. In nine volumes, a new Introduction accompanying each volume. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25 per volume.

Vol. I. Method and Results.
Vol. II. Darwiniana.
Vol. III. Science and Education.
Vol. IV. Science and Hebrew Tradition.
Vol. V. Science and Christian Tradition.
Vol. VI. Hume.
Vol. VII. Man's Place in Nature.
Vol. VIII. Discourses, Biological and Geological.
(Vol. IX. Nearly ready.)

"Mr. Huxley has covered a vast variety of topics during the last quarter of a century. It gives one an agreeable surprise to look over the tables of contents and note the immense territory which he has explored. To read these books carefully and studiously is to become thoroughly acquainted with the most advanced thought on a large number of topics."—New York Herald.

Climbing in the Himalayas.

By WILLIAM MARTIN CONWAY, M. A., F.R.G.S., Vice-President of the Alpine Club; formerly Professor of Art in University College, Liverpool. With 300 Illustrations, by A. D. MCCORMICK, and a Map. 8vo. Cloth, $10.00.

"This stately volume is a worthy record of a splendid journey. . . . The book is not merely the narrative of the best organized and most successful mountaineering expedition as yet made; it is a most valuable and minute account, based on first-hand evidence, of a most fascinating region of the heaven-soaring Himalayas. . . . The book is beautifully and very accurately printed. It is admirably furnished with illustrations. These set before our eyes a most fascinating gallery of sky-piercing summits."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"With its three hundred illustrations we have seldom seen a volume which speaks to the eye and understanding so pleasantly and expressively on every page. . . . We have an exhaustive panorama of the Himalayan scenery, of the manner in which the rough marching was conducted, of ascents achieved under the most dangerous conditions, and of the troubles and humors of the shifting camps where the coolies rested from their labors."—London Saturday Review.

Race and Language.

By ANDRÉ LEFÈVRE, Professor in the Anthropological School, Paris. No. 72, International Scientific Series. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

Professor Lefèvre has written in full sympathy with modern scientific research and in full possession of its latest results; moreover, he has made a book that is adapted to the needs of educated persons who are not advanced students of philology. He describes first the evolution of language, then the geographical distribution of languages and races, and closes with a somewhat comprehensive account of the Indo-European group of tongues.

The Claims of Christianity.

By WILLIAM SAMUEL LILLY, Honorary Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge; author of "The Great Enigma," etc. 8vo. Cloth, $3.50.

The author takes what might be termed the publicist's point of view, and deals with Christianity as a fact in the world's history. He discusses the claims of Buddhism and Islam, and after a masterly analysis of the development of Christianity and the church he maintains the necessity of organized spiritual power to vindicate the rights of conscience, especially in our age, when the tendency is to strengthen the state against the individual. Mr. Lilly's historical analysis and incisive discussion of the vital questions of the day form a most timely and suggestive volume.

Classical Dictionary

OF GREEK AND ROMAN BIOGRAPHY, MYTHOLOGY, AND GEOGRAPHY. Based on the Larger Dictionaries, by the late Sir WILLIAM SMITH, D. C. L., LL. D. Revised throughout, and in part rewritten, by G. E. MARINDIN, M. A., formerly Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. With numerous Maps and Illustrations. 1019 pages. 8vo. Half morocco, $6.00.

The design of this revised edition is much the same as that of the older work. Since the publication of the latter so much additional knowledge has been acquired in most branches of classical study that it has been found necessary to practically rewrite many of the articles. Sir William Smith constantly directed the revision up to the time of his death, his supervision extending over all but the last part of the book.

NEARLY READY.

City Government in the United States.

By ALFRED R. CONKLING. 12mo. Cloth, $1.00.

The awakening of the American citizen indicated in the revolts against boss and ring rules, and the formation of organizations for non-partisan and pure municipal government, render the appearance of this book peculiarly timely. The author has learned his subject by actual experience as an alderman of New York, a member of the Assembly, and a leader in municipal reform movements. He describes the departments for conducting the city's business, the methods and the abuses, and his clear presentation of his theme is illustrated by references not only to the various American cities but also to Paris, London, Glasgow, Birmingham and Berlin, which he has visited and studied in the preparation of this book. Strangely enough, in view of the value of such a work to every citizen, there is no book of equal scope.

RECENT ISSUES IN

Appletons' Town and Country Library.

Each 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

The Trail of the Sword. By GILBERT PARKER, author of "The Trespasser," "The Translation of a Savage," etc.

A Victim of Good Luck. By W. E. NORRIS, author of "Matrimony," "Mademoiselle De Mersac," etc.

Timar's Two Worlds. By MAURUS JOKAI.

Vashti and Esther. A Story of Society Today.

George Mandeville's Husband. By C. E. RAIMOND.

Dr. Janet of Harley Street. By ARABELLA KENEALY, author of "Molly and Her Man-o'-War," etc.

For sale by all booksellers; or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers,

D. APPLETON & CO., - - - 72 Fifth Avenue, New York.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY'S

Autumn Announcements.

HISTORY, BELLES-LETTRES, FICTION, AND MISCELLANEOUS.

Thiers's History of the French Revolution.

New Edition, uniform with the New Edition of Thiers's "History of the Consulate and the Empire of France." Illustrated with 41 steel engravings. 5 volumes, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00 per volume; three-fourths morocco, $5.00 per volume.

Published in monthly volumes, commencing September, 1894.

Thiers's History of the Consulate and the Empire of France.

Now complete. Illustrated with 36 steel engravings. 12 volumes, 8vo. Cloth, $36.00; half morocco, gilt top, $60.00.

Napoleon at Home.

The Daily Life of the Emperor at the Tuileries. By FREDERIC MASSON. With 12 full-page illustrations by F. DE MYRBACH. 2 volumes, 8vo.

Napoleon and the Women of His Court.

By FREDERIC MASSON. With numerous illustrations in the best style of French Art. 1 volume, 8vo.

Around a Throne.

Catherine II., of Russia, her Collaborators, her Friends, and her Favorites. By K. WALISZEWSKI, author of "Romance of an Empress." 2 volumes, 8vo, cloth.

The Marquis de La Fayette in the War of the Revolution.

With some Account of the Attitude of France toward the War of Independence. By CHARLEMAGNE TOWER, Jr., LL.D. 2 volumes, royal 8vo, cloth, gilt top, uncut.

Henry of Navarre and the Religious Wars.

By EDWARD T. BLAIR. With 55 cuts in the text and 4 full-page photogravures by BOUSSOD, VALADON ET CIE. Square 8vo.

In preparation.

Colonial Days and Dames.

By ANNE HOLLINGSWORTH WHARTON, author of "Through Colonial Doorways." Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth, extra, $1.25.

Edition de luxe limited to the number of subscribers.

Pen and Pencil Sketches.

By HENRY STACY MARKS, R. A. With 4 photogravure plates and 124 facsimile illustrations. 2 volumes, 8vo, Irish linen, gilt top, $8.00.

The Birds About Us.

By CHARLES CONRAD ABBOTT, M. D., author of "Recent Rambles," "Travels in a Tree-Top," etc. Illustrated with upwards of 75 Bird Portraits. 1 volume, 12mo. Cloth, $2.00.

A book for every lover of birds. It is written in a familiar and genial style, and is not burdened with technicalities, while being accurate in every particular.

Books and Plays.

By ALLAN MONKHOUSE. 100 printed for America. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

Irving (Washington). Sketch Book.

New Edition. 2 volumes, 12mo. Illustrated with Engravings on Wood, from Original Designs. Price in cloth, extra, gilt top, $4.00; half calf or half morocco, $7.00.

The illustrations of this edition were made for the Artist Edition, the type is new, and the size suitable for the library and the table, making the most desirable edition of this popular classic now published.

Madonna and Other Poems.

By HARRISON S. MORRIS. Illustrated. 1 volume, 12mo. Extra cloth, $2.00.

This is the first collected edition of the author's poems, many of which have never previously appeared. The edition is printed from type, and limited to 750 copies for America and England.

Sorrow and Song.

By COULSON KERNAHAN, author of "A Book of Strange Sins," "A Dead Man's Diary," etc. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

Society in China.

An account of the everyday life of the Chinese people—Social, Political and Religious. By ROBERT K. DOUGLAS, Keeper of the Oriental Books and Manuscripts in the British Museum; Professor of Chinese at King's College. The illustrations are in collotype from the original drawings by Chinese artists and from photographs. 8vo. Mandarin cloth extra, with 22 illustrations, $4.50.

The Autobiography of a Boy.

Passages selected by his friend, G. S. STREET. (450 copies only printed. 150 printed for America.) 16mo. Cloth, $1.25 net.

The title-page from a design by C. W. Furse.

Hazlitt (William). Liber Amoris.

A newly printed edition containing numerous passages omitted in the editions of 1823. The volume will contain a fine reproduction of William Bewick's chalk drawing of William Hazlitt, a facsimile of a letter from Hazlitt to Rathmore, and one of Sarah Walker to Hazlitt (the only one known to exist). Edition limited to 400 copies for England and 100 for America. Price $6.00 net.

Carlyle's (Thomas) Translations.

3 volumes. 8vo. Uniform with the Ashburton Edition of his works. Cloth, $7.50.

The Works of Laurence Sterne.

Edited by GEORGE SAINTSBURY, with illustrations by E. J. WHEELER. 6 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $6.00; half calf and half morocco, $13.50; large paper edition, 6 volumes, buckram, $18.00.

Published in connection with Dent & Co., of London.

Corinne, or Italy.

By MADAME DE STAEL. Translated. With illustrations. 2 volumes. Cloth, $2.00; half calf and half morocco, $4.50; large paper edition, 2 volumes, buckram $6.00.

Published in connection with Dent & Co., of London.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY'S AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENTS—Continued.

Early English Ballads.

Illustrated with about 200 illustrations. 4 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $5.00; half calf or half morocco, $10.00.

Published in connection with Dent & Co., of London.

Tom Cringle's Log.

By MICHAEL SCOTT. 2 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $2.00; half calf or half morocco, $4.50.

Cruise of the Midge.

By MICHAEL SCOTT. 2 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $2.00; half calf or half morocco, $4.50.

The brilliant papers that make up these volumes were commenced in Blackwood's Magazine in 1829. Coleridge, in his "Table-Talk," spoke of them as "most excellent." Wilson, in "Noctes Ambrosianæ," says, "Cringle indeed is a giant."

Burns (Robert). Poetical Works.

Complete. Chronologically Arranged, with Notes, Glossaries and Index. By W. SCOTT DOUGLAS. 3 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $2.25; half calf, $5.00.

In this edition the poems of Burns are presented unabridged and untampered with, and arranged in chronological order, the date of each composition being recorded.

Thomas A'Kempis's Imitation of Christ.

Edited by CANON FARRAR. Illustrated by new and quaint illustrations. Illuminated with Initial Letters, making the most desirable edition published. Price, in cloth, $1.50; limp morocco, $4.00.

Published in connection with Methuen & Co., of London.

Stanford's Compendium of Geography and Travel, for General Reading.

New Issue. Based on Hellwald's "Die Erde und ihre Völker." Translated by Professor A. H. KEANE, M. A. I. A series of volumes descriptive of the Great Divisions of the Globe. With Maps, Ethnological Appendices and several hundred illustrations.

Messrs. J. B. Lippincott Company announce that they have arranged with the English publisher for the publication in this country of his NEW EDITIONS of compends

Australasia.

Volume I.—Australia and New Zealand. By ALFRED B. WALLACE, LL. D., D. C. L., F. R. S. With many maps and illustrations. Crown 8vo. Price $4.50.

Volume II. ready shortly. To be followed by volumes on North America, Europe, Asia, Africa and South America.

Chambers's Concise Gazetteer of the World.

Topographical, Statistical and Historical. 1 volume, crown 8vo. Uniform with Reader's Reference Library. Half morocco, $2.50.

This work does not claim to be exhaustive. Its aim has been to tell everything that may be reasonably wanted about every place likely to be looked for.

My First Book.

The Experiences of Walter Besant, James Payn, W. Clark Russell, Grant Allen, Hall Caine, George R. Sims, Rudyard Kipling, A. Conan Doyle, M. E. Braddon, F. W. Robinson, H. Rider Haggard, R. M. Ballantyne, I. Zangwill, Morley Roberts, David Christie Murray, Marie Corelli, Jerome K. Jerome, John Strange Winter, Bret Harte, "I," Robert Louis Stevenson and Robert Buchanan. With an Introduction by JEROME K. JEROME. Profusely illustrated.

A New Novel by W. E. Norris.

Matthew Austin.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In "Lippincott's Series of Select Novels" for October.

A New Novel by Mrs. D. M. Croker, author of "A Third Person," etc.

Mr. Jervis.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In "Lippincott's Series of Select Novels" for November.

A New Novel by Effie Adelaide Rowlands, author of "My Pretty Jane," etc.

The Spell of Ursula.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In "Lippincott's Series of Select Novels" for December.

A New Novel by Rosa Nouchette Carey.

The Old, Old Story.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Ready in September.

A New Novel by Captain Charles King, U. S. A.

Under Fire.

Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A New Novel by Julien Gordon, author of "A Diplomatic Diary," etc.

Poppæa.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Ready in October.

A New Novel by W. E. Norris.

The Despotic Lady.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Ready in November.

A Volume of South Sea Island Stories by Louis Becke.

By Reef and Palm.

With Introduction by Lord PEMBROKE. Tall 16mo, cloth, 75 cents.

Ready in October.

A New Novel by James Payn.

In Market Overt.

Copyrighted edition in preparation.

A Volume of Short Stories by Mrs. L. T. Mead, author of "The Honorable Miss," etc.

Stories from the Diary of a Doctor.

24 full-page illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A Remarkable Story of Adventure by Wm. Laird Clowes, author of "The Captain of the Mary Rose," etc.

The Double Emperor.

With 8 full-page illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A Book for Young Girls, by Amy E. Blanchard, author of "Twenty Little Maidens."

Two Girls.

Illustrated by IDA WAUGH. 12mo, cloth, extra, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A Book for Girls by Mrs. Molesworth.

Olivia.

Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, upon receipt of price by the publishers,

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, 715 & 717 Market Street, Philadelphia.

The Literary World

Vol. XXV BOSTON 22 SEPTEMBER 1894 No. 19

CONTENTS

The Matchmaker 299
Trilby 299
The Claims of Christianity 300
Scarabs 300
Eyes Like the Sea 301
Pain, Pleasure, and Æsthetics . . . 301
Fiction:
  A Scarlet Poppy 301
  The Water Ghost and Others 301
  Mad Sir Uchtred 302
  Red Diamonds 302
  The Husband of One Wife 302
  The Silver Christ 302
  Jinny and His Partners 302
  Not for Profit 302
  Marsena and Other Stories of the War Time . 302
  Seven Little Australians 302
  The Fur Seal's Tooth 302
Poetry:
  A Reminiscence of the Jubilee Revival of "Le Roi s'amuse." Theodore Watts . . . 304
  Nursery Rhyme Adapted 304
Publishers' Announcements 304
Periodicals 312

THE MATCHMAKER.*

MRS. L. B. WALFORD may not be an especially brilliant writer, but she is certainly a very pleasant story-teller and her novels are always free from vulgarity and immorality. The scene of her latest book is in Scotland at the castle of Lord Carnoustie. Lord and Lady Carnoustie and their three daughters are amusingly described. He is interested in nothing but farming; his wife is an autocrat and rules her daughters with a rod of iron. The two elder daughters, aged respectively thirty-five and thirty-three, come to their mother for advice of every kind. If they want to read a book they must ask her; if they wish to change their gowns or take a walk they must go first and see what "dear mamma says." The youngest daughter, who is twenty-six years old, is always called "little one," and appears at dinner dressed in white muslin with a blue sash.

The plot turns on the introduction into this family circle of a cousin from London who is a thorough girl of the period. Lady Carnoustie, who invariably talks to her daughters as if they were still in the nursery, advises them, in one of the most amusing scenes in the book, as to their treatment of their cousin:

> You, Louisa [Louisa is thirty-five], might try to get her to take an interest in intellectual pursuits. Lead the conversation to the pleasures of music and reading, that is, the reading of good authors, such as Macaulay and Motley. Motley is very safe, and Macaulay's History, with the exception of some portions of the reign of Charles II, which you know I always ruled out for you, is good reading for any girl. But, my dear Louisa, be careful with some others which you have lately been asking me about. For instance, George Eliot. Although you may get no harm from George Eliot, her writings are not at all for girls of twenty like Penelope; and you know even you only read some of her books. The safest way for her will be to apply first to you and then together you can bring under my notice the author she desires to study.

Penelope had had the run of her father's library ever since she was old enough to mount the ladder.

The book is full of entertaining scenes, and the reader of light novels will find some hours of amusement here.

TRILBY.*

SINCE the final number of Trilby appeared in the August Harper's the newspapers have been filled with such a chorus of indiscriminate praise and blame that it has become difficult to distinguish the intrinsic merit of Mr. Du Maurier's novel from the interest aroused in it by circumstances quite unconnected with its literary value. Column after column has been written about the "Moral Aspect of Trilby." One writer attacks Harper's Magazine for publishing such a story, saying, "It is like a stab in the dark when publications which have lain beside one's Bible enter the thin edge of an exquisite art beneath the morality of those who trust them;" another writer says it is "a very evil-thinking morality which can find Trilby immoral;" while one writes, "The world would be better were it filled with Trilbies," another declares that motherhood en masse has been attacked by Du Maurier in his "covert sneers" at Mrs. Bagot, and that "the peace of Trilby's death is an implied reproach to the religion which would have taught her repentance and faith;" while yet another correspondent writes enthusiastically, "The dogs of the household have been rechristened Taffy, the Laird, and Little Billee, and Trilbyism will become henceforth the word to express all that is charming and lovable in woman."

One might tire of all this volunteer criticism were it not interesting and instructive to examine the absolutely uncritical methods of these correspondents and to observe how entirely each one judges from the standpoint of his own personal prejudice and individual standard of ethics. All this newspaper discussion, however, has been a capital advertisement for Trilby, and Mr. Du Maurier and the Harpers ought to be as grateful to the special correspondents as they doubtless are to Mr. Whistler for his attacks. A great deal has been said about the characters in Trilby having all been drawn from life, yet no one seems to know from whom Taffy and the Laird are drawn, and had not Mr. Whistler complained so vociferously that the cap of "Joe Sibley" fitted him we fancy no one would have discovered it. The place once occupied by references to Joe Sibley Mr. Du Maurier has filled with a description of Antony, a Swiss, who is exactly the opposite to Whistler in character and appearance. The irony of the substitution must amuse Mr. Whistler himself. Antony is described as being "devoid of self-conceit," "recklessly generous," and "the gentlest and most lovable creature that ever lived," without an enemy in the world. Little Billee is generally believed to have been a young English artist of great promise, named Fred Walker, who died before his fame had gone beyond a small artistic circle.

The story of Trilby and her "three nice, clean Englishmen" is too well known to need analysis here; probably no novel published in serial form since Daniel Deronda has been as widely read. It is not, then, with the plot that we wish to concern ourselves, but with the peculiar charm of Mr. Du Maurier's style which makes Trilby and Peter Ibbetson such remarkable books. Almost every one will agree that the construction of Mr. Du Maurier's plots is faulty and that he is lacking in sustained power. The first half of Trilby, like the first half of Peter Ibbetson, is incomparably stronger than the last half; and yet what delightful books they are from beginning to end, and how ungrateful a task it is to discriminate between the Trilby of the early studio days and La Svengali.

Nowhere except in Victor Hugo's Notre Dame are there such vivid descriptions of Paris as those in Trilby and in Peter Ibbetson, and yet it seems to us that great as are Mr. Du Maurier's descriptive powers the point where he peculiarly excels is in making his readers feel that intangible thing — the charm of personality. Other authors tell us about the personal charm of their heroes and heroines. We try to take their word for it, for who should know if not they? But it is not brought home to us. Mr. Du Maurier alone has found the secret of bringing his readers completely under the glamour of the personality of his characters. Our minds may think that Trilby is too long and that it would have been more artistic if more condensed, but who in his heart could wish one word about Trilby or Little Billee unsaid?

Mr. Du Maurier has all the charm of a middle-aged, slightly garrulous after-dinner talker, all the charm and all the inequality. Like the after-dinner talker, too, he does not always know when he has reached his climax. What, for instance, could be more delightful than the account of Trilby's singing "Ben Bolt" in the studio; but compare this with the description of the Paris concert. Here Mr. Du Maurier rambles on through page after page of wordy enthusiasm, written apparently because, having once heard such a concert, he is so carried away by his reminiscences that he doesn't know when he has said enough. We have, it is only fair to say, met Du Maurier enthusiasts, more loyal than discerning, who not only profess to have enjoyed every word of the concert, but even assert that they could have read pages more without a qualm.

---

*The Matchmaker. By L. B. Walford. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.50.

*Trilby. By George Du Maurier. Harper & Brothers.

We should, however, gladly forgive Mr. Du Maurier greater faults than his occasional long-windedness for the sake of his frank romanticism. Herein lies the secret of the success of his novels. The world is tired of Kodak pictures of the dreary commonplaces of life. We have been too long steeped in morbidness, sorrow, and despair. Surely there is some joy left in the world in spite of the modern novelist. We cannot believe that all wives are unfaithful, all friends disloyal, all daughters in "revolt;" nor even that "all men are liars," however much our recent school of authoresses reiterate the word of the psalmist. So when Mr. Du Maurier comes with his cheerful view of life, still believing in loyalty, enthusiasm, and the joy of living, his books are like flashes of sunshine to lighten the pessimism of modern fiction.

THE CLAIMS OF CHRISTIANITY.*

As a thinker, William Samuel Lilly is vigorous and manly; as a critic, he is fair-minded and even generous; as a writer, he is clear and effective. The fact that he is a Catholic only adds to the interest of this book, since the opportunities for Protestants to understand and appreciate the position of cultivated, thoughtful Catholics on questions now confronting the modern world are comparatively rare and incomplete. The volume has the writer's usual surplus of quotation, with original matter enough to make out a small book only.

Mr. Lilly reduces the claims of Christianity (here one may consider the word merely a synonymous term for the Catholic Church) to two: it is the sole sufficient oracle of divine truth, and it is not only a theology but also a community — not a religion, but a church. He considers these claims first as regards other competing religions and then as touching secular society. Considering the chief tests of the vitality of a creed to be fidelity to its original idea and its power of propagation, he devotes small space to Buddhism. He accepts the conclusions of Prof. J. Estlin Carpenter on the relations of Buddhism and Christianity, though he includes here letters from Cardinal Newman and Prof. T. W. Rhys-Davids on this subject, the latter of whom he calls "far and away the most competent man living to decide these points." The claims of Islam he considers more important, and his chapter on Mohammedanism is one of the fairest, most definite, and comprehensive short reviews of this religion that have ever come in our way. Mr. Lilly confesses that it answers his two demands for the vitality of a creed. He tells us that its converts during the last half century vastly outnumber those of Christianity, and that it has made far more proselytes from Christendom than we from Islam. He points out, however, the difference between its crude realism and the perfect idealism of Jesus. He claims that it has no principle of development, and he well says, "To live is to change; and the fact that the Founder of Christianity inculcated principles rather than laid down rules is one main source of its marvelous fecundity." He presents clearly the views of Syed Ameer Ali, judge of the high court in Bengal, the most effective spokesman of Islam today, but he dismisses them with the remark that the creed advocated would hardly be recognized as their own by the fifty millions of Indian Mussulmans. He calls it "a sort of sublimated essence of Mohammedanism, a rationalized Islam," and compares these beliefs with those of M. Renan, who never gave up the name of Christian. It is interesting and entertaining to compare this judgment with what the critic himself says later (p. 242), "I speak of Catholicism as rationally understood; I do not speak of it as understood by Neapolitan lazzaroni or Spanish peasants."

Mr. Lilly proceeds to study the alliance between Christianity and society in the Middle Ages, exhibiting the ideal which dominated life and noting how it was affected by the Renaissance and the Reformation. There is much in this study which one would like to quote and consider, but perhaps the closing chapter is more important. He considers the office of the Church today to be that of confronting the Zeit-geist so far as its tendency is to throw off moral guidance and to adopt the philosophy which makes life its own end; it must assert and satisfy the spiritual needs of human nature. Belief in the supernatural the author considers an "ineradicable element of our nature," and this the Catholic Church presents in its most precise and concrete form. He calls the Church to consider the necessity laid upon it to meet present intellectual conditions, to deal with and answer "the problems specially characteristic of this new age." He asks, "Is it not clear that the tone of the great masters of modern literature, through whom these problems have found concrete expression from Goethe until now, is, on the whole, alien from Catholicism, if not opposed to it? . . . Philosophy must expand in order to deal with the fresh problems raised by modern physics and modern metaphysics. We must cheerfully, nay thankfully, accept all verities that the newer schools of philosophy have to teach us about the intellectual constitution of man, all facts that the masters of physical science" can tell us; but in this domain, too, the Catholic Church will make good the claim of Christianity in the new age.

SCARABS.*

The title-page of this book extends to thirty-four lines, and the punctuation of the whole volume is far from classical, the semicolon in particular being obtrusive and very much out of place. These are symptoms of a deficient literary style which is more or less noticeable throughout. But the book as to substance is really a careful study, and contains a vast amount of curious and recondite information about those odd little relics of the Egypt of the past, the scarabs, or sacred beetles, in their imitations of stone. Mr. Myer is a member of sundry learned societies, an antiquary and archæologist of industry and attainment, and this book is an expansion of an address given by him before the American Numismatic Society in 1893. The sacred scarabæus is to be taken as the symbol of immortality and resurrection among the ancient Egyptians. The living insect was found throughout the East; it was black and about an inch and a half in length. This is the ingenious engineering creature which encases its eggs in little balls and rolls them along over the ground. The Egyptian worshiped it, and fashioned likenesses of it in stone into amulets and charms, which he wore upon his person and bore with him to his burial. Egyptian tombs and mummies yield up these scarabs of past generations in great profusion, and the immense collection in the British Museum and at Ghizeh, near Cairo, are full of them — the shops of the Jewish counterfeiters, we add with grief, as well.

Into the whole history and philosophy of the scarab as a religious token Mr. Myer has gone deeply in these nearly two hundred pages. When we remark that all that Appletons' Encyclopædia has to say of it is contained in less than a single column, the reader can conclude how exhaustive Mr. Myer's treatment is. The history of the scarab as a fabrication, the beautiful and delicate carvings and inscriptions with which it was often covered, the classification of the various sorts, the way in which it was worn, the significance of it to the devout Egyptian, the tricks of the forgers in modern times, and the Phœnician and Etruscan relations of the Egyptian family are the chief topics traversed in his ten chapters. There is an introduction, an index, and a table of contents. A few illustrations, even a single one, would have been a great addition. How Miss Amelia B. Edwards reveled in scarabs and the philosophy of them! Egyptological students will find Mr. Myer a helpful guide, but, we repeat, the punctuation of his printers is dreadful.

---

* The Claims of Christianity. By W. S. Lilly. D. Appleton & Co. $3.50.

* Scarabs. By Isaac Myer, LL.B. New York: Edwin W. Dayton. $1.75.

EYES LIKE THE SEA.*

OF Maurus Jókai's one hundred and fifty novels only two or three have been translated into English, and none of these have shown him in the light of a humorist, and yet it is as a humorist that he is most honored in Hungary. Mr. R. Nisbet Bain, the clever translator of A Tengerszemä Hölgy, or Eyes Like the Sea, as he calls it, says in his preface that he has chosen the book to translate as being perhaps the most humorous of the author's works. The humor here is of that quality which is as far removed from satire as it is from tragedy. Jókai tells his story in the first person, and tells it in the charming, easy-going fashion with which Sterne delights us in The Sentimental Journey. Bessy, the heroine, is cleverly and amusingly sketched as a woman with five husbands and an insatiable fund of sentiment. She holds the reader's sympathy in spite of her matrimonial escapades and want of moral sense, but the chief interest of the book lies in the autobiographical pictures Jókai gives us of his career in the revolution of 1848. The sketch of Petöfi, too, the gallant young Hungarian poet who disappeared on one of the battlefields in 1848, leaving behind him two or three lyrics which those who know them rank with Shelley's best, is extremely interesting.

On the whole Eyes Like the Sea gives one a better idea of Jókai's power than any of his books as yet translated into English, although the plot is of the slightest, indeed there can hardly be said to be any real plot to the book. Jókai's own character and that of his wife are very cleverly indicated, while Bessy's character, or rather want of character, is carefully elaborated, and we are led to look at her with the same humorous tolerance which Jókai felt toward her vagaries. The situations into which Bessy leads Jókai are full of humor, and although the lamentable lack of construction in Eyes Like the Sea is sometimes tiresome, one cannot help being amused by the book.

PAIN, PLEASURE, AND ÆSTHETICS.†

IN this careful volume the notions of pleasure and pain receive, if we mistake not, one of the most thorough treatments in the history of physiology and psychology. Mr. Marshall, who writes his preface from New York, is evidently a close student of these two sciences in all their relations, and his conclusions are such that they commend themselves to the ordinary mind as in harmony with common experience, and to the philosophic intelligence as likely to introduce unity into a much disturbed field of discussion. His subject is more distinctly psychological than æsthetic, and a brief summary of his main positions may be allowed to pass by the applications of his principles to art. Mr. Marshall holds in his introduction that there is no necessary antagonism between the scientific and the artistic minds, but that the former is properly subordinate to the latter: "Science must always follow where creative genius leads, in whatever direction it is developed."

The reader who desires to obtain a clear idea of Mr. Marshall's results without following the detailed argument finds his way made singularly easy, for each chapter begins with an "introductory summary," which states these results in plain language, referring to the fuller "technical treatment" which follows. A cardinal matter at the outset is proper classification. Mr. Marshall clears the way finely by this rejection of pleasure and pain as emotions; of course they are not sensations in the proper sense of the word:

> If we attempt to classify pleasure and pain with the emotions, however, we are compelled to claim that pleasures and pains are themselves emotions, and thus defend a more complete separation of pleasure-pain from sensation than will be acknowledged; or else we must practically identify emotions and pleasure-pain, adopting the theory that emotions are mere complexes of pleasures and pains. . . . This latter hypothesis, however, is one which I think is without warrant. The impossibility of this classification of pleasure-pain with emotion, which becomes apparent when we consider their marked difference of quality, is emphasized especially when we take note of the very diverse manner of their rise into consciousness. There is no typical emotion which fades into another, as pleasure does into pain, without other marked changes in the mental states involved, nor is there any which is aroused both by such simple states as mere sensations and by the most complex of states as well.

The conclusion reached is "that pleasures and pains may be differential qualities of all mental states, of such nature that one of them must, and either of them may, under their proper conditions, belong to any element of consciousness." Seeking to determine, in two elaborate chapters, the "physical basis of pleasure and pain," Mr. Marshall finds that "pleasure and pain are primitive qualities of psychic states which are determined by the relation between activity and capacity in the organs, the activities of which are concomitants of the psychoses [complex mental states] involved." So "pleasure is experienced whenever the physical activity, coincident with the psychic state to which the pleasure is attracted, involves the use of surplus stored force — the resolution of surplus potential into actual energy; or, in other words, whenever the energy involved in the reaction to a stimulus is greater in amount than the energy which the stimulus habitually calls forth."

One more quotation must suffice, on the distinction between the beautiful and the ugly, under this theory:

> That object is to be considered beautiful which produces a psychosis that is permanently pleasurable in revival. Each pleasure may form an element of impression in an æsthetic complex; but only those pleasures are judged to be æsthetic which (relatively speaking) are permanently pleasurable in memory — the non-æsthetic, so called, pleasures of memory being merely pleasures in name, psychoses non-pleasurable themselves in revival, but to which, for one reason or another, the word "pleasure" still clings. . . . That object is to be considered ugly which produces a psychosis that is permanently disagreeable in revival.

Mr. Marshall's treatise is one that psychologists of every school will henceforth have to reckon with. The bearings of his theory on ethics are as obvious as they are important. We believe that they will justify scientifically the deep distinction which the ordinary mind has always made between pleasure and conscience, between happiness and duty.

FICTION.

A Scarlet Poppy.

Seven pleasantly told short stories make up Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spofford's latest book with this title. The stories are all entertaining and well written, although they are not remarkable in any respect. But pleasantly told stories of amusing incident are always welcome reading, even if they are not distinguished by power of style or keen analysis of character. In the long autumn evenings, before the winter's occupations and distractions become absorbing, a good book which can be read aloud without fear of boring the oldest or corrupting the youngest of the family is not to be despised; and for such a purpose we are glad to cordially recommend Mrs. Spofford's Scarlet Poppy. — Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

The Water Ghost and Others.

Mr. John Kendrick Bangs' previous stories have been ingenious and animated, but their quality has occasionally suffered from the too evident attempt to be continuously amusing. Jesting is excellent as a condiment, but one wearies of it if it is strongly insisted on. It is much easier to strike the happy medium between too much and too little when one compresses a narrative into the limits of a short story, and this fact Mr. Bangs seems to recognize. These eight tales are all ghost or "psychic" stories, and the subjects lend themselves admirably to Mr. Bangs' fun, the wit seeming to belong naturally to the situations. The Water Ghost and the Spectre Cook of Bangletop afford much information as to the proper mode of dealing with and suppressing traditional spooks who annoy owners and tenants of houses by their nocturnal wanderings. Several of the other stories are equally good, that is, they are interesting besides being funny. — Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

---

* Eyes Like the Sea. By Maurus Jókai. Translated by R. Nisbet Bain. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.

† Pain, Pleasure, and Æsthetics. An Essay concerning the Psychology of Pain and Pleasure, with special reference to Æsthetics. By Henry Rutgers Marshall, M.A. Macmillan & Co. $3.00.

Mad Sir Uchtred.

In some people's minds the idea that complex sentences and early English style mean one and the same thing seems deeply rooted. In Mad Sir Uchtred Mr. S. R. Crockett had an excellent plot, and as the incidents of the story are quite pathetic the book would have been a delightful one were it not for the tedious and artificial English in which it is written. The scene is laid in the time of the persecution of the Scotch Covenanters. Sir Uchtred has denied his former faith to curry favor with the king, and betrays his old pastor, who curses him with "the curse of madness." After years of wandering Sir Uchtred regains his reason through his wife's trust and confidence. Of course the story is romantic and unrealistic, but it would have been a charming little tale had not Mr. Crockett attempted to give it such a preternaturally antiquated flavor. — Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

Red Diamonds.

Though Mr. Justin McCarthy's story of the blood-reddened diamonds opens with the description of an absolutely impossible and ridiculous American, Seth Chickering, who deposits an enormous amount of valuable diamonds with an entire stranger at a club dining table, this monstrosity is promptly murdered in the second chapter, and with him disappear all absurdity and unreality. The story thereafter moves on with much spirit and plenty of incident through various attempted murders by sword, by pistol, and by poison, through intrigue and complication, to a highly satisfactory end. A complete lack of humor mars the interest of the book, which is, however, clever enough to show the hand of the author of A History of Our Own Times, though not brilliant enough to add to his fame or reputation. — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

The Husband of One Wife.

This novel might more properly be entitled "The Three Husbands of One Wife," for in that number does the young and beautiful heroine rejoice. The husband (so she states to her third mate in the last pages of the book) is the entirely impossible clerical gentleman to whom she was married as her second "venture." She also declares, in none too tactful or alluring a manner, while nursing the child of her last consort, that the real child of her heart was the child of her first husband. As such a creature could never have existed in real life and is entirely a creation of fancy, a whim of the author, it matters little what she says; yet the presentment of her irresponsibility, waywardness, willfulness, erratic tenderness, and abnormal hardness of heart makes her story a thing of interest and even of pleasure, to which the realistic invalids and idiots who also figure, far too prominently, in Mrs. Venn's pages form a grewsome even a revolting foil. The story is told in a spirited and cheerful manner, with much vivid and dramatic description. — Harper & Brothers.

The Silver Christ.

Ouida's short stories are a continual delight. Their simplicity and directness, their truth and tenderness, their reflections of peasant thought and the purity of their form keep them always fresh and new. The two stories in this volume are not of her very best, but they are good and, like the others, unforgettable. The first is the story of an unlettered workingman, wounded in soul, hurt almost unto death by the one woman he loved, the only woman who took his thoughts from the uncompromising severity of his daily toil. It is the story, too, of a restless ambition beating its wings against prison bars, longing for wider and more varied flights, careless of means or the fates of others. The instinctive, unreasoning passion of the peasant boy wars sharply with his fear of offending supernatural powers by sacrilege; but the impatient relentlessness of Santina's swift mind wins its pitiless victory, and she goes into the world with the money gained by the sale of the silver Gesu dug up at night in the churchyard. These are common people all, dwellers in the Pistoian hills. Their story is so simple that it might almost be told in a paragraph, yet it is dramatic and strong.

The second story is the pitiful history of two cramped lives, of which one was a day laborer for whom "the weir had no song, the orchard no poem, the mountains no counsel, and the vales no charm;" the other was his daughter, an Italian child-woman who pined for her dead lover and cared only to make a pilgrimage to his grave. — Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

Jinny and His Partners.

Mr. James Otis, as a writer of books for boys, has a special field in which he reigns practically alone at present. Other writers may like to choose their heroes from the lower ranks of society occasionally, but usually some piece of rare good fortune lifts them high and dry above the conditions in which we first find them. Mr. Otis, while he does not disdain occasional windfalls of good luck, writes of homeless boys with an appreciation of the amenities that soften their lot and with an evident belief that the best fairy godmother any boy can have is a willingness to work hard and make the most of each chance for improvement. The boys in this book are a step above "bootblacks and fellers what sells newspapers;" they are licensed vendors, and the story describes their attempt to keep house on the coöperative plan. As in Jenny's Boarding House, a lost baby plays an important part in the story. — A. I. Bradley & Co. $1.00.

Not for Profit.

Fannie E. Newberry is entitled to considerable credit for planning such a story as this. She takes a New England spinster, Miss Thirza Bascom, and transports her from her modest home to a fine house in Chicago, which has just been left to her, together with a moderate fortune, by an uncle. Being very philanthropic, this good and unsophisticated woman at once fills up her large new house with lodgers, not for profit, but especially for their benefit. She soon has a young couple, two schoolmistresses, two lake captains, two lively young men, and a secretive, suspicious foreigner. The daily life is not without jars and complications, as these people are brought together at the breakfast table and in the evening. Presently mysteries are apparent which the simple-minded and straightforward hostess cannot understand. She generally shows herself equal to the occasion, and for a country-born and country-reared woman is easily at home in the big city; but anarchists and dynamite do disturb her equanimity, and the end must have been as great a surprise to her as to the reader. — A. I. Bradley & Co. $1.25.

Marsena and Other Stories of the War Time.

The best story in Mr. Harold Frederic's new volume is "The Eve of the Fourth;" the picture which he gives of the crowd that used to hang about the post office when the mail was expected after a great battle is most interesting, and the description of the simple village life in the days when almost all the able-bodied men of the little village of "Octavius" were away at the war is very touching. All these stories have points of interest, but Mr. Frederic is a trifle long-winded and many of his details are quite unnecessary and tiresome, and the reader has many pages to wade through before he reaches the point of the stories. On the whole Mr. Frederic is much better as a novelist than as a short story teller. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.

Seven Little Australians.

There is a tendency on the part of some writers of juvenile books to give attractive accounts of the reckless adventures, misdoings, tricks, and disobedience of children. The children are made so very bright and charming that there is danger, great danger, that their offenses will be condoned on that account, and that the influence will be unfavorable on the minds of young readers. The writer of this brilliant and captivating book, Ethel S. Turner, has fallen into this error; but a graver mistake is in portraying a father so monstrously cruel and unfatherly as Captain Woolcot. The seven little Australians are strongly individualized — an untended, lawless, original band of brothers and sisters, full of pranks, rebellions, and daring, but with a pathetic devotion to one another intensified by their fear and dread of their father. Unfortunately they have a vocabulary of slang not to be commended, though potent on their tongues. Poor "Judy" is too winsome to have met with such a fate, though an ethical purpose may have been in the author's mind. — Ward, Lock & Bowden. $1.00.

The Fur Seal's Tooth.

Mr. Kirk Munroe is an indefatigable writer of books for boys, and promises fair to produce as large a library as Oliver Optic or Mr. Horatio Alger. Fortunately his books are much better worth reading and deserve a large measure of the popularity they enjoy among their young readers, though such an episode as is described here in Chapter III has a distinct flavor of Alger. Mr. Munroe takes his young hero through many varied and exciting adventures in Behring Sea and the Northwest bays. He is an independent, careless fellow, with a remarkable facility for getting into scrapes, only equaled by his good luck in getting out of them. He manages to lose himself most ingeniously, and his father has a long search after him. The fur seal's tooth passes through quite as many queer experiences, and even at the last the fated talisman is still on its travels instead of reposing, carefully guarded, in a cabinet, safe at last from thieves and careless boys. — Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

It would appear to be a popular notion that any kind of a story, if prettily printed and bound, will suffice for the summer reader; but when one has thrilled through summer hours over The Prisoner of Zenda and The Ebb Tide the commonplace pages of the three tales, "The Hon. Stanbury," "Poor Miss Skeet," and "An Indigent Gentlewoman," told "by two" in the Incognito Library, are indeed hard to follow. It is somewhat disheartening, too, to find that the labor of two brains proved necessary for the production of this book, but it is pleasing to know that the names of these brain-owners remain incognito. The sole novel detail is found in the third story, and is disclosed in the employment provided for the poor lady of the tale. She is hired out to care for and decorate graves, and finds a bitter though empty revenge in refusing to be paid for caring for the grave of the lover who deserted her. This story of hopeless struggle against poverty ends gloomily, as do the other tales in the book. — G. P. Putnam's Sons.

The reader of My Pretty Jane, by Effie Adelaide Rowlands, will be prejudiced by finding the author's picture as a frontispiece. One hardly cares to read an unknown face through three hundred pages; it interferes with the reader's mind-picture of the heroine, but the story itself is very readable. The heroine, Jane, is a true-hearted, lovable little English girl of seventeen, whose idolized father makes an unfortunate second marriage. Jane's stepmother was a girl scarcely older than herself, who for mercenary motives and cold-blooded cruelty is quite unexcelled. There is an old lover of the stepmother's whose acquaintance with Jane is the cause of almost unending misery. The story is charmingly simple in style, and contains a good many bits of humor as well as warm-hearted pathos. It is the sort of book that would be particularly fascinating and not unhelpful to a girl of "My Pretty Jane's" age. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

A Flower of France, "a story of old Louisiana," by Marah Ellis Ryan, is an attractive romance of colonial times. There is a warmth and richness in the old New Orleans days that is totally unlike the atmosphere of our historical New England stories. It is refreshing, too, in the midst of modern, abrupt, disjointed realism to come across a story like this Flower of France, which has plot and action, where the bad people die and the good who love each other live. The story is prettily told, with enough villainy and excitement to throw high lights on the happy ending. — Chicago: Rand, McNally & Co.

— The death of Mr. Walter Pater deprives English literature of a writer of singular grace and charm. He was not popular, and probably austere critics would deny him the epithet great. Yet he has a fascination that great writers often want. He had a theory that prose is the representative art of the time, and in his own writings he strove after the completeness of expression and the finish which are the ultimate aim of the artist. His devotion to art for art's sake was sometimes urged as an argument against him. It cannot be denied that he was cloistered and academical. He lacked that keenness of interest in men and their varied movements which distinguished such masters of prose as Burke, Carlyle, and Newman, and which must always distinguish poets even of the second rank. His limitations were sharp and occasionally surprising. Those who admired him most frequently regretted that he did not step out into the world and do a little rough shouldering there. It might have braced him by curing him of his besetting sin of "preciousness," and it would certainly have brought him into closer touch with common humanity. But it was his mission to devote himself to the ideal both in man and in art, and none can say that he neglected his opportunities. Excellence was his passion since he could not have absolute perfection. Every sentence he wrote was, in his own words, a "matter of design and skilled practice, highly conscious of itself as an art, and, above all, correct." He detested the informal and the unprofessional. The business of the man of letters, to his mind, was to produce literature, and he would be idle rather than occasional. A consummate master of literary structure "or architecture," he planned his paragraphs with a vigilant eye to effect, and no man better understood the temper of words or showed a greater tenderness in using them. And the harmonies they yielded were often quite marvelous. His extreme fastidiousness naturally made him a slow producer. Though an inveterate worker his books are by no means voluminous. But every page is a model of style, and may be read and reread with increasing delight and profit. He had immense resources. His was rather the inspiration of the full mind than of the empty pocket. One has only to note the allusions in his essays to all kinds of books and authors to understand how widely and how well he had read. As a critic he was remarkable for sanity and catholicity. The petty and accidental he ignored; but he had a quick and true eye for essentials, and his essays on Coleridge and Wordsworth and Lamb and Sir Thomas Browne are among the best in the language. Sound as criticism, they are also beyond all praise as examples of English prose. — Publishers' Circular.

— A London writer in the Chicago Times asked Mr. Zangwill whether he was a writer of comedy or of tragedy. The author's characteristic reply was as follows: "Is not that a little unfair to any Zangwill society which may be started after my death? You would leave them nothing to discuss. But, anyway, I object to being labeled. The other day I was asked to write another Jewish story. I replied that I would not be shut up in the ghetto. It seems to me that we in England specialize too much. On the Continent a man may be good all round. Victor Hugo, Goethe, Wagner — with whom I don't mean to compare myself for an instant — none of them confined themselves to a single medium. I have many things to say, and I prefer to cast each in the form to which it is best suited. For example, I told you I am fond of psychology. Now, in my opinion, philosophy has suffered because philosophers, as a rule, have cultivated neither literature nor humor. I believe that any system of philosophy could be put into twenty brightly written pages, if one had the gift of literature, and I should like to make the attempt. Then, again, I have a volume of poems coming out shortly. I have had excellent offers to deliver a lecture in various parts of the country. At the present moment I am seriously thinking of the drama, as more than one manager has asked me for a play, and don't be surprised if you shortly see my name appended to the libretto of a comic opera. So you see it is rather hard to label me at present."

— Lord Dufferin, in the memoir of his mother, speaks of the truly extraordinary extent to which the literary gifts of the Sheridans spread and descended through several generations, even amongst the collateral branches — the family producing during two hundred and fifty years no less than twenty-seven authors and some two hundred works. An instance of the family wit sparkling in a side channel is too good not to be given a wider circulation. Here is a short essay on the "Life of Man" which Joseph Sheridan Le Fanu submitted when a little boy to his scandalized father: "A man's life," wrote this young philosopher, "naturally divides itself into three distinct parts — the first, when he is planning and contriving all kinds of villainy and rascality. That is the period of youth and innocence. In the second he is found putting in practice all the villainy and rascality he has contrived. That is the flower of manhood and prime of life. The third and last period is when he is making his soul and preparing for another world. That is the period of dotage." The brother of this precocious sage is Mr. William Le Fanu, still happily living, whose delightful book, Seventy Years of Irish Life, was recently reviewed in these pages. — The Speaker.

— Mr. George Moore has been saying lately that creative artists may be divided into three orders. "There is the supreme Shakespeare, who can re-create even himself, as in Hamlet. Then there is the second order, of men like Tolstoï, who can re-create the life he leads himself; he can see his environment from a distance, and so re-create it. And the last class, of whom it is my ambition to make myself worthy, composed of writers who can re-create life when they are not too familiar with it. And that is why low life often proves much better material for a novelist than the life which he himself lives." Mr. Moore thinks Esther Waters is his best book precisely because he did not know much about racing and betting.

— What must the Japanese think of the late outcry against the three-volume novel, when they publish theirs in installments reaching up in point of numbers to one hundred and eight? The Romance of a Dog, by a novelist in that England of the East is, to all intents and purposes, a library in itself.

— In 1865, in the first division of cadet barracks at West Point, there were four young men who have since won their spurs, not in arms, but in letters. They were Charles King, Richard Henry Savage, John Brisben Walker, and Arthur Sherburne Hardy.

— The danger of adopting romantic plots from the newspapers has been curiously illustrated in the case of a grim story reprinted about a year ago from an American source. A young doctor was said to have resolved upon exhuming the corpse of a patient who had died of some interesting disease, and, whilst engaged upon his task, he was surprised by the husband of the deceased, with whom he had to fight for his life. This plot reappears, with various developments, in a three-volume novel published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus, in a story contributed to Tit-Bits, and in a poem by Mr. Lewis Morris — all appearing within brief intervals, and, of course, independently of each other. — The Athenæum.

The Literary World

BOSTON 22 SEPTEMBER 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

A Reminiscence of the Jubilee Revival of "Le Roi s'amuse."

Where'er thou art, canst thou forget that night
When, after fifty years, the victory came,
And Hugo — throned above all thrones of Fame —
Watched his own mighty dream uncoil its might,
And thou didst stand with shining locks of white
And eyes that, answering our proud hearts' acclaim,
Lost all their arrowy mockeries and became
Dim with the tears that made their lashes bright?

When love hath colored life with hues divine,
What poet seeks Nirvana's hueless goal?
Nirvana was thy quest, but love like thine
For that great soul must bear thy kindled soul
Where Love's high-chosen constellations shine
Of stars unmingled with the "loveless Whole."

— Theodore Watts.

Nursery Rhyme Adapted.

"Corelli Mary, quite contrary,
How does your novel grow?
With splashes of gore and spooks galore,
And platitudes all in a row.

"Ouida, Ouida, now indeed-a,
How does your novel grow?
With a Princess shady, a lord and a lady,
And Guardsmen all in a row.

"Miss Edna Lyall, now no denial,
How does your novel grow?
With a rake reformed, a cold atheist warmed,
And goody girls all in a row.

"Mistress Ward, with critical sword,
How does your novel grow?
With souls forlorn, and phrases outworn,
And clergymen all in a row.

"O all ye writers of penny soul-smiters,
How do your novels grow?
With endless chatter of amorous matter,
And wedding rings all in a row."

— Exchange.

PUBLISHERS' ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Fall of 1894.

THE hard times, felt by the book trade later than by many other lines of business, seem to have made publishers more cautious about the issue of expensive holiday books than in any other direction. The lists we give according to our custom show that good reading will be fairly abundant this season if one confines himself to the new books. The biographies of Whittier, Edwin Booth, Dean Church, George William Curtis, and Joseph Jefferson; the letters of Matthew Arnold, the Sherman brothers, Thoreau, and Miss Dickinson; new novels by Mr. Crawford, Mrs. Deland, William Black, Mrs. Woods, Mrs. Catherwood, Mrs. Foote, Mrs. Steel, Mrs. Harrison, and others; historical works by President Andrews, Mr. J. C. Ropes, Mr. Roosevelt, Professor Von Holst, and Frederic Harrison; and volumes of essays by Mr. H. E. Scudder, Miss Vida E. Scudder, Mr. Saintsbury, Professor Wendell, and Professor Tyrrell — are among the more promising matters. But in other directions, such as travel and art, there will be no lack of new works of value. Poetry finds but few representatives in the long list of new publications.

Biography.

Literary biography has always been a strong point with Houghton, Mifflin & Co., and they maintain their position this year with the announcement of the "Life and Letters of John Greenleaf Whittier," by Samuel T. Pickard, the authorized biography of Mr. Whittier, arranged for while he was yet living; "The Life of Frances Power Cobbe," by herself, with portraits; "Lucy Larcom: Life, Letters, and Diary," by Rev. Daniel D. Addison, a volume which will contain not only her diary and correspondence, but such an account of her life as in connection with these will form a sufficient biography; in the American Men of Letters series, "George William Curtis," by Edward Cary; "Bishop Andrewes," by Rev. R. L. Ottley, in the series devoted to English leaders of religion; the "Letters of Samuel Taylor Coleridge," edited by Ernest Hartley Coleridge, with sixteen portraits, containing letters written to his family, to Southey, De Quincey, and other literary contemporaries; and "Familiar Letters of Henry David Thoreau," edited, with an introduction and notes, by Frank B. Sanborn.

A volume of a biographical sort is announced by the J. B. Lippincott Co., "My First Book," containing the experiences of Walter Besant, James Payn, W. Clark Russell, Grant Allen, Hall Caine, George R. Sims, Rudyard Kipling, A. Conan Doyle, M. E. Braddon, F. W. Robinson, H. Ryder Haggard, R. M. Ballantyne, I. Zangwill, Morley Roberts, David Christie Murray, Marie Corelli, Jerome K. Jerome, John Strange Winter, Bret Harte, "Q," Robert Louis Stevenson, and Robert Buchanan, with an introduction by Jerome K. Jerome; "The Marquis de La Fayette in the War of the Revolution," with some account of the attitude of France toward the War of Independence, is the title given to two volumes by Charlemagne Tower, Jr., LL.D.; "Henry IV. and the Religious Wars," another French subject, is treated by Edward T. Blair.

In biographies, new and old, the Macmillans have this interesting list: "The Letters of Matthew Arnold," edited by G. W. E. Russell, M.P.; "The Life and Letters of R. W. Church," late Dean of St. Paul's; "The Life of Sir A. C. Ramsay," by Sir Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.; "The Life of John Milton," by Prof. David Masson, Vol. II of a new edition, and an index to the six volumes; "The Life and Art of Edwin Booth," by William Winter, a new cheaper edition, with new frontispiece portrait in character (Hamlet); the same writer's "Life and Art of Joseph Jefferson;" "Life of Swift," by Henry Craik, C.B., a new edition in two volumes, uniform with the works of Matthew Arnold; and "The Life of Henry Edward Manning," Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster, by Edmund Sheridan Purcell, member of the Roman Academy of Letters.

Of "The Pasquier Memoirs" Vol. III, 1814–1815, is now ready with the Scribners, who will also soon issue "The Sherman Letters," a volume of correspondence between General Sherman and Senator Sherman from 1837 to 1891, a book unique in furnishing a familiar and intimate record of and commentary upon the events of American history during this period and the various actors in them, by two persons, themselves participants and men of extraordinary power and penetration; "The Life of Charles Loring Brace," the eminent philanthropist, chiefly told in his own letters; "Three Score Years and Ten," by W. J. Linton, whose recollections (1820–1890) cover an unusually long period of an unusually varied life; and the "Life and Letters of Erasmus," by James Anthony Froude.

"An unprecedented work" is what his publishers rightly call "Personal Recollections of Sixteen Presidents," by Richard W. Thompson, ex-Secretary of the Navy, for he is the only living man who could have written it, having known personally every President of the United States but the first two — Washington and John Adams — and also many leaders of the American Revolution, among them being Lafayette. The Bowen-Merrill Co. of Indianapolis and Kansas City make this a subscription book.

The multitudes of admirers of the late John Addington Symonds will be glad to hear that Mr. Horatio F. Brown, his literary executor and himself an authority on Venice, has compiled a biography from Mr. Symonds' papers and correspondence. John C. Nimmo of London will issue it in two volumes, uniform with the "Life of Michelangelo Buonarroti." He will also publish Mr. Symonds' "Giovanni Boccaccio as Man and Author."

T. Y. Crowell & Co.'s quite notable biographical list includes "The Life and Inventions of Thomas A. Edison," by W. K. L. Dickson and Antonia Dickson; "Famous Leaders among Men," by Sarah K. Bolton; "Napoleon at Home," the daily life of the emperor at the Tuileries, and "Napoleon and the Women of His Court," both by Frederic Masson; "Around a Throne," Catherine II of Russia, her collaborators, her friends, and her favorites, by K. Waliszewski; "The Marquis de La Fayette in the War of the Revolution," with some account of the attitude of France toward the War of Independence, by Charlemagne Tower, Jr., LL.D.; and "Henry of Navarre and the Religious Wars," by Edward T. Blair.

Mr. Thomas Whittaker has in press and will shortly publish a new work by Mr. Frederick Saunders, librarian of the Astor Library and author of "Salad for the Solitary and the Social," entitled "Character Studies, with Some Personal Recollections." The work is devoted to reminiscences of eminent literary persons, including Washington Irving, Longfellow, Bryant, and others.

A very attractive book should be "Three Heroines of New England Romance" — I, Priscilla, by Harriet Prescott Spofford; II, Agnes Surriage, by Alice Brown; III, Martha Hilton, by Louise Imogen Guiney — to be issued by Little Brown & Co. It will have notes on the towns in which they lived and about eighty illustrations, including numerous full-page pictures, by Edmund H. Garrett.

Dodd, Mead & Co. announce "The Memoirs of Madame De Gontaut, Gouvernante to the Children of France during the Restoration, 1773–1836;" "The Empress Eugénie," the initial volume of "The Secret of an Empire," by Pierre de Lano; and "The Life and Adventures of Peg Woffington," with pictures of the time in which she lived, by J. Fitzgerald Molloy, a new edition.

"Emily Dickinson's Letters," from 1847 to 1886, have been edited by Mabel Loomis Todd, with a portrait of Miss Dickinson and a view of her home in Amherst and three facsimiles of her handwriting at different periods of her life. The two volumes will be issued by Roberts Brothers.

Mrs. Edwina Booth Grossmann has written a volume of recollections of her famous father, which will contain a great number of letters written by Edwin Booth to his daughter and to his friends. The Century Co. will publish it.

"Lives of Twelve Bad Men," a series of original studies of eminent scoundrels, by various hands, has been edited by Thomas Seccombe of Balliol College, Oxford, and the Putnams have just published it.

"Napoleon, Lover and Husband," by Frederic Masson, has been translated from the fourteenth French edition by J. M. Howell, and will be published here by the Merriam Co.

"General Lee," by General Fitzhugh Lee, and "General Hancock," by General Francis A. Walker, are two new volumes in the Appletons' Great Commanders series.

Thomas Wright's new "Life of Daniel Defoe" will be issued by A. D. F. Randolph & Co.

Fiction.

The Appletons have a strong list of novels to offer this season, comprising as it does "The Lilac Sunbonnet," by S. R. Crockett; "Round the Red Lamp," by A. Conan Doyle; "A Flash of Summer," by Mrs. W. K. Clifford; a new novel by Hon. Emily Lawless; "The Trail of the Sword," by Gilbert Parker; "The Wish," by H. Sudermann; "The God in the Car," by Anthony Hope; "An Unprotected Family," by Tasma; a new novel by Mrs. Mannington Caffyn; another by Mrs. J. H. Needell; "One Fair Daughter," by F. Frankfort Moore; "The House of Quest," by Adeline Sergeant; "The Justification of Andrew Lebrun," by Frank Barrett; "At the Gate of Samaria," by William John Locke; "Dust and Laurels," by M. L. Pendered; "A Green Carnation," a satire upon the London Bunthorne of the day; and "A Mild Barbarian," by Edgar Fawcett.

Little, Brown & Co. have recently added to their fine Library edition of the romances of Alexandre Dumas "The Napoleon Romances," in four volumes (including "The Companions of Jehu" and "The Whites and the Blues"), and two volumes containing "The Wolves of Machecoul" and "The Corsican Brothers." Two new volumes, completing the Library edition of the romances of Victor Hugo, contain "Hans of Iceland," "Bug-Jargal," "Claude Gueux," and "The Last Day of a Condemned." A new volume is "Lillian Morris, and Other Stories," by Henryk Sienkiewicz, translated from the Polish by Jeremiah Curtin. "Centuries Apart," a romance, by Edward T. Bouvé, brings together the laws, manners, customs, and dress of England at the period of the reign of Henry VII and of America during the Civil War.

Macmillan & Co., who are Mr. Marion Crawford's publishers, announce these two books from his prolific hand: "Love in Idleness," in the Cranford series, and "The Ralstons," a sequel to "Katharine Lauderdale." They will also issue in fiction: "Sibylla," by Sir H. Cunningham; "The Vagabonds," by Mrs. Margaret L. Woods, author of "A Village Tragedy;" "Tales of Naples and the Camorra," by Charles Grant; "The Melancholy of Stephen Allard," by Garnett Smith; and "Tales of the Punjaub," by Mrs. F. A. Steel, illustrated by J. L. Kipling. Two new volumes of Macmillan's Popular edition of Dickens will be "Little Dorrit" and "Bleak House." The novels of Susan E. Ferrier will appear in six volumes.

J. Selwin Tait & Sons will issue these novels and books of short stories: "The Phantom Brother and the Child, and Other Stories," by Evelyn Everett Green and others; "Greater Love, and Other Stories," by Robert Barr, Gilbert Parker, and others; "The Invisible Playmate: a Story of the Unseen," by William Canton; and the next number of the Pseudonym Library, a story by John Strange Winter, No. 7 of the series. They have just ready: "The Untempered Wind," by Joanna E. Wood, a new Canadian writer; "Before the Gringo Came," by Gertrude Atherton, a series of stories of the old Californian days before the arrival of the Gringo or American; and "A Seventh Child," by John Strange Winter.

Mrs. Deland's "Philip and His Wife" easily leads the list of novels announced by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., but this includes such other good matters as "The Story of Lawrence Garth," by Ellen Olney Kirk; "Cœur d'Alene," by Mary Hallock Foote; "The Chase of Saint Castin, and Other Tales," by Mary Hartwell Catherwood; and "Sweet Clover: a Romance of the White City," by Clara Louise Burnham. "The Great Refusal: Letters of a Dreamer in Gotham," by Paul E. More, is declared to be "a book quite out of the ordinary conventional sphere. It contains a romance told in letters and verses to the lady who inspires them. The letter-writer is a thoughtful person, greatly interested in the highest themes."

The Scribners have already published their most important novel for the season, "Lord Ormont and His Aminta," by George Meredith, which we noticed in our last issue; but they have three attractive books in "John March, Southerner," by George W. Cable; "Pomona's Travels," by Frank R. Stockton, a series of letters from the immortal Pomona to her former mistress; and a new volume of stories by Thomas Nelson Page; there will be a new illustrated edition of Mr. Page's "Polly," and in the new edition of Henry Kingsley's novels "Ravenshoe," "Austin Elliott," and "The Recollections of Geoffrey Hamlyn" will be ready soon.

The J. B. Lippincott Co. promise: "Matthew Austin," by W. E. Norris; "Mr. Jervis," by Mrs. D. M. Croker; "The Spell of Ursula," by Effie Adelaide Rowlands; "The Old, Old Story," by Rose Nouchette Carey; "Under Fire," by Capt. Charles King, U. S. A.; "Poppæa," by Julien Gordon; "The Despotic Lady," by W. E. Norris; "By Reef and Palm," a volume of South Sea Island stories, by Louis Becke; "In Market Overt," by James Payn; "Stories from the Diary of a Doctor," by Mrs. L. T. Mead; and "The Double Emperor," a story of adventure, by Wm. Laird Clowes.

T. Y. Crowell & Co. will publish "The Abbe Daniel," by André Theuriet, translated by Helen B. Dole, and the Sea and Land stories, ten volumes of semi-sensational short stories by leading English novelists: "A Terrible Inheritance," by Grant Allen; "By Telegraph," by J. Maclaren Cobban; "For Dick's Sake," by Mrs. J. H. Riddell; "Golden Feather," by the author of "Mehaleh;" "Gone," by Katherine S. Macquoid; "In Marine Armor" and "Lord John," by George Manville Fenn; "My Soldier Keeper," by Clive Phillipps-Wolley; "Saved by the Skin of His Teeth," by Helen Shipton; and "Slipping Away," by Austin Pember.

Harper & Brothers have nothing, of course, among their other new novels to match "Trilby," which is having a great sale. But they announce in fiction: "A Sporting Pilgrimage," by Caspar W. Whitney, and "Twilight Land," some stories about nothing at all, written and illustrated by Howard Pyle; and in Harper's Short Story series, "The Royal Marine," an idyl of Narragansett Pier, by Brander Matthews; "A Kentucky Cardinal," by James Lane Allen; "Ministers of Grace," by Eva Wilder McGlasson; and "St. John's Wooing," by M. G. McClelland.

Ward, Lock & Bowden announce: "Honey of Aloes, and Other Stories," by Nora Vynne; "In Strange Company," a story of Chili and the Southern Seas, by Guy Boothby; "The Dead Gallant," together with "The King of Hearts," by Outram Tristram; "A Sunless Heart;" "Woman, the Mystery: a Tale of Three Revolutions," by Henry Herman; "The Rajah's Second Wife," by Headon Hill; and "Winning a Wife in Australia," by E. Donnison.

Dodd, Mead & Co. announce "That House in Bloomsbury," by Mrs. Oliphant; "Kitty Alone," by S. Baring-Gould; four ghost stories translated from the German of Paul Heyse — "The House of the Unbelieving Thomas," "Fair Abigail," "Mid-day Magic," and "The Forest Laugh," each in one volume, with decorations by Alice C. Morse; and "The Sherburne Cousins," by Amanda M. Douglas.

Roberts Brothers have lately issued "A Monk of the Aventine," by Ernst Eckstein, translated from the German by Helen Hunt Johnson, and "A Saint," by Paul Bourget, from the "Pastels of Men," translated by Katharine Prescott Wormeley. They announce "Catharine de' Medici," by H. de Balzac, translated by Katharine Prescott Wormeley, and "Discords," by George Egerton.

Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge has written a book of stories and sketches chiefly of Holland, "The Land of Pluck," which the Century Co. will publish. Mr. C. F. Lummis' Pueblo Indian folk-lore tales will make a book, "The Man Who Married the Moon," to be published by the Century Co. in October.

"The Mystery of Hotel Brichet," after the French of Eugene Chavette; "The Shadow of the Guillotine," by Sylvanus Cobb, Jr.; "The Mask of Beauty," after the German of Fanny Lewald, by Mary M. Pleasants; and "Two Gentlemen of Hawaii," by Seward W. Hopkins, are new novels from Robert Bonner's Sons.

Miss Margaret Symonds, a daughter of the noted historian of the Italian Renaissance, has translated "Melting Snows," by Prince Emil von Schonaich-Carolath, and John C. Nimmo of London will publish it, as well as twelve stories by Matteo Bandello, translated, with a memoir, by Percy Pinkerton.

Charles Wells Moulton, Buffalo, N. Y., announces "A Modern Despotism," by Marcus Petersen; "The Story of Portus" and "Songs of Southland," by Mary H. Leonard; "At Last," by Maria Elise Lauder; and "Queens-Hithe," by Henrietta G. Rowe.

E. & J. B. Young & Co. announce "Joan the Maid, Deliverer of England and France," a story of the fifteenth century done into modern English, and "Attila and His Conquerors," a story of the days of St. Patrick and St. Leo the Great, by Mrs. Rundle Charles.

The Merriam Co. of New York have these works of fiction on their fall list: "A Common Mistake," by Jeanne M. Howell; "John Applegate, Surgeon," by Mary Harriott Norris; "A Little Game with Destiny" and "Two Bad Brown Eyes," by Marie St. Felix.

S. C. Griggs & Co. will publish shortly a story by the artist, Mary H. Ford, author of "Which Wins?" entitled "Otto's Inspiration," which traces the workings of the force of heredity along artistic and moral lines.

Stone & Kimball announce "Pierre and His People," tales of the far North, by Gilbert Parker, a new and enlarged edition, and "A June Romance," by Norman Gale.

In Neely's Library of Choice Literature two new volumes are "The New Man at Rossmere," by Mrs. J. H. Walworth, and "The Flying Halcyon," by Richard Henry Savage.

A. D. F. Randolph & Co. will have ready soon: "As We Knew Him," by John Habberton, and "The Royal Road," by Marion Harland.

Mr. Stanley J. Weyman's new book is entitled "My Lady Rotha." It is a romance of the Thirty Years' War, and has just been published by Longmans, Green & Co.

"The Artificial Mother," a marital fantasy, by G. H. P., which the Putnams announce, one takes to be a short piece of fiction.

E. P. Dutton & Co. will publish "Margaret Arnold's Christmas, and Other Stories," by Mary D. Brine.

Poetry.

One new volume of verse is promised by the Macmillans — "The End of Elfinland," by Jane Barlow, author of "Irish Idylls." Their other announcements are "Selected Poems of Aubrey De Vere," edited, with an introduction, by George E. Woodberry; "The Christian Year," by John Keble, with an introduction by Charlotte M. Yonge, in the Golden Treasury series; "Selected Poems of Sir Walter Scott, Bart.," in one volume, uniform with the Dryburgh edition of the Waverley novels; and a new and complete edition of the works of Robert Browning, in nine volumes, crown 8vo. In addition to the matter heretofore included in the sixteen-volume edition, this will contain "Asolando: Fancies and Facts," together with historical notes to the poems by Robert Browning, making for the first time a complete definitive edition of the poet's works. "Asolando: Fancies and Facts," to which is added historical notes to the poems by Robert Browning, is a supplementary volume to the sixteen-volume edition, making the Library edition complete in seventeen uniform volumes.

Copeland & Day, the new Boston firm that may become the Mathews & Lane of America, have in press a little volume of poems by John B. Tabb, whose work is well known in the magazines. The little volume will be made up in a form quite new for books of verse. "Songs from Vagabondia," by Bliss Carman and Richard Hovey, is just published. Another little book of verse is "The Wooing of Martha Pitken," by C. K. Bolton, a narrative of New England colonial times and history, to be issued in eighteenth century style. An edition of Wilfrid Scawin Blunt's "Sonnets of Proteus," with "Esther," by the same author, is in preparation for the same series as Rossetti's "House of Life," issued last year by this firm.

An impressive sign that this is to be an "off year" in poetry is the fact that the firm which publishes more poetry of the best sort than any other in America promises only "Unguarded Gates, and Other Poems," by Thomas Bailey Aldrich; Miss Caroline Hazard's "Narragansett Ballads, with Songs and Lyrics;" "Poems, New and Old," by William Roscoe Thayer, author of "The Dawn of Italian Independence;" Mr. Stedman's "Victorian Anthology," containing representative poems by the authors discussed in "Victorian Poets;" "English and Scottish Popular Ballads," edited by Prof. Francis J. Child of Harvard University, édition de luxe, Part IX; and two new editions of Whittier's poems — the Cambridge, in one volume, and the Handy Volume, in four.

Stone & Kimball, now of Chicago, promise "In Russet and Silver," by Edmund Gosse; "The Poems of Paul Verlaine," translated by Gertrude Hall; "Arthur O'Shaughnessy: His Life and His Work," with selections from his poems, by Louise Chandler Moulton; "Sonnets of the Wingless Hours," by Eugene Lee-Hamilton; "The Land of Heart's Desire," a play, by W. B. Yeats; "Sonnets and Other Poems," by George Santayana, a second edition; "Vistas," by William Sharp; and "The Plays of Maurice Maeterlinck" — Princess Maleine, The Intruder, The Blind, The Seven Princesses — translated by Richard Hovey, with an introductory essay on symbolism.

Charles Wells Moulton will publish "Oklahoma, and Other Poems," by Freeman E. Miller, A.M.; "Around the Hearth, and Other Poems," by Millen Sanford Greene; "Fagots," by Hester A. Benedict; "The Princess Adelaide," a dramatic poem, by Helen Corinne Bergen; "Memory Bells," by Alice Pease Bates; "Perditia," a volume of poems by George Klingle; "Estrays," by Leonard Wright Colby; "Songs in the Night," by Kate A. Bradley; "Autumn Leaves," by Mary B. Clarke; "Heart Treasures," by Fannie A. Damon; and "Gathered Windfalls," by Mary C. Peckham.

In his taking English Reprint series Mr. T. B. Mosher of Portland, Me., will issue as the third volume, "The Growth of Love," by Robert Bridges, a sequence of seventy-nine sonnets. In the pretty Bibelot series he will publish Fitzgerald's translation of the "Rubaiyat" and "Felise," a book of lyrics chosen from the earlier poems of Mr. Swinburne.

"Madonna, and Other Verses," by Harrison S. Morris, is the first collected edition of the author's poems, many of which have never previously appeared. The edition will be printed from type and limited to 750 copies for America and England. The Lippincotts also publish soon "Sorrow and Song," by Coulson Kernahan.

The Scribners promise readers of poetry but one selection and one translation — the "Select Poems of Sidney Lanier," edited, with introduction and notes, by Morgan Callaway, Jr., Ph.D., and Mr. Gladstone's "Translation of the Odes of Horace, and the Carmen Sæculare."

A new book of poems which needs no herald is "Armazindy" (Hoosier airs and others), by James Whitcomb Riley. It will be published uniform with his other volumes, by the Bowen-Merrill Co. of Indianapolis and Kansas City.

"A Little Child's Wreath," sonnets by Elizabeth Rachel Chapman, author of "A Companion to In Memoriam," and "A London Rose and Other Rhymes," by Ernest Rhys, will be issued by Dodd, Mead & Co.

L. Prang & Co. have just published the Yawcob Strauss series, by Charles Follen Adams, four of his most popular poems, in booklet form, each one containing a half-tone portrait of the author.

"American Song" is a collection of representative American poems, with analytical and critical studies of their writers, edited by A. B. Simonds and announced by the Putnams.

The H. C. Cady Printing Co. of Holyoke, Mass., has just published "A Song of Companies and Other Poems," by Orrin Cedesman Stevens.

A small volume of "Blank Verse," by John Addington Symonds, has been reprinted at his special request by John C. Nimmo of London.

"Ballads and Poems," by Rudyard Kipling, and "Songs of the Soil," by Frank L. Stanton, are announced by D. Appleton & Co.

"The Thought of God," second series, being hymns and poems by F. L. Hosmer and W. C. Gannett, will be published by Roberts Brothers.

Harper & Brothers will put forth "Wayside Poems," by Wallace Bruce, author of "Old Homestead Poems."

A. D. F. Randolph & Co. will publish for Katrina Trask (Mrs. Spencer) her "Sonnets and Lyrics."

"The White Tzar and Other Poems," by Henry Bedlow, is to be published by J. Selwin Tait & Sons.

Essays and Sketches.

The catalogue of Houghton, Mifflin & Co. is rich in volumes of refined and thoughtful criticism. Their new books in this line will maintain their high reputation. These are "The Life of the Spirit in the Modern English Poets," by Miss Vida D. Scudder, associate professor of English literature in Wellesley College, a study of the characteristics of the poetry of the nineteenth century to discover the development of thought on the highest themes; "Talk at a Country House," by Sir Edward Strachey, conversations on Englishmen of note, English social life, Persian poetry, Assyrian inscriptions, characteristics of modern literature, and a great variety of other topics; "Latin Poetry," lectures delivered at Baltimore on the Percy Turnbull Memorial foundation, by R. Y. Tyrrell, professor in the University of Dublin; "Studies in Folk-Song and Popular Poetry," by Alfred M. Williams; "Danvis Folks," by Rowland E. Robinson, twenty-seven sketches of Vermont rural life; "In the Dozy Hours, and Other Papers," a new collection of essays by Agnes Repplier; and "Childhood in Literature and Art," by Horace E. Scudder, a study of the meaning of the appearance and disappearance of childhood as a subject for poets, romancers, and artists.

Dodd, Mead & Co. promise "Corrected Impressions," literary essays by George Saintsbury; "My Study Fire," second series, by H. W. Mabie; the four volumes of Mr. Mabie's previously issued, in a new and revised edition; Mr. Austin Dobson's "Eighteenth Century Vignettes," a second series; "The Blue Ribbon," an account of the Murphy temperance movement; and "Shylock and Others," eight studies by G. H. Radford, the author of the last, and what was considered by many the best, essay in the first series of "Obiter Dicta," Mr. Birrell having credited him with it in his preface.

One volume of essays on music and three of literary criticism are announced by the Scribners: "Musicians and Music Lovers," by the noted musical critic, Mr. W. F. Apthorp; "William Shakspere," a study of Elizabethan literature, by Prof. Barrett Wendell; "A Shelf of Old Books," by Mrs. James T. Fields, part or all of which has appeared in Scribner's Magazine; and "The English Novel," by Professor Raleigh of University College, Liverpool, in the University series.

John C. Nimmo of London, in announcing "The Hero of Esthonia," and other studies in the romantic literature of that country, by W. F. Kirby, F.Z.S., F.L.S., corresponding member of the Finnish Literary Society, says that "in this work an account of the unique ancient literature and folk-lore of Esthonia is presented to English readers for the first time."

Three only are the Macmillans' new books in this department: "Essays and Studies," reprinted from the Quarterly Review, by J. Churton Collins; "The Uses of Life," by the Right Hon. Sir John Lubbock, D.C.L., F.R.S.; and "Studies in Modern Music," by W. H. Hadow, a second series.

Charles Wells Moulton will issue "Ethics of the Bar and Other Papers," by Leonard Wright Colby, and "From Dixie to Canada; or, Romances and Realities of the Underground Railroad," by H. U. Johnson.

Longmans, Green & Co. have lately issued three volumes of papers and addresses by Lord Brassey, K.C.B., D.C.L. — "Naval and Maritime" and "Work and Wages."

Roberts Brothers will soon publish "The World Beautiful," by Lilian Whiting, and a new edition of Vernon Lee's "Euphorion."

E. P. Dutton & Co. will publish "Essays and Addresses: Religious, Literary, and Social," by the Right Rev. Phillips Brooks, D.D.

"Prose Fancies," by Richard Le Gallienne, with a portrait of the author, will appear from the press of the Putnams.

A new volume in Harper's American Essayists is "A Little English Gallery," by Louise Imogen Guiney.

"Abandoning an Adopted Farm," by the lively Miss Kate Sanborn, is just published by the Appletons.

History.

In history Macmillan & Co. announce two books by the late Prof. E. A Freeman, "Western Europe in the Fifth Century" and "Western Europe in the Eighth Century," both being lectures delivered at Oxford; "The Meaning of History and Other Historical Pieces," by Frederic Harrison; "The British Fleet: the Growth, Achievements, and Duties of the Navy of the Empire," by Commander Robinson, R.N.; "Greek History from its Origin to the Destruction of the Independence of the Greek People," by Adolf Holm, an authorized translation, in four volumes; "A Handbook of European History," by Arthur Hassall, senior student of Christ Church, Oxford; and "Life in Ancient Egypt," described by Adolf Erman, translated by H. M. Tirard.

Lovell, Coryell & Co. have in press for early publication four of their early issues in a series projected by them under the title of Masterpieces of English Literature. The series will at present consist of the following notable works: J. R. Green's "History of the English People," in four volumes; Justin McCarthy's "History of Our Own Times," with introduction and supplementary chapters, bringing the work down to Mr. Gladstone's resignation of the premiership (March, 1894), four volumes in two; Mrs. Oliphant's "Victorian Age of English Literature," in two volumes; and Lord Lytton's "Last Days of Pompeii."

Under the general division of history may be named these four books from Houghton, Mifflin & Co.: "Side Glimpses from the Colonial Meeting-House," by William Root Bliss, author of "Colonial Times on Buzzard's Bay;" "The Diary of Anna Green Winslow, a Boston School Girl of 1771," edited, with a preface and many notes, by Alice Morse Earle; "Following the Greek Cross: Memories of the Sixth Army Corps," by Gen. Thomas W. Hyde of the Army of the Potomac; and "A Story of Courage: Annals of the Georgetown Convent of the Visitation," by George Parsons Lathrop and Rose Hawthorne Lathrop.

An announcement of much interest is made by the Scribners of the two volumes of a "History of the United States," by E. Benjamin Andrews, D.D., LL.D., president of Brown University, a work corresponding to Green's "Short History of the English People." Mrs. Earle's "Costume in Colonial Times" is an alphabetically arranged glossary, with introductory matter and comments, descriptive of the costume of colonial America, the fruit of long and careful research. "The Mogul Emperors of Hindostan," by Prof. Edward S. Holden, is a view of the chief personages, retaining something of the spirit of the original chronicles.

A military history from an authority of the first order is announced by the Putnams in "The Story of the Civil War," a concise account of the war in the United States of America between 1861 and 1865, by John Codman Ropes, author of "The Army under Pope" and "The First Napoleon," etc. It will be complete in three parts, printed in three octavo volumes, with comprehensive maps and battle plans. Each part will be complete in itself and will be sold separately. Part I, narrative of events to the opening of the campaigns of 1862, will be ready soon. In the Story of the Nations series late volumes are "Australasia," by Tregarthen; "South Africa," by Theal; and "Venice," by Wiel.

The J. B. Lippincott Co. announce a new edition of Thiers' "History of the French Revolution," uniform with the new edition of Thiers' "History of the Consulate and the Empire of France."

The Appletons announce "The Dawn of Civilization," by G. Maspero, and the second volume of "A History of the United States Navy, from 1775 to 1894," by Edgar Stanton Maclay, A.M.

The Jewish Publication Society of America announces "Old European Jewries," by David Philipson, D.D., and Vol. IV of the "History of the Jews," by Prof. H. Graetz.

T. Y. Crowell & Co. have ready a "History of the Christian Church," by H. C. Sheldon, professor in Boston University, in five volumes.

Travel and Adventure.

Under this heading the Scribners will publish only one new volume, "Sea and Land," by Prof. N. S. Shaler, wherein he discusses the conflict between land and water as shown on the seashore in beaches and harbors, and the phenomena of icebergs and sea depths, but they will put into new and cheaper editions the three popular books: "Three Years of Arctic Service," by Gen. A. W. Greely; "Travels Amongst the Great Andes of the Equator," by Edward Whymper; and "Around the World on a Bicycle," by Thomas Stevens. A kindred book is "Wild Beasts," by John Hampden Porter, a study of the elephant, lion, panther, leopard, jaguar, tiger, puma, wolf, and grizzly bear, "portraying them as they actually are and accounting for their characters and habits on rational and scientific, as distinguished from sentimental and romantic, grounds."

J. Selwin Tait & Sons announce "Nepaul: the Gurkas' Mysterious Land," by Henry Ballantine, M.A., American consul to Bombay and special commissioner to India-World's Columbian Exposition. It describes a visit by the author to the Himalayan "buffer" state between Russia on the north and England on the south. "Cavalry Life in Tent and Field," by Mrs. O. B. Boyd, relates in detail the daily life, dangers, hardships, and also the pleasures of a cavalry officer's wife living with her husband on the frontier.

The new book by Max O'Rell, "John Bull & Co." — the great colonial branches of the firm, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa — which Charles L. Webster & Co. have just issued, is said to be "practically a humorous study of the development of the English-speaking character under all manner of conditions and climates, from the tropics of North Queensland to icebound Winnipeg, illustrated with numerous full-page and text illustrations."

Macmillan & Co. will have these three books of travel and description ready this fall: "A Corner of Cathay," studies from life among the Chinese, by Adèle M. Fielde, author of "Chinese Nights' Entertainments," with colored plates from illustrations by artists in the celebrated school of Go Leng, at Swatow, China; "Australia," by Miss Shaw; and "London up to Date," by George Augustus Sala.

"The Pearl of India," by M. M. Ballou, to be published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., shows that he has succeeded in finding another subject for his fertile pen in Ceylon, "the pearl of India." "Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan," by Mr. Lafcadio Hearn, belongs to another style in literature, and Mr. Howells' "Tuscan Cities" appears in a new edition, from new plates, uniform with his novels.

"Society in China," which is new with the Lippincotts, is an account of the every-day life of the Chinese people, social, political and religious, by Robert K. Douglas, keeper of the Oriental books and manuscripts in the British Museum, professor of Chinese at King's College. The illustrations are in collotype from the original drawings by Chinese artists and from photographs.

"Glimpses of Four Continents," being an account of a tour in Australia, New Zealand, and North America in 1893, by the Duchess of Buckingham and Chandos; "Domestic Manners of the Americans," a reprint of Mrs. Trollope's noted book; and "In Egypt," by G. Montbard, author of "Among the Moors," we shall have from Dodd, Mead & Co.

A. D. F. Randolph & Co. publish "The Great Pyramids," by M. Chas. Le Grange, with an introduction by C. Piazzi Smyth; "Pictures of Swedish Life; or, Svea and Her Children," by Sarah S. Baker; and "In Cairo and Jerusalem," by Mary Thorne Carpenter.

Of "Six Months in the Sandwich Islands," by Isabella Bird Bishop, the first American edition, reprinted (under arrangement) from the eighth English edition, will be brought out by the Putnams.

Messrs. Hunt & Eaton have in preparation for the holidays a volume of travels by Rev. Dr. J. M. Buckley, entitled "Travels in Three Continents"—Europe, Asia, and Africa.

The first of two solid volumes on Australasia, issued by the J. B. Lippincott Co., is "Australia and New Zealand," by Alfred R. Wallace, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S.

"The Borderland of Czar and Kaiser," by Poultney Bigelow, is a volume of notes of travel to be published by Harper & Brothers.

From Roberts Brothers will come "The Voyage of the Liberdade," by Captain Joshua Slocum.

Religion and Theology.

Macmillan & Co. publish much of the best thought of English writers on these matters, and they announce "Religion of the Semites," the fundamental institutions, by the late W. Robertson Smith, M.A., LL.D., a new edition; "History, Prophecy, and the Monuments," by J. F. McCurdy, professor in the University of Toronto, in two volumes (Vol. I, to the fall of Samaria, is now ready); "Syriac Literature," by William Wright, author of "Lectures on the Comparative Grammar of the Semitic Languages;" "The Syriac Gospels, Transcribed from the Sinaitic Codex," by the late Robert L. Bensly, M.A., Lord Almoner's professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge, edited by F. C. Burkitt, M.A., and J. R. Harris, M.A.; "The Old Testament in Greek, According to the Septuagint," edited by Henry B. Swete, D.D., regius professor of divinity in the University of Cambridge, Vol. III completing the edition; the Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges, the "Book of Psalms" (Books II and III), edited by the Rev. A. F. Kirkpatrick, D.D.; "Personality, Divine and Human," being the Bampton Lectures for 1894, by Rev. J. R. Illingworth, author of "University and Cathedral Sermons;" "Lectures on Preaching," by the Right Rev. W. Boyd Carpenter, D.D., Bishop of Ripon; "Introduction to the Book of Isaiah," by the Rev. Prof. T. K. Cheyne, D.D.; and "The Jataka," translated from the Pali under the superintendence of Prof. E. B. Cowell, M.A., by Robert Chalmers, Vol. I.

To their long list of scholarly books in theology Charles Scribner's Sons will soon add "The Messiah of the New Testament," by Prof. C. A. Briggs, which takes up the ideals presented in the author's "Messianic Prophecy of the Old Testament" and traces their development in New Testament prophecy; "The Johannine Theology," a study of the doctrinal contents of the Gospel and Epistles of the Apostle John, by George B. Stevens, Ph.D., D.D., similar in method and scope to the author's treatise on the Pauline theology; a companion volume, "Paul's Conception of Christianity," by Alexander B. Bruce, D.D.; "Genesis and Semitic Tradition," by Prof. John D. Davis, Ph.D.; "Dogmatic Theology," Vol. III, by William G. T. Shedd, D.D., a supplementary volume; and "The Religions of Japan," from the dawn of history to the era of Meiji, by William Elliot Griffis, the first work devoted to Japanese religions.

Two books which cannot fail to have interest for many will be published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co.—"Religious Progress," by A. V. G. Allen, D.D., professor of ecclesiastical history in the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass., and author of "The Continuity of Christian Thought," and "The Sermon on the Mountain, Practiced on the Plain," by William Burnet Wright, D.D., author of "Ancient Cities" and "The World to Come." Dr. Wright seeks in this book to recall the world to the Christianity of Christ by pointing out the sharp contrasts between this and many characteristics of Christendom today, and by illustrating each of the Beatitudes from the history of Christ and from a study of eminent historic personages in whom these Beatitudes are conspicuously exemplified. The persons thus portrayed are Moses, Paul, George Fox, General Gordon, and George Macdonald.

A. D. F. Randolph & Co. will issue "Fundamentals: a Brief Unfolding of the Basal Truths of the Christian Faith," by M. Fisher Markwick; "The Christ Controlled Life; or, The Secret of Sanctity," by E. A. Moore, M.A.; "Why Do You Not Believe?" by Andrew Murray; "Wholly for God: the True Christian Life," a series of extracts from the writings of William Law, selected and with an introduction by the Rev. Andrew Murray; "At Dawn of Day: Thoughts for the Morning Hour," selected by Jeanie A. Bates Greenough; and "Religion and Business," by H. M. Stimson, D.D., pastor of the Broadway Congregational Church.

The Putnams announce a new edition of "The Egyptian Book of the Dead," the most ancient and the most important of the extant religious texts of ancient Egypt; it is edited, with introduction, a complete translation, and various chapters on its history and symbolism, by Charles H. S. Davis, M.D., Ph.D., and will have ninety-nine full-page illustrations from the Turin and the Louvre Papyri and twenty-five designs representing the Egyptian gods.

E. & J. B. Young & Co. announce "The Religion of the Crescent; or, Islam, its Strength, its Weakness, its Origin, its Influence," by the Rev. W. St. Clair Fisdall; "Ecce Ancilla Domini, Mary, the Mother of Our Lord," by Mrs. Rundle Charles; "Hymns and Their Stories," by A. E. C.; and "The Old Churches of England, the Why, How, and When of Them," by Francis Baldwin, architect.

The Open Court Publishing Co. of Chicago announce the speedy publication of "The Gospel of Buddha," by Dr. Paul Carus; the book is a simple exposition in the words of the original gospels of the life and doctrines of Gautama Buddha as they bear upon the religious thought of the present.

Roberts Brothers will issue the first volume of Prof. Adolf Harnack's "History of Dogma"—the larger work, not the "Manual;" and they have in preparation Vols. IV and V of Renan's "History of the People of Israel."

An announcement of much interest to clergymen and theological students is made by A. C. Armstrong & Son in "The Historical Geography of the Holy Land," by the Rev. Prof. G. Adam Smith, D.D., author of "The Book of Isaiah" in the Expositor's Bible.

"Heroes of Israel," by William G. Blaikie, D.D., and "Suwarta," and other sketches of Indian life, by Miss Annie H. Small, are to be published by Thomas Nelson & Sons.

The Rev. Geo. Hodges, now dean of the Theological School, Cambridge, has written "The Heresy of Cain," which will be published shortly by Thomas Whittaker.

W. J. Shuey, Dayton, Ohio, publishes "Jesus the Nazarene," a life of Jesus, with a parallel harmony of the Gospels, by Rev. C. J. Kephart, A.M.

James Pott & Co. announce "The School of Life: Divine Providence in the Light of Modern Science," by Theodore F. Seward.

E. P. Dutton & Co. have in press "Herald Sermons," by George H. Hepworth, short sermons reprinted from the New York Herald.

Lee & Shepard will issue "The Honeycombs of Life," a series of sermons, by Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D.

"The Building of Character," by the Rev. J. R. Miller, D.D., is to come from T. Y. Crowell & Co.

Holiday and Art Books.

Macmillan & Co. will add these four volumes to their series of illustrated books, uniform with "Cranford" and "The Vicar of Wakefield:" "Old English Songs," with introduction and notes by Austin Dobson and one hundred illustrations by Hugh Thomson; "Gulliver's Travels," with introduction by Henry Craik, C.B., and one hundred illustrations by C. E. Brock; "The Fables of Æsop," selected, told anew, and their history traced by Joseph Jacobs, with nearly two hundred illustrations by Richard Heighway; and "Pride and Prejudice," by Jane Austen, with ninety illustrations by Hugh Thomson. Other holiday books from the same firm will be "The Stickit Minister, and Some Common Men," by S. R. Crockett, in an édition de luxe, printed on handmade paper; "The Inns of Court and Chancery," by W. J. Loftie, a new, cheaper edition; "The Life of Christ as Represented in Art," by Frederic W. Farrar, D.D.; "John Russell, R.A.," "the prince of crayon portrait painters," by George C. Williamson, member of the council of the Royal Society of Literature, with an introduction by Lord Ronald Gower, F.S.A.; "Pen Drawing and Pen Draughtsmen: Their Work and Their Methods," a study of the art today, with technical suggestions, by Joseph Pennell, a new and enlarged edition, with over four hundred illustrations, including many examples from original drawings by Sir F. Leighton, Sir J. E. Millais, Sir E. Burne-Jones, F. Sandys, F. Shields, E. Pinwell, W. Small, F. Walker, Mahoney, W. North, E. A. Abbey, Holman Hunt, and F. Parsons; the same author's "Modern Book Illustration," in the Ex-Libris series; "Handbook of Artists' Materials and Their Uses," by A. P. Laurie, author of "The Food of Plants;" "Raphael's Madonnas and Other Great Pictures," reproduced from the original paintings, with a life of Raphael and an account of his chief works, by Karl Károly, author of "The Paintings of Florence;" "American Book-Plates," a guide to their study, with examples, by Charles Dexter Allen, with a bibliography by Eben Newell Hewins, illustrated with many reproductions of rare and interesting book plates; and "The Production of Ex-Libris," by John Vinycomb.

The announcement list of the Joseph Knight Co. includes "The Innocents Abroad; or, The New Pilgrim's Progress," by Mark Twain, fully illustrated with thirty photogravure illustrations; "Hypatia," by Charles Kingsley, new edition, with two photogravure frontispieces and twenty-eight full-page half-tone illustrations; "Some Old Time Beauties," by Thomson Willing; "Rip Van Winkle," by Washington Irving, with twenty-four photogravure illustrations from original photographs of Catskill Mountain scenery; "The Fairies' Festival," a poem by John Witt Randall, edited by Francis Ellingwood Abbot, with forty illustrations in photogravure; "Little Journeys Abroad," by Mary Bowers Warren, a volume of travel sketches, with sixty illustrations; and "Child Life in Art," by Estelle M. Hurll, M.A., six chapters comprising childhood in ideal types, children born to the purple, the children of field and village, the child life of the streets, child angels, and the Christ Child, illustrated with twenty-five half-tone illustrations from celebrated paintings by Raphael, Titian, Van Dyck, Velasquez, Reynolds, and other artists.

Boussod, Valadon & Co. of New York announce three artistic books for this season: Goupil's "Paris Salon, 1894," text by Roger Milès, English translation by Henry Bacon, containing over one hundred illustrations, including ninety-eight Goupilgravures (of which seventy-five are full-page), two etchings, specially engraved as frontispieces to each salon, and one water color facsimile; "Adventures de Guerre," personal adventures of the Napoleonic wars, 1792–1809, a small quarto volume, French text, containing seven personal narratives, all from original and unpublished manuscripts, with 104 illustrations by F. de Myrbach, all in color; and "Les Demoiselles de Lire," by Paul Perret, French text only, illustrated in collaboration by Ch. Delort and M. Leloir. This is an original story of the Vendean War of 1832, with thirty-two original illustrations, including sixteen full-page and sixteen head and tail pieces, all in Goupilgravure, uniform with "L'Abbé Constantin."

Like many other publishers Houghton, Mifflin & Co. seem to be pursuing a Fabian policy as to holiday literature this year. Their highest priced volume is an octavo edition of Fitzgerald's "Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám," the pictures being reproduced with great care from the original drawings by a treatment which secures satisfactory results. There will be holiday editions of "The Last Leaf," by Oliver Wendell Holmes, illustrated by F. Hopkinson Smith and Geo. Wharton Edwards; "Their Wedding Journey," by W. D. Howells, with illustrations by Clifford Carleton; "The Story of a Bad Boy," by Thomas Bailey Aldrich, with numerous illustrations by A. B. Frost; and "Timothy's Quest," by Kate Douglas Wiggin, with illustrations by Oliver Herford.

T. Y. Crowell & Co. will add to their new Illustrated Library: "The Alhambra" and "Sketch Book," by Washington Irving; "The Count of Monte Cristo" and "The Three Musketeers," by Alexandre Dumas; Boswell's "Life of Johnson," edited by Mowbray Morris; "Scott's Complete Poetical Works," with introduction by Prof. Charles Eliot Norton; and "Milton's Complete Poetical Works," with introduction by David Masson and biographical sketch by N. H. Dole. They will also issue "Faber's Hymns," with fifty illustrations by L. J. Bridgman, and "Golden Words for Daily Counsel," a new edition, illustrated with sixteen portraits of eminent divines and authors.

The Putnams promise for the holidays "The Sketch-Book," by Washington Irving, the Van Tassel edition, uniform in general style with the Holiday editions of "The Alhambra," "Granada," and "Knickerbocker;" "Memoirs of the Reign of George III," by Horace Walpole, edited by G. F. Russell Barker, four volumes, with sixteen portraits in photogravure, Letterpress edition, 1,000 numbered sets, of which 260 sets have been secured for the United States; and "Holland and its People," Vandyke edition, and "Spain and the Spaniards," Saragossa edition, by Edmondo de Amicis. The Putnams' Ariel Shakespeare is now complete, in forty volumes, with five hundred illustrations by Frank Howard.

Rand, McNally & Co. have a Holiday series to which they will add "The Abbé Constantin," by Ludovic Halévy; "The Light of Asia," by Sir Edwin Arnold; "Lucile," by Owen Meredith; "Black Beauty," by Anna Sewell; "A Selection of Bryant's Poems;" and "A Selection of Scott's Poems." "Christopher Columbus and His Monument Columbia," compiled by J. M. Dickey, is illustrated with thirty-two artistic half-tone engravings of celebrated statues of Columbus and scenes connected with his great discovery.

The Appletons will have ready in season for the holidays "The Three Musketeers," by Alexandre Dumas, an édition de luxe, with 250 illustrations by Maurice Leloir; "Our Presidents," by John Fiske, Carl Schurz, W. W. Phelps, George Bancroft, and others, with portraits and other illustrations; "Schools and Masters of Sculpture," by Miss A. G. Radcliffe; "The Land of the Sun," by Christian Reid; "Paul and Virginia," by Bernardin St. Pierre, illustrated by Maurice Leloir; and "The Farmer's Boy," text and illustrations by Clifton Johnson.

Harper & Brothers will make a fine holiday edition, in two volumes, of "Hypatia; or, New Foes with an Old Face," by Charles Kingsley, to be illustrated from drawings by William Martin Johnson, with a portrait of the author. "Portraits in Plaster," from the collection of Laurence Hutton, with seventy-two illustrations, will be a volume of curious interest. A few women may be attracted to "Wimples and Crisping-Pins," a volume of studies in the coiffure and ornaments of women, by Theodore Child.

John C. Nimmo of London will issue this fall "The Pilgrim's Progress," with fourteen plates, designed and etched by William Strang, R.P.E., and printed on thick Japanese paper, and "Charterhouse Old and New," by E. P. Eardley Wilmot and E. C. Streatfeild, with four original etchings by D. Y. Cameron, R.P.E.; the book contains personal reminiscences of Thackeray and of life at the old London school, as well as a full account of life, work, and athletics at Godalming.

Dodd, Mead & Co.'s list of announcements includes "A Tale of Two Cities," by Charles Dickens, with more than fifty drawings by E. H. Garrett; Goethe's "Faust," in Dr. Anster's translation, illustrated by Frank M. Gregory; and "Becket," by Lord Alfred Tennyson, with illustrations by Frederic C. Gordon.

The Lippincotts promise Washington Irving's "Sketch Book," illustrated; "Pen and Pencil Sketches," by Henry Stacy Marks, R.A.; "Early English Ballads," illustrated with about two hundred illustrations; and "Colonial Days and Dames," by Anne Hollingsworth Wharton.

A fine edition of "Holland," by De Amicis, is to come from Porter & Coates. The illustrations are photogravures expressly prepared for this book by Dr. Charles L. Mitchell; they follow the text closely and supplement the description contained in it.

With Lee & Shepard Miss Irene E. Jerome's latest Christmas work is "The Joy Banner," "The Rest Banner," "Every-Day Banner," and "What Will the Violets Be?" each consisting of four cards decorated in colors and gold, containing appropriate selections.

Gift books to be published by James Pott & Co. are "Beautiful Thoughts from George Macdonald," arranged for every day of the year; "Loving Service Stories," and "'Gentle-Heart' Stories."

Of the unique and luxurious work, "The Art of the American Wood-Engraver," with letterpress by Mr. Philip Gilbert Hamerton, only one hundred copies will be printed by the Scribners.

Layard's "Pre-Raphaelite Illustrators of Tennyson," illustrated with reproductions from Rossetti's drawings, has just been published by Copeland & Day.

Books for Young People.

The Scribners always have a good list of books for boys and girls, and this year they will issue: "Piccino, and Other Child Stories," by Mrs. Burnett, illustrated by R. B. Birch; "The Wagner Story Book," firelight tales of the great music dramas, by William Henry Frost, illustrated by S. R. Burleigh; three new stories by Mr. G. A. Henty—"In the Heart of the Rockies," "When London Burned," and "Wulf the Saxon;" "The Butterfly Hunters in the Caribbees," by Dr. Eugene-Murray Aaron; "Czar and Sultan," the adventures of a British lad in the Russo-Turkish War of 1877–78, by Archibald Forbes; "Norseland Tales," by H. H. Boyesen; "Things Will Take a Turn," by Beatrice Harraden; "Making of the Ohio Valley States," by Samuel Adams Drake; "Olaf the Glorious," by Robert Leighton; and "A North Polar Expedition," by Gordon Stables.

Dodd, Mead & Co. will issue the Yule Log series, comprising reissues of three volumes by Richard Markham and Charles Nordhoff's "Man of War Yarns;" "Bible Steps for Little Pilgrims;" the Half Hour series in four volumes; Chosen Stories in ten small volumes; "Witch Winnie at Shinnecock; or, A King's Daughter at the Summer Art School," uniform with the other volumes of the Witch Winnie series, with illustrations by J. Wells Champney; "Gypsy Breynton," by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, with between thirty and forty illustrations by Mary Fairman Clark, an entirely new edition from new plates; "Where Honour Leads," by Lynde Palmer, author of "A Question of Honour;" "Elsie at the World's Fair," by Martha Finley, author of the Elsie and Mildred books; and "First in the Field," a story of New South Wales, by Geo. Manville Fenn, with illustrations.

The Lothrop Publishing Co. of Boston continue the good work of the D. Lothrop Co., their predecessor, with these volumes for boys and girls: "Wanted," by Mrs. G. R. Alden (Pansy); "Piokee and Her People," a sequel to "Two Young Homesteaders," by Mrs. Theodora R. Jenness; "The Child Amy," by Julia Magruder; "Little Ike Templin," by Richard Malcolm Johnston; "Lost on the Umbagog," by Willis Boyd Allen; "Only Ten Cents," by Pansy; a new edition of "Great Composers," by Hezekiah Butterworth; and new annual volumes of Wide Awake, Babyland, Little Men and Women, and Pansy.

The Boys' Illustrated Annual which the Merriam Co. will publish will have serial stories by Mr. Henty, George Manville Fenn, S. Baring-Gould, Henry M. Stanley, and many others. Their list of boys' books includes "The Castle of the Carpathians," by Jules Verne; "In the Pecos Country" and "The Cave in the Mountains," in the War-Whoop series, by Lieut. R. H. Jayne; "Richard Dare's Venture" and "The Last Cruise of the Spitfire," by Edward Stratemeyer; "The Lost Army," by Thomas W. Knox; "The Captain's Boat" and the Brave and Honest series — "Brave Tom," "Honest Ned," and "Righting the Wrong" — by William O. Stoddard.

Mr. Palmer Cox has written and illustrated "The Brownies Around the World," and it will be issued by the Century Co. in a style uniform with the earlier Brownie books, of which about 100,000 copies have been sold; P. S. Newell has a second and larger Topsy-Turvy book; Tudor Jenks has gathered together his fanciful tales, and they will soon be issued in a book to be called "Imaginations;" Oliver Herford will be represented by a collection of his humorous verses and clever drawings, the book being called "Artful Anticks;" Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge's "When Life is Young" is a book of poems for young people; Mrs. C. V. Jamison's new story, "Toinette's Philip," will soon be issued in book form.

Roberts Brothers are always to the front with good literature for the young. This year they announce "Jolly Good Times To-Day," by Mary P. Wells Smith; "Another Girl's Experience," by Leigh Webster; "Penelope Prig and Other Stories" and "Rags and Velvet Gowns," by A. G. Plympton; "The Little Lady of the Horse," by Evelyn Raymond; "Not Quite Eighteen," by Susan Coolidge; "Father Gander's Melodies," by Adelaide F. Samuels; "Last Words," a final collection of stories by Mrs. J. H. Ewing; and "The Kingdom of Coins," a tale for children of all ages, by Bradley Gilman, a new and improved edition.

Lee & Shepard announce the first volume of the Hazelwood stories, "Little Miss Faith," by Grace Le Baron. The first six volumes of the Blue and the Gray series will hereafter be called the Blue and the Gray Afloat. The new series just commenced will be called the Blue and the Gray on Land, and will treat of adventures and incidents in the armies of the contending forces. The first volume will be "Brother Against Brother; or, Civil War on the Border," by Oliver Optic, to be followed by "In the Saddle" and "A Lieutenant at Eighteen."

From E. & J. B. Young & Co.'s long list of imported S. P. C. K. books we take these few titles: "Pictures of the Old Testament for Children," by Leighton, Burne-Jones, Holman Hunt, and others; "Rick Ralton's Reconciliation," by Rev. E. N. Hoare; "A Wrong Step," by Austin Clare; "The Cruise of the Esmeralda," by Harry Collingwood; "The Vast Abyss," by George Manville Fenn; "Farmer Goldsworthy's Will," by Mrs. Isla Sitwell; "The Two Clippers," by F. Frankfort Moore; and "Sunday" for 1895.

The Macmillans will have ready soon: "Stories from English History," by the Rev. Alfred J. Church; "Maurice; or, The Red Jar," a tale of magic and adventure for boys and girls, by the Countess of Jersey; "Kensington Palace," by Mrs. Emma Marshall; "St. Winifred's or the World of School," by F. W. Farrar, a new edition, with illustrations by Gordon Browne; "My New Home," by Mrs. Molesworth; and "Andersen's Fairy Tales," a selection translated from the Danish by Mrs. Edgar Lucas, with illustrations by Linley Sambourne.

Harper & Brothers have in press: "The Boy Travellers in the Levant," adventures of two youths in a journey through Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, Greece, and Turkey, with visits to the islands of Rhodes and Cyprus and the site of ancient Troy, by Thomas W. Knox; and "Bible Stories for Young People," by the Right Rev. Henry C. Potter, D.D., the Rev. Bishop John F. Hurst, D.D., the Rev. John Hall, D.D., and others.

The list of Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s new books for boys and girls is short, but its high quality is at once evident. It includes "In Sunshine Land," by Edith M. Thomas; "Little Mr. Thimblefinger and His Queer Country," by Joel Chandler Harris; "Three Boys on an Electrical Boat," by John Trowbridge; and "When Molly Was Six," a book for children, by Eliza Orne White.

Porter & Coates will shortly have ready "Sailor Jack the Trader," by Harry Castlemon, and "Oscar in Africa." "Only an Irish Boy" and "Victor Vane, the Young Secretary," are two new stories by Horatio Alger, Jr. Edward S. Ellis' new story is "The Great Cattle Trail." The Honest Endeavor Library, by Mrs. Lucy C. Lillie, is in three volumes.

The Appletons' contribution this season to young folk's literature is made up of these five volumes: "Chris, the Model-Maker," by W. O. Stoddard; "The Patriot Schoolmaster," by Hezekiah Butterworth; "Madeleine's Rescue," by Jeanne Schultz; "Decatur and Somers," by M. Elliot Seawell; and "The Golden Fairy Book."

Thomas Nelson & Sons announce "Sons of the Vikings," an Orkney story, by John Gunn; "Mopsie," the story of a London waif, by Dorothy Walrond; "The Better Way," a tale of temperance toil, by William J. Lacey; and "Noble Lives" (new series), by Miss Lucy Taylor.

E. P. Dutton & Co. have a fine line of color books for children, including "The Talking Toys," illustrated by Miss H. M. Bennett, "Children's Delight," "Touch and Go," "Panorama Pictures," and "Black Beauty" in a handsome edition.

The indefatigable Mrs. Molesworth has finished a long story for older girls, which Thomas Whittaker will issue, "Blanche: a Story for Girls."

J. B. Lippincott Co. will have two books for girls — "Two Girls," by Amy E. Blanchard, and "Olivia," by Mrs. Molesworth.

Mrs. Laura E. Richards has nearly ready with Estes & Lauriat "Marie," a companion to "Melody."

Miss Nora Perry has this season a new book for girls, called "Hope Benham," which Little, Brown & Co. will publish.

"Seven Little Australians," by Ethel S. Turner, has just been published by Ward, Lock & Bowden.

Economics and Politics.

It is chiefly new editions that Macmillan & Co. announce under this head; their list includes "The Right to the Whole Produce of Labour: the Origin and Development of the Theory of Labour's Claim to the Whole Product of Industry," by Professor Menger; "The American Commonwealth," by the Right Hon. James Bryce, D.C.L., new third edition revised, with additional chapters, Vol. II; "Essays on Questions of the Day, Political and Social," by Goldwin Smith, D.C.L., a new revised edition, with additional essays; "Sketch of the Political History of England," by the same; "Essays on International Law," by Professor Westlake of the University of Cambridge; "Short History of English Commerce," by W. Cunningham, D.D.; "Architect, Owner, and Builder Before the Law," by T. M. Clark, fellow of the American Institute of Architects; "Essays of Joseph Mazzini, Chiefly Political," translated from the Italian and edited, with introduction, by Bolton King, M.A., in one volume, including a new translation of "Faith and the Future," and five essays translated into English for the first time, and an unpublished letter, with photogravure portrait; and "Animal Rights Considered in Relation to Social Progress," with bibliographical appendix, a new edition, with an essay on Vivisection in America, by Dr. Albert Leffingwell.

The American Academy of Political and Social Science announces the publication of two new translations in its series of Constitutions. They are: "Constitution of the Kingdom of Prussia," translated by Prof. James Harvey Robinson, and "Constitution of the Kingdom of Italy," translated by Dr. S. M. Lindsay and Dr. L. S. Rowe. Both of these translations will be supplied with historical introductions and full explanatory notes. The Academy also announces "Problems of Municipal Government," by E. L. Godkin, editor of the Nation; "The Reform of Our State Governments," by Gamaliel Bradford; "The Ultimate Standard of Value," by Prof. Dr. Eugen von Böhm-Bawerk of Vienna; "The Failure of Biologic Sociology," by Prof. Simon N. Patten; "Mortgage Banking in Russia," by D. M. Frederiksen; "Relation of Labor Organizations to Trade Instruction," by Prof. Edward W. Bemis of the University of Chicago; "A Decade of Mortgages," by George K. Holmes of the Census Bureau; "The Future Problem of the Unemployed," by John Graham Brooks; "Peaceable Boycotting," by Chester A. Reed, Esq., of the Boston bar; and "Rent and Profit," by C. W. Macfarlane.

"City Government in America," by Alfred R. Conkling, is a timely book which D. Appleton & Co. will issue soon. More in the line of social science is the Criminology series, edited by Douglas Morrison, comprising "Criminal Woman," by Professor Lombroso; "The Juvenile Offender," by Douglas Morrison; "Criminal Sociology," by Professor Ferri; and "Crime, a Social Study," by Professor Joly. In the Anthropological series, edited by Prof. Frederick Starr of the University of Chicago, "Woman's Share in Primitive Culture" will be by Otis Tufton Mason, A.M., curator of the department of ethnology in the United States National Museum.

Longmans, Green & Co. have now ready "Problems of the Far East"—Japan, Korea, China—by the Hon. George N. Curzon, M.P., with two maps and fifty illustrations, of which twenty-one are full-page. Mr. Curzon is the author of the monumental work on "Persia and the Persian Question," which we noticed fully on its appearance some time since.

"The Christian State," a new political vision by the Rev. George D. Herron, D.D., and "American Charities," a study in philanthropy and economics by Amos G. Warner, Ph.D., professor of economics in Leland Stanford, Jr., University, are announced by T. Y. Crowell & Co.

"Wealth Against Commonwealth," by Henry Demarest Lloyd, just ready from the Harpers, is declared by them to be the most complete history in existence of the great combination of brains and capital which still remains the type and model of all trusts or monopolies.

The second volume of that important work, "Social England," by various writers, edited by H. D. Traill, D.C.L., extends from the accession of Edward the First to the death of Richard III. It is just published by the Putnams.

"Abreast of the Times" is a selection from a course of sermons on social subjects, organized by the London Branch of the Christian Social Union, which James Pott & Co. publish.

English Language and Literature.

In this department the Macmillans add to their many excellent volumes the following: "A New and Complete Concordance, or Verbal Index to Words, Phrases, and Passages in the Dramatic Works of Shakespeare," with a supplementary concordance to the poems, by John Bartlett, A.M., fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, author of "Familiar Quotations;" Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales," edited by A. W. Pollard, in two volumes; "The Chronicles of Froissart," translated by John Bourchier, Lord Berners, edited and reduced to one volume by G. C. Macaulay, formerly fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; "English Prose," selections, with critical introductions by various writers and general introductions to each period, edited by Henry Craik, Vols. III and IV; "Chronological Outlines of American Literature," by Selden L. Whitcomb, with a preface by Brander Matthews; and "History of the English Language," by Oliver Farrar Emerson, professor of rhetoric and English philology in Cornell University.

Science.

The Macmillans will soon publish these half dozen books of natural science: "Wild Animals in Captivity; or, Orpheus at the Zoo," by J. E. Cornish; the Cambridge Natural History, Vol. I, "Molluscs," by Rev. A. H. Cooke, M.A.; "Aquatic Insects," by L. C. Miall, F.R.S., professor of biology in the Yorkshire College, Leeds; "Sketches in Sport and Natural History," by the late George Kingsley, M.D.; "Weather and Flood Forecasting Methods," by Thomas Russell, United States Engineer Office, Saulte Ste. Marie, Michigan; and "The Book of the Rose," by the Rev. A. Foster-Melliar.

"Land Birds and Game Birds of New England," by Henry D. Minot, will be issued by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. in a new edition, edited by William Brewster, with outline illustrations. They also announce Vol. VII of "The Silva of North America," by Charles Sprague Sargent, director of the Arnold Arboretum of Harvard University, and "Notes on the Forest Flora of Japan," by the same writer.

The great publishers of scientific books in this country, the Appletons, publish this fall: "Race and Language," by André Lefèvre, professor in the Anthropological School, Paris, No. 72 in the International Scientific series; "Degeneracy," by Prof. Max Nordau; "Discourses," by Thomas H. Huxley; and the "Life of Sir Richard Owens," with an introduction by Thomas H. Huxley.

Three volumes of delightful outdoor essays will appear this season with the imprint of the Riverside Press from authors well known to readers of the Atlantic Monthly: "From Blomidon to Smoky, and Other Papers," by the late Frank Bolles; "Riverby," by John Burroughs; and "A Florida Sketch-Book," by Bradford Torrey.

"Popular Scientific Lectures and Essays" is now in preparation by the Open Court Publishing Company of Chicago. The book is from the pen of Prof. Ernst Mach of the University of Prague, the author of the work on "The Science of Mechanics" recently published.

A fit memorial to a great physician and surgeon will be "Medical Papers and Essays," by Henry Jacob Bigelow, with a memoir of his life, in four volumes. It is to be issued by Little, Brown & Co.

In "The Birds' Calendar," issued by the Scribners, Mr. H. E. Parkhurst notes the different birds as they appear successively throughout the year in Central Park, New York.

"Twenty-Five Years of Scientific Progress," a series of lectures by William North Rice, professor of geology in Wesleyan University, is in the press with T. Y. Crowell & Co.

Roberts Brothers' Columbian Knowledge series will be continued in "Stars and Telescopes," a handy book of astronomy, by David P. Todd.

"Edible and Poisonous Mushrooms," what to eat and what to avoid, by M. C. Cooke, will be published by E. & J. B. Young & Co.

"The Birds About Us" is Dr. Charles Conrad Abbott's new volume, which the Lippincotts will issue.

Educational.

Ginn & Co.'s more important announcements are: "The Roman Pronunciation of Latin," by Frances E. Lord, professor of Latin in Wellesley College; "Mediæval Europe: 800 to 1300 A.D.," by Ephraim Emerton, professor of history in Harvard University; "A History of Greece," by P. V. N. Myers, professor of history in the University of Cincinnati; "Odes and Epodes of Horace," edited by Prof. Clement L. Smith of Harvard University; "Colloquia of Erasmus," edited by Victor S. Clark; "The First Latin Book," by W. C. Collar, headmaster of Roxbury Latin School, and M. Grant Daniell, principal of Chauncy Hall School, Boston; "Sartor Resartus," edited, with introduction and commentary, by Archibald Macmechan, professor of English in Dalhousie College; "A Book of Elizabethan Lyrics," selected and edited by F. E. Schelling, professor in the University of Pennsylvania; "Herrick," selections from the Hesperides and the Noble Numbers, edited by Edward E. Hale, Jr., of the State University of Iowa; Hugo's "Les Misérables," condensed and edited by Prof. F. C. de Sumichrast of Harvard University; "Morceaux Choisis de Paul Bourget," edited by Alphonse N. van Dael of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Storm's "Geschichte aus der Tonne," edited by Charles F. Brusie, professor in Kenyon College; and Freytag's "Doktor Luther," edited by Frank P. Goodrich, instructor of German in Yale University.

The American Book Co.'s principal announcements are: "Storer and Lindsay's Elementary Manual of Chemistry," "Kellogg's Second Book in Physiology and Hygiene," "Metcalf's English Grammar," "Butler's School English," "Small and Vincent's Introduction to the Study of Society," "Harper and Burgess' Inductive Studies in English Grammar," "Peck and Arrowsmith's Roman Life in Latin Prose and Verse," "White's School Management," and the "Report of the Committee of Ten on Secondary School Studies.'

But two volumes in this field are promised by the Scribners—a new volume in the Great Educators series, "Herbart and Modern German Educational Theory," by Charles De Garmo, Ph.D., president of Swarthmore College, and "A Primer of Psychology," by Prof. George T.

Ladd of Yale, not a condensation of a larger work, but an entirely new book designed especially for elementary study.

D. Appleton & Co. will continue their excellent International Education series with these new volumes: "Education of the Greek People," by Thomas Davidson; "Systematic Science Teaching," by E. G. Howe; "Pedagogics in the Kindergarten," by F. Froebel; and "Evolution of the Public School System in Massachusetts," by G. H. Martin.

Silver, Burdett & Co. have in press: "Higher Algebra," by George Lilley, A.M., Ph.D.; "Elements of Physics," by Prof. S. P. Meads; "A Text-book of Inorganic Chemistry" (Part II, "Metallic Elements and Qualitative Analysis"), by Prof. Alfred A. Bennett; "Choice English Lyrics," Vol. IV of Select English Classic series, edited by James Baldwin, Ph.D.; and "American Writers of To-Day," by Henry C. Vedder.

Harper & Brothers have now ready a new "History of English Literature," by J. Logie Robertson, first English master in the Edinburgh Ladies' College.

Dr. John Fiske's "History of the United States for the Use of Schools" is the one new educational book from the Riverside Press — unus sed leo!

Standard Literature.

A. C. Armstrong & Son announce a new edition of the "Complete Works of Edgar Allan Poe," with a memoir and an introduction on the genius of Poe by Richard H. Stoddard. It will fill six tastefully printed volumes and be known as the Fordham edition. It will contain etchings from Gifford, Church, Piatt, Pennel, and other artists, also a portrait on steel of Poe and a Japan proof illustration of the cottage at Fordham, made specially for this edition, while there are added facsimiles of the first draft of "The Bells" and a number of facsimile letters. "Walton and Some Earlier Writers on Fish and Fishing," the eighteenth volume of the Book Lover's Library, by R. B. Marston, editor of the Fishing Gazette, is another announcement by this firm.

An announcement of great interest is that of a new edition of Molière's dramatic works, translated by Katharine Prescott Wormeley, the translator of Balzac's novels. This edition will include a preface to Molière's works by H. de Balzac, criticisms on the author by C. A. Sainte-Beuve, portraits by Coypel and Mignard, and decorative title-pages by Updike, and will be issued at short intervals in duodecimo volumes, leather backs. Vol. I, "The Misanthrope; Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme," and Vol. II, "Tartuffe; Les Précieuses Ridicules; George Dandin," are now ready. Vol. III, "Les Femmes Savantes; Le Malade Imaginaire," and Vol. IV, "L'Avare; Don Juan; Les Fâcheux," are in press.

The Lippincotts notify the publication of "The Works of Laurence Sterne," edited by George Saintsbury, in six volumes, 16mo; and "Corinne, or Italy," by Madame de Staël; "Tom Cringle's Log" and the "Cruise of the Midge," by Michael Scott, reprinted from Blackwood's Magazine; and William Hazlitt's "Liber Amoris," containing numerous passages omitted in the editions of 1823.

Stone & Kimball announce the "Works of Edgar Allan Poe," newly collected and edited, with a memoir, critical introduction, and notes, by Edmund Clarence Stedman and George Edward Woodberry, with many portraits, facsimiles, and pictures by Albert Edward Sterner, in ten volumes.

Miscellaneous.

A volume on "The Congress of Women," held in the Woman's Building, World's Columbian Exposition, May 15 to October 30, 1893, has been edited by Mrs. Mary K. Oldham Eagle, chairman of Committee on Congresses, Board of Lady Managers, and published by the W. B. Conkey Co. of Chicago. It is sold for the benefit of the Woman's Memorial Building Fund.

Law books form a part of the business of the Park Street publishers in Boston. They announce for this season: "Insurance — Fire, Marine, and Life," by Charles F. Beach, Jr., author of "Counter-Negligence," and "The Principles of Equity and Equity Pleading," by Elias Merwin, edited by Henry C. Merwin.

"Samantha Among the Colored Folk, being My Impressions of the Race Problem," by Marietta Holley (Josiah Allen's Wife), with nearly one hundred illustrations by E. W. Kemble, and "Among Men and Horses," by M. Horace Hayes, F.R.C.V.S., are two diverse books from Dodd, Mead & Co.

Two new volumes in the Badminton Library, which Little, Brown & Co. publish in this country, are "Yachting," by Sir Edward Sullivan, Lord Brassey, G. L. Watson, Lewis Herreshoff and other writers, with forty-eight full-page plates and 253 illustrations in the text by R. T. Pritchett. It is an entirely new and thorough history of and treatise on yachting by leading English and American authorities. The same firm will also issue "Curb, Snaffle, and Spur," a method of training young horses for the cavalry service and for general use under the saddle, by Edward L. Anderson.

A companion volume to the "Century Dictionary" will be the "Century Cyclopedia of Names," a pronouncing and etymological dictionary of names in geography, biography, mythology, history, ethnology, art, archæology, fiction, etc., edited by Benjamin E. Smith, M.A., managing editor of the "Century Dictionary," assisted by a number of eminent specialists, to be published in one volume of 1,100 pages, uniform in size and typography with the "Century Dictionary" by the Century Co.

The J. B. Lippincott Co. are American agents for "Chambers' Concise Gazetteer of the World," topographical, statistical, and historical, and "Stanford's Compendium of Geography and Travel, for General Reading," a new issue, based on Hellwald's "Die Erde und ihre Völker," translated by Prof. A. H. Keane, M.A.I., a series of volumes descriptive of the great divisions of the globe, with maps, ethnological appendixes, and several hundred illustrations.

S. C. Griggs & Co. announce for early publication an authorized translation, by Elias J. MacEwan, M.A., of Dr. Gustav Freytag's work, "The Technique of the Drama." It is a historical and philological exposition of dramatic composition and art, stating the general principles governing the structure of plays, the creation of characters, and the rules of acting.

Lee & Shepard announce the "Library Catalogue," a blank book for keeping record of the books, prints, and manuscripts in private libraries, with printed headings and indexed, and an enlarged edition of "The Age of Fable; or, Beauties of Mythology," by Thomas Bulfinch, illustrated.

Of "The Gist of Whist," by C. E. Coffin, the fourth edition, carefully revised and corrected up to date, will be ready early in October with J. Selwin Tait & Sons, who will also bring out "Sandow's System of Physical Training" in a new cheaper edition unabridged.

Mrs. H. W. Ridgley's "The Old Brick Churches of Maryland," from A. D. F. Randolph & Co., is an account of the influence exercised by the old churches on the history of the early settlements of Maryland and Virginia.

"The Minor Tactics of Chess," by Franklin K. Young and Edwin C. Howell, is a treatise on the deployment of the forces in obedience to strategic principle, to be published by Roberts Brothers.

"Lingua Gemmæ," by Ada L. Sutton, to be issued by the Merriam Co., will interpret the language of gems and state the superstitions connected with them.

The "Book-Lover's Almanac" for the year 1895, with illustrations by Jules Sureas, will be issued by Duprat & Co., and the "Goethe Year Book" by E. P. Dutton & Co.

An every-day book, "About Women: What Men Have Said," has been compiled and arranged by Rose Porter for publication by the Putnams.

Miss Lucretia Peabody Hale's "Fagots for the Fireside" will come out in a new and enlarged edition, with illustrations, from the Riverside Press.

The new (seventh) volume of "The Book Worm," an illustrated treasury of old-time literature, will be issued by A. C. Armstrong & Son.

The Yellow Book, No. III, to come in October from Copeland & Day, promises better things than either of the preceding numbers.

In "The Chafing-Dish Supper" Mrs. Christine Terhune Herrick exploits the varied capacities of the chafing-dish (Scribners).

PERIODICALS.

The September Century has some admirable short stories. Anna Fuller's "Jake Stanwood's Gal," is as satisfactory a story as we have read for a long time. "The Whirligig of Time," by George A. Hibbard, is racy and clever in its way. "A Gentleman Vagabond," by F. Hopkinson Smith, has the delicious Southern flavor which delights us always in this writer's literary work. "Love in Idleness," by F. Marion Crawford, is as light and frothy as the love-making at fashionable watering places usually is. Mrs. Burton Harrison's "A Bachelor Maid" is more of a story, and the reader is beginning to wish the numbers were longer. Mr. Jacob A. Riis has a sensible article on "Play Grounds for City Schools," J. M. Rice a description of "School Excursions in Germany," and the bicycle rider in Asia flies over the Gobi Desert and through the western gates of the Great Wall. Mrs. Oliphant has a pleasant paper on "Addison the Humorist;" there is more of Edgar Allan Poe's correspondence, and the first numbers of the "Recollections of Aubrey de Vere." Dr. Parkhurst receives a deserved word of commendation, and the tramp question a little more consideration from Mr. Josiah Flynt.

Lee and Shepard's New Books.

The Age of Fable; Or, Beauties of Mythology.

By THOMAS BULFINCH. Small 8vo. Upwards of one hundred pages added to the 1894 edition. Cloth, $2.50.

This work, which from the date of its original publication has been regarded as classical authority, was revised a few years since with important additions by Rev. EDWARD EVERETT HALE. In former editions Mr. Bulfinch's endeavor was to connect mythology with literature. The interest and study in art have so increased that the original idea has now been extended by connecting the subject with sculpture and painting, and thus its value as a companion in reading is extended. Particular attention has also been given to exhaustive indexing, and it is believed that the present edition, to which many illustrations and one hundred pages of text have been added, as thus augmented, will also serve as a classical dictionary.

The Honeycombs of Life.

A Series of Sermons. By the Rev. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D. D., author of "White Slaves," "Common Folks' Religion," etc. Cloth, $2.00.

Back Country Poems.

By SAM WALTER FOSS. Cloth, illustrated, $1.50.

"There is in these poems a naturalness, a love of humanity, and an insight into human and inanimate nature that one likes at first sight. Their strongest point, after their all-pervading humor, is to be found in the fact that they all contain something for every degree of intelligence; their logic is sometimes ludicrously deep for the backwoods dialect in which they are written, but the mind that can take only a dipperful will go away satisfied as well as that which can take a pailful."—N. Y. Journal.

Because I Love You.

Edited by ANNA E. MACK. Cloth, Cream White and Gold. Price $1.50.

Poetry is the language of love. Volumes of sweet and tender poems might be gathered from the world's literature, but few could select with the discrimination and delicacy which Miss Mack has manifested. She has given a rare book to con with a sweetheart or to send with a gift. It is a volume appropriate for hundreds of occasions. This grouping of the best thoughts of the best poets, in its beautiful dress, is a veritable casket of gems.

A Hilltop Summer.

By the author of "A Spinster's Leaflets." Cloth, illustrated with half-tone vignettes, $1.25.

A series of connected sketches which depicts village life and character with mingled humor and pathos. The binding and half-tone illustrations are very attractive.

NEW EDITION.

A Spinster's Leaflets.

Wherein is written the history of her Doorstep Baby, a fancy which in time became a fact and changed a life. By ALYN YATES KEITH. Illustrated. Size 5¾ x 7¾ inches. Cloth, $1.25.

"The Reveries of a Bachelor" are not more delightful reading than these dainty word pictures of spinsterhood, which have much of the enduring charm of Miss Mitford's or Mrs. Gaskell's sketches of village life."—Boston Transcript.

Sirs, Only Seventeen!

By VIRGINIA F. TOWNSEND. Author of "Mostly Marjorie Day," "Darryll Gap," "Boston Girl's Ambitions," etc. Cloth, $1.50.

A Modern Magdalene.

By VIRNA WOODS, author of "The Amazons." Cloth, $1.25.

The author of this story has done a very daring thing, and a thing that no woman, at least, has yet attempted. The result inclines us to wish that if literary art must handle such subjects, the artist might always be a woman and a poet. Miss Woods has called a spade a spade, and she has betrayed an intimacy with the shadier facts of life that is not less remarkable than her appreciation of the good and bad elements in the human heart which determine the specific form of sin which is so corrupting to society. The moral is not left to be guessed, however, or even to be intellectually appreciated. It is sure to be felt. And it is, therefore, one of the few books of the kind which a young woman may read with profit. It is a very strongly written story, and will assuredly take an enviable place among successful works of fiction.

Matter, Ether, and Motion.

The Factors and Relations of Physical Science. By Prof A. E. DOLBEAR. New and enlarged edition. Cloth, illustrated, $2.00.

In the new edition of "Matter, Ether, and Motion," the author gives us a complete résumé of mechanical principles, worked out through all the departments of physics, and the work is a striking illustration of the manner in which a complicated and recondite subject can be made plain to the average reader by one who has thoroughly digested it. The new chapters of the book give to it much additional value and interest, as in them the author shows how energy is involved in such phenomena as are presented in spiritual séances, and points out that such phenomena all employ physical energy in such a way as to be clearly amenable to physical laws.

I Am Well.

The Modern Practice of Natural Suggestion as Distinct from Hypnotic or Unnatural Influence. Scientia Vitæ. Scientia—Science—The orderly arrangement of ascertained facts. Vitæ—Life—Demonstrating the eternal principle of life. By C. W. POST. Second edition. Cloth, $1.25.

"This work explains the principle of mental healing as founded upon the fundamental promise that man, by the development of his intelligence, secures a "marvelous control over material by the power of his mentality, and proves it by curing his physical ailments and preserving bodily health solely by the skillful exercise of mind." The book is written in an attractive and lucid style, and whatever may be one's opinions as to the system advocated, it merits regard as an able and full exposition of the views concerning the true nature of health and disease advocated by the author."—Battle Creek Journal.

The Special Kinesiology of Educational Gymnastics.

By BARON NILS POSSE, M.G. With 267 illustrations and an analytical chart, [illegible]

The previous editions of Baron Posse's Swedish System of Educational Gymnastics having been exhausted, and a new edition demanded, the author has taken the opportunity to completely revise and enlarge it, making it the most complete and practical treatise on Educational Gymnastics in the English language. Although the title is changed to "Special Kinesiology," the basis of the work is the Swedish system, which the author holds must be the foundation of all rational gymnastics, "since, to-day, it is the only system whose details have been elucidated by and derived from Mechanics, Anatomy, Physiology and Psychology, and whose theories have survived the scrutiny of scientists all over the world." Many tables of exercises have been added, together with an analytical chart of the system, which will be of great value to all students and teachers. Size of chart 18 x 22 inches.

A NEW BOOK.

In Wild Rose Time.

By AMANDA M. DOUGLAS, author of "Larry," "Bethia Wray's New Name," "Osborne of Arrochar," "Claudia," "In the King's Country," etc. Cloth, $1.50.

Library Catalogue.

A Blank Book for Keeping Record of the Books, Prints and Manuscripts in Private Libraries, etc., with printed headings and indexed. Cloth, $1.50.

ILLUSTRATED BOOKS.

I Have Called You Friends.

By IRENE E. JEROME, author of "One Year's Sketch Book," "Nature's Hallelujah," "A Bunch of Violets," "In a Fair Country," "Sun Prints in Sky Tints," "The Message of the Bluebird," "From an Old Love Letter." Chastely illuminated in Missal style. Printed in best style on fine paper. Beautiful cover design by author. Size, 7 x 10 inches. Boxed, $2.00.

Our Colonial Homes.

By SAMUEL ADAMS DRAKE, author of "Old Landmarks of Boston," "Decisive Events in American History," etc. Illustrated by 20 large half-tone engravings. New edition. Cloth, full gilt, gilt edges. Size, 7 1-4 x 11 1-4 inches. Boxed, $2.50.

"This is far from being a mere description of houses. The letterpress is fascinating in its detail of anecdote and legend. Mr. Drake is a thorough antiquarian and is familiar with the history of every inch of the ground surveyed here. The sketch of a house is invariably accompanied with some account of the life and fortunes of the builder or occupant of these historic homes. A valuable publication, whether regarded from an artistic, antiquarian, historical or commercial point of view."—Philadelphia Ledger.

All Around the Year 1895.

Designs in color by J. PAULINE SUNTER. Printed on heavy cardboard, gilt edges, with chain, tassels and ring. Size 4 ¼ x 5¼ inches. Boxed, 50 cents.

The Household Hymns and Poems.

Curfew Must Not Ring To-night.
That Glorious Song of Old.
Ring Out, Wild Bells.
The Breaking Waves Dashed High.
Rock of Ages.
Nearer, My God, to Thee.
Gray's Elegy.
Abide with Me.
My Faith Looks up to Thee.
Home, Sweet Home.
It Was the Calm and Silent Night.
O Why Should the Spirit of Mortal be Proud?

Printed on fine cut paper and attractively bound. Twelve kinds. Price 25 cents each. All are poetic gems, full of religious faith, loving sentiment, ennobling, inspiring and well chosen.

Miss Jerome's Latest.

The Joy Banner.
The Rest Banner.
Every-Day Banner.
What Will the Violets Be?

Each of the above consists of four cards beautifully decorated in colors and gold, attached by ribbons, containing appropriate selections from the best authors, and inclosed in decorated envelope, by IRENE E. JEROME. Price 50 cents each.

This unique set of publications differs from anything previously given to the public, both in illustration and form. It consists of four designs of banners, each being composed of four separate panels or cards, 5 x 7½ inches, connected by colored ribbons, so that it can be displayed on the wall or folded into an ornamental envelope which accompanies it in book form. Miss Jerome's happy faculty of grouping and interpreting beautiful thoughts by means of colored and illuminated designs is highly appreciated by all book buyers, and her work is welcomed by all lovers of the beautiful. The selections of thought as well as the decorations for each banner are appropriate to the title given. "The Joy Banner" is a wealth of Nasturtiums artistically woven in and out through the design. "The Every-Day Banner" contains thoughts for every day brightened by the favorite Bachelor's Button in delicate tints. "The Rest Banner" is rich in coloring, having the Sweet Pea in its many tints beautifully sustaining the text. "What Will the Violets Be?" words by Dr. Gannett, is decorated most appropriately with clusters of violets, finely grouped. The mechanical work is beautifully executed, and the banners must be seen to be fully appreciated.

NEW JUVENILES.

THE BLUE AND THE GRAY—ON LAND.

Brother Against Brother;

Or, The Civil War on the Border. By OLIVER OPTIC. Illustrated. Price $1.50.

"Brother Against Brother" is the first volume of new series covering the operations of the armies in the Civil War as the previous series covered those of the navy. The story opens in one of the border States, which was the scene of many exciting episodes previous to and at the opening of the war. In the families of two brothers from the North are two sons who are the heroes of the story, on either side of the question. In this volume the reader should not look for a connected historical narrative of this important period in our history; but he may expect, and will surely find, that the incidents are made to fit accurately with the facts, and to conform with the spirit of the eventful years which were among the most critical in the life of our nation. This book shows again Oliver Optic's wonderful skill, his marvelous vitality, and his perfect sympathy with all that is best in his young friends.

NEW VOLUMES IN THE ALL-OVER-THE-WORLD LIBRARY.

Up and Down the Nile; Or, Young Adventurers in Africa.

By OLIVER OPTIC. Cloth, illustrated, $1.25.

Asiatic Breezes; Or, Students on the Wing.

By OLIVER OPTIC. Cloth, illustrated, $1.25.

A NEW "PRUDY" SERIES.

LITTLE PRUDY'S CHILDREN:

Wee Lucy.

By SOPHIE MAY, author of "Little Prudy Series," "Dotty Dimple Series," "Prudy's Flyaway Series," "Flaxie Frizzle Series," "Quinnebassett Series," etc. Cloth, illustrated, 75 cents.

THE HAZELWOOD STORIES.

Little Miss Faith.

The story of a country week at Falcon's-Height. By GRACE LE BARON. Cloth, illustrated, 75 cents.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE CONWAYS."

Mollie Miller.

By EFFIE W. MERRIMAN. Cloth, illustrated, $1.25.

The Boy's Own Guide to Fishing, Tackle Making, and Fish Breeding.

By JOHN HARRINGTON KEENE. Illustrated, $1.50.

"This is a volume that will delight and instruct the boys. It is beautifully illustrated, and the text is bright and practical in its instruction, and interesting upon every page, because it gives just the information that every spirited boy should have. The best and widest awake boy-fishers make the widest awake business men. The author gives the why and wherefore of all things that are likely to perplex the young angler, as well as the making of each piece of tackle. All illustrated by suitable diagrams. A very clever chapter is also given on fish breeding."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

⁂ Our Descriptive Catalogue of more than 1000 Volumes sent to any address upon application.

LEE AND SHEPARD, Publishers, 10 Milk Street, Boston.

OUR NEW BOOKS.

WANTED.

By Mrs. G. R. Alden (Pansy). 12mo, cloth, $1.50. Issued.

One of Pansy's best, written true to life, which charms the reader.

PIOKEE AND HER PEOPLE.

A Sequel to "Two Young Homesteaders." By Mrs. Theodora R. Jenness. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

A story of Indian life in the Northwest.

THE CHILD AMY.

By Julia Magruder. 4to, cloth, $1.50. Ready Oct. 1.

This book is charmingly written, being a story of a little child picked up in midocean by a boy who took upon himself her adoption and education. How the child by her winsome ways made friends with the boy's uncle who had cast him off, thereby effecting a reconciliation between them.

NEW STREAMS IN OLD CHANNELS.

Selections from the writings of Dr. Lyman Abbott. By Mary Storrs Haynes. A new volume of Spare Minute Series. Introduction by Rev. Theodore T. Munger. 16mo, $1.00.

LITTLE IKE TEMPLIN.

By Richard Malcolm Johnston, author of "Mr. Billy Downs," etc. 12mo, $1.00. Ready Sept. 20.

A collection of stories for the young people, all bright and fresh.

LOST ON THE UMBAGOG.

By Willis Boyd Allen. 12mo, cloth, 75 cents. Ready Sept. 20.

A story of four boys who camped out during their midwinter vacation. How they got snowed in, and their adventures with bears and outlaws. Intensely interesting.

ONLY TEN CENTS.

By Pansy. 12mo, cloth, $1.50. Ready Nov. 1.

GREAT COMPOSERS.

By Hezekiah Butterworth. New edition, enlarged. Fully illustrated. 16mo, cloth, $1.00. Ready Sept. 20.

NEW ANNUAL VOLUMES. READY OCT. 20.

WIDE AWAKE KK.

The completion of the serial, "Guert Ten Eyck," by W. O. Stoddard, also many short stories by the best writers. Profusely illustrated. Cloth, $1.50.

BABYLAND FOR 1894.

Contains four colored pictures besides hundreds of other pictures and short stories which will make the youngest children happier and better and be a blessing to the tired mother. Boards, 75 cents; cloth, $1.00.

LITTLE MEN AND WOMEN FOR 1894.

For Young Readers. Boards, $1.25; cloth, $1.75.

"There is an indescribable charm hovering around "Little Men and Women." Its attractive contributions and beautiful illustrations cultivate the youthful mind in the right direction."—Boston Herald.

THE PANSY FOR 1894.

Edited by "Pansy" (Mrs. G. R. Alden) and Rev. G. R. Alden. Colored frontispiece. The several new features of this volume help to increase its popularity, making it almost indispensable in every family circle. The Christian Endeavor bulletin not only furnishes information but gives many valuable suggestions to the thousands of Junior Endeavorers. It also furnishes many happy hours of entertainment and instruction through the serial stories, "Only Ten Cents," "Vira's Motto," Golden Discovery and Greek Literature Papers by the well-known authors "Pansy," Margaret Sidney and Elizabeth Abbott. There are many short stories, poems and illustrations. Boards, $1.25; cloth, $1.75.

LOTHROP PUBLISHING COMPANY,
114-120 Purchase Street, Boston, Mass.

THE MERRIAM COMPANY'S

New and Forthcoming Books.

Napoleon, Lover and Husband.
By Frederic Masson. Translated from the 14th French edition by J. M. Howell. Five photogravure plates. 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

The Old Post Road.
A delightful story of early days in Maryland. By M. G. McClelland. 16mo, oblong, cloth. With photogravure frontispiece. 75 cents.

"Nothing that this author has produced has pleased us more than this little story."—Boston Times.

The Land of the Changing Sun.
A delightful story of adventure. By Will. N. Harben. With frontispiece. 16mo, oblong, cloth, 75 cents.

Belle-Plante and Cornelius.
A study of the ideal and the real. By Claude Tillier. Illustrated, 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

"As a study of two characters it is most interesting."—Literary World.

Two Bad Brown Eyes.
A powerful delineation of character. By Marie St. Felix, author of "A Little Game With Destiny." 12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

"It is a daring romance."—Detroit News-Tribune.

Lingua Gemmæ.
A language of gems, with the popular superstitions and significations. By Ada L. Sutton. Profusely illustrated by Mary F. Clark. 16mo, cloth, $1.50.

Broadoaks.
A Romance of Virginia. By M. G. McClelland. Illustrated by Charles Edward Boutwood. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The theme is wholly original and the story ranks among the best of this author."—Boston Transcript.

Here and There with Prominent Actors.
Episodes in the Professional and Private Life of Distinguished Actors and Actresses. By M. T. With photographs. 16mo, oblong, cloth, 75 cents.

My Uncle Benjamin.
A humorous and philosophical novel. By Claude Tillier. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

A Common Mistake.
A society novel of extreme interest and merit. By Jeanne M. Howell. 12mo, cloth, 50 cents.

"One of the best novels of the season."—Boston Traveller.

New Books for Young Readers.

The Lost Army.
Adventures of two boys in the War of the Rebellion. By Thomas W. Knox. Illustrated. Large square 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

The Captain's Boat.
An interesting story for boys. By William O. Stoddard. Illustrated. Large square 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

Richard Dare's Venture.
A story of a boy's struggle for existence. By Edward Stratemeyer. Illustrated. Large square 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

The Brave and Honest Series.—Brave Tom, Honest Ned, Righting the Wrong.
By Edward S. Ellis. Illustrated. Large square 12mo, cloth, per vol., $1.25; per set, in box, $3.75.

The Castle of the Carpathians.
A story of strange adventures. By Jules Verne. Thirty-eight full-page illustrations. Large square 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

The Last Cruise of the Spitfire.
An interesting sea story. By Edward Stratemeyer. Illustrated. Large square 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

In the Pecos Country.
(War Whoop Series No. 3.) An interesting story of adventure among the Indians. By Lieut. R. H. Jayne. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

The Cave in the Mountain.
(War Whoop Series No. 4.) A Sequel to "In the Pecos Country." By Lieut. R. H. Jayne. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Boys' Illustrated Annual.—Contains serial stories by G. A. Henty, George Manville Fenn, S. Baring-Gould, Henry M. Stanley, etc., thirteen full-page colored plates and many wood engravings. Large quarto, cloth, $3.50.

For sale at all bookstores, or sent, postpaid, upon receipt of price by

THE MERRIAM COMPANY, Publishers and Booksellers, 67 Fifth Ave., New York.

AMERICAN BOOK COMPANY'S

Newest Books

AMERICAN SYSTEM OF VERTICAL WRITING. Six numbers. Per dozen,	$1.00
BUTLER'S SCHOOL ENGLISH. For written English work in Secondary Schools. By GEORGE P. BUTLER, former Master in the Lawrenceville School, New Jersey,	.75
METCALF'S ENGLISH GRAMMAR. For Common Schools. By ROBERT C. METCALF, Supervisor of Schools, Boston, and THOMAS METCALF, Illinois State Normal School,	.60
MAXWELL'S FIRST BOOK IN ENGLISH. For Beginners. By WILLIAM H. MAXWELL, Superintendent of Schools, Brooklyn, New York,	.40
ECLECTIC ENGLISH CLASSICS— Latest Additions:
Macaulay's Essay on Milton,	.20
Milton's L'Allegro, Il Penseroso, Comus, Lycidas,	.20
Shakespeare's Midsummer-Night's Dream,	.20
George Eliot's Silas Marner,	.30
GUERBER'S MYTHS OF GREECE AND ROME. By H. A. GUERBER. Superbly Illustrated,	1.50
WHITE'S SCHOOL MANAGEMENT. By Dr. EMERSON E. WHITE,	1.00
WILLIS'S PRACTICAL FLORA. For Schools and Colleges. By OLIVER R. WILLIS. Illustrations, glossary, and index,	1.50
KELLOGG'S SECOND BOOK OF PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE. For Grammar and Secondary Schools. By Dr. J. H. KELLOGG, Member of the American and British Association for the Advancement of Science. Illustrated,	.80
SMALL AND VINCENT'S INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF SOCIETY. By ALBION W. SMALL, University of Chicago, and G. E. VINCENT, Vice-Chancellor of the Chautauqua System of Education. Maps and diagrams,	1.80
STORER AND LINDSAY'S ELEMENTARY MANUAL OF CHEMISTRY. By F. H. STORER, Harvard College, and W. B. LINDSAY, Dickinson College. Illustrated,	1.20
MILNE'S ELEMENTS OF ALGEBRA. A Course for Grammar Schools. By W. J. MILNE, President State Normal College, Albany, N. Y.,	.60
ROBINSON'S NEW INTELLECTUAL ARITHMETIC,	.35
FUNDENBERG'S FIRST LESSONS IN READING. Based on the Phonic Method. By ELIZABETH H. FUNDENBERG. Illustrated,	.25
The Same. Teachers' Edition,	.50
REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF TEN ON SECONDARY SCHOOL STUDIES. (Published for the benefit of the National Educational Association.)	.30

Books sent prepaid to any address on receipt of prices. Circulars, Price Lists, and Bulletin of New Books free. Address the Publishers at

New York, Cincinnati, Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, or Portland, O.

PORTER & COATES,

PHILADELPHIA,

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

HOLLAND.

By EDMONDO DE AMICIS.

Translated from the Italian by HELEN ZIMMERN.

This edition is made from new electrotype plates, and has been very carefully printed. It contains forty-four Photogravure illustrations and a map. Bound in two volumes, small octavo, gilt tops. Cloth, ornamental, in cloth box (with slip covers), $5.00; half calf, gilt top, $10.00; large-paper edition, in 2 vols., limited to 150 copies, $10.00.

This superb edition of de Amicis' "Holland" will be welcomed by all book lovers. As a book of travel the work has become a classic, and contains far and away the best description of the Dutch country and people. The subject gives de Amicis full scope for the exercise of his brilliant literary gifts, his powers of picturesque description and sly humor. The illustrations include many views of historical buildings, views of famous cities, scenes on the placid canals and in the country districts. The photogravures compare favorably with the best work ever done in America. The translation is entirely new and has been made with the greatest care to preserve as far as possible the charm of the original, and at the same time to retain the accuracy of statement and historical details.

NEW JUVENILES for Boys and Girls by the Popular Authors,

MRS. LUCY C. LILLIE,
HORATIO ALGER, Jr.,
HARRY CASTLEMON,
EDWARD. S. ELLIS.

ONLY AN IRISH BOY; or, Andy Burke's Fortunes and Misfortunes.

VICTOR VANE; or, The Young Secretary.

By HORATIO ALGER, Jr., author of "The Ragged Dick" and "Tattered Tom" Series, etc. Illustrated, 12mo, cloth, yellow and gold, $1.25 each.

THE GREAT CATTLE TRAIL.

Being the first volume of "Forest and Prairie" Series. By EDWARD S. ELLIS, author of "The Deerfoot" and "Wyoming" Series, etc. Illustrated, 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

SAILOR JACK THE TRADER.

Being the sixth volume of "The War" Series.

OSCAR IN AFRICA.

Being the third volume of "The Hunter" Series. By HARRY CASTLEMON, author of "Rocky Mountain," "Roughing It," "Go Ahead" Series, etc. Illustrated, 12mo, cloth, blue, white and gold, $1.25 each.

THE FAMILY DILEMMA.

A Story for Girls. By LUCY C LILLIE, author of "The Squire's Daughter," "Helen Glenn," etc. Illustrated, 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

ALISON'S ADVENTURES.

RUTH ENDICOTT'S WAY.

By LUCY C. LILLIE. (To be published shortly.) These three excellent new stories for girls will be sold in a box, in uniform binding, $3.75; sold separately, $1.25 each.

PORTER & COATES.

E. & J. B. YOUNG & CO.'S

New Publications.

THREE NEW BOOKS BY

MRS. ELIZABETH RUNDLE CHARLES,

Author of "Chronicles of Schönberg Cotta Family."

I. Joan the Maid: Deliverer of England and France. A story of the Fifteenth Century done into Modern English. 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

II. Attila and His Conquerors. A Story of the Days of St. Patrick and St. Leo the Great. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

III. Songs New and Old. Collected from the writings of Mrs. Charles. 16mo, cloth, $1.50.

The Celtic Church in Scotland. Being an introduction to the History of the Christian Church in Scotland down to the death of St. Margaret. By JOHN DOWDEN, D.D., Bishop of Edinburgh. 16mo, cloth, $1.50.

The Church in the British Isles Before the Coming of Saint Augustine. Three Lectures delivered in St. Paul's Cathedral by the Rev. G. F. BROWNE. 16mo, cloth, 60 cents.

Third Edition, Revised, of

The "Higher Criticism" and the Verdict of the Monuments. By the Rev. A. H. SAYCE, Queen's College, Oxford, 12mo, cloth, 587 pages. Price, $3.00.

S. S. TIMES.—"The book is rich in archæological information."

NATIONAL BAPTIST.—"It is painstaking, conscientious, thorough, and (as we have said) indispensable."

THE WATCHMAN.—"Has rendered the thoughtful Christian people a great service."

INDEPENDENT.—"An extremely suggestive and very valuable book."

Simple Experiments for Science Teaching. Including two hundred experiments fully illustrating the elementary Physics and Chemistry division in the evening school continuation code. By JOHN A. BOWER. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

Edible and Poisonous Mushrooms. What to Eat and What to Avoid. By M. C. COOKE, M. A., author of "Freaks and Fancies of Plant Life," etc. With 18 colored plates illustrating forty-eight species. 16mo, cloth, $1.50.

The Vast Abyss: Being the story of Tom Blount, his Uncles and his Cousin Sam. By GEORGE MANVILLE FENN. Illustrated, 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

SUNDAY--Vol. for 1895.

Unequaled for
New Illustrations,
Delightful Stories,
And good reading for
Young and old.

The Stories and Illustrations in SUNDAY are all original. SUNDAY is not one of the many Annuals made up of old woodcuts and retold stories. It is all NEW.

PRICES.

Paper boards, illuminated side	$1.25
Cloth, side in gold and colors, gilt edge	2.00

Will be sent free by mail, on receipt of price, by

E. & J. B. YOUNG & CO.,
Cooper Union, Fourth Ave., New York.

Rand, McNally & Co.'s New Books.

"Reasonable, right, and rigid."—J. STERLING MORTON,
Secretary of Agriculture.

"I commend the book most highly."—W. McKINLEY,
Governor of Ohio.

REED'S RULES,

A Manual of Parliamentary Law. By the Hon. THOMAS B. REED, Ex-Speaker of the House of Representatives. 232 pages, size, 4 x 6 inches. Handy for the pocket. Price, in cloth cover, 75 cents; full seal grain flexible leather, $1.25.

A FLOWER OF FRANCE.

A Story of Old Louisiana. By MARAH ELLIS RYAN, author of "Told in the Hills," "Squaw Elouise," "A Pagan of the Alleghanies," "In Love's Domains," "Merze," etc. Cloth, price, $1.00.

"The story is well told."—Herald, New York.

"A real romance—just the kind of romance one delights in."—Times, Boston.

"Full of stirring incident and picturesque description."—Press, Philadelphia.

"The interest holds the reader until the closing page."—Inter-Ocean, Chicago.

"Told with great fascination and brightness. . . . The general impression delightful. . . . Many thrilling scenes."—Herald, Chicago.

"A thrilling story of passion and action."—Commercial, Memphis.

The Acme Library,

A New Select Library of Standard Books,

BY THE BEST AUTHORS.

Handsomely Bound in Cloth, Gilt Top, Many Being Profusely Illustrated, Price, $1.00.

Write for List.

Holiday and Gift Books.

The Abbe Constantin. LUDOVIC HALEVY. Beautifully illustrated.
The Light of Asia. SIR EDWIN ARNOLD.
Lucile. OWEN MEREDITH.
Black Beauty. ANNA SEWELL.
Selection of Bryant's Poems.
Selection of Scott's Poems.

These books are bound in delicate colored fine linen, with a handsome filigree design side stamp, both in gold and silver, gilt top. Each volume put up in a neat box. Price, $1.50.

Recent Additions to Rialto Series.

PAPER COVER, 50 CENTS.

The Heir of Redclyffe. By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE.
Michael's Crag. By GRANT ALLEN.
A Review of the World's Religious Congresses. By Rev. L. P. MERCER.
The Two-Legged Wolf. A Romance. By N. N. KARAZIN. Illustrated.
The Red House. By THE DUCHESS.
His Will and Hers. By DORA RUSSELL.
The Red Sultan. By J. MACLAREN COBBAN.

Recent Additions to the Globe Library.

PAPER COVER, 25 CENTS.

Micah Clarke. By A. CONAN DOYLE.
The Great Keinplatz Experiment. By A. CONAN DOYLE.
The House of the Wolf. By STANLEY J. WEYMAN.
The Unknown Life of Jesus Christ. By NICOLAS NOTOVITCH.
Magdalena. By PERPETUO PONSLEVI.
Against Odds. By LAWRENCE L. LYNCH.

In Preparation for Rialto Series,

THE BIRTH OF A SOUL.

By Mrs. A. PHILLIPS, author of "Man Proposes."

For sale by all booksellers. Mailed, prepaid, on receipt of price.

RAND, McNALLY & CO., Publishers,
Chicago and New York.

John C. Nimmo's New Books.

FOR AUTUMN, 1894.

In Two Volumes. Small 4to, cloth, gilt top. Uniform with "The Life of Michelangelo Buonarroti." Price 36s. net.

JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS. A Biography, compiled from his Papers and Correspondence by HORATIO F. BROWN, with Portraits and other Illustrations.

In One Volume. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Price 5s. net.

GIOVANNI BOCCACCIO. As Man and Author. By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS.

In One Volume. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Price 5s. net.

BLANK VERSE. By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS. Reprinted at the Author's special request.

In One Volume. Crown 8vo, cloth. Price 6s.

MELTING SNOWS. By Prince EMIL VON SCHONAICH-CAROLATH. Translated by MARGARET SYMONDS.

In One Volume. Small 4to, buckram, gilt top. Price 7s. 6d. net.

In One Volume. Small 4to, cloth, gilt top. Price 21s. net.

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS. With Fourteen Plates, designed and etched by WILLIAM STRANG, R. P. E. Printed on thick Japanese Paper by F. Goulding.

Also FIFTY Sets of EARLY IMPRESSIONS of the plates specially printed by F. Goulding on Old French Hand-made Paper, and mounted, in a Portfolio. Each Portfolio numbered and signed by the Artist. Price £3 3s. net.

In Two Volumes. Small 4to, cloth, gilt top. Price 21s. net.

THE HERO OF ESTHONIA, and other Studies in the Romantic Literature of that Country, by W. F. KIRBY, F. Z. S., F. L. S., Corresponding Member of the Finnish Literary Society. With a Map of Esthonia.

NOTE.—In this work an account of the unique Ancient Literature and Folk Lore of Esthonia is presented to English readers for the first time.

In One Volume. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Price 12s. 6d. net.

CHARTERHOUSE OLD AND NEW. By E. P. EARDLEY WILMOT and E. C. STREATFEILD, with four original etchings by D. Y. CAMERON, R. P. E.

NOTE.—This book contains personal reminiscences of Thackeray and of Life at the Old London School, as well as a full account of Life, Work and Athletics at Godalming.

MATTEO BANDELLO. Twelve Stories selected and done into English, with a Memoir of the Author. By PERCY PINKERTON.

Printed for the Society of English Bibliophilists.

In Five Volumes, post 8vo, with Portrait and 73 Full-page Engravings; also 150 Head and Tail Pieces, all from the Original Copper-plates. Bound in cloth, uncut edges, price £3, 3s. Net. A limited edition, each copy numbered, is printed on Arnold's fleur-de-lys unbleached hand-made paper, demy 8vo, with the Full-page Engravings printed on thin Japanese paper, and mounted. Bound in buckram cloth, uncut edges.

THE HEPTAMERON of the Tales of Margaret Queen of Navarre. Newly translated into English from the Authentic Text. With an Essay upon the Heptameron by G. Saintsbury, M. A.

London: John C. Nimmo, 14 King William St., Strand.

Copeland & Day's New Books.

THE YELLOW BOOK.

An Illustrated Quarterly under the Editorship of HENRY HARLAND and AUBREY BEARDSLEY. Small Quarto, cloth bound, $6.00 a year or $1.50 a number. The Yellow Book's pictures in no case serve as illustrations to the letterpress; each stands by itself as an independent contribution, while the articles contributed to the magazine are modern in spirit and independent in thought.

"It has attracted attention. The Yellow Book has brought in the Yellow Gold and its purpose is fulfilled."—The Critic.

"The ridicule heaped on this novelty in periodical literature seems to have been earned by its originality. . . . There is a wide variety in the literary contents of the Yellow Book; and there seems to be no disposition on the part of the editors to fall back on stereotyped forms of verse and fiction."—Chicago Tribune.

"They [Mr. Beardsley's drawings] are caricatures, which have no excuse for being while men are men and women are women; they are fraudulent, impudent, worthless, and being such find a fitting place in the Yellow Book, which is an insult to the intelligence of the nineteenth century."—New York Mail and Express.

"The present Reign of the Queer has reached its climax in the Yellow Book."—Philadelphia Record.

"As to the raison d'être of the Yellow Book—the periodical seems to fill the function of presenting to the public things that other magazines would refuse to publish, and which were perhaps better left unsaid. Furthermore it is exclusively literary, as our great magazines, except one, are not."—Boston Commonwealth.

SONGS FROM VAGABONDIA.

A book of verse by BLISS CARMAN and RICHARD HOVEY. With cover and end papers designed by T. B. Meteyard, Octavo, boards, $1.00. Fifty copies on large paper, $3.00.

POEMS.

By JOHN B. TABB. Square 12mo, green and gold, $1.00. In the press.

TENNYSON AND HIS PRE-RAPHAELITE ILLUSTRATORS.

A book about a book. By GEORGE SOMES LAYARD. Containing five full-page reproductions. Octavo, half leather, $1.75. A very few copies on large paper, $5.00.

ENGLISH POEMS.

By RICHARD LE GALLIENNE. Third edition, $1.50.

SALOME.

A drama in one act. By OSCAR WILDE. With ten full-page designs by AUBREY BEARDSLEY. Square octavo, $3.75.

THE HOUSE OF LIFE.

By DANTE GABRIELLE ROSSETTI. Now being for the first time given in its full text. Five hundred copies, square octavo, $2.50.

POEMS.

By FRANCIS THOMPSON. Fourth edition. Square octavo, $1.50.

POEMS.

By RICHARD GARNETT. Octavo, $1.50.

A RANDOM ITINERARY.

By JOHN DAVIDSON. 12mo, $1.50.

COPELAND AND DAY,
BOSTON.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

THE ONLY FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH, ITALIAN

Actually Spoken and Mastered in Ten Weeks, without leaving your homes, by the Meisterschaft System. 550th Thousand. Pupils taught as if actually in the presence of the teacher. Terms for membership, $5.00 for each language. All questions answered and exercises corrected free of charge. Specimen copy of Part One, any language, sent free on receipt of 2 cent postage stamp.

GENUINE

Meisterschaft Publishing Co.

Summer St.
No. 196
Boston, Mass.

MEISTERSCHAFT

Artistic Specialties
—IN—
Fixtures
—FOR—Lighting
—BY—
Electricity
—OR—
Gas.

Fine Goods at Fair Prices.

Entirely New Designs for this Season.

Fixtures Made to Order from Special Drawings.

BEAUTIFUL LAMPS
WITH SHADES TO MATCH.

R. HOLLINGS & CO.,
Manufacturers and Importers,
523-525 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address
Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

Noah Farnham Morrison,
SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,
877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.
Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

FRANK T. SABIN'S CATALOGUE of FINE and RARE BOOKS, ENGRAVINGS, AUTOGRAPHS, etc. (52 pp.), is NOW READY, and will be sent on application.

118 SHAFTESBURY AVE., LONDON, W.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS
OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - -	$16,014,000.00
Liabilities, -	$13,808,000.00
Surplus, - -	$2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

THE MANUSCRIPT MARKET.

Expert assistance to authors in placing their MSS. to the best advantage is given by THE WRITER'S LITERARY BUREAU (established in 1887), which is prepared to undertake every kind of work required between author and publisher. Honest advice and frank criticism of MSS. by competent readers given when desired; MSS. typewritten, revised, and sold on commission. Before sending MSS. write for circular giving terms and send ten cents for a sample copy of THE WRITER, the only magazine in the world devoted solely to explaining the practical details of literary work. Address The Writer's Literary Bureau, P. O. Box 1905, Boston, Mass. Mention the Literary World.

THE LIBRARY OF AMERICAN LITERATURE

presents a perfect picture of the literature of your country from the beginning until the present time. 1,207 authors are represented by 2,671 selections. Biography of each author. 160 FINE PORTRAITS. Send three 2c. stamps for fine illustrated specimen to William Evarts Benjamin, Publisher 136 Boylston Street, Boston,

And learn how to buy it by easy payments for

Only 10 Cents a Day.

Chicago, Rock Island
— AND —
Pacific Railway.

THE Favorite and Direct Line, furnishing the best facilities and accommodations, at lowest rates, to and from Chicago, Rock Island, Davenport, Des Moines, Council Bluffs, Watertown, Sioux Falls, Minneapolis, St. Paul, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth, Kansas City, Topeka, Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo.

SOLID VESTIBULE EXPRESS TRAINS,

UNRIVALED for splendor of equipment, daily between Chicago and Des Moines and Council Bluffs, and between Chicago and Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, with superb through Dining-Car Service, FREE Reclining Chair Cars and Pullman Palace Sleepers.

THE POPULAR TOURIST LINE to and from Manitou, Garden of the Gods, Pike's Peak, Glenwood Springs, and all the sanitary and scenic resorts of Colorado, offering choice of routes, via Denver, to and from Salt Lake City, Portland, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

FAST EXPRESS TRAINS daily between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul, and to and from all important towns, cities and sections in Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, and Kingfisher and El Reno in the Indian Territory.

For Tickets, Maps, Folders, or desired information, apply at any Coupon Ticket Office, or address

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l Manager.
JOHN SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Tkt. & Pass. Agt.
CHICAGO, ILL.

IF YOU ARE GOING
WEST
TAKE THE RELIABLE
Hoosac Tunnel Route.
ELEGANT SLEEPING CARS

Boston to Chicago and Boston to St. Louis
WITHOUT CHANGE.

For time tables, rates of fare, etc., apply at 250 Washington St., Boston.
J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

One way to cure INSOMNIA is to drink a glass of hot water at night. A better way is to use the hot water for heating the house hygienically.

THE HUB HOT-WATER HEATER

comes the nearest to this of any known apparatus, keeping the whole house at a normal temperature night and day, and supplying just the right thermal conditions for insuring good health and sound sleep. The system is extremely simple and powerful, combined with moderation in cost. Send for our special book entitled "Hot-Water Heating." Mailed free.

THE SMITH & ANTHONY COMPANY,
Makers of Highest Grade Heating and Cooking Apparatus,
48 to 54 UNION STREET, BOSTON.
Agencies in New York and Chicago.

JUST OUT.

A New Volume of Poems by EDWARD RANDALL KNOWLES, LL. D.

For sale by booksellers. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 25 cents.

J. STILMAN SMITH & COMPANY,
8 Hamilton Place, Boston.

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

HAVE NOW READY:

I.

MR. GEORGE N. CURZON'S NEW BOOK.

PROBLEMS OF THE FAR EAST.

Japan—Korea—China.

By the Hon. GEORGE N. CURZON, M. P., Author of "Russia in Central Asia," "Persia," etc.

8vo, with 2 Maps and 50 Illustrations, of which 21 are full-page. 461 Pages, $6.00.

"Mr. George Curzon's 'Problems of the Far East' appears at an opportune moment; but, though it deals with China, Japan and Korea, is by no means to be classed with books hastily thrown together to supply a sudden demand. This volume is the ripe fruit of many years of traveling in the East, and of long study of Eastern questions. Perhaps no Englishman has journeyed so widely in the less known parts of the Oriental world. Certainly no Englishman who has been there at all has shown an equal power of trained observation and of seizing the true points of the great questions there at issue. . . . The book is full of thinking, full of suggestions, full of matter, and is written by a man who can write."—G. W. S. in N. Y. Tribune, Aug. 26, 1894.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

PERSIA AND THE PERSIAN QUESTION. With 9 Maps, 96 Illustrations, Appendices, and an Index. 2 vols., 8vo, $12.00.

II.

Stanley J. Weyman's New Book.

MY LADY ROTHA.

A ROMANCE OF THE THIRTY YEARS' WAR.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN.

Author of "A Gentleman of France," "Under the Red Robe," etc.

Crown 8vo, with 8 Illustrations, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Longmans, Green, & Co.,
PUBLISHERS,
15 East 16th Street, New York.

The Round Robin Reading Club.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF SYSTEMATIC STUDY OF LITERATURE.

The object of this organization is to direct the reading of individuals and small classes through correspondence conducted by competent specialists, who will furnish lists of books, criticise papers, and personally assist each member. Having no limits imposed by a given system, the Club is free to meet the needs of those who desire to read for special purposes, for general improvement, or pleasure, and to supplement University Extension Work. For particulars address

Miss LOUISE STOCKTON,
4213 Chester Avenue, Philadelphia.

Fragility sometimes blossoms in the strangest places! The daintiest of book-making has commonly come from centers like Paris, London or New York; but from the town of Portland, Me., there have recently been issued, under the title of "The Bibelot Series," some little paper-covered volumes of poetry which are as luxurious and artistic as anything that hails from France or England. Mr. T. B. Mosher is the publisher of these bits of clever workmanship.—New York Tribune, Dec. 31, 1893.

FALL ANNOUNCEMENT.

THOMAS B. MOSHER,

PORTLAND, MAINE.

THE BIBELOT SERIES.

The BIBELOT SERIES is modeled on an old style format, narrow 8vo, and beautifully printed in italic on Van Gelder's hand-made paper, uncut edges; done up in flexible Japan vellum, with outside wrappers and dainty gold seals. Each issue has besides an original cover design and is strictly limited to 725 copies.

PRICE PER VOLUME, $1.00 NET.

Two New Volumes in Press:

III. Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam
Rendered into English verse by EDWARD FITZGERALD, with a List of Editions and Versions in English.

IV. Felise.
A book of Lyrics chosen from the earlier poetical works of ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.

The Previous Issues are:

I. Songs of Adieu.
A little book of Finalé and Farewell, chosen from recent English lyrics not generally known.

II. Old World Lyrics.
A little book of Translations from VILLON, DU BELLAY, RONSARD and later French poets.

THE ENGLISH REPRINT SERIES.

THE EDITION IS AS FOLLOWS:

400 Small Paper copies on Van Gelder's Hand-made Paper done up in Japan vellum wrappers, uncut edges, numbered 1 to 400.

40 Large Paper copies (Post 4to), uncut edges, numbered 1 to 40.

10 Large Paper copies on Japan vellum, numbered 1 to 10, signed by publisher.

No more copies will be printed.

The New Volume in Press:

III. Robert Bridges.
THE GROWTH OF LOVE, WITH A BRIEF AND GENERAL CONSIDERATION BY LIONEL JOHNSON.
Small Paper, $1.50 net; Large Paper, $5.00 net; Japan Vellum, $10.00 net.

Previous Issues:

I. George Meredith.
MODERN LOVE, WITH FOREWORD BY E. CAVAZZA.
Small Paper, $2.50 net; Large Paper, $7.50 net; Japan vellum all sold.

II. James Thomson.
THE CITY OF DREADFUL NIGHT, WITH INTRODUCTION BY E. CAVAZZA.
Small Paper, $2.00 net; Large Paper, $7.50 net; Japan Vellum, $12.50 net.

Bookbuyers are requested to send for my New List of Limited Editions, a choice little specimen of typework and paper.

THOMAS B. MOSHER, 87 Exchange St., Portland, Me.

FITCHBURG RAILROAD,

Hoosac Tunnel Route.

SARATOGA.

On and after June 18, 1894, the special

Fast Express Train,

Parlor Car attached, will be run daily, Sundays excepted, leaving

Boston 9.00 A. M.,

Stop at Greenfield for dinner, arriving at

Saratoga 3.30 P. M.

For tickets and further information apply at 250 Washington Street, Boston.

J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

THE

POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY

FOR OCTOBER.

The Football Situation. By Prof. E. L. RICHARDS, of Yale University.

The benefits and the evils of the great autumn game set forth by an intelligent sympathizer, with suggestions for an improved style of play.

The Questioning Age. By Prof. JAMES SULLY, of University College, London.

This is the third paper in the Studies of Childhood Series, and is no less delightful than the two that have preceded it. Contains many quaint anecdotes.

The American Champagne District. (Illustrated.) By LEE J. VANCE.

A sketch of the champagne industry in the United States, with a description of its several processes.

OTHER ARTICLES:

SOME LESSONS FROM CENTENARIANS; THE HALF-BLOOD INDIAN; WEST AFRICAN FOLKLORE; BARBERRIES (illustrated); THE PROFESSIONAL TRAINING OF TEACHERS; FUNERAL CUSTOMS OF THE WORLD; POETRY AND SCIENCE; ASTRONOMY OF THE INCAS; SKETCH OF ASAPH HALL (with Portrait).

CORRESPONDENCE; EDITOR'S TABLE; LITERARY NOTICES; POPULAR MISCELLANY; NOTES; INDEX TO VOL. XLV.

50 cents a number; $5.00 a year.

D. APPLETON & CO., NEW YORK.

CALIGRAPH.

GREATEST SPEED.

Best for Manifolding.

100,000 Daily Users.

The only writing machine awarded a gold medal at the Mechanics' Fair, 1890.

THE MOST DURABLE.

Single Case, No. 1,	$70.00
Double Case, No. 2,	85.00
New Special, No. 3,	100.00

For account of speed contests and circulars, address

W. M. BELCHER & CO.,
NEW ENGLAND AGENTS,
36 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:
Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line,	20 cents.
Other advertising pages,	16 "

Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

OUR AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENTS.

A NEW EDITION OF MOLIÈRE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. By J. BAPTISTE POQUELIN MOLIERE. Translated by Katharine Prescott Wormeley. With a preface by Balzac, criticisms by Sainte-Beuve, portraits by Coypel and Mignard, and decorative title-pages. To be issued at short intervals. 6 vols., half Russia, $1.50 per volume.

Vol. I. THE MISANTHROPE; LE BOURGEOIS GENTILHOMME.
Vol. II. TARTUFFE; LES PRECIEUSES RIDICULES; GEORGE DANDIN.
Vol. III. LES FEMMES SAVANTES; LE MALADE IMAGINAIRE.
Vol. IV. L'AVARE; DON JUAN; LES FACHEUX.

CATHARINE DE'MEDICI. By H. DE BALZAC. Translated by Katharine Prescott Wormeley. 12mo, half Russia, $1.50.

A SAINT. By PAUL BOURGET. From the "Pastels of Men." Translated by Katharine Prescott Wormeley. With 12 illustrations by Paul Chabas. Square 12mo, parchment paper covers, $1.00.

"A Saint" takes us to higher and healthier levels of life. The central incident is indeed a miracle—the eternal miracle of a soul's regeneration.—The Spectator.

THE MINOR TACTICS OF CHESS: A Treatise on the Deployment of the Forces in Obedience to Strategic Principle. By FRANKLIN K. YOUNG and EDWIN C. HOWELL. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

A MONK OF THE AVENTINE. By ERNST ECKSTEIN. A Novel. Translated from the German by Helen Hunt Johnson. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

LETTERS. By EMILY DICKINSON. From 1847 to 1886. Edited by Mabel Loomis Todd. With a portrait of Miss Dickinson, a view of her home in Amherst, and three facsimiles of her handwriting at different periods. 2 vols., 16mo, $2.00.

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL. By LILIAN WHITING. 16mo, cloth, $1.00; white and gold, $1.25.

A CHILD OF THE AGE. By FRANCIS ADAMS. A Novel. With title-page designed by Aubrey Beardsley. American copyright edition. 16mo, $1.00. (In Press.)

FOR THE YOUNGSTERS.

NOT QUITE EIGHTEEN. By SUSAN COOLIDGE. A Volume of Stories. Illustrated by Jessie McDermott. 16mo, cloth, uniform with "What Katy Did," etc., $1.25.

JOLLY GOOD TIMES TO-DAY. By MARY P. WELLS SMITH. A continuation of the "Jolly Good Times Series." Two illustrations by Jessie McDermott. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

ANOTHER GIRL'S EXPERIENCE. By LEIGH WEBSTER. A Story for Girls. With illustrations by Jessie McDermott. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

PENELOPE PRIG AND OTHER STORIES. By A. G. PLYMPTON. Illustrated by the author. Small 4to, cloth, $1.00.

RAGS AND VELVET GOWNS. Illustrated by the author. Square 12mo, cloth back, paper sides, 50 cents.

THE LITTLE LADY OF THE HORSE. By EVELYN RAYMOND. With 21 illustrations by Frank T. Merrill. Small 4to, cloth, $1.50.

VOYAGE OF THE LIBERDADE. By CAPTAIN JOSHUA SLOCUM. Small 4to, illustrated, cloth, $1.00.

FATHER GANDER'S MELODIES. By ADELAIDE F. SAMUELS. Illustrated by Lillian Trask Harlow. Small 4to, cloth, $1.25.

A New Cheap Edition.

LAST WORDS. By MRS. J. H. EWING. A Final Collection of Stories. With illustrations by H. D. Murphy. Uniform with our edition of Mrs. Ewing's books. 50 cents.

A New Improved Edition.

THE KINGDOM OF COINS. By JOHN BRADLEY GILMAN. A Tale for Children of all Ages. Illustrated by F. T. Merrill. Small 4to, 60 cents.

Complete catalogue free on application.

ROBERTS BROTHERS, Publishers, Boston.

A NEW BOOK
—BY—
MAX O'RELL.
(Ready Sept. 19th.)

JOHN BULL & CO.

The Great Colonial Branches of the Firm, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa.

By MAX O'RELL, author of "John Bull and His Island," "Jonathan and His Continent," "A Frenchman in America," etc.

Max O'Rell's latest book is a much more ambitious piece of work than anything which he has previously done. It is often reminiscent of the author's pleasant impressions of the United States upon his late visits, and gives him an opportunity for entertaining comparisons between the Yankee and his cousins in the English colonies. Canada, Australia, California and Hawaii are visited in turn, and valuable information about these places and their people is interwoven with spirited comments by the author. It does not concern itself with the people of any special country, but is an account of the whole Anglo-Saxon race all over the world. It is practically a humorous study of the development of the English-speaking character under all manner of conditions and climates, from the tropics of North Queensland to icebound Winnipeg. The book is illustrated with numerous full-page and text illustrations. It will be published simultaneously in England, France and America.

Stamped Cloth, Small 8vo, 325 pp., Illustrated, $1.50.

Catalogue and Price Lists mailed free on application. Our publications are for sale by all booksellers, or are mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price.

CHARLES L. WEBSTER & CO.,
67 Fifth Avenue, N. Y. City.

Just Out.

CHARACTER STUDIES. With some Personal Recollections. By FREDERICK SAUNDERS, Librarian of the Astor Library, New York. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

The group of famous characters whom Mr. Saunders sketches include Edward Irving, Anna Jameson, Washington Irving, Longfellow, Bryant and Cogswell, all of whom he knew personally.

THE COOK AND THE CAPTIVE, or Attalus the Hostage. By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE. Illustrated, $1.25.

Miss Yonge's new historical story takes up a romantic period of early Christian history and gives her readers a deeply interesting tale.

EASTERN CUSTOMS IN BIBLE LANDS. By H. B. TRISTRAM, Canon of Durham. 12mo, cloth, uncut edges, $1.50.

BLANCHE. A Story for Girls. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH. Illustrated, $1.50.

A charming story for young ladies of sixteen to twenty. Just out.

THE HERESY OF CAIN. By GEORGE HODGES, D. D., Dean of the Divinity School, Cambridge, Mass. Uniform with "Christianity between Sundays" by the same author. $1.00.

THOMAS WHITTAKER, Publisher,
2 & 3 Bible House, - - New York.

NEW PUBLICATIONS
—OF—
W. J. SHUEY, Agent,
United Brethren Publishing House,
DAYTON, OHIO.

THE FAMILY; or, The Home and the Training of Children. By Rev. L. BOOKWALTER, D. D. Cloth, 12mo, price 60 cents.

This volume is the outgrowth of a series of lectures delivered by the author in Union Biblical Seminary in 1892-93. The first three chapters are the lectures thus delivered—(1) "The Family as an Institution"; (2) "The Husband and Wife and Their Relations"; (3) "The Relation Between Parents and Children." The fourth chapter is entitled "Words to Parents." An appendix upon "The Family School," by Rev. I. L. Bookwalter, closes the volume. The book is one of the best of its kind. It is a clear, plain, forcible presentation of the vital points connected with the family and home government. It should be read by both ministers and laymen, and its teachings carefully observed.

JESUS THE NAZARENE. A Life of Jesus with a Parallel Harmony of the Gospels. By Rev. C. J. KEPHART, A. M. Introduction by Dr. C. R. Blackall. Cloth, 12mo, price 50 cents, net.

A simple narrative of Christ's life arranged in chronological order. The unique feature is the arrangement of the harmony and the references to corresponding Scripture passages by columns in the margin. Dr. C. R. Blackall furnishes a careful introduction, and there is an appendix containing a brief dictionary of names, places, etc., and indexes.

THE LIFE OF JESUS FOR CHILDREN. By Rev. C. J. KEPHART, A. M. Manilla cover. Price 15 cents.

A little book consisting of questions and answers on the life of Jesus simply stated in language as nearly like that of the Bible as possible. Admirably adapted for use in the home, Sunday school, Junior Young People's Societies, or in any class for the teaching of Bible truth to children.

THE GUEST OF A DREAM. A tract for business men. One of the best things ever written, it cannot fail to interest every one who reads it. It represents the Lord as making a visit to earth today and the influence on home and business life. Originally published in the New York Observer. Price 25 cents per dozen, postpaid; $1.50 per hundred by express. Sample copy, 3 cents.

Any of the above sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

W. J. SHUEY, Dayton, Ohio.

A LIST OF NEW AND FORTHCOMING BOOKS

FOR EARLY PUBLICATION:

WEALTH AGAINST COMMONWEALTH.
By HENRY DEMAREST LLOYD. 8vo, Cloth, $2.50.

BIBLE STORIES.
For Young People. By the Right Rev. HENRY C. POTTER, D. D., The Rev. Bishop JOHN F. HURST, D. D., The Rev. JOHN HALL, D. D., and Others. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00.

HYPATIA;
Or, New Foes with an Old Face. By CHARLES KINGSLEY. Illustrated from Drawings by WILLIAM MARTIN JOHNSON, and with Photogravure Portrait of the Author. Two Volumes. 8vo, Ornamental Silk Binding, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $7.00.

PORTRAITS IN PLASTER.
From the Collection of LAURENCE HUTTON. With 72 Illustrations. Large Paper, 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $6.00.

THE BOY TRAVELLERS IN THE LEVANT.
Adventures of Two Youths in a Journey through Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, Greece, and Turkey, with Visits to the Islands of Rhodes and Cyprus, and the Site of Ancient Troy. By THOMAS W. KNOX. Profusely Illustrated. Square 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $3.00.

SIR ROBERT'S FORTUNE.
A Novel. By Mrs. M. O. W. OLIPHANT. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental.

WIMPLES AND CRISPING PINS.
Studies in the Coiffure and Ornaments of Women. By THEODORE CHILD, Author of "Art and Criticism," etc. Crown 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top.

A LITTLE ENGLISH GALLERY.
By LOUISE IMOGEN GUINEY. With Portrait. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental. (In the Series "Harper's American Essayists.")

THE BORDERLAND OF CZAR AND KAISER.
Notes from Both Sides of the Russian Frontier. By POULTNEY BIGELOW. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental.

TWILIGHT LAND.
Some Stories about Nothing at All. Written and Illustrated by HOWARD PYLE, Author of "The Wonder Clock," "Pepper and Salt," "Men of Iron," etc. 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental.

A SPORTING PILGRIMAGE.
By CASPAR W. WHITNEY. Copiously Illustrated. 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental.

WAYSIDE POEMS.
By WALLACE BRUCE, Author of "Old Homestead Poems." Illustrated. Square 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental.

ENGLISH LITERATURE.
A History of English Literature. By J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M. A., First English Master of Edinburgh Ladies' College. Post 8vo, Cloth.

RECENTLY ISSUED:

TRILBY.

A Novel. By GEORGE DU MAURIER, Author of "Peter Ibbetson." With 120 Illustrations by the Author. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75. (Sixtieth Thousand in Press.)

MICAH CLARKE.
By A. CONAN DOYLE, Author of "Adventures of Sherlock Holmes," "Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes," "The Refugees," etc. Illustrated by GEORGE WILLIS BARDWELL. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75.

ON CLOUD MOUNTAIN.
A Novel. By FREDERICK THICKSTUN CLARK. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00.

HIGHLAND COUSINS.
A Novel. By WILLIAM BLACK, Author of "The Handsome Humes," etc. Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75.

IN OLD NEW YORK.
By THOMAS A. JANVIER, Author of "The Aztec Treasure-House," "The Uncle of an Angel," etc. With Illustrations and Maps. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75.

THE WATER GHOST, AND OTHERS.
By JOHN KENDRICK BANGS, Author of "Coffee and Repartee," "Three Weeks in Politics," etc. Illustrated. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25. (In the Series "Harper's American Story-Tellers.")

VIGNETTES OF MANHATTAN.
By BRANDER MATTHEWS, Author of "The Story of a Story," "Studies of the Stage," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo. Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

PERLYCROSS.
A Novel. By R. D. BLACKMORE, Author of "Lorna Doone," "Springhaven," etc. 12mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75. (Sixth Edition.)

A SCARLET POPPY,
And Other Stories. By HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25. (In the Series "Harper's American Story-Tellers.")

THE FUR-SEAL'S TOOTH.
A Story of Alaskan Adventure. By KIRK MUNROE, Author of "Raftmates," "Canoemates," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

OUT OF STEP.
A Novel. By MARIA LOUISE POOL, Author of "The Two Salomes," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

☞ The above works are for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, Canada, or Mexico, on receipt of the price.

Public Library

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 Somerset Street
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 6 OCTOBER 1894

Vol. XXV No. 20 Whole No. 516

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS' NEW BOOKS.

GEN. W. T. SHERMAN and SEN. JOHN SHERMAN.

THE SHERMAN LETTERS. With Portraits. Crown 8vo, $3.00.

This correspondence between General Sherman and his brother extends from the former's West Point days until 1891. It is unique in furnishing a familiar and intimate record of the events of American History during that period, with the frank comments on the incidents and the actors in them by two persons, themselves participants, and men of extraordinary penetration and power.

*

GEORGE MEREDITH.

LORD ORMONT AND HIS AMINTA. 12mo, $1.50.

"It is equal to anything Mr. Meredith has ever done. It is romantic, plausible, dramatic, pregnant with philosophy, and far-reaching in its survey of human motive."—London Times.

*

JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF ERASMUS. 8vo, $2.50.

The Author, in concluding his work, says: "I have endeavored to put before you the character and thoughts of an extraordinary man at the most exciting period of modern history. It is a period of which the story is still disfigured by passion and prejudice. I believe that you will best see what it really was, if you look at it through the eyes of Erasmus."

*

THOMAS NELSON PAGE.

POLLY. A Christmas Recollection. Illustrated by A. Castaigne. Small folio, $1.50.

A new and beautifully illustrated edition of this charming Southern story, uniform with the illustrated editions of "Marse Chan" and "Meh Lady."

"An attractive and winning story."—Baltimore Sun.

*

FRANK R. STOCKTON.

POMONA'S TRAVELS.

A Series of Letters to the Mistress of Rudder Grange from her former Handmaiden. Fully illustrated by A. B. Frost. 12mo, $2.00.

A companion volume to "Rudder Grange," and equally delightful, representing the immortal Pomona in new and interesting scenes and in adventures irresistibly comical.

UNIFORM WITH THE ABOVE: Rudder Grange. With over 100 illustrations by A. B. Frost. 12mo, gilt top, $2.00. The two volumes together, in a box, $4.00.

*

NAPOLEONIC MEMOIRS.

THE PASQUIER MEMOIRS.

Edited by Duc D'Audiffret Pasquier. With Portraits. 3 vols. 8vo, each $2.50. Vol. III. now ready, completing the set.

"It will ever be in the first grade of the memoirs for which French literature is incomparable."—N. Y. Times.

*

HENRY KINGSLEY.

RAVENSHOE. 2 vols. 16mo, $2.00.

Mr. James Payn has recently characterized the work of Henry Kingsley as notable for its vigor and dramatic interest, and has stated that the demand for his novels bids fair to eclipse the sale of his brother Charles's. Mr. Payn says: "As a story-teller Charles was inferior to Henry." Ravenshoe is the first issue in an attractive American edition of his novels now in preparation.

*

GEN. A. W. GREELY.

THREE YEARS OF ARCTIC SERVICE.

An Account of the Lady Franklin Bay Expedition of 1881–84 and the Attainment of the Farthest North. New Popular Edition. Fully Illustrated. 1 vol. 8vo, $5.00.

From the Preface.—"In preparing this popular edition all the photographic reproductions have been retained, and only such portions of the text have been omitted as bear on scientific and historical matters unessential to a full understanding of the expedition. The narrative is unbroken, the journals of the sledging parties are complete, the hazardous boat journey and ice drift are described in full, and the story of the sufferings and endurance of the party, abandoned to a shelterless winter on the barren crags of Sabine, remains in its integrity."

*

THOMAS STEVENS.

AROUND THE WORLD ON A BICYCLE.

With over 200 Illustrations. New and Cheaper Edition. 2 vols. 8vo, each $2.50.

"As interesting as a novel."—The Critic.

*

MRS. CHRISTINE TERHUNE HERRICK.

THE CHAFING-DISH SUPPER. 12mo, 75 cents.

In this little book Mrs. Herrick has exploited the many varied capacities of the chafing-dish, advising when and how to use it, with valuable suggestions concerning the materials employed, and the preparation of an extensive chafing-dish menu.

*

MRS. ALICE MORSE EARLE.

COSTUME OF COLONIAL TIMES. 12mo, $1.25.

An alphabetically arranged glossary, with introductory matter and comments descriptive of the costumes of colonial America. It comprises a fuller list of items than has ever been published, and the subject is presented in the author's well-known attractive style.

*

PROF. BARRETT WENDELL.

WILLIAM SHAKSPERE. A Study in Elizabethan Literature, 12mo, $2.00.

"Barrett Wendell has come to be recognized as standing in the very first rank of our American essayists."—Boston Advertiser.

*

WILLIAM F. APTHORP.

MUSICIANS AND MUSIC LOVERS, And Other Essays. 12mo, $1.50.

The distinctive note of Mr. Apthorp's essays is his catholicity of spirit. His style has a refreshing individuality, and his book as a whole is well worthy of his high reputation in musical circles.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 153-157 Fifth Ave., N. Y.

THE CENTURY CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

(Ready October 10th.)

THE REIGN OF QUEEN ANNE.

By Mrs. M. O. W. Oliphant, author of "The Literary History of England," etc. Delightfully written papers describing famous people of the days of Queen Anne, including Dean Swift, Defoe and Addison. Full-page pictures printed in two colors. Royal octavo, 207 pages, rich binding, cloth, gilt tooling, $6.00.

WHEN ALL THE WOODS ARE GREEN.

A new novel by Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, author of "Characteristics," "In War Time," etc. A tale of the primeval Canadian forests, full of brilliant conversations and strong studies of character, and interspersed with descriptions of adventures with rod and gun. The book is full of the mystery and picturesqueness of the deep woods. 12mo, with portrait of the author, 430 pages, cloth, $1.50.

ACROSS ASIA ON A BICYCLE.

By Thomas G. Allen, Jr., and William L. Sachtleben. The story of the remarkable trip made by two young American students from Constantinople to Peking on bicycles. Not since the days of Marco Polo has a European traveler succeeded in crossing the Chinese Empire from the western boundary to the capital. Profusely illustrated with photographs taken by the authors. 12mo, 300 pages, cloth, $1.50.

THE MOUNTAINS OF CALIFORNIA.

By John Muir, the well-known California naturalist; describing the glaciers, the glacial lakes and meadows, the forests and the animals of the Sierra Nevada range. Emerson said of John Muir, who accompanied him in his California trip, "He is more wonderful than Thoreau." 12mo, 350 pages, richly illustrated, cloth, $1.50.

FIVE BOOKS OF SONG.

By Richard Watson Gilder. The first complete collection of Mr. Gilder's poems, revised and gathered into one handsome volume, with a number of poems not hitherto printed. Illustrated, 12mo, 240 pages, cloth, $1.50.

P'TIT MATINIC' AND OTHER MONOTONES.

By George Wharton Edwards, author of "Thumb-Nail Sketches." Stories of life on the Nova Scotia coast. A charming little volume, with frontispiece in color, and exquisite illustrations by the artist author. Issued in full sheep binding, with rich design in embossed gold. Size, 3½ x 5 inches, 140 pages, $1.25.

WRITING TO ROSINA.

By William Henry Bishop, author of "The House of a Merchant Prince." A novelette issued in exquisite binding, chronicling the unhappy experiences of a gentleman who, in an evil hour, induced a friend to conduct for him a correspondence with his fiancée. Illustrated, 3½ x 5 inches, full stamped sheep, 117 pages, $1.00.

For Boys and Girls.

THE LAND OF PLUCK.

By Mary Mapes Dodge. Stories and sketches for young folk about Holland, with some on other subjects, by the author of "Hans Brinker; or The Silver Skates," the most famous story-book of life in Holland ever written for young people. The first part of the book is entirely devoted to Holland and the Dutch. The second part contains nineteen short stories, including "Wondering Tom," "The Brighton Cats," "Trapper Joe," etc. Richly illustrated by Edwards, Kemble, and many other artists. 12mo, 313 pages, cloth, $1.50.

WHEN LIFE IS YOUNG.

By Mary Mapes Dodge. A collection of verses for boys and girls, including a great number of the most popular poems and rhymes by Mrs. Dodge that have appeared in St. Nicholas, with others now printed for the first time. Richly illustrated, 12mo, 250 pages, cloth $1.25.

IMAGINOTIONS.

"Truthless Tales" by Tudor Jenks, one of the most popular story-writers of St. Nicholas, author of "The Century World's Fair Book for Boys and Girls." Richly illustrated, by Birch, Drake, Bensell, Dan Beard and Herford. 8¾ x 7 inches, 230 pages, cloth, $1.50.

THE BROWNIES AROUND THE WORLD.

A new Brownie book by Palmer Cox, with new poems and pictures. More than 100,000 of these famous Brownie books have been sold. The latest one is a delightful addition to the series, and in it Mr. Cox's wonderful little people visit many strange lands and have many surprising adventures. Quarto, 144 pages, illuminated boards, $1.50.

ARTFUL ANTICKS.

By Oliver Herford, author of "Pen and Inklings." Humorous verse for young folks, cleverly illustrated by the author, whose contributions to St. Nicholas, Life, and other periodicals have won him a wide reputation. This book, although nominally for the youngsters, will have charms for many grown-ups as well. 6¼ x 7¾ inches, 100 pages, cloth, $1.00.

THE CENTURY BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

The Story of the Government, by Elbridge S. Brooks, describing, in attractive story-form, the visit of a party of bright young people to Washington, who, beginning with the Constitution, investigate thoroughly the Government of the United States. Combining a capital story-book with the helpfulness of a history. Illustrated with over 200 engravings.

Issued under the auspices of the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, with introduction by General Horace Porter. 250 pages. In stout buckram binding, $1.50.

TOPSYS AND TURVYS NUMBER 2.

By Peter Newell, author of the original "Topsys and Turvys." A most surprising picture-book for young folks, containing about twice as much material as was in the original Topsy-Turvy book, one of last season's hits. 6¾ x 9¼ inches, 69 pages, boards, $1.00.

THE MAN WHO MARRIED THE MOON.

Folk-stories of the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico. By Charles F. Lummis, author of "Some Strange Corners of Our Country." A wonderful book for young folks, instructive and entertaining. Illustrated, 12mo, 239 pages, cloth, $1.50.

TOINETTE'S PHILIP.

By Mrs. C. V. Jamison, author of that children's classic "Lady Jane." A delightful story of life in New Orleans and in New York. Printed first as a serial in St. Nicholas. Illustrated by Birch. 236 pages, rich binding, $1.50.

(IN PREPARATION.)

EDWIN BOOTH.

Recollections by his daughter, Edwina Booth Grossmann, with Mr. Booth's letters to her and to his friends. This book gives a delightful glimpse of the great actor as a husband and father. It is illustrated with photogravure reproductions of portraits. Octavo, 350 pages, cloth, $3.00. Edition de Luxe, 100 copies only, $12.50. A very fine illustrated Limited Edition on large paper, 50 copies only, $25.00.

A BACHELOR MAID.

By Mrs. Burton Harrison, author of "The Anglomaniacs," etc. A novel of contemporary New York Society, the heroine a girl interested in all the latest movements. Illustrated by Irving Wiles, 12mo, 200 pages, cloth, $1.25.

RECENTLY ISSUED.

THE JUNGLE BOOK.

Fifteenth Thousand.

By Rudyard Kipling. One of this season's great successes—"a book that speaks of genius, one that is above the fashion of the hour," says the N. Y. Tribune. "Mr. Kipling's best bid for immortality," says the Sunday School Times. Illustrated, 12mo, 303 pages, in rich cloth binding, $1.50.

ROGER WILLIAMS, THE PIONEER OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

By Oscar S. Straus, late United States minister to Turkey. A biography of unusual value, presenting an impartial record of the character and work of Roger Williams. 12mo, 257 pages, cloth, $1.25.

DONALD AND DOROTHY.

(New Edition.) By Mary Mapes Dodge. A story that has delighted thousands of boys and girls, now issued in a new and handsome edition. Illustrated, 355 pages, cloth, $1.50.

At all the bookstores, or sent, postpaid, by the publishers on receipt of price.

THE CENTURY CO., Union Square, New York.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY'S

Autumn Announcements.

HISTORY, BELLES-LETTRES, FICTION, AND MISCELLANEOUS.

Thiers's History of the French Revolution.

New Edition, uniform with the New Edition of Thiers's "History of the Consulate and the Empire of France." Illustrated with 41 steel engravings. 5 volumes, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00 per volume; three-fourths morocco, $5.00 per volume.

This Edition will be uniform with the New Edition of Thiers's "History of the Consulate and the Empire of France," and will be published in monthly volumes, commencing September, 1894. Subscriptions will be received for complete sets only by all booksellers and the publishers.

Thiers's History of the Consulate and the Empire of France.

Now complete. Illustrated with 36 steel engravings. 12 volumes, 8vo. Cloth, $36.00; half morocco, gilt top, $60.00.

The only good edition of the English translation has long been out of print, and the present publishers, in connection with an English house, have brought out a limited edition to meet the demand of the libraries and book-buyer. The last volume of this sumptuous edition has just been issued.

Napoleon at Home.

The Daily Life of the Emperor at the Tuileries. By FREDERIC MASSON. With 12 full-page illustrations by F. DE MYRBACH. 2 volumes, 8vo. Cloth, $7.50.

Napoleon and the Women of His Court.

By FREDERIC MASSON. With numerous illustrations in the best style of French Art. 1 volume, 8vo.

Around a Throne.

Catherine II., of Russia, her Collaborators, her Friends, and her Favorites. By K. WALISZEWSKI, author of "Romance of an Empress." 2 volumes, 8vo, cloth.

The Marquis de La Fayette in the War of the Revolution.

With some Account of the Attitude of France toward the War of Independence. By CHARLEMAGNE TOWER, Jr., LL. D. 2 volumes, royal 8vo. Cloth, gilt top, uncut.

Henry of Navarre and the Religious Wars.

By EDWARD T. BLAIR. With 55 cuts in the text and 4 full-page photogravures by BOUSSOD, VALADON ET CIE. Square 8vo.

In preparation.

Colonial Days and Dames.

By ANNE HOLLINGSWORTH WHARTON, author of "Through Colonial Doorways." Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth, extra, $1.25.

Edition de Luxe limited to the number of subscribers.

The Colonial Library.

COLONIAL DAYS AND DAMES.
THROUGH COLONIAL DOORWAYS.
2 volumes, 12mo, in box, $2.50.

Books and Plays.

By ALLAN MONKHOUSE. 100 printed for America. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

Pen and Pencil Sketches.

By HENRY STACY MARKS, R. A. With 4 photogravure plates and 124 facsimile illustrations. 2 volumes, 8vo. Irish linen, gilt top, $8.00.

There will be included in the volume many unpublished drawings left by Fred. Walker, the remarkable young English artist who is drawn by Du Maurier in the character of "Little Billee" in Trilby.

The Birds About Us.

By CHARLES CONRAD ABBOTT, M. D., author of "Recent Rambles," "Travels in a Tree-Top," etc. Illustrated with upwards of 75 Bird Portraits. 1 volume, 12mo. Cloth, $2.00.

A book for every lover of birds. It is written in a familiar and genial style, and is not burdened with technicalities, while being accurate in every particular.

Irving (Washington). Sketch Book.

New Edition. 2 volumes, 12mo. Illustrated with Engravings on Wood, from Original Designs. Price in cloth, extra, gilt top, $4.00; half calf or half morocco, $7.00.

The illustrations of this edition were made for the Artist Edition, the type is new, and the size suitable for the library and the table, making the most desirable edition of this popular classic now published.

Madonna and Other Poems.

By HARRISON S. MORRIS. Illustrated. 1 volume, 12mo. Extra cloth, $2.00.

This is the first collected edition of the author's poems, many of which have never previously appeared. The edition is printed from type, and limited to 750 copies for America and England.

Sorrow and Song.

By COULSON KERNAHAN, author of "A Book of Strange Sins," "A Dead Man's Diary," etc. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

Mr. Kernahan's work is not only intensely interesting as literary criticism, but, owing to its searching investigation and powerful delineation of the motives and the sins of the human soul, it is strangely fascinating for the general reader.

Hazlitt (William). Liber Amoris.

A newly printed edition containing numerous passages omitted in the editions of 1823. The volume will contain a fine reproduction of William Bewick's chalk drawing of William Hazlitt, a facsimile of a letter from Hazlitt to Rathmore, and one of Sarah Walker to Hazlitt (the only one known to exist). Edition limited to 400 copies for England and 100 for America. Price $6.00 net.

Carlyle's (Thomas) Translations.

3 volumes. 8vo. Uniform with the Ashburton Edition of his works. Cloth, $7.50.

The Works of Laurence Sterne.

Edited by GEORGE SAINTSBURY, with illustrations by E. J. WHEELER. 6 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $6.00; half calf and half morocco, $13.50; large paper edition, 6 volumes, buckram, $18.00.

Published in connection with Dent & Co., of London.

Corinne, or Italy.

By MADAME DE STAEL. Translated. With illustrations. 2 volumes. Cloth, $2.00; half calf and half morocco $4.50; large paper edition, 2 volumes, buckram, $6.00

Published in connection with Dent & Co., of London.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY'S AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENTS—Continued.

Early English Ballads.

Chosen by R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON. With about 200 illustrations by William Cubitt Cooke. 4 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $5.00; half calf or half morocco, $10.00.

The text of the Old Ballads has been carefully prepared from the original sources in each case, though the spelling is modernized so far as can be done without injuring the rhythm or accentuation. Brief historical and explanatory notes to many of the ballads are added to the Table of Contents, and the meanings of obsolete terms are explained in foot-notes. Published in connection with Dent & Co., of London.

Tom Cringle's Log.

By MICHAEL SCOTT. 2 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $2.00; half calf or half morocco, $4.50.

Cruise of the Midge.

By MICHAEL SCOTT. 2 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $2.00; half calf or half morocco, $4.50.

The brilliant papers that make up these volumes were commenced in Blackwood's Magazine in 1829. Coleridge, in his "Table-Talk," spoke of them as "most excellent." Wilson, in "Noctes Ambrosianæ," says, "Cringle indeed is a giant."

Burns (Robert). Poetical Works.

Complete. Chronologically Arranged, with Notes, Glossaries and Index. By W. SCOTT DOUGLAS. 3 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $2.25; half calf, $5.00.

In this edition the poems of Burns are presented unabridged and untampered with, and arranged in chronological order, the date of each composition being recorded.

Thomas A'Kempis's Imitation of Christ.

Edited by CANON FARRAR. Illustrated by new and quaint illustrations. Illuminated with Initial Letters, making the most desirable edition published. Price, in cloth, $1.50; limp morocco, $4.00.

Published in connection with Methuen & Co., of London.

Australasia.

Volume I.—Australia and New Zealand. By ALFRED B. WALLACE, LL. D., D. C. L., F. R. S. With many maps and illustrations. Crown 8vo. Price $4.50.

Volume II. ready shortly. To be followed by volumes on North America, Europe, Asia, Africa and South America.

Chambers's Concise Gazetteer of the World.

Topographical, Statistical and Historical. 1 volume, crown 8vo. Uniform with Reader's Reference Library. Half morocco, $2.50.

This work does not claim to be exhaustive. Its aim has been to tell everything that may be reasonably wanted about every place likely to be looked for.

My First Book.

The Experiences of Walter Besant, James Payn, W. Clark Russell, Grant Allen, Hall Caine, George R. Sims, Rudyard Kipling, A. Conan Doyle, M. E. Braddon, F. W. Robinson, H. Rider Haggard, R. M. Ballantyne, I. Zangwill, Morley Roberts, David Christie Murray, Marie Corelli, Jerome K. Jerome, John Strange Winter, Bret Harte, "I," Robert Louis Stevenson and Robert Buchanan. With an Introduction by JEROME K. JEROME. Profusely illustrated, $2.50.

A New Novel by W. E. Norris.

Matthew Austin.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In "Lippincott's Series of Select Novels" for October.

A New Novel by Mrs. D. M. Croker, author of "A Third Person," etc.

Mr. Jervis.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In "Lippincott's Series of Select Novels" for November.

A New Novel by Effie Adelaide Rowlands, author of "My Pretty Jane," etc.

The Spell of Ursula.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In "Lippincott's Series of Select Novels" for December.

A New Novel by Rosa Nouchette Carey.

The Old, Old Story.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Ready in September.

A New Novel by Captain Charles King, U. S. A.

Under Fire.

Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A New Novel by Julien Gordon, author of "A Diplomatic Diary," etc.

Poppæa.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Ready in October.

A New Novel by W. E. Norris.

The Despotic Lady.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Ready in November.

A Volume of South Sea Island Stories by Louis Becke.

By Reef and Palm.

With Introduction by Lord PEMBROKE. Tall 16mo, cloth, 75 cents.

Ready in October.

A New Novel by James Payn.

In Market Overt.

Copyrighted edition in preparation.

A Volume of Short Stories by Mrs. L. T. Mead, author of "The Honorable Miss," etc.

Stories from the Diary of a Doctor.

24 full-page illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A Remarkable Story of Adventure by Wm. Laird Clowes, author of "The Captain of the Mary Rose," etc.

The Double Emperor.

With 8 full-page illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A Book for Young Girls, by Amy E. Blanchard, author of "Twenty Little Maidens."

Two Girls.

Illustrated by IDA WAUGH. 12mo, cloth, extra, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A Book for Girls by Mrs. Molesworth.

Olivia.

Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, upon receipt of price by the publishers,

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, 715 and 717 Market Street, Philadelphia.

The Literary World

Vol. XXV BOSTON 6 OCTOBER 1894 No. 20

CONTENTS

In Old New York 325
Timar's Two Worlds 325
Frances Power Cobbe 326
The Johannine Theology 327
Highland Cousins 327
Newton Booth 337
Bartlett's Concordance to Shakespeare . 328
On Short Leave to Japan 328
History for Ready Reference 329

Poetry:
  Omar Khayyám and Khwájah Nizámi. W. L. Shoemaker 330
  Leconte De Lisle. Edmund Gosse . . . 330
London Letter 330
Minor Notices:
  The Story of South Africa 331
  From the Easy Chair. Third Series . . . 331
  Progress in Flying Machines 331
  The Aged Poor in England and Wales . . . 331
  An Introduction to the Study of Society . . 331
  Cavalry Life in Tent and Field 332
Periodicals 332
Publishers' Announcements 334
News and Notes 335
Publications Received 337

IN OLD NEW YORK.*

THE cosmopolitan city on Manhattan Island has a story that is worth telling "at sundry times and in divers manners." In the September Harper's Magazine we have the geological story and the work of the glacier told. In several brilliant numbers of the same periodical Mr. Janvier gave some months ago fascinating chapters on its topography and the history and social phases of old New York. Endowed with a fine imagination he not only sees the old times in clear light, but makes word-pictures that show how carefully the true literary artist discriminates and portrays atmospheres. He is accurate in picturing the peculiarities of the Dutch dynasty, though we notice that, while in his text he correctly speaks of New Netherland, the printer of the title under the frontispiece has (after the fashion of the New England historians) printed New Netherlands. "Graft" also is evidently meant for gracht. Artist and author have combined together to make this a very charming book, and in the pictures alone one can read the development of the city and its social life. The early Dutch occupation seems now but an episode, though in reality it has proved a powerful and tenacious force that has gone to shape the whole life of the city. Fortunately Mr. Janvier is able to do justice to all the strains of life and blood which went to the making of New York society, and the artist seems to have worked in harmony with him. Moreover, the maps are accurate as well as interesting, and show that from the first commercial speculation was rife, "booms" were common, and hopes of great fortunes to be made by the sale of lots were greater in number than their realizations. Mr. Janvier knows exactly what to leave out. He saves himself handsomely from the vice of most antiquarians, who lose the interest of their story in a mass of details. His chapters are short, lively, and flavored with just enough of statistics and detail to suggest accuracy and strengthen our confidence, while we enjoy his dainty diction and his fine touch which moves our own imagination also. From the first building of the Dutch sailors' huts to the period ushering in the splendors of Central Park and the glories of Fifth Avenue, we have a series of pictures in narrative and description which both the old residents, the expectant visitor, and the piqued or jealous or interested denizen of rival cities may richly enjoy. There is, what there ought to be in every book containing solid information as well as intellectual amusement, a good index.

TIMAR'S TWO WORLDS.*

ALTHOUGH the library of fiction for English-speaking people is becoming so cosmopolitan that we shall presently have small excuse for remaining provincial in thought or feeling, it is not yet perfectly easy for critics to appraise the strong romances that are produced under conditions alien to those prevailing in England and America. In Timar's Two Worlds we have a striking story by Maurus Jókai, the leading novelist of Hungary. Are we the more attracted by its rich, foreign color, or repelled by its somewhat melodramatic scheme and its unconventional views of life? Amid the impressive scenery of the Danube, depicted with abundant detail, we see Timar, the captain of a merchant vessel, transporting a cargo of grain and its owner, a Turk disguised as a Greek, who is accompanied by his beautiful young daughter, Timéa. The Turk, alarmed by the sight of a spy, commits suicide, requesting Timar to convey his daughter and his property to an acquaintance in Komorn. After the ship has been saved from various perils by Timar's skill and energy, it strikes a snag and sinks. Timéa for the third time owes her life to Timar. The guardian to whom she is consigned proves to be greedy and unscrupulous. The girl is treated rather as a servant than as a companion for his daughter, Athalie. Timar, who has hitherto been an honest man, buys the sunken cargo, finds one sack of grain peculiarly marked, opens it in secret, and sees marvelous treasures. He persuades himself that it is justifiable to keep it instead of transferring it to Timéa's guardian, who, as he reasons, would withhold it from her. Moreover, Timar is in love with her, and fears that if she should receive her property she would not cast a glance at himself, a poor supercargo. With consummate skill he invests and reinvests the money, becomes fabulously rich, and is universally respected as an upright, generous man of affairs. He marries Timéa, who is grateful and obedient, but does not love him. Bitterly disappointed by his inability to inspire this "marble statue" with an affection like his own, he becomes interested in a beautiful young girl who has innocently shown him that she idolizes him. Henceforth he lives two lives, and many are his inward struggles. Two noble women belong to him — one known to the world as his wife, the other, wholly a child of nature, loving him without suspicion of guilt.

It is impossible in a brief notice to indicate even the outlines of a complex plot, in which several desperate and skillful actors are concerned, to mar the fortunes of the persons already named; nor can the psychological accuracy of the romance be fully discussed. But the reviewer may put this question for the careful reader to consider: Does an impression of unreality occasionally assert itself in the midst of the scenes which the author presents with great vigor? Do we sometimes doubt whether in actual life events were ever dovetailed in a fashion so remarkable as that which fell to Timar's lot? In his character the good elements preponderate. His first wrong step leads to others. He gives up prayer, saying to his God, "Do not thou look where I go." Yet, even when involved in a network of strange circumstances, he regards justice and tries to dispense it to those whom he has wronged. When brought to bay after many years he turns to the Great Being "who has created only one creature which defies its Maker — man." Confessing his sins, praying for the two women and the child who have taught him the meaning of love, he tries to drown himself, but is saved by the conjunction of two marvelous happenings. The body of an enemy who has threatened him with disclosures and calumnies is found in the river and believed to be his own. It is interred with public honors, and after a time his wife marries the man to whom her girlish love had been given. Timar lives in seclusion with Noémie and their child upon an "ownerless island" in the Danube. Here forty years later the curtain falls upon a patriarchal group in an untroubled Eden where there are no taxes or moneys or wars, no bishops, electors or ministers. Apparently the inhabitants are content with their earthly paradise, and herein lies the defect of this as of all other Utopias. The element of aspiration is not duly noted. The artist who has painted a fiend in Athalie, a silent saint in Timéa, an unquestioning impersonation of domestic love in Noémie, a man of destiny in the erring and repentant Timar, is admirable rather for strength of color and drawing than for subtlety of atmosphere. Timar's Two Worlds is full of force, fire, and picturesqueness. While we cannot agree with the critics who pronounce it a masterpiece of European literature, we admit that its author is a master in the art of story-telling.

---

* In Old New York. By Thomas A. Janvier. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.75.

* Timar's Two Worlds. By Maurus Jókai. Authorized translation by Mrs. Hegan Kennard. D. Appleton & Co. $1.00; paper, 50c.

FRANCES POWER COBBE.*

Miss Cobbe, whose name is known all over the civilized world as a writer of books on ethics and religion of the most helpful and constructive kind, has done well to "take her own life" in these two comely volumes. They are paged consecutively; are printed (for both England and America) at the Riverside Press on admirable English paper, in typography as admirable; and have two frontispieces — one a recent portrait of the writer, and the other a view of Hengwrt, her residence in Wales. The first, though not showing the whole figure, makes one realize the probable truth of Miss Cobbe's remark on her first page that she "inherited a physical frame . . . defective even to the verge of grotesqueness from the æsthetic point of view." But the noble head, the eloquent eyes, and the generous, wholesome expression redeem the enormous frame from grossness. The impression the portrait makes of a great character is amply borne out by a biography which is notably sincere, just in its estimates of the author herself, full of cheerfulness, and equally marked by religious earnestness and philanthropic fervor.

Those who have known Miss Cobbe only through her books, and have naturally thought of her as probably a "self-made" woman — in the usual sense of the term — will find a surprise awaiting them in her first sentence, "I have enjoyed through life the advantage of being, in the true sense of the words, 'well born;'" for this means not only what Miss Cobbe calls the most important matters of inheriting a sound body, "good working brains," and virtuous tendencies, but also that her family was of good rank and in comfortable circumstances. She was born in 1822 at Newbridge, the fine home of the Cobbes twelve miles north of Dublin, built by Archbishop Cobbe in the last century. Of her early life in this hospitable home of plenty and happiness she gives a delightful picture. A great contrast is her description of life at school in Brighton in 1836, when "the education of women was probably at its lowest ebb." She had been a child much given to life by herself, as she had no brothers near her own age and no sisters; but she was an intensely happy child, even to the point of being conscious of her own happiness. She was also a very religious child, brought up in a mild evangelical atmosphere. Bunyan — "the Puritan-Tinker-Shelley," she calls him — had immense influence over her through The Pilgrim's Progress. The first doubt of a religious or theological character arose in her mind when she attempted to understand what actually happened when the loaves and fishes were multiplied. After her return from school she was "converted," but then came four years of struggle to retain her old faith:

> The complete downfall of Evangelicalism — which seems to have been effected in George Eliot's strong brain in a single fortnight of intercourse with Mr. and Mrs. Bray — had taken four long years of miserable mental conflict and unspeakable pain. It left me with something as nearly like a Tabula rasa of faith as can well be imagined. I definitely disbelieved in human immortality and in a supernatural revelation. The existence of God I neither denied nor affirmed. I felt I had no means of coming to any knowledge of him. I was, in fact (long before the word was invented), precisely — an agnostic.

But one day there came a second conversion of a purely ethical character, which restored her faith in God, and not long afterward her belief in immortality revived, not to disappear. Theodore Parker's Discourse was epoch-making for her, and

> I remain to the present unshaken both in respect to the denials and the affirmations of Theism. There are great difficulties, soul-torturing difficulties, besetting it; but the same or worse beset every other form of faith in God; and infinitely more, and to my mind insurmountable ones, beset Atheism. For fifty years Theism has been my staff of life. I must soon try how it will support me down the last few steps of my earthly way. I believe it will do so well.

Her first book, the thoughtful and inspiring Essay on the Theory of Intuitive Morals, was written when Miss Cobbe was between thirty and thirty-three. She was then the companion of her aged and widowed father, the housekeeper at Newbridge, and active in the charities of a well-kept Irish estate. Two chapters which follow give an interesting review of Ireland in the thirties and forties from the standpoint of the philanthropic Tory. Mr. Charles Cobbe died in 1857, and left his daughter an annuity of two hundred pounds. She was then free to leave Ireland, and took a long journey in Europe and the East, of which she gives a comparatively brief account. On her return she became an assistant to the apostolic Mary Carpenter in her reformatory and ragged school work at Bristol, continuing her labors independently after a time. On one of her six visits to Italy (which she groups in a single chapter) Miss Cobbe formed a friendship with a Welsh lady, Miss Lloyd of Hengwrt, who was a sculptor. They returned to live in London together for twenty-five years, and are still companions in the beautiful Welsh home which a timely legacy enabled Miss Cobbe to retain when losses had made it necessary for them to change. The four chapters devoted to these London years are full of interest. Here Miss Cobbe gives a full account of her busy career as a journalist and essayist, with abstracts of the contents of her most important books. Along with these literary labors went exertions in behalf of the claims of woman and the claims of brutes — the subjects of two distinct chapters.

Miss Cobbe is a pronounced woman suffragist and a determined enemy of vivisection. Whatever one may think of her arguments about these two matters no one can doubt that she is a champion worthy of the highest respect and consideration — not only because of her great practical services to both causes, but also because of the keenness and vigor of her discussion, which is far above that usually encountered in these fields. She may well claim that she has written nothing to repent of; that she should be invariably correct in her positions and her conclusions is a claim which she would not make. One may simply say that, as she shows in her remarks on book-reviews (page 390), Miss Cobbe has a habit of suffusing her subject with emotion, which does not always tend to a clear perception of it.

Miss Cobbe has known well many of the most noted people in letters, science, art, and philanthropy in the last forty years. Her pages abound with impressions and notable remarks of men and women like Mill, Dean Stanley, Mrs. Kemble, Mrs. Somerville, Lyell, Rosa Bonheur, Miss Carpenter, and others, whose names alone would fill a column here. She is fond of good stories and there is a wealth of them to be found in these volumes. Renan, for instance, she describes as looking even worse than his picture led one to expect:

> His face is exactly like a hog, so stupendously broad across the ears and jowl! But he is very gentlemanly in manner, very winning, and full of fun and finesse. . . . He said . . . that when he was last in Italy numbers of poor people came to him and asked him for the lucky number for the lotteries, because they thought he was so near the Devil he must know!

Miss Cobbe's sympathetic portraits of many brilliant men she has met sustain her contention that the woman who meets them as "a reasonably intelligent listener and companion of restful hours" in social intercourse is well worth hearing in regard to them. She enlarges, for instance, on Mill's "extreme delicacy of feeling." Of Dr. Martineau she is a devoted disciple, describing his preaching and rating it as it should be rated. It will not be needful, to help the large circulation in America of these delightful and stimulating volumes, to quote what Miss Cobbe, who has many American friends of long standing, says of our women, but we will quote it nevertheless, omitting the references to the inevitable bores:

---

*Life of Frances Power Cobbe. By Herself. Two vols. Pp. v, 662. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $4.00.

> Sometimes American ladies would come to me as perfect strangers with a letter from some mutual friend and would take me by storm, and after a couple of hours' conversation we parted as if we had known and loved each other for years. There is something to my mind unique in the attractiveness of American women when they are, as usual, attractive.

THE JOHANNINE THEOLOGY.*

THE young successor of Timothy Dwight in the chair of New Testament interpretation in Yale University has already made his reputation by a treatise on the Pauline theology. The handsome companion volume now in our hands is a study of the doctrinal contents of the Gospel and Epistles of the apostle John. Professor Stevens' critical insight and his thorough acquaintance with the original text of the Book of Revelation do not permit him to place this terminal book of the canon within the circle of the apostle John's writings, so that only the Gospel and Epistles come within the scope of his treatment. The same happy combination of exegetical talent and felicitous expression noted in his former work are seen on the pages of this volume, which treats suggestively, if not exhaustively, of John's theology. Most prominent of this apostle's peculiarities is his tendency to group his thoughts around great central truths. His thought moves out from certain formative and determining conceptions which he has of his subject. He grounds the work of Christ in his person. The mind of the apostle seems to see all things in their principles and essential ideas, and this peculiarity of thinking gives rise to a species of realism.

In discussing his subject Professor Stevens treats of the relations of John's theology to the Old Testament, the idea of God, the doctrine of the Logos, the union of the Son with the Father, and the doctrines of the Holy Spirit, sin, love, prayer, and eternal life. One interesting chapter treats of the Johannine eschatology, and the final one contrasts the theology of Paul and John. The author concludes that the latter furnishes us to a much smaller degree than the former with the elements of a system of thought, though both teachers illustrate and enforce with peculiar power the great truths of God's love and grace which constitute the changeless substance of the gospel of Christ.

Throughout his works Dr. Stevens, who represents Biblical rather than dogmatic learning, calls attention to the assertions of those theologians who represent the scholastic and purely traditional as opposed to the Biblical forms of Christian truth. The abundant but carefully selected bibliography at the head of each chapter, as well as the footnotes and indexes of texts and topics, make this volume a valuable tool for the student. Its easy style will also attract the general reader. In that increasingly fertile field of Biblical theology, in which the peculiarities of the various types of teaching found in sacred Scripture are defined, we welcome this work as the goodly sheaf of a skillful reaper. The sharp discriminations made do not prejudice the underlying unity of the different types of Biblical teachers, but enable us to define the nature and limitations of that unity.

HIGHLAND COUSINS.*

MR. BLACK'S novels, with three or four charming and never to be forgotten exceptions, all run a certain course of unexciting adventure and mild interest which cheers but does not inebriate the habitual novel reader. Luckily the habitual novel reader rather prefers unexciting adventure; he (perhaps we should rather say she) wants to be mildly amused and spared the trouble of filling his leisure hours with "the joy of elevated thought." Social problems bore the habitual novel reader; Mrs. Humphry Ward seems to him long-winded; Mr. Barrie's Scotch dialect requires too much exertion; George Meredith's idiosyncrasies completely floor him; but Mr. Black suits him perfectly. If Mr. Black is occasionally a trifle long-winded in Highland Cousins, it is certainly not on social problems, and although there is a goodly sprinkling of Scotch words and phrases Mr. Black invariably translates them into the queen's best English; in short there is nothing to frighten and everything to attract the habitual novel reader here.

Looked at from any other standpoint Highland Cousins is rather a dull book; no one of the characters arouses any especial interest, nor is any of them clear or distinct. There are two capital descriptions of games of golf, and the admirers of that game, which is so fascinating to players and so senselessly dull to lookers-on, will do well to read the accounts of the contests between the councilor and the station master. The illustrations are excellent and the moral tone high, but it is sad to find the author of The Princess of Thule and Sunrise can write such a dull novel.

NEWTON BOOTH.†

IN these times when peace broods over the land and the union of the States is not only an accomplished fact but a fact which increasingly impresses the world, it is good to bring to remembrance those who helped to preserve that Union which our fathers formed. In the days of '61 there were pivotal States on whose action the success or failure of the Union seemed to turn. One of these was California. Its vast wealth, its commanding situation, and its increasing population made its adherence to the cause of the Union of the first importance. At that time news by mail across the continent took eighteen days at the shortest. The great commonwealth had within it a population of fewer than 400,000 persons, of whom only about 15,000 were men capable of bearing arms, while the State could not arm or equip more than 5,000 of them. The pony express arriving at intervals of eight days from St. Joseph brought the news of Fort Sumter on its second arrival, but it was not until October, 1861, that the first through message came by telegraph. A secret secession organization, the Knights of the Golden Circle, was in constant and menacing session, and plots had been formed to capture the government forts and arsenal and to declare California out of the Union. The great mines of Nevada, which had been just discovered, attracted large multitudes of adventurous men, the majority being Secessionists, and there was danger from Oregon and from Arizona. The proslavery element was manipulated by sincere and brave men, who were skillful in political work and who favored slavery through inherited convictions. They were openly eloquent for disunion, and they were silently active to accomplish it. On the other hand were prompt, eloquent, patriotic, and determined men who gave an impulse to patriotism by stirring eloquence, fervent appeal, and denunciation of treason. Among these loyal leaders was Newton Booth, who knew how to create public opinion. He said:

> Public opinion—what is that but the bold utterance of the few who think what they say, dare to say what they think, and seek what they want, and the silent acquiescence of the many who are too indolent for thought or too timid for action.

In this handsomely printed volume we have the fruits of the thoughtful and studious life of this statesman, who was also a man of affairs. His writings show a happy combination of polished diction, limpid style, logical grasp, and thorough insight. He had fully mastered the great principles of history. He knew in what grooves the human mind works and how men are influenced. He was morally brave and physically stoical, and when, as in his later days, he was called to suffer agony he showed himself the embodiment of unconquerable philosophy. Born in Indiana in 1825, he was a descendant of a Connecticut soldier of the Revolution, his mother being a daughter of a pioneer from North Carolina. Both parents were of Quaker descent. Graduating from DePauw University, he studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1849. He arrived in the State of the Golden Gate in 1850. After traveling in Europe he was elected a State senator in 1862 and governor in 1871, and was United States senator from California from March 4, 1875. He died at Sacramento June 14, 1892. The numerous orations and addresses in this volume of over five hundred pages illustrate many phases of the development of our common country, and especially the varied life on the Pacific coast. Today we have not only millionaires by the hundreds, but perhaps men who are semi-billionaires. We have a voluminous literature on the railway, the telegraph, electric inventions, and the great industrial phases of modern life. In this book are the thoughts and observations of one who helped to create the age in which we now live, and they are well worth the study of those who would know the social and political history of our national life before and after the war. The lectures show finely the purely literary side of Senator Booth's culture.

---

* The Johannine Theology. By George B. Stevens, Ph.D., D.D. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00.

* Highland Cousins. By William Black. Harper & Brothers. $1.75.

† Newton Booth of California: His Speeches and Addresses. Edited by Lauren E. Crane. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50.

BARTLETT'S CONCORDANCE TO SHAKESPEARE.*

MR. JOHN BARTLETT of Familiar Quotations fame has again put the whole world of letters under a heavy obligation. This monumental concordance of Shakespeare's plays and poems is the result of the leisure taken from active duties in the last eighteen years. It is affectionately inscribed to his wife, "whose ever-ready assistance . . . has made my labor a pastime." Mr. Bartlett's Shakespeare Phrase Book was a forerunner of this majestic volume, which has not far from two thousand pages in the clearest of typography from the press of R. & R. Clark of Edinburgh. As a matter of necessity the paper is thin, but it is sufficiently opaque to prevent any undesirable appearance on one page of words on the reverse of the leaf. The entry-word is printed in the small size of bold-face type now common in dictionaries, and the entries are, for the most part, confined to the one long line which the broad quarto page allows by its division into two columns only. But it is the leading peculiarity of Mr. Bartlett's work that he has not consulted brevity as the main consideration in his citations. On the contrary he gives enough of the context, whether this fills one line, two lines, or more, to make sense in all cases, and in most cases to insure an interesting citation. Thus under "arouse," to take an instance at haphazard, he quotes from 2 Hen. VI, iv, 1, 3:

> And now loud-howling wolves arouse the jades
> That drag the tragic melancholy night.

Under "armour," just before, we find, from Richard III, iv, 4, 189:

> Take with thee my most heavy curse,
> Which in the day of battle tire thee more
> Than all the complete armour that thou wear'st!

Evidently a concordance to Shakespeare made on this principle becomes a very readable book, and only its size will prevent it from being a common companion.

The concordance to the Plays fills 1,769 pages. A part of this length is accounted for by the inclusion of "select examples of the verbs to be, to do, to have, may, and their tenses and the auxiliary verb to let; of the adjectives, much, many, more, most, and many adverbs; and of pronouns, prepositions, interjections, and conjunctions." Its is an especially notable instance in this direction, the ten examples of its occurrence being given. The reference word is first given in its simple form, as in the seven pages of citations under king; after this follow certain more or less common combinations with other words, such as king and queen, king of England, king's crown, king's daughter, and so on. After such we have such another, such like, such uses, such wrong, and a column more of similar collocations.

In the references Mr. Bartlett abbreviates the names of the plays, but he makes full citation of act, scene, and line, according to the Globe edition — a great convenience. In the 140 pages devoted to the separate concordance to the Poems he does not attempt to rival Mrs. Furness, who repeats every smallest word. But for all practical purposes his work will supersede that of Mrs. Furness, as well as that of Mrs. Cowden-Clarke. The labor of compiling its 400,000 references has been immense, but it is a work done for all time apparently, and Mr. Bartlett's name will live as long as Shakespeare is studied carefully among men. The one objection we have to make is against the inclusion under one heading of words spelt alike but of different sound and signification — such as tear (a tear drop) and tear (to rend). No uniform habit of lexicographers in this direction will persuade us of its logical correctness or of its convenience for users of this lexicon. Apart from this matter no words of praise are too high for the zeal and discrimination which have produced this superb book of reference.

ON SHORT LEAVE TO JAPAN.*

FOR desirable variety to offset the monotony of military duty in time of peace, Captain Younghusband has made journeys in various directions, and this is his fourth book. It is probably on the whole most useful to Englishmen, because it gives the regulation directions about items of expense, distance, time required, and the like. Since it is almost the duty of every one owning a steel pen and an ink bottle to write a book about Japan, the worthy captain conscientiously performs his duty. He loads up his intellectual fieldpiece with a cartridge carefully compounded, wrapped, and primed from material gathered out of the books written in Japan by British scholars, which contain real information. Taking aim at the "English readers" he is sure to hit a good many with his canister. The Japanese call shrapnel and such fractional projectiles "pomegranate shot," and one may use this picturesque term in speaking of Captain Younghusband's book. There is nothing to suggest one ball or bullet. We have the usual delightful hodgepodge of the hasty tourist's book. There is very little that is concentrated, but much that is scattering. We are strongly reminded of the jokes, stories, criticisms, smart sayings, and conventional remarks of the mess table. Politics and religion, manners and customs, things of war and peace, criticisms on missionaries, and characteristic remarks about Americans are as numerous as the ingredients in a corned beef hash. Well browned and seasoned, with a little garniture of rhetorical parsley, the dish is savory and attractive to a palate not too critical. Bound in red and gold, with two thirds of a dozen good illustrations and well printed, the book will interest while one reads of the captain's runs through India by railway during the hot season. The shipmaster's yarns are deftly retold. The chapter on the Atcheer war is timely, in view of the recent calamity to the Dutch in their interminable and wasteful conflict — prolonged largely through British assistance to the Malays. Singapore calls for criticisms on the Frenchmen. After a glance at Hong-Kong and Shanghai, the author finds himself in a fog off Japan and ready to run into a cliff — which reminds us that one of the Japanese names for their country is "the Cliff Fortress Island." A run through the Inland Sea brings him to Kobé, and in Tokio he sees native life of today exactly as the hurried reader of Murray's Handbook is expected to see it. The theater amuses him and us. This brave Briton also has an idea that Japan is "the Ramsgate of America," and of course he is struck with the vulgarity of the "free-born Merukun citizen," while sweetly blind to the still greater vulgarity that floods Japan from England, Wales, Scotland, Ireland, Australia, and the British colonies. He goes up to Nikko, and sprinkles over his chapters the attar of Professor Chamberlain's literary roses. Of course the hot springs are visited, and so is Hakone Lake and the Tokaido.

Captain Younghusband's book reminds one wonderfully of a new recruit standing in regulation line with his little finger on the seam of his pantaloons, moving his feet to the command, "right," "left," and marching only where he is ordered—by the guidebooks. Of course he discusses Clement Scott and Sir Edward Arnold, without mentioning a single author or writer beyond these two shallowest of all the shallow writers on Japan. When, however, we come to the last chapter we have something really fresh and timely, for in this a military expert tells us about the army of Japan. Even here he makes several mistakes, because, like the average tourist and bookmaker, he has no knowledge of Japanese history or perspective. Nevertheless, one must read this chapter to get an idea of the splendid discipline, equipment, and morale of that modern army which now in Corea fearlessly confronts the advance guards of a nation claiming to rule one fourth of the human race. Of course there is only one nation in the captain's idea which can make Japan the Great Britain of the far East, and that is his own. We feel a little sorry for our British author that while traveling in Japan he seems scarcely to suspect, or else unchivalrously ignores, the fact that Americans have done so much for the making of New Japan. However, he closes his pleasant little book by pleading for the establishment of a thoroughly good and friendly newspaper at Yokohama—evidently not being acquainted with the files of the one paper that treats Japan fairly, the Japan Mail. Certainly the shameful, ungrateful, and wholly selfish hostility of the Englishmen now resident in Japan calls for a protest of all honorable men, whether English or not. The book has no index.

---

*A New and Complete Concordance or Verbal Index to Words, Phrases, and Passages in the Dramatic Works of Shakespeare. With a Supplementary Concordance to the Poems. By John Bartlett, A.M. Quarto. Pp. 1910. Macmillan & Co. $14.00 net.

*On Short Leave to Japan. By Captain G. J. Younghusband. London; Sampson, Low, Marston & Co. Price, 6s.

HISTORY FOR READY REFERENCE.*

THE full title of Mr. Larned's notable reference book is as good as a short preface for declaring its nature. He has conceived an original idea and has carried it out with great success. The plan is to bring inside of some four thousand octavo, double-columned pages the statements of fact and the judgments upon character made by the ablest historical scholars. These are carefully excerpted from their books and given in their own language. One can easily perceive how extremely valuable and interesting such an encyclopedia of history might be, and there can hardly be a doubt as to the felicity of the plan, whether it has been well carried out or not in this particular case. No reasonable being supposes that such a compilation can take the place of the great historians. Gibbon alone would disprove such a dream, with his marvelously condensed review of his immense subject. But, for purposes of daily reference, such an abstract of the historians has many and frequent offices to perform.

That Mr. Larned has achieved a large measure of success in the execution of his plan is almost as obvious as the excellence of the plan itself. His high standing among the librarians of the country guarantees the reader against careless and slipshod work. He has been years about his task, with the assistance of numerous special students, and his volumes have that air of thoroughness and reliability which every scholar expects in the work of a librarian of the first rank and delights to commend. It is no wonder then that History for Ready Reference has received the cordial indorsement of Dr. John Fiske, Pres. J. B. Angell, Profs. M. C. Tyler, H. B. Adams, and George B. Adams, and others whose names are not to be procured in indorsement of the ordinary subscription book.

A specimen brick from the house is always the best way to make the quality of a reference book known. We will take a place and a person, here, for illustration. "Boston" is an example near at hand. Together with numerous cross references (an admirable feature of the work) Mr. Larned quotes a column from Dr. Fiske on the Half-Way Covenant and the Old South Church; a paragraph from Judge Chamberlain on the seizure of the sloop Liberty; and quotations of various lengths on later events from Hildreth, J. K. Hosmer, Lecky, Arthur Gilman, and R. Frothingham—nearly five pages in all, each selection being followed by a few references to other works. For Cromwell we are referred to the long section on England, where we find passages from C. Knight, F. Harrison, J. R. Green, Carlyle, Hallam, N. L. Walford, J. A. Picton, Cordery and Phillpotts, Hume, Guizot, and others in illustration of the deeds and the character of the Protector. It is a matter of no little consequence that great men are here presented in such various lights.

It will show how Mr. Larned has grouped his matter if we mention that his system of cross reference enables him to allow 200 pages to England; 240 to France; 120 to Germany; and 100 to Europe; while Athens has 40, Christianity 35, and Education 75. A large space is occupied in the first volume with the constitutions, in full, of the civilized nations that have these in writing. Here, it seems to us, Mr. Larned might have gained room for selections more properly historical, for the constitutions of Norway and Venezuela would be more at home in a collection of such documents. Present politics is not yet sufficiently history to fully justify taking so much room from past politics.

It is a pleasure to commend volumes so thoroughly edited as these, with their index incorporated in the alphabetical order of entries, their fine apparatus of historical maps, and their helpful "logical outlines" in colors. When completed the work will be one of the most valued helpers on the reference shelf by the side of the ordinary encyclopedia, and in the home library it will be an appropriate companion to the Library of American Literature.

—The competition for the laureateship is not by any means over. When Lord Tennyson died it raged fiercely in London, and now the poetic soul of Scotland is stirred with dreams of glory. As is well known, the countrymen of Burns are all endowed with the gift of poesy, and quite naturally they consider themselves entitled to some consideration in the matter of the laureateship. An Edinburgh gentleman recently sent a list of his qualifications for the vacant post, and his application has been promptly followed by one from a Glasgow "chappie." The latter candidate begins sensibly by setting forth his physical fitness, for it is notorious that poetry makes immense demands upon the constitution. After giving details as to height, weight, and age he proceeds to say that he "can write poetry under any circumstances or on any subject, and with such rare facility that, although appointed laureate, all country orders will still continue to be punctually attended to." He is careful to add that he has never worn a kilt, "nor otherwise offended the nonconformist conscience," and that he is on terms of intimacy with the Glasgow police. In the meantime, should there be any hitch about the laureateship, he is generously prepared to accept "a government post of any kind"—a fact which shows that, although he may be a poet, he certainly is not proud. Lord Rosebery might see in these applications a good opportunity of filling the vacant office. Why should he not invite the bards of Great Britain and Ireland to a sort of Eisteddfod, at which the matter could be settled out of hand? The judges might be any three members of the House of Commons. They might be relied on to know nothing of poetry, and their award would therefore be likely to be in perfect harmony with the popular judgment. This plan would relieve the prime minister of a difficult and invidious task, and would put a speedy end to jealousies, hankerings, and that hope deferred which maketh the heart sick.—Publishers' Circular.

—There is a movement in Great Britain for rescuing ancient Welsh manuscripts from oblivion. Some of the private libraries of North Wales have magnificent manuscript collections. It is estimated that there exist about a hundred manuscripts of one Welsh classic alone—the work of Dafydd ab Gwilym, the famous mediæval Welsh bard.

—The death is announced of Mrs. Augusta Webster, the English novelist, poet, and playwright. She was born in 1840, and was the daughter of Vice-Admiral George Davies.

---

* History for Ready Reference and Topical Reading from the Best Historians, Biographers, and Specialists. Their own words in a complete system of history for all uses, extending to all countries and subjects, and representing for both readers and students the better and newer literature of history in the English language. By J. N. Larned, president American Library Association. With numerous historical maps from original studies and drawings by Alan C. Reiley. In five imperial volumes. Vol. I, A–Elba; Vol. II, Eldo–Grea. Sold only by subscription. Springfield, Mass.: The C. A. Nichols Co., Publishers.

The Literary World

BOSTON 6 OCTOBER 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

Omar Khayyám and Khwájah Nizámi.

"My tomb shall be," said, with prophetic eyes
Looking at me, my master, long ago,
Omar Khayyám, the king of all the wise,
"My tomb shall be in a green spot, I know,
And strewn with roses when the north wind sighs."

I heard him, reverent, yet with mute surprise,
Though from his lips no idle words could flow;
For who can truly say, "There, 'neath the skies,
My tomb shall be?"

At Naishápúr I stood where Omar lies,
Outside a garden o'er whose walls wide throw
Fruit trees their boughs; the stone one scarce espies,
Thick-covered with rose petals of rich dyes.
In such a spot, said he who rests below,
My tomb shall be.

W. L. Shoemaker.

Leconte De Lisle.

July 17th, 1894.

He wrote in marble and in bronze. His verses
Shine cold below the ivory Phidean frieze.
He thought in Greek, and o'er his plaintive hearse is
A phantom hovering from the Cyclades.

It hovers till our idle rites be over,
And then will bear him in its arms away
To islands cinctured by the sun, their lover,
And spicy woodlands thrilled with fiery day.

There his dank hours of toil shall drop, forgotten;
There all he loved, simple and calm and grand —
All the white creatures by his Muse begotten —
Shall cluster round him in a stately band.

Then shall he smile, appeased by sovereign beauty,
Content to know he strove and waited long,
Since in those worlds where loveliness is duty
His bronze and marble leap to life and song.

— Edmund Gosse.

LONDON LETTER.

The literary sensation of the moment to a good many young writers is the dissolution of partnership between Messrs. Mathews & Lane, which took place at the end of September. Each partner will continue publishing on his own account. Mr. Mathews keeps the premises in Vigo Street, but the name of the Bodley Head goes to Mr. Lane, who has established himself nearly opposite in a set of ground floor rooms in the historic Albany. Mr. Lane occupies the rooms where Macaulay wrote his history; in later years Mr. Clyde Fitch, your American dramatist, was established there for a season. Mr. Lane is a collector of bric-a-brac other than literary. He has quite a little museum of beautiful old china and glass, much of it being gifts from his literary friends. So the historic partnership which led to a rehabilitation of poetry is at an end. When the Bodley Head began to publish its limited éditions de luxe poetry was indeed a despised thing. Now, and greatly thanks to it, poetry is not only an honored but a marketable commodity. Among the young poets whose names will be inseparably associated with Messrs. Mathews & Lane are Mr. Le Gallienne, Mr. Arthur Symons, Mr. John Davidson, Mr. Norman Gale, Mr. Lionel Johnson, and Mr. Dawson — these as yet only in the Rhymers' Book — Mr. Francis Thompson, and half a dozen others of less note. One of the striking prose successes of the Bodley Head was George Egerton's Keynotes. Another was Mr. Street's Autobiography of a Boy. We are all interested in learning how the firm's clients will divide. Mr. Le Gallienne will surely go with Mr. Lane; Mr. Mathews will have Mr. Lionel Johnson and Mr. W. B. Yeats; but conjecture on this score is useless till each partner prints his October list. Mr. Lane in any case takes the Yellow Book.

Nearly the last book of the midsummer season, issued by the Bodley Head before the cold shadow of dissolution fell upon it, was the Second Book of the Rhymers' Club. The members of the Rhymers' Club are Mr. Le Gallienne, Mr. Yeats, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Dowson, Mr. Ernest Rhys, Mr. Ernest Radford, Mr. Edwin Ellis, Mr. John Davidson, Mr. Symons, Dr. Todhunter, Mr. T. W. Rolleston, Mr. A. C. Hillier, Mr. Victor Plarr, and Mr. A. C. Greene. Of these the last five, with Mr. Yeats, are Irishmen; Mr. Johnson is an Irishman born in Wales; Mr. Rhys is a Welshman; Mr. Symons and Mr. Radford are Cornishmen; and Mr. Davidson is a Scotchman. I think Mr. Edwin Ellis is Welsh, but am not sure. In this case the Englishmen of the club would be only two. To the new book Mr. Yeats contributes less beautiful poetry than he did to the first, but he is still first of the Rhymers, as indeed, with Mr. Francis Thompson, he is first of our young poets. Mr. Lionel Johnson contributes some noble and sane poetry that makes us long for his forthcoming volume. This young poet has an austere strength uncommon among our young men. Listen to this wild and pure love song, full of the unnamable quality that is the enchantment of poetry:

A voice on the winds,
A voice by the waters,
Wanders and cries:

O! what are the winds?
And what are the waters?
Mine are your eyes!

Western the winds are,
And western the waters,
Where the light lies:

O! what are the winds?
And what are the waters?
Mine are your eyes!

Cold, cold, grow the winds,
And dark grow the waters,
Where the sun dies:

O! what are the winds?
And what are the waters?
Mine are your eyes!

And down the night winds,
And down the night waters,
The music flies:

O! what are the winds?
And what are the waters?
Cold be the winds,
And wild be the waters,
So mine be your eyes!

Mr. Dowson contributes some of his delicately impassioned poetry, hauntingly dreamy and musical. His poems are few; it will be long before he attains a sufficient number for a volume, but of their kind they are absolutely perfect. The remaining contributions are variously good as we should expect from their writers, and on the whole the book is an admirable index to what we may expect from the young school of English poetry.

Messrs. Longmans have published an edition of Mrs. Piatt's poems in two volumes, uniform with her Enchanted Castle and Other Irish Poems and with her husband's two volumes which they published some time ago. Mr. and Mrs. Piatt left our shores for America last month, and will be very deeply regretted by the many friends they have made in England and Ireland. There are not many new poems in Mrs. Piatt's new volumes, but they are a very precious collection of perhaps the most womanly and tender poems of our time.

A remarkable novel of Irish life is The Merchant of Killogue, by Edmund Downey, published by Mr. Heinemann of London. I do not know any novel which paints the life so realistically, except, perhaps, one or two of Miss Laffan's witty and corroding studies of middle-class Irish life. But whereas she paints the life with dislike, he does it kindly, and gives us an absolutely faithful portrait of men and manners in an Irish town. The Ireland of Lover and Lever, so far as it existed, is dead, as is the Ireland depicted in Maria Edgeworth's masterpieces, Castle Rackrent and The Absentee. Mr. Downey knew well his Irish town in the sixties, when Fenianism attracted the generous and romantic and before the ideal-destroying Land League was dreamt of. As a portrait of the time and the people the book ought to live.

Books on Japan are greatly in request now that we have an Eastern war. To all who would know something of the history and polity of that fascinating country I would recommend Japan, in Mr. Fisher Unwin's Story of the Nations series. In this volume all the essential facts are brought together, and it gives a new interest to a land upon which we have been accustomed to look as a sort of world painted on a tea-tray, quaint and charming, but scarcely to be regarded seriously. I remember Miss Roma White, one of our finest writers for children, painting us an enchanting picture of life in a Japanese fan country, where the rivers wind over the tree-tops and there are other fascinating irregularities. I think that is the point of view of most of us as regards Japan, and it is rather a discovery to find its people a serious people with a serious history. It gives one a shock, indeed, to think of them as the ferocious persecutors of the Christians in the seventeenth century. A good many of their tortures are too horrible to be described, and altogether they seem to have pretty well excelled the devilries of the West.

Mr. Fisher Unwin has also published Tiberius, a posthumous drama by Francis Adams, the young Australian writer who committed suicide a year ago at Margate. His view of Tiberius is quite unconventional, inasmuch as he treats him as a reformer whose tyrannies were necessary to extirpate the oppressive magnates. The play is strong but somewhat unpleasant, and if we are to see it on the stage the atmosphere of the heathen world will have to be somewhat idealized for the British public. Mr. William Rossetti contributes a preface to the volume.

Mr. Frederick Atkins, who has made so distinguished a success of the monthly periodicals known as the Young Man and the Young Woman, will bring out on the 4th of October a weekly penny paper, the New Age, of which the first issue will be 75,000 copies. Mr. Atkins, who is one of the keenest men in London to recognize new literary talent, has obtained the best names for his new venture. Among the writers of short stories will be Mr. Baring-Gould, Mrs. Walford, Mrs. Alexander, Mr. Zangwill, W. Clark Russell, B. L. Farjeon, Grant Allen, and other popular people. Each number will contain a sermon by some popular preacher, Anglican or Nonconformist. Mr. Le Gallienne and others will contribute book letters. There will be interviews with eminent people, Mr. Gladstone leading off. Altogether the new periodical is pretty sure to be a success.

Mr. Walter Herries Pollock has retired from the editorship of the Saturday Review.

A pleasant book of poems, brightened throughout with the sunshine of home and love, is Sonnets and Other Verses, by Edward Harding, recently published by Mr. Eliot Stock. The sonnets in this book are especially good; they are very dignified and have often a touch of distinction. One is always glad to say a word for a worthy volume of poetry, even if it be not such as to take the world by storm. There is so much amazingly bad verse published; we have a number of cranks here in England who publish the most grotesque things in the way of verse. The most famous was the poet Close, who died some time ago, but he has his successors in some gentlemen who belong to a Brotherhood of Poets, who wear decorations of their own bestowing, and have a magazine all to themselves, where they strut ridiculously for their fellows' admiration. James Joseph Barrett, "the poet," is the best known of these, as he circulates his absurd circulars widely. But a rival of his wrote to me the other day from Cornwall, inclosing an order form for his book to be returned with four shillings and sixpence, and also inclosing an obliging offer to read my manuscripts and report on them with suggestions. He had a scale of prices for this kind of work, ranging from half a crown for a single poem to fifteen shillings and six for a whole book. Verily England is the land of cranks and absurd people.

KATHARINE TYNAN HINKSON.

MINOR NOTICES.

The Story of South Africa.

This historical sketch of South Africa, by George M. Theal, is Volume II in the group of histories of the British colonies in the now large and important series of Stories of the Nations. The author's qualifications for his task are his residence in Cape Town, his membership in the Cape Colonial Civil Service, and his previous History of South Africa in five octavo volumes. Think of it! a civil life already enacted in the colonies of South Africa the story of which it takes five octavo volumes to tell. The volume before us is substantially an outline or epitome of the larger work, and will well answer every purpose of the ordinary reader. Indeed, it is more than many readers will require, for few of us care for the details of the jealousies, bickerings, contests, and other steps which have marked the progress of South African development. The Dutch, the English, and the natives have had that remote corner of the world pretty much to themselves, and most of us care little, except in the love of pure history, how they divide up the land and adjust their holdings in it. It is a long story, the romance of whose beginnings is furnished by the Portuguese, the commercial enterprise by the Dutch, the modern improvements by the English, the fun by the Hottentots, the heroism by Dr. Livingstone and Dr. Moffat, and the genius by Mr. Cecil Rhodes. We must not forget the glitter of the diamond fields, the tragedy of the death of the Prince Imperial of France, and the gallant defense of Rorke's Drift, one of the exploits that "you read about." We can assure the reader that an immense amount of material embarrasses the march of the historian through this field, from the discovery of the Cape of Good Hope in 1486 to the setting up of the latest governmental machine in Natal in 1893. The less than four hundred pages of this book are loaded with names, dates, and facts in the utmost condensation. Dr. Colenso we miss, but everything else of importance seems to be here to give one a clear and accurate idea of what has been going on these four hundred years in South Africa. There is a map, as there ought to be, an index, a useful chronological table of events, and some illustrations. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

From the Easy Chair. Third Series.

It is with sad yet tender thought, akin to that felt when one opens a bundle of letters written by a loved friend long dead, that we read this third series of essays or letters from the Easy Chair by George William Curtis. Old James Howel said, "Letters shew the Inside of a Man;" certainly such letters as these show the innermost heart and nature of the man who wrote them — his patriotism, his tenderness, nobility, and manliness. The essay on honor is indeed an honor to the writer. His clear, succinct, and elegant definitions of notoriety, fame, character, reputation, and honor, and his distinctions between these characteristics and attributes, show his highest literary style. The account of the reception to the Japanese ambassadors at the White House is perhaps one of his most graphic and brilliant descriptive essays. The beautiful picture of the New England Sabbath will forever live as an exact yet sympathetic presentment of that quiet, sober, and constrained day. The tribute to Joseph Wesley Harper proves the fit word of a generous friend in honor of an unostentatious, sagacious, just and noble man. — Harper & Brothers.

Progress in Flying Machines.

One great advantage of a scientific geological survey is to save money being expended in digging for coal or mining for gold where neither exists. One benefit of this book is that it will save effort on the part of experimenters. Usually a conversation on flying machines introduced by a man who has tried to imitate the birds causes skeptical hearers to leave the room and to tap their foreheads while exchanging significant glances. The reviewer knew a friend (now safely under the sod) who no longer terrifies his friends, amuses his neighbors, or endangers his life (even as he once broke limbs) by trying to fly. This book, however, is the conscientious work of one who has studied the whole subject, and who shows why devices have failed and points out the causes of such failure. Mr. O. Chanute, C.E., has gathered with wonderful industry all the records of experiments that were accessible. He not only gives us a penetrating and luminous study of birds and their wings, but also shows us why the birds of the arched wing surpass those of the average and ordinary form. He has ransacked all literatures, and his analyses of the flights of birds and of the flying machines made by man satisfy him that men may reasonably hope to fly through the air eventually. As we know, Mr. Hiram S. Maxim, the inventor of the rapid fire guns, has helped very largely in leading the way to the solution of the problem. At the recent meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science it was declared by a student of the subject that three out of the five chief problems involved in aërial navigation had been solved by Mr. Maxim, while Lord Raleigh expressed confidence that the inventor's great ingenuity would enable him to solve the other two. Our own Professor Langley expressed a belief that the world would see practical air-ships in use before the close of the present century. The work is too technical to admit of detailed criticism in this journal, although full of most interesting information about the machines made by the Almighty, which are already successful, and those made by man, which may yet be. — New York: American Engineer Railroad Journal. $2.50.

The Aged Poor in England and Wales.

The great bulk of Mr. Charles Booth's first volume on this subject is given to statistics and condensed tables showing the actual condition of the poor over sixty-five years of age in these two countries. In 1891 the census gave thirty per cent of this part of the population on the pauper roll. Most of the poverty is due to intemperance, and lack of thrift is very common. Mr. Booth's methods of statistical research show at their best in this volume, which is one of extreme interest to Englishmen who desire to see a system of old-age pensions or a reform in the poor law. In this country there will be a less painful interest in the minutiæ of this distress, but special students of charity methods will find much matter here worthy their attention.— Macmillan & Co. $3.50.

An Introduction to the Study of Society.

This volume, the joint work of Prof. Albion W. Small of the University of Chicago and George E. Vincent, vice-chancellor of the Chautauqua system of education, is a pioneer. The two authors style it "a laboratory guide" in sociological work. They note at the outset the familiarity of the subject discussed, as "sociology is nothing but systematic knowledge of human beings who have always been commonplace and at the same time mysterious." If sociology again has any right to the place of a distinctive science, this is evidently of a quite different kind from other sciences. It is mainly an orderly assemblage of general facts and laws, the detailed investigation of which is the business of separate sciences, among which economics and politics are prominent. But Messrs. Small and Vincent have been successful in their task of rearranging, from the sociological point of view, a large number of these phenomena and writing a readable and well-proportioned introduction to further study. They are familiar with the best foreign works, like Dr. Schäffle's Bau und Leben, and their tone is scientific and philosophic, as opposed to the sentimentalism and partialism so common with untrained minds taking up social studies for the first time. Book II, "The Natural History of a Society," is the most fresh and interesting to one versed in this field. It traces the development of a settlement by a man and wife on a Western claim into a flourishing city. But the other books, on the origin and scope of sociology, and social anatomy, physiology, pathology, and psychology, are clear and sound, and the whole book will do excellent service as a guide to practical study. — American Book Co. $1.80.

Cavalry Life in Tent and Field.

The devotion which the wives of army officers show to their husbands is signal and praiseworthy. Amid the discomforts and often the privations of the frontier military posts they will live year after year gladly and uncomplainingly. They are pretty sure to make the wilderness of "the quarters" bloom and blossom like the rose, and to soften and refine the manners and habits of the men. In this neat volume Mrs. Orsemus Bronson Boyd has given a lively picture of what may be called the still life of a cavalry regiment. The book contains not merely a biography of her husband, the late Captain Boyd, but is also a description of a woman's life at the army posts. Captain Boyd served as a member of the 89th New York Volunteer Infantry from September 1, 1861, until July 1, 1863, when he was appointed a cadet in the United States Military Academy, graduating on June 17, 1867. His service as an officer was in the 8th Cavalry; he died July 23, 1885, closing a record of twenty-four years of faithful and gallant work for his country. He had a part in helping to develop our great inland resources in the southwest, and the book is full of exciting episodes and interesting anecdotes. We have in this volume more of the domestic than of the military side of life at the army posts. Much that only a woman's eye would notice is here set forth. Naturally one makes comparison with Mrs. Custer's classic works; although this volume has not the same literary interest, it will well repay the reader who desires to come into closer sympathy with our defenders at the front. There is a good portrait of Captain Boyd as a frontispiece. — J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $1.00.

Two Lives is a long poem by Reginald Fanshawe of the nature of a lament. Bits of sweet and pathetic verse are scattered through the 180 pages, but there is such an evident imitation of Tennyson's "In Memoriam" that it cannot be passed by unnoticed. It is hard to believe that this plagiarism is unconscious, and we quote a few verses to show its flagrancy:

My sorrow I have told to song,
God knoweth, in a doubting hope
That it may win there larger scope
And make at last my weakness strong.

And so, perchance, my love unlost
Shall pass to some more subtle power
Of formless heat; my life shall flower
More fruitful for this deadly frost.

And I must deem my nature's nerve
By death himself was thus restrung
That I should be as one who sung
How sorrow learnt from love to serve.

— Macmillan & Co. $1.75.

The two volumes in the Badminton Library devoted to Yachting are the work of a considerable number of writers, who speak with authority. Among them are the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, R. T. Pritchett, Lewis Herreshoff, Lord Brassey, G. L. Watson, and Rev. G. L. Blake. Each volume is paged and indexed independently. The two together are an imposing witness to the popularity of this sport, the favorite luxury of the wealthy and a prime matter of interest with Americans and Englishmen of every condition. — Little, Brown & Co. $7.00.

Mr. William S. Baker has added to his other volumes on Washington an interesting collection of Early Sketches of George Washington, which he has provided with biographical and bibliographical notes. There are fifteen of these sketches, some hardly more than a page in length. Their dates range from George Mercer, in 1760, to James Hardie, in 1795, and the tone from that of the English soldier, Smyth, to that which calls him "the father of his country and the friend of mankind."— J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.00.

The Conquest of Death, by Abbot Kinney, the author of Tasks by Twilight, is a book of sensible counsel concerning sex, marriage, and child-bearing, which insists upon conformity to nature in matters necessary for the preservation of the race, and properly rebukes numerous false tendencies of the time injurious to the family and domestic life. Mr. Kinney's book is one of the very best of its useful kind; it is copyrighted and apparently published by him in New York.

The Memoirs of King Richard the Third and Some of His Contemporaries, by John Heneage Jesse, were first published in 1861. They originated in studies for a drama, "The Last Wars of the Roses," which takes up half of the second volume of the reprint by Francis P. Harper of New York. The work is written in an easy, flowing style, but neither the drama nor the history seems likely to defy the hand of time long. — $2.50 net.

The larger part of A History of the United States, by Prof. Allen C. Thomas, is occupied with the period since 1789, and in other ways it is in line with the better class of text-books on our history. It is a volume which will compare favorably with the great majority of school histories, while not possessing merits which at once strike the reader as extraordinary. — D. C. Heath & Co.

A handsome volume, bound in blue and white, contains the constitution, by-laws, records, and membership roll of the Massachusetts Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, organized in 1889. Each member's descent is traced back to his revolutionary ancestor, and a number of good photogravures of monuments at Concord and elsewhere are inserted. — W. B. Clarke & Co. $2.00.

PERIODICALS.

"The Real Edwin Booth," as revealed in his letters to his wife and daughter, is the most important addition to literature that the October Century brings us. The sensitive, spiritual personality of the man who could impersonate Hamlet satisfyingly has never before been seen by the world. They are wonderful letters, worthy of our greatest American actor. Edward Eggleston's "Folk-Speech in America" is a curious bit of dialect study. It is interesting to know that James Russell Lowell urged Dr. Eggleston to persevere in his study of dialects, writing to him: "Remember that it will soon be too late. Archaisms of speech survive only among people who are so lucky as not to be able to get at your new-fangled phrases." The article on McClellan and his "Mission" will interest the students of the Civil War, while those on Stedman, Poe, and Aubrey de Vere will appeal to those who care more for belles-lettres. "The Eternal Gullible" is the confessions of a professional hypnotist, with some rather skeptical remarks on the subject by Ernest Hart. Mrs. Burnett's story is continued, and "Brookes: a Story of the Civil Service," is very well worked out. The poetry of the number is worse than usual. Our daily papers often have better bits of verse than our monthly magazines. The A. P. A. and the friction between employed and employer are intelligently discussed in the Open Letters. In breadth of subjects and in variety of interests this is a remarkable number. There is something to suit every class of mind.

In the October Atlantic "Philip and His Wife" comes to a strong conclusion, and Mrs. Deland has confirmed her place among the serious novelists of the day by her refined and powerful handling of a difficult question. "His Honor," by Ellen Mackubin, and "Heart's-ease," by Alice Brown, show that the Atlantic does well to enlarge its regular list of fiction writers whose names are very familiar to its readers. Rev. Dr. George E. Ellis gives a cheerful and instructive "Retrospect of an Octogenarian." An out-of-the-way travel sketch is Anna P. McIlvaine's "Our Quinzaine at La Salette." Miss Hapgood is at home in describing Kieff, "A Russian Holy City." Hon. H. L. Dawes' "Recollections of Stanton under Johnson;" "A Playwright's Novitiate," by Miriam Coles Harris; "The Philosophy of Sterne," by H. C. Merwin; "The Railway War," by H. J. Fletcher; "At Hakata," by Lafcadio Hearn; and the second installment of "Reports of the Plato Club," by H. A. Aikins, are the other solid articles.

Mr. H. G. Prout's opening article in the October Scribner's on "Railroad Travel in England and America" is an excellent description of the English railway system with a few references only, by way of comparison, to our own. "Lenox," by George A. Hibbard, continues the series of papers on noted summer resorts. "Three Waifs in an Almshouse" is the frontispiece, and its painter, Adrien Henri Tanoux, is sketched by Mr. Hamerton. Carl Lumholtz has another article on the curious Tarahumaris, describing this time their "Dances and Plant-Worship." J. West Roosevelt, M.D., gives an account of the life of a resident physician, "In the Hospital." The conclusion of Mr. Page's "Little Darby," the continuation of "John March, Southerner," by Mr. Cable, and a serious story, "From Macedonia," by Mary Tappan Wright, supply the fiction of a well-balanced number.

The leading article in Harper's Magazine for October is an illustrated one, by the artist Weeks, on Lahore and adjacent parts of India — a graphic and glowing piece of description, with beautiful woodcuts. Equally interesting in the later pages of the number is Mr. Caspar W. Whitney's account of the game of golf in Scotland and England; but it is a little over-technical, and does not give the clearest idea of the sport; players will enjoy it much. Richard Harding Davis writes with a plain pen about the streets of Paris, also a fascinating but sometimes unpleasantly suggestive subject. Among the other contributors are John Vance Cheney, Owen Wister, Brander Matthews, Julian Ralph, Grace King, Charles Dudley Warner, and Thomas Nelson Page, a galaxy of names at least. There is a capital critique of Du Maurier's Trilby by Laurence Hutton in the Literary Notes.

The complete novel in the October number of Lippincott's is "A Question of Courage," by Francis Lynde. It deals with a feud in the mountains of Tennessee. "Coals of Fire" is a military tale by Le Roy Armstrong, who here shows himself no unworthy follower of Captain King. "At the Little Red House," by Kate Jordan, has a railway subject. Margaret Langdon writes "A Tragedy of Trade." "An Hour before Death" is a brief and pathetic sketch by Elizabeth Knowlton Carter, a new writer. Gertrude Atherton, in "Famous Rivalries of Women," recalls many moving tales of the past. George J. Varney traces the progress of "Telegraphy up to Date," and David Graham Adee identifies "The Ballad of the Drum," which Alexander Hamilton sang at the banquet of the Cincinnati shortly before his death. Saburo Arai speaks with authority of "Japanese and Chinese Porcelains and Their Imitations." The sentiment and the philosophy alike of "The October Woods" are given by James Knapp Reeve. In "The Snub" Kate Milner Rabb shows that essay writing is not yet a lost art. Felix L. Oswald supplies another good essay on "Localized Virtue." "A Garden Quest" is a specimen of Harrison S. Morris' forthcoming book of verse.

The Popular Science Monthly closes its forty-fifth volume with an issue of marked and varied excellence. Especially seasonable is the opening article on "The Football Situation," by Prof. E. L. Richards of Yale. Professor Richards sets forth the many advantages of the game, and maintains that the evils ascribed to it are unreal or can be removed by changes soon to be introduced. Prof. James Sully contributes the third of his "Studies of Childhood" to this number, taking up "The Questioning Age," and giving a vivid picture of the curious gropings of a child's mind for knowledge. An account of "The American Champagne District," with a description of the various processes in the making of champagne, is given in an illustrated article by Lee J. Vance. The district is not California, as many would suppose, but the lake region of New York. In "Some Lessons from Centenarians" the mode of life of two hundred persons of this class is given by Dr. J. M. French. An anthropometric study of "The Half-blood Indian" is contributed by Franz Boas, being accompanied by diagrams of various measurements. In "West African Folklore," by the late Col. A. B. Ellis, some interesting tales of the too lowly estimated people of the Slave Coast are given. Frederick Le Roy Sargent completes his evolutionary study of "Barberries." M. V. O'Shea depicts "The Professional Training of Teachers" according to modern ideals. J. H. Long presents a curious collection of "Funeral Customs of the World." That science affects profoundly even literature is ably shown by Prof. W. H. Hudson of Stanford University, in a paper on "Poetry and Science." Tennyson is the poet who has most intelligently accepted the results of modern scientific thought. M. Jean du Gourcq gives an account of the "Astronomy of the Incas." There is a sketch of Asaph Hall, the celebrated Washington astronomer, whose life struggles and triumphs make an interesting story.

In the October number of the Forum President Eliot of Harvard University has a profound and suggestive article on "Reasons Why the Republic May Endure," in which he enumerates all the principal forces and tendencies in our civilization, emphasizing those that make for permanence. Ex-Senator Dawes gives interesting reminiscences of our great orators in his paper, "Has Oratory Declined?" Dr. Geffcken, the well-known German publicist, asks, "Is the British Empire Stable?" and argues that its stability depends wholly on its ability to maintain its naval supremacy. Professor Ely of the University of Wisconsin states briefly his views relating to some of the fundamental sociological problems of our time and country, and Prof. Arthur T. Hadley of Yale criticises his latest book, Socialism and Social Reform; Frederic Harrison ranks "Disraeli's Place in Literature" high in some respects; Octave Thanet, under the title of "The Contented Masses," describes the prosperous condition of a typical Western county. Michitaro Hisa, a Japanese resident in America, tells of the "Significance of the Japan-China War" and of the causes which led to its outbreak. J. Gennadius, the Greek ambassador to Great Britain, advocates the plan of "Teaching Greek as a Living Language"—as it is spoken and written in Greece today. Miss Frances A. Doughty, in "A Southern Woman's Study of Boston," gives her impressions of Boston and the Bostonese; and Mr. H. T. Newcomb, in an article entitled "Can Railroad Rates Be Cheapened?" points out the ruinous results of excessive competition to many of our railroads, and suggests a remedy which would eventually admit of a reduction in rates.

The New World for September has an attractive table of contents. Rev. John W. Chadwick of Brooklyn in his usual vigorous style furnishes a paper, full of most excellent common sense and clear understanding of the problems involved, on "Universal Religion." He brings the subject out of the hazy future into the clear light of today. He shows that it is not something which, like the supposed Golden Age, is a goal to be attained or an indefinable something to drop upon us suddenly, but that it already exists and has existed. With the increasing solidarity of the race the intercommunication of ideas will go on with far less obstruction than heretofore. Alfred W. Benn lights a lamp which enables us to enjoy a fascinating epoch, showing "The Influence of Philosophy on Greek Social Life." He also reminds us that socialism as we know it today is lineally connected through French and German thought with the socialism of the Greek naturalists, though ours is of the industrial while theirs was of the military type. In "Animism and Teutonic Mythology" Prof. Chantepie de la Saussaye of Amsterdam, after summarizing the labors of the German analysts of language and myth, raises a protest against the submergence in the animistic theory of all others concerning the evolution of religion, and he traces clearly the limits of the animistic theory. Prof. James Seth of Brown University in exposing "The Roots of Agnosticism" shows that this one of the latest isms is an exaggerated statement of the actual and inevitable finitude and imperfection of human knowledge, and offers a wholesome protest against this as against other forms of exaggeration. Giordano Bruno, who has now a statue in Rome, is made very modern and seems to stretch out a hand of sympathy to us of today in the epitome which William R. Thayer gives us of the Italian writer's "Expulsion of the Beast Triumphant." Bruno even above and beyond the men of his time felt the sublimity of existence in an infinite and eternal universe. Rev. Charles F. Dole out of the blended experiences of a pastor, preacher, and scholar furnishes a thoughtful paper on "The Service of Worship and the Service of Thought." Perhaps the most brilliant (though to the reviewer's mind unconvincing) paper is that of Dr. Albert Réville on "The Resurrection of Jesus," in which he proves to his own satisfaction that the resurrection of Jesus took place only in the minds of his disciples. The keen French writer's argument has many assertions which commend themselves only to the "rationalist" in religion. Rev. G. F. Genung finely illustrates the subject of "Truth as Apprehended and Expressed in Art." Of the fifty pages of book reviews it is difficult to speak with too high praise; they are by scholars and specialists, and are brief, pointed, suggestive, and notably fair. It is hard to see how the thoughtful theologian, minister or layman, can do without this periodical which so handsomely keeps abreast of the higher thought and scholarship of the age.

In Macmillan's for September Mr. Saintsbury continues his exposition of the historical novel, treating Scott and Dumas. He agrees with the best critics in ranking the former next to Shakespeare as "a creator of individual character of the miscellaneous human sort," and endeavors to establish him on the pedestal from which some modern writers have attempted to overthrow him. The critic regards Dumas in the light of a pupil of Scott, believing that his work would never have been done at all if it had not been for the master. Guy Boothby has a highly sensational sketch, "The Treasure of Sacramento Nick," and an anonymous writer contributes the only other paper of a fictitious character, "The Little Chorister." Old Parr, of famous and perhaps fabulous longevity, is the subject of another article. Vernon Lee writes in her felicitous and picturesque way of "Ravenna and Her Ghosts." Amusing and helpful to those especially interested is the contribution on "The Complete Leader-writer," and attractive to bird lovers and those who care for incidents in ornithology is "Philornithus in the Park." Other articles are on the "Board of Guardians," "A Forgotten Fight," which gives an episode in the career of Wellington, and an admirable one on Chateaubriand, without a signature but showing the hand of a discriminating critic and trained writer.

Poet-Lore for August–September has an interesting table of contents in a symposium, "How May Literature Best Be Taught," by five professors; a sea story from the Danish of Holger Drachmann, "A Present-Day Saga;" a paper on "Gentle George Farquhar," by Miss Guiney; a translation of Maeterlinck's "Pélléas and Mélisande," and other minor contributions.

PUBLISHERS' ANNOUNCEMENTS.

It is a long list of educational books that Macmillan & Co. promise for this season. First come these works on mathematics, physics, and physiography: "Plane Analytical Geometry," an introductory account of certain modern ideas and methods, by Charlotte Angus Scott, Bryn Mawr College; "Arithmetic for Schools," by Charles Smith, M.A., revised and adapted to American schools by C. L. Harrington, A.M., and the same writer's "Elementary Algebra," revised and adapted to American schools by Irving Stringham, Ph.D., professor of mathematics in the University of California, a new and much enlarged edition; "A Treatise on Bessel Functions," by G. B. Matthews, M.A., and A. Gray, M.A.; "Geometrical Conic Sections," by Charles Smith, M.A., master of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge; "Elliptic Functions," by A. C. Dixon; "Elementary Mensuration," by F. H. Stevens, M.A.; "Practical Plane Geometry," by J. Humphrey Spanton; "A Text-book of the Principles of Physics," new edition, corrected and revised throughout; "Magnetism and Electricity," by Andrew Gray, M.A.; "A Laboratory Manual of Physics and Applied Electricity," arranged and edited by Edward L. Nichols, professor of physics in Cornell University, with illustrations, Vol. II; "A Treatise on Geometrical Optics," by R. A. Herman; "An Elementary Introduction to Mineralogy," by R. H. Solly; "The Planet Earth," an astronomical introduction to geography, by R. A. Gregory, F.R.A.S.; and "Physiography for Beginners," by J. E. Marr, F.R.S., F.G.S., and Alfred Harker, M.A., F.G.S. In chemistry and mechanics they announce "Laboratory Manual and Principles of Chemistry for Beginners," by George M. Richardson, associate professor of chemistry in the Leland Stanford Junior University; "A Dictionary of Chemical Solubilities," inorganic, by A. M. Comey; "Theoretical Chemistry," by Professor Nernst, translated by Charles Skeele Palmer, Ph.D., professor of chemistry in the University of Colorado; "Analytical Chemistry," by N. Menschutkin, professor in the University of St. Petersburg, translated from the third German edition by James Locke; "The Rise and Development of Organic Chemistry," by the late C. Schorlemmer, F.R.S.; Lassar-Cohn's "Laboratory Manual of Organic Chemistry," translated by Alexander Smith, Ph.D., professor of chemistry and mineralogy in Wabash College; "Manual of Physico-Chemical Measurements," by Wilhelm Ostwald, translated by James Walker, D.Sc.; Viollet-le-Duc's "Construction," translated by George Martin Huss; "The Marine Steam Engine," by John Yeo, instructor in the Royal Naval College, Greenwich; "Rigid Dynamics and Laboratory Physics," by W. J. Loudon, demonstrator in physics in the University of Toronto; "An Elementary Treatise on Theoretical Mechanics," by Alexander Ziwet, professor in the University of Michigan, Part III, Kinetics; and Weisbach and Herrmann's "Mechanics of Pumping Machinery," authorized translation from the German by Karl P. Dahlstrom, M.E. In biology the Macmillans promise "The Senile Heart," by George W. Balfour, M.D., LL.D.; "A History of Epidemics in Great Britain," by Charles Creighton, M.D., Vol. II; "A Text-book of Comparative Anatomy," by Dr. Arnold Lang, professor of zoölogy in the University of Zürich, Vol. II; "Physiology for Beginners," by Michael Foster, M.A., and L. E. Shore, M.D.; "A Text-book of Pathology: Systematic and Practical," by Prof. D. J. Hamilton, Vol. II; "Human Anatomy," by Professor Wiedersheim, translated from the last German edition by H. M. Bernard, revised and annotated by G. B. Howes, D.Sc., F.R.S.; in the Columbia University Biological series, edited by Henry Fairfield Osborn, Da Costa professor of biology in Columbia College, "From the Greeks to Darwin," by Henry Fairfield Osborn, and "Amphioxus and the Ancestry of the Vertebrates," by Arthur Willey; "Text-book of Anatomy and Physiology for Nurses," compiled by Diana Clifford Kimber, assistant superintendent New York City Training School, Blackwell's Island; and "Lessons in Practical Bacteriology," by Dr. A. A. Kanthack, lecturer in St. Bartholomew's Hospital. The Macmillans' classical books are fewer than usual; they are "The Alcestis of Euripides," edited by Mortimer Lamson Earle, professor of Greek in Barnard College; "Herodotus," Books IV–VI, with introduction, commentary, and dissertations by R. W. Macan, M.A., fellow and lecturer of University College, Oxford; "The Iliad of Homer," the text edited in accordance with modern criticism, by Arthur Platt, M.A., editor of "The Odyssey of Homer;" the Cambridge Greek Testament for Schools and Colleges, "The Epistle to the Philippians," edited by the Rev. H. C. G. Moule, M.A.; Seyffert's "Dictionary of Classical Mythology, Religion, Literature, Art, and Antiquities," a new and cheaper edition; "Atlas of Classical Antiquities," by Theodor Schreiber, edited for English use by Prof. W. C. F. Anderson, Fifth College, Sheffield; and Meissner's "Latin Phraseology," translated and adapted by H. W. Auden, assistant master in Fettes College, Edinburgh. "The French Verb Simplified," by A. Esclangon, examiner in the University of London, may be added here. In the direction of the history of education and psychology Macmillan & Co. announce "Character and Historical Development of the Universities of Germany," by F. Paulsen, translated by E. D. Perry, professor in Columbia College; "A Course in Experimental Psychology," by J. McKeen Cattell, Ph.D., professor of experimental psychology in Columbia College; "Mental Development in the Child and the Race," by J. Mark Baldwin, Stuart professor of experimental psychology, Princeton, in two volumes, Vol. I, "Facts and Theories;" and Wundt's "Lectures on Human and Animal Psychology," translated from the second and revised German edition (1892) by J. E. Creighton, A.B. (Dalhousie), Ph.D. (Cornell), and E. B. Titchener, A.B. (Oxon.), Ph.D. (Leipzig).

Thomas Whittaker's announcements include a "Handbook of the Bible," by Rev. William Turner; "Eastern Customs in Bible Lands," by H. B. Tristram; "Early Christianity in Britain," by Frederic W. Farrar; "Lay Readers: Their History, Organization, and Work," by Rev. H. B. Restarick; "The Heresy of Cain," by George Hodges, D.D.; "Labour and Sorrow: a Series of Sermons," by Rev. W. J. Knox-Little; "Memory's Tribute: a Group of Character Studies," by Frederick Saunders; "The Children's Pew," by Rev. J. Reid Howatt; "Addresses to Workingmen," by S. Reynolds Hole, Dean of Rochester; "The Heroic in Missions," pioneers in six fields, by Rev. Augustus R. Buckland; "Our Bible: How it Came to Us," by Rev. R. T. Talbot, M.A.; "The Son of Man among the Sons of Men," by Wm. Boyd Carpenter, D.D., Lord Bishop of Ripon; "God is Love, and Other Sermons," by Rev. Aubrey L. Moore; "The Ascent of Faith," the Boyle Lectures for 1892–93, by Rev. Alexander J. Harrison, B.D.; and "From Things to God," sermons by David H. Greer, D.D. Among Mr. Whittaker's new books for the young will be "Blanche," a story for girls, by Mrs. Molesworth; "A Salt Water Hero," by Edward A. Rand; "Stephanie's Children," by the author of "Atelier du Lys;" "The Land of the Golden Plume," by David L. Johnstone; "The Cook and the Captive," by Charlotte M. Yonge; "Their Father's Wrong," by M. Bramston; "The Mavis and the Merlin," by Mary H. Debenham; "Miss Coventry's Maid," by M. and C. Lee; "More Bed-time Tales," by Minnie E. Kenney (Mrs. Geo. A. Paull); "Nature's Gentleman," by Emma Marshall; and "A Matter of Honor, and Other Stories," by Barbara Yechton.

The De Witt Publishing House, R. H. Russell & Son, announce that Mr. Charles Dana Gibson, the well-known artist whose illustrations in the magazines and cartoons in Life are so favorably known, is preparing a book of his drawings, consisting of nearly one hundred of the best things that he has done, to be ready about November 1.

Longmans, Green & Co. will have ready this fall: "Ploughed, and Other Stories," by L. B. Walford; "The Thing That Hath Been; or, A Young Man's Mistake," by Arthur Herman Gilkes; "A History of the Commonwealth and the Protectorate," by Samuel Rawson Gardiner, M.A., LL.D.; Vol. III of the "Memoirs of the Verney Family during the Civil War," compiled by Lady Verney; "Wandering Words," a series of articles contributed chiefly to American magazines and newspapers by Sir Edwin Arnold; "Memorials of St. James's Palace," by the Rev. Edgar Sheppard, M.A.; a new edition, with additions, of Leslie Stephen's "The Playground of Europe;" "Indian Polity: a View of the System of Administration in India," by Lieut. Gen. Sir George Chesney, revised and enlarged; "Studies of Nature on the Coast of Arran," by George Milner; "From Edinburgh to the Antarctic," by W. G. Burn Murdoch; "Clerical Life and Work," by the late Canon Liddon; "St. Paul: His Missions," by the Abbé Fouard, translated by G. F. Griffith, with maps; Vol. III of Canon Liddon's "Life of Edward Bouverie Pusey, D.D.;" "The Oracles Ascribed to Matthew by Papias of Hierapolis: a Contribution to the Criticism of the New Testament, with Appendices on the Authorship of the 'De Vita Contemplativa,' the Date of the Crucifixion, and the Date of the Martyrdom of Polycarp;" "Spiritual Law in the Natural World," by J. W. Thomas, F.I.C., F.C.S.; "Life in Christ," by the Rev. George Body, D.D.; "The Repose of Faith," by the Rev. Alexander J. Harrison, B.D.; "The Truth and Reality of the Eucharistic Sacrifice," by George Rundle Prynne, M.A.; "The Hulsean Lectures for 1894," by the Bishop of Peterborough; "The History of Marriage, Jewish and Christian, in Relation to Divorce and Certain Forbidden Degrees," by the Rev. Herbert Mortimer Luckock; "A Primer of Evolution," by Edward Clodd; "The Unbidden Guest," by E. W. Hornung; "The Teaching of Physical Exercises," by F. J. Harvey; "Documents Illustrating English Economic History," by W. J. Ashley, M.A.; "A Modern Priestess of Isis," by Walter Leaf; "Woman," by Sir Edward Sullivan, Bart.; "The Evolution of Whist," by W. Pole, F.R.S.; "The Virgin Mother: Retreat Addresses on the Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary as Told in the Gospels," by the Bishop of Vermont; "Church History Lectures," by the Rev. C. Ernest Smith; and a series of College Histories of Art, edited by Prof. John C. Van Dyke, which will comprise "A History of Painting," by the editor; "A History of Architecture," by Prof. A. D. F. Hamlin; and "A History of Sculpture," by Profs. Allan Marquand and A. L. Frothingham, Jr.

D. C. Heath & Co's educational list includes: "An Introduction to the Study of English Fiction," by W. E. Simonds; "The Literary Study of the Bible," by R. G. Moulton; "Coleridge's Principles of Poetry," edited by A. J. George; "The Teaching of English in American Colleges and Universities;" "A Brief History of Chemistry," by F. P. Venable; "A Laboratory Course in Experimental Psychology," by Dr. C. E. Sanford; "Stories of Old Greece," by Emma M. Firth; "Dano-Norwegian Grammar," by Prof. P. Groth; "A Guide to International Law," by Dr. Thomas J. Lawrence; and "The Constitution of the United States at the End of the First Century," by George S. Boutwell.

The Cassell Publishing Co. announce: "New Light on the Bible and the Holy Land: being an Account of Some Recent Discoveries in the East," by Basil T. A. Evetts, M.A., illustrated; a new edition of the "Life of Charlotte Brontë," by Mrs. Gaskell; and "The Iron Pirate," a tale of the sea, by Max Pemberton.

Frederick A. Stokes Co. will soon have ready: "Andersen's Fairy Tales," illustrated by Corwin Knapp Linson; "The Infant's Magazine" and "The Children's Friend," two annuals for children; "Christmas Stories," from the German of W. Heimburg, by Mrs. J. W. Davis; "Comic Military Alphabet," by Dewitt C. Falls; "Good Things of Life;" "Hieroglyphic Bibles: Their Origin and History," by W. A. Clouston, with illustrations; "Little Columbia's Gowns and Pleasures," for young children, by Elizabeth S. Tucker; and "A Year of Paper Dolls," by Miss S. E. Tucker.

The Fleming H. Revell Co. announce: "Chinese Characteristics," by Arthur H. Smith; "The Meeting-Place of Geology and History," by Sir J. William Dawson; "Among the Tibetans," by Isabella Bird Bishop; "Before He Is Twenty: Five Perplexing Phases of the Boy Question Considered," by Robert J. Burdette, Frances Hodgson Burnett, Edward W. Bok, Mrs. Burton Harrison, Mrs. Lyman Abbott; "Pictures from Bohemia," by James Baker, illustrated; "Ten Minute Sermons," by W. Robertson Nicoll, D.D.; "Essential Christianity," by the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes; "The Divine Indwelling," by E. Woodward Brown; and "The Sanitary Code of the Pentateuch," by the Rev. C. G. K. Gillespie.

A. C. McClurg & Co. promise: "Reminiscences of a Portrait Painter," by G. P. A. Healy; "Tales from the Ægean," by Demetrios Bikélas, translated by Leonard E. Opdycke, with an introduction by Henry A. Huntington; "Jewish Tales," translated from the French of Leopold von Sacher-Masoch, by Harriet Lieber Cohen; "In Bird Land," by Leander Keyser; "The Price of Peace," a story of the times of Ahab, king of Israel, by A. W. Ackerman; "The Power of an Endless Life," by the Rev. Thomas C. Hall; "A Book of Heavenly Birthdays," by E. V. B., illustrated; and "Polar Gleams," an account of a voyage on the yacht Blencathra, by Helen Peel.

Brentanos announce: "Love Letters of a Violinist," by Eric Mackay, with charcoal drawings by James Fagan; "A Divided Heart, and Other Stories," by Paul Heyse, translated by Constance Stewart Copeland; "The Life of Charlotte Cushman" and "The Life of William Charles Macready," by William T. Price, with portraits (Library of Masks and Faces); "Princesses in Love," by Henri Pène du Bois, with portraits by James Fagan; and "French Folly in Maxims," of art, plays, philosophy, and letters.

The latest bulletin from G. P. Putnam's Sons makes these announcements not included in our lists of fall publications: The Law of Service, a study in Christian altruism, by James P. Kelley; The Writings of Thomas Paine, collected and edited by Moncure Daniel Conway, Vol. II; The Writings of Thomas Jefferson, edited by Paul Leicester Ford, Vols. IV and V; Life and Correspondence of Rufus King, edited by his grandson, Charles R. King, M.D., Volume II; The Winning of the West, by Theodore Roosevelt (Vol. III, the founding of the trans-Alleghany commonwealths, 1784–1790); The Best Recent Books, a priced and classified bibliography covering the publications of the year ending December 31, 1893, being a supplement to The Best Books edited by W. Swan Sonnenschein; Rhythm and Harmony in Poetry and Music, together with Music as a Representative Art, by George L. Raymond; in the Heroes of the Nations series, Cicero, and the Fall of the Roman Republic, by J. L. Strachan-Davidson, M.A.; Prince Henry (the Navigator) of Portugal, and the Age of Discovery in Europe, by C. R. Beazley, M.A.; Abraham Lincoln and the Downfall of American Slavery, by Noah Brooks; and Julian, Philosopher and Emperor, by Alice Gardner, of Newnham College, Cambridge; in the Story of the Nations series, The Story of Venice, by Alethea Weil; The Story of the Crusades, by T. A. Archer and C. L. Kingsford; Napoleon, by Alexandre Dumas; The Life and Genius of Jacopo Robusti, called Tintoretto, by Frank Preston Stearns; and The Southern States of the American Union Considered in their Relations to the Constitution of the United States and to the Resulting Union, by J. L. M. Curry; How Thankful Was Bewitched, a tale of the times of Cotton Mather, by James K. Hosmer; in the Incognito Library, A Husband of No Importance, by Rita, and Helen, by Oswald Valentine; Iola: the Senator's Daughter, a story of ancient Rome, by Mansfield L. Hillhouse; and these volumes of poetry: Verses and Fly-Leaves, by Charles Stuart Calverley; Intimations of the Beautiful, by Madison J. Cawein; The Flute-Player, and Other Poems, by Francis Howard Williams; A Patch of Pansies, by J. Edmund V. Cooke; Vashti, by John Brayshaw Kaye; Songs from the Woods of Maine, by Julia H. May; Chant of a Woodland Spirit, by Robert Burns Wilson; and Windfall and Waterdrift, by the Hon. Auberon Herbert.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—The Rev. Charles G. Ames, who has succeeded the late James Freeman Clarke at the Church of the Disciples, Boston, has written a volume of familiar studies, As Natural as Life, which will be published by James H. West.

—Callaghan & Co. of Chicago are about to publish a series of lectures by Dr. H. von Holst of the University of Chicago. They will be entitled The French Revolution Tested by the Career of Mirabeau, and will be issued in two volumes, with a portrait.

—A memorial of the late Mrs. Celia Thaxter will take the form of a small collection of her letters. Those who are fortunate enough to have in their possession letters from Mrs. Thaxter are kindly requested to send the originals or copies to Mrs. James T. Fields, 148 Charles Street, Boston, Mass., who will take the best of care of them. Only a few can be used in this collection, which is to be a small one, but Mrs. Fields wants to see as many as possible that she may choose those that are best for the purpose.

—A photographic facsimile of the first edition—published in 1496 by Wynkyn de Worde—of the famous Treatise of Fysshinge with an Angle, by Dame Juliana Berners, is promised shortly by Mr. Elliot Stock. The work is interesting as being that of the first English female writer. It will have an introduction by Rev. M. G. Watkins. Three reprints of this work have already been made during the present century—a facsimile one in 1810, one by Baskerville in 1827, and another in 1880.

—Dr. George Macdonald has recently completed the manuscript of a new story, entitled Lilith, which is written somewhat in the style of his Phantastes.

—Mr. W. J. Linton will publish through the Scribners his reminiscences, Threescore Years and Ten (1820–1890).

—Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. publish this day Danvis Folks, by Rowland E. Robinson; Bishop Andrewes, by Rev. R. L. Ottley; Childhood in Literature and Art, with Some Observations on Literature for Children, a study by Horace E. Scudder; In Sunshine Land, by Edith M. Thomas; From Blomidon to Smoky, and Other Papers, by Frank Bolles; and in the Gentleman's Magazine Library, Vol. 16, Ecclesiology, edited by F. A. Milne, M.A.

—A biography of John Addington Symonds, by Mr. Horatio F. Brown, Mr. Symonds' literary legatee and executor, will be published in the course of the present month by Mr. John C. Nimmo. The work will be in two volumes and will be illustrated. Mr. Nimmo will also issue Giovanni Boccaccio, by Mr. Symonds.

—The appearance of Macaulay's Diary, which was looked forward to as one of the notable literary events of the autumn, must be considerably delayed, owing to the unexpected difficulties of editing.

— Prof. Heinrich Karl Brugsch, the distinguished linguist and Egyptologist, died in Berlin on September 10, aged sixty-seven, having been born in Berlin February 18, 1827. He had spent most of his time since 1853 in Egypt. In 1868 he received the title of Bey, and as Brugsch-Bey, through English translations of two of his books — History of Egypt under the Pharaohs and True Story of the Exodus of Israel — he became known to American readers. Some time ago Tewfik raised Brugsch to the rank of Pasha. He wrote in French the greater part of his valuable works on Egypt.

— Messrs. D. Appleton & Co., New York, announce that Dr. Mombert, the well-known author of Charles the Great, who for a number of years was American chaplain at Dresden, intends to issue this autumn Raphael's Sistine Madonna, a critical and interpretative study, embellished with photogravures made after the original at Dresden, and the related paintings in the Barberini, Pitti, and Bologna Galleries, for the first time printed together, in a quarto édition de luxe, containing, besides the said photogravures expressly prepared for this work by the best European artists, about sixty pages of letterpress, covering the whole subject. The work is designed to fill a vacant niche in the history of art.

— Louis Phillippe Albert d'Orleans, Comte de Paris, the eldest grandson and heir of King Louis Phillippe of France, died at Stowe House, Buckinghamshire, England, on September 8, aged fifty-six years. He served for a year — 1861–1862 — on McClellan's staff, and afterward wrote a history not only of his own experience therein, but of the whole Civil War, which has become a standard work not only in French, in which it was written, but also in English, into which it was translated. The count also busied himself with philosophic observations of political and social affairs, writing numerous articles for the Revue des Deux Mondes on the cotton distress in Lancashire, trade unionism in England, the disestablishment of the Irish Church, the liberal movement in Germany, and other like topics. His writings on trade unionism were published in book form.

— M. Stéphane Mallarmé, the French poet, suggests that the publishers of books on which the copyright has expired should be compelled to pay a small royalty into a fund for the benefit of needy living authors.

— Prof. Hermann Ludwig Ferdinand von Helmholtz, the distinguished German physiologist and natural philosopher, died in Berlin on September 8, aged seventy-three years. Helmholtz was born in Potsdam, and was professor of anatomy first in the Academy of Fine Arts in Berlin, then professor of physiology in Königsberg, Heidelberg, and subsequently in Berlin, where he resided until his death. His works refer principally to the physiological conditions of the impressions of the senses. Among the best known of these are On the Conservation of Forces, 1874; Manual of Physiological Optics, 1856; and Theory of the Impressions of Sound, 1862.

— Mr. Rudyard Kipling sailed with his family from Southampton on the 5th of August. He is now settled down for the winter in his Brattleboro home, and is busy revising the new volume of poems which Messrs. Methuen & Co. are to publish in the early spring of next year.

— Prof. W. M. Ramsay of Aberdeen, the author of The Church in the Roman Empire, A.D. 64–170, with Chapters of Later Christian History in Asia Minor (Putnam), has lately reached New York from Glasgow. He will remain in this country for six or eight weeks to deliver a series of lectures on "The Life and Work of St. Paul" and on "St. Paul as a Traveler" before the Union Theological Seminary, the Theological School of Auburn, N. Y., the Theological School of Harvard University, and other institutions. Professor Ramsay has just completed a History of Asia Minor from the Earliest Times to the Mohammedan Conquest, which will be published in the course of 1895 by the Clarendon Press.

— Madame Sarah Grand has written a new story called The Undefinable.

— The Bodleian Library's collection of manuscripts has been enriched by a valuable collection of Shelley papers, including the poet's journal book and the letters written by him and his second wife. Shelley's daughter-in-law, who gives these manuscripts, stipulates that they shall neither be opened nor copied for a period of twenty years.

— The Rev. Stopford Brooke has just issued, through Mr. Philip Green of Essex Street, Strand, London, a new volume of sermons, entitled God and Christ. Mr. Brooke's coming to this country has been delayed because of illness, but he is now expected in November.

— Mr. T. B. Aldrich has planned a voyage to Japan and India to gather materials for a book of travel sketches similar to From Ponkapog to Pesth. Mrs. Aldrich and two friends are to be of the party, and the date of sailing from Vancouver is about October 15. The travelers will probably return to the United States by way of England.

— M. Daudet's new novel, upon which he is at work, will be called Le Soutien de Famille, and will deal with the Russians living in Paris. The serial publication is announced of La Petite Paroisse, a novel which Daudet has just completed.

— The Life and Letters of Dean Stanley will be published immediately in a new and cheaper edition by the Scribners.

— Brave Little Holland, published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. in April of this year, has reached a second edition, after revision by the author.

— To the Gibbon Commemoration Committee have been added the names of some of the most distinguished historical scholars as delegates from the English, Scotch, and Irish universities, and from France, Germany, Italy, Holland, and Switzerland. A small literary committee has been nominated to arrange the details of the proposed exhibition of MSS., portraits, and relics, with Mr. Frederic Harrison as chairman, together with the president of the Commemoration (when elected), Lord Acton, Mr. Maunde Thompson, Mr. Hubert Hall, and Mr. P. Edward Dove. The Gibbon MSS. at Sheffield Park have been examined, and prove to contain a good deal of unpublished matter of interest.

— As the result of a circular letter addressed to the authors, Mr. Elkin Mathews will continue to publish the books in the catalogue of the Bodley Head firm by Mr. Frederick Wedmore, the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, Michael Field, Miss E. R. Chapman, Dr. Todhunter, the late Mr. J. A. Symonds, Mrs. De Gruchy, Mr. F. W. Bourdillon, and Mr. L. Binyon; Mr. John Lane being in future the publisher of those by Mr. Grant Allen, Mr. John Davidson, Lord De Tabley, George Egerton, Mr. Norman Gale, Dr. Garnett, Mr. Edmund Gosse, Mr. Kenneth Grahame, Mr. G. A. Greene, Dr. Gordon Hake, Mr. W. P. James, Mr. Le Gallienne, Mrs. Meynell, Mr. Allan Monkhouse, Mr. J. T. Nettleship, Mr. J. A. Noble, Mr. Ernest Rhys, Mr. G. S. Street, Mr. Francis Thompson, and Mr. William Watson, as well as of the Yellow Book and the Keynotes series.

— Maurus Jókai, the veteran Hungarian whose literary jubilee was celebrated at the beginning of the year, is lying in a serious condition, the result of an attempt to commit suicide during a fit of melancholia. Overwork is supposed to be the reason, and the ceaseless production of works historical, dramatic, and poetic, to say nothing of a list of over a hundred substantial books of fiction which has earned him the title of the "Hungarian Scott," may well have taxed even an intellect of Jókai's capacity and strength. —Literary World, London.

— Casa Braccio is the title of Mr. F. Marion Crawford's new novel, which the Century will publish during the coming year. The scene is laid in Italy about 1844. Three women of successive generations of the house of Braccio are the chief characters.

— Mr. George Meredith's late novel, Lord Ormont and His Aminta, has scored an instantaneous success with the Scribners. Although published but a few weeks it is already in its fifth thousand.

— Rev. Henry E. Dosker, D.D., of Holland, Michigan, has written a monograph on John of Barneveldt — Martyr or Traitor? It is the result of several years study in the archives and literature of Holland.

— Prof. Edward Warren Clark, author of From Hong-Kong to the Himalayas and Life and Adventure in Japan, started from San Francisco September 25 for his second trip round the world and to revisit the scenes of his former sojourn and travels in the Sunrise Land.

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. published September 22, The Life of Frances Power Cobbe, by herself, with a portrait and a picture of her home; Familiar Letters of Henry David Thoreau, edited, with an introduction and notes, by Frank B. Sanborn; The Pearl of India, by M. M. Ballou; Sweet Clover: a Romance of the White City, by Clara Louise Burnham; and Cœur d'Alene, by Mary Hallock Foote.

— The next volume in Mr. John Murray's series of University Extension Manuals, to be published immediately, will be the English Novel, from its Origin to Sir Walter Scott, by Prof. Raleigh of University College, Liverpool.

— Mr. George Moore's next novel is to appear first in serial form in the Idler. The story will, no doubt, be securely copyrighted in America. Esther Waters was not, which is a misfortune for Mr. Moore, as it has had a sale of many thousand copies in this country.

— The Scribners have in preparation an edition of the novels of Henry Kingsley, whom some critics (notably Mr. James Payn) think a better story-teller than his more famous brother Charles. Ravenshoe will be the first volume of the series; it will be followed in quick succession by Austin Elliot and Geoffrey Hamlyn.

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. published September 29, The Last Leaf, by Oliver Wendell Holmes, new holiday edition, illustrated from designs by F. Hopkinson Smith and George Wharton Edwards; The Chase of Saint Castin, and Other Tales, by Mary Hartwell Catherwood; Narragansett Ballads, with Songs and Lyrics, by Caroline Hazard; A Florida Sketch-Book, by Bradford Torrey; Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan, by Lafcadio Hearn; Studies in Folk-Song and Popular Poetry, by Alfred M. Williams; and Following the Greek Cross: Memories of the Sixth Army Corps, by General Thomas W. Hyde of the Army of the Potomac.

— A book likely to attract attention in the art world is announced by Messrs. George Bell & Sons, under the title of Raphael Madonnas, and Other Great Pictures. The illustrations are all to be reproduced from the original paintings, while the letterpress will consist of a life of the great artist and an account of his principal pictures by Karl Károly, and a Raphael index.

— Mrs. Katharine Tynan Hinkson is preparing a collection of Miracle Plays for early publication. About a dozen plays will be included, two or three of which are already familiar to magazine readers.

— A volume is shortly to be issued by Messrs. Ward, Lock & Bowden, to which somewhat unusual interest attaches. It consists of stories by Mr. George Meredith, which, though issued some years ago in the New Quarterly Magazine, have curiously enough never since been collected in volume form, and concerning which Mr. Barrie wrote a very interesting paper, "The Lost Stories of Mr. George Meredith." The volume will consist of three novelettes — "The Tale of Chloe" (which will give the book its title), "The House on the Beach," and "The Case of General Ople and Lady Camper" — and will be uniform with Mr. Meredith's Tragic Comedians.

— Mr. H. Morse Stephens, M.A. (Oxon), at present lecturer on Indian history at Cambridge University and staff lecturer on history to the Oxford University Extension Delegacy, has just been appointed to the chair of modern European history in Cornell University made vacant by the death of Prof. Herbert Tuttle. Mr. Stephens has written a number of historical works, among them an unfinished History of the French Revolution.

— The third volume of Mr. James Ford Rhodes' History of the United States after 1850 is now getting into print, and will be published by the Harpers in the course of the winter. The interval between this and the succeeding volume will be partly spent by the author in procuring much-needed physical rest abroad.

— It has transpired that Maupassant had actually finished L'Angelus, the novel on which he was engaged when insanity struck him. The manuscript of what he himself declared would be his masterpiece was forgotten during the sad excitement of his removal to an asylum, and when his relatives remembered its existence, weeks afterward, the middle chapters were found to be missing. The book will be published in its incomplete form.

— The death is announced of Mr. William Richard Le Fanu, brother of the novelist and author of a volume of Recollections, published by Macmillan & Co., which recently attracted much attention. Mr. Le Fanu, who was eighty years of age, was a commissioner of works in Ireland.

— The present Lord Tennyson has thus far published nothing but a version in hexameters of the story of Jack and the Bean-stalk. He is supposed to be very poetical, however, by his rustic neighbors, and some time ago an agricultural laborer pointed him out to a visitor, observing, "He carries on the business now."

— Mr. Henry C. Lea has completed his work on Confession and Absolution, and as the revision of it is well under way it cannot be long in going to the printer.

— It is understood that the Emperor William is the inspiration of the opposition to the Heine monument, which it is proposed to erect at Mayence. The opposition is based on three facts: First, Heine was a Jew; secondly, he hated Germany; and thirdly, he loved France.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the LITERARY WORLD are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biography.

FAMOUS LEADERS AMONG MEN. By Sarah Knowles Bolton. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50

GREAT COMMANDERS. GENERAL LEE. By Fitzhugh Lee. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

LIVES OF TWELVE BAD MEN. Original Studies of Eminent Scoundrels by Various Hands. Edited by Thomas Seccombe. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.50

MEMOIRS OF CHANCELLOR PASQUIER. Vol. III, 1814-1815. Edited by Charles E. Roche. Chas. Scribner's Sons. $2.50

THE DAYS OF PRINCE MAURICE. By Mary O. Nutting. Cong. S. S. and Pub. Society.

THE SHERMAN LETTERS. Correspondence between General and Senator Sherman from 1837 to 1891. Edited by Rachel Sherman Thorndike. With portraits. Chas. Scribner's Sons. $3.00

CICERO AND THE FALL OF THE ROMAN REPUBLIC. By J. L. Strachan-Davidson. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

FAMILIAR LETTERS OF HENRY DAVID THOREAU. Edited by F. B. Sanborn. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50

Economics and Politics.

CO-OPERATIVE PRODUCTION. By Benjamin Jones. With prefatory note by the Rt. Hon. A. H. Dyke Acland, M. P. Macmillan & Co. $2.50

Educational.

SCHOOL ENGLISH. By George P. Butler. American Book Co. 75c.

ELEMENTS OF ALGEBRA. For Grammar Schools and Beginners. By Wm. J. Milne. American Book Co. 60c.

AN EXERCISE BOOK IN ALGEBRA. By Matthew S. McCurdy, M.A. Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. 60c.

ENGLISH GRAMMAR FOR COMMON SCHOOLS. By Robert C. and Thomas Metcalf. American Book Co. 60c.

MAYNARD'S FRENCH TEXTS, No. 2. MELE-TOI DE TON MÉTIER. Maynard, Merrill & Co. 20c.

MAYNARD'S GERMAN TEXTS, No. 2. FRITZ AUF DEM LANDE. Maynard, Merrill & Co. 25c.

REGENTS' BULLETINS. No. 27, EXTENSION TEACHING; No. 28, 32ND UNIVERSITY CONVOCATION; No. 29, SUMMER SCHOOLS. University of the State of New York.

THE RHETORIC TABLET. Ginn & Co. 22c.

AN ELEMENTARY MANUAL OF CHEMISTRY. By F. H. Storer and W. B. Lindsay. American Book Co. $1.20

PHYSICAL LABORATORY MANUAL. By H. N. Chute, M.S. D. C. Heath & Co. 80c.

CHRONOLOGICAL OUTLINES OF AMERICAN LITERATURE. By Selden L. Whitcomb, A.M. Macmillan & Co. $1.25 net.

PRIMER OF PSYCHOLOGY. By George Trumbull Ladd. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00

GILDERSLEEVE'S LATIN GRAMMAR. Third edition, revised and enlarged. University Pub. Co. $1.20

Essays and Sketches.

PEAK AND PRAIRIE. From a Colorado Sketck-Book. By Anna Fuller. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

CAVALRY LIFE IN TENT AND FIELD. By Mrs. Orsemus Bronson Boyd. J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $1.00

FROM CHAUCER TO TENNYSON. With twenty-nine portraits. By Henry A. Beers. Flood & Vincent. $1.00

WALKS AND TALKS IN THE GEOLOGICAL FIELDS. By Alexander Winchell, LL.D. Flood & Vincent. $1.00

RENAISSANCE AND MODERN ART. Illustrated. By Wm. H. Goodyear, M.A. Flood & Vincent. $1.00

IN DISTANCE AND IN DREAM. By M. F. Sweetser. Joseph Knight Co. 50c.

CHILD-LIFE IN ART. By Estelle M. Hurll, M.A. Illustrated. Joseph Knight Co. $2.00

DIARY OF ANNA GREEN WINSLOW, A BOSTON SCHOOL GIRL OF 1771. Edited by Alice Morse Earle. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

ABANDONING AN ADOPTED FARM. By Kate Sanborn. D. Appleton & Co.

Fiction.

THE MEDICINE LADY. By L. T. Meade. Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

A STORY FROM PULLMANTOWN. By Nico Bech-Meyer. Illustrated. Charles H. Kerr & Co. 25c.

THE GREAT KEINPLATZ EXPERIMENT. By A. Conan Doyle. Rand, McNally & Co. 35c.

A SAINT. By Paul Bourget. Trans. by Katharine P. Wormeley. Illustrated. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

FANNY'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY. A Story of Home Missionary Life on the Frontier. By Mrs. M. E. Drake. Cong. S. S. and Pub. Society.

A BAD LOT. A Novel. By Mrs. Lovett Cameron. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

MATTHEW AUSTIN. By W. E. Norris. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

WHEN LONDON BURNED. A Story of the Great Fire. By G. A. Henty. Chas. Scribner's Sons. $1.50

THE COOK AND THE CAPTIVE; or, Attalus the Hostage. By Charlotte M. Yonge. Thos. Whittaker. $1.25

A VICTIM OF GOOD LUCK. A Novel. By W. E. Norris. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

THE TRAIL OF THE SWORD. A Novel. By Gilbert Parker. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

A HUSBAND OF NO IMPORTANCE. By Rita. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

THE UNTEMPERED WIND. By Joanna E. Wood. J. Selwin Tait & Sons. 50c.

THE BLUE AND THE GRAY ON LAND. BROTHER AGAINST BROTHER. By Oliver Optic. Lee & Shepard. $1.50

THE CHASE OF SAINT-CASTIN, AND OTHER STORIES. By Mary Hartwell Catherwood. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

DAY-DREAMS AND NIGHT-MARES. By Fred Grant Young. Hermitage Publishing Co. 50c.

THE SHADOW OF THE GUILLOTINE. By Sylvanus Cobb, Jr. Illustrated. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

LESSER'S DAUGHTER. By Mrs. Andrew Dean. [Incognito Library.] G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

THE WIVES OF THE PROPHET. A Novel. By Opie Read. Laird & Lee. $1.00

BEFORE THE GRINGO CAME. By Gertrude Atherton. J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $1.00

TWO OF A TRADE. By Martha McCullough Williams. J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $1.00

ON CLOUD MOUNTAIN. By Frederick Thickstun Clark. Harper & Brothers. $1.00

HIGHLAND COUSINS. By William Black. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $1.75

VIGNETTES OF MANHATTAN. By Brander Matthews. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $1.50

MY LADY ROTHA. A Romance. By Stanley J. Weyman. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.25

WITH THE HELP OF THE ANGELS. By Wilfrid Woollam. Harper & Brothers. 50c.

WAVERLEY NOVELS. Dryburgh edition. Vol. XXIV. COUNT ROBERT OF PARIS. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

THE FLYING HALCYON. By Richard Henry Savage. F. Tennyson Neely. 50c.

UNDER THE GREAT SEAL. By Joseph Hatton. The Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

MISS HURD: AN ENIGMA. By Anna Katharine Green. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

THE ABBÉ DANIEL. From the French of André Theuriet, by Helen B. Dole. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.00

EUNICE; or, As Ye Would. By Clara Elizabeth Ward. American Baptist Pub. Society. $1.25

A MONK OF THE AVENTINE. By Ernst Eckstein. Trans. by Helen Hunt Jackson. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

SWEET CLOVER. A Romance of the White City. By Clara Louise Burnham. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

CŒUR D'ALENE. By Mary Hallock Foote. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

QUITS. A Novel. By the Baroness Tautphœus. Two vols. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50

AN ALTAR OF EARTH. By Thymol Monk. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

THE ARTIFICIAL MOTHER. A Marital Fantasy. By G. H. P. Illustrated. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.

WAVERLEY NOVELS. Dryburgh edition. Vol. XXV. THE SURGEON'S DAUGHTER and CASTLE DANGEROUS. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

RAVENSHOE. By Henry Kingsley. In two volumes. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00

IN THE HEART OF THE ROCKIES. A Story of Adventure in Colorado. By G. A. Henty. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

WULF THE SAXON. A Story of the Norman Conquest. By G. A. Henty. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1 50

THE OLD, OLD STORY. A Novel. By Rosa Nouchette Carey. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

History.

Venice. By Alethea Weil. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

History for Ready Reference; from the Best Historians, Biographers, and Specialists. By J. N. Larned. In five volumes. Vols. I and II. A to Grea. Springfield: The C. A. Nichols Co. Each, $5.00

Social England. Edited by H. D. Traill, D.C.L. Vol. II. Edward I to Henry VII. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.50

History, Prophecy, and the Monuments. By James Frederick McCurdy, Ph.D., LL.D. Vol. I. To the Downfall of Samaria. Macmillan & Co. $3.00 net.

Europe in the Nineteenth Century. By Harry Pratt Judson, LL.D. Flood & Vincent. $1.00

The Growth of the English Nation. By Katharine Coman and Elizabeth Kendall. Flood & Vincent. $1.00

A History of Rome to the Battle of Actium. By Evelyn Shirley Shuckburgh, M.A. Macmillan & Co. $1.75

The Making of the Ohio Valley States, 1660–1837. By Samuel Adams Drake. With illustrations and maps. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

Juvenile.

The Little Lady of the Horse. By Evelyn Raymond. Roberts Brothers. $1.50

Jolly Good Times To-Day. By Mary P. Wells Smith. Roberts Brothers. $1.25

Little Miss Faith. By Grace LeBaron. Illustrated. Lee & Shepard. 75c.

Sunday. 1895. Reading for the Young. E. & J. B. Young & Co. $1.25

Two Knights-Errant, and Other Stories and A Matter of Honor, and Other Stories. By Barbara Yechton. Illustrated. Thomas Whittaker. Each, 60c.

Philosophy.

From the Greeks to Darwin. An Outline of the Development of the Evolution Idea. By Henry Fairfield Osborn, Sc.D. Macmillan & Co. $2.00 net.

Poetry, Music, and the Drama.

Sorrow and Song. By Coulson Kernahan. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25

Poems, New and Old. By William Roscoe Thayer. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

A Song of Companies, and Other Poems. By Orrin Cedesman Stevens. Holyoke: H. C. Cady Co.

Molière. Trans. by Katharine Prescott Wormeley. Vols. I and II. Roberts Brothers. Each, $1.50

The Temple Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice. — A Midsummer Night's Dream. Macmillan & Co. Each, 45c.

Plays by Robert Bridges. Nero. Part II. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

Roses and Thistles. By Rufus C. Hopkins. San Francisco: William Doxey. $2.25

The Ariel Shakespeare. Last twelve volumes, completing the set of forty volumes. G. P. Putnam's Sons. Cloth, per vol., 40c.; leather, 75c.

Vashti. A Poem in Seven Books. By John Brayshawe Kaye. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25

Intimations of the Beautiful, and Poems. By Madison Cawein. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

Narragansett Ballads, with Songs and Lyrics. By Caroline Hazard. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

Studies in Folk-Song and Popular Poetry. By Alfred M. Williams. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50

Good-Night, Schatz. In one Act. By Adolf Hepner. St. Louis News Co. 25c.

Songs from Vagabondia. By Bliss Carman and Richard Hovey. Copeland & Day. $1.00

Religion and Theology.

Lamps of the Temple. Compiled by Thomas W. Handford. Laird & Lee. 50c.

The Building of Character. By J. R. Miller, D.D. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.00

Eastern Customs in Bible Lands. By H. B. Tristram, LL.D. Thomas Whittaker. $1.50

Dogmatic Theology. By William G. T. Shedd, D.D. Vol. III. Supplement. Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.00

The Annihilation of the Wicked. By Rev. J. D. Pope. American Baptist Pub. Society.

Christianity in the Home. By Theodore L. Cuyler, D.D. Baker & Taylor Co.

A Broader Christianity. By Philo Hall. New York: Lovell Brothers & Co.

Historical Sketch of the Central Congregational Church of Philadelphia. By John Edmands.

The New Acts of the Apostles; or, the Marvels of Modern Missions. By Arthur T. Pierson. Baker & Taylor Co. $1.50

History of the Christian Church. By Henry C. Sheldon, professor in the Boston University. Five volumes, in box. T. Y. Crowell & Co.

The Johannine Theology. By George B. Stevens, Ph.D., D.D. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00

The Belief and Worship of the Anglican Church. By Archibald Campbell Knowles. George W. Jacobs & Co. 50c. net.

Scientific and Technical.

Race and Language. By André Lefèvre. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

The Senile Heart. Its Symptoms and Treatment. By Geo. W. Balfour, M.D. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

Travel and Observation.

Around the World on a Bicycle. By Thomas Stevens. Two vols. Illustrated. Charles Scribner's Sons. $5.00

Six Months in the Sandwich Islands. By Isabella Bird Bishop. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.25

John Bull & Co. The Great Colonial Branches of the Firm. By Max O'Rell. C. L. Webster & Co. $1.50

The Pearl of India. By Maturin M. Ballou. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50

Travels Amongst the Great Andes of the Equator. By Edward Whymper. Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.00

Three Years of Arctic Service. An Account of the Lady Franklin Bay Expedition of 1881–84. By Adolphus W. Greely. Charles Scribner's Sons. $5.00

A Corner of Cathay. Studies from Life among the Chinese. By Adele M. Fielde. Macmillan & Co. $3.00

Czar and Sultan. The Adventures of a British Lad in the Russo-Turkish War of 1877–78. By Archibald Forbes. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00

Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan. By Lafcadio Hearn. Two volumes. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $4.00

Miscellaneous.

Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research. Part XXVI. London: Kegan, Paul, Trench & Co. 7s.

Lenox Library. Twenty-Fourth Annual Report of the Trustees, for 1893.

Costume of Colonial Times. By Alice Morse Earle. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25

The Chafing-Dish Supper. By Christine Terhune Herrick. Charles Scribner's Sons. 75c.

How to Write Fiction: Especially the Art of Short Story Writing. A Practical Course of Instruction, after the French Method of Maupassant. Charles T. Dillingham & Co. $10.00

Annals of Horticulture in North America for the Year 1893. By L. H. Bailey. Orange Judd Co. $1.00

Third Supplement to the Catalogue of the Public Library of the City of Taunton, Mass.

A New and Complete Concordance or Verbal Index to Words, Phrases, and Passages in the Dramatic Works of Shakespeare. By John Bartlett, A.M. Macmillan & Co. $14.00 net.

The Book of the Fair. By Hubert Howe Bancroft. Parts VII and VIII. The Bancroft Co. Each, $1.00

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - - $16,014,000.00
Liabilities, - $13,808,000.00
Surplus, - - $2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

The Life of Frances Power Cobbe.
By Herself. An autobiography of extraordinary interest of one of the foremost Englishwomen of this century. With a Portrait and a Picture of her Home. 2 vols., crown 8vo, gilt top, $4.00.

Familiar Letters of Thoreau.
Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by Frank B. Sanborn. Uniform with Riverside Edition of Thoreau's Works. With a full Index. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1.50.

The Pearl of India.
An informing and very readable book about Ceylon, by M. M. Ballou, author of "Due East," "Due West," "Due North," "Due South," "Under the Southern Cross," "Equatorial America," "The New Eldorado," "Aztec Land," "The Story of Malta," etc. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

From Blomidon to Smoky, and Other Papers.
A book of exquisite observation in the Provinces and elsewhere. By Frank Bolles, author of "Land of the Lingering Snow," and "At the North of Bearcamp Water." 16mo, $1.25.

Danvis Folks.
A very readable story of Vermont life and customs, including stories of hunting, fishing, and "bees," with no little humor. By Rowland E. Robinson, author of "Vermont," in the American Commonwealth Series. 16mo, $1.25.

Childhood in Literature and Art.
With some Observations on Literature for Children. A book of high critical character and interest, studying the meaning of the appearance and disappearance of childhood as a subject for story, poetry, and art. By Horace E. Scudder, author of "Men and Letters," etc. Crown 8vo, $1.25.

In Sunshine Land.
Poems for Young Folks. By Edith M. Thomas, author of "Lyrics and Sonnets," etc. Illustrated by Katharine Pyle. Crown 8vo, handsomely bound, $1.50. A choice holiday book.

The Chase of St. Castin, and Other Tales.
A volume of very dramatic Short Stories, mostly based on historical incidents, by Mrs. Catherwood, author of "The Lady of Fort St. John," "Old Kaskaskia," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan.
A work of great interest on the less-known portions and customs of Japan, by Lafcadio Hearn, author of "Stray Leaves from Strange Literature," etc. 2 vols., 8vo, gilt top, $4.00.

A Florida Sketch-Book.
A charming out-door book on things observed in Florida, by Bradford Torrey, author of "Birds in the Bush," "A Rambler's Lease," and "The Foot-Path Way. 16mo, $1.25.

Studies in Folk-Song and Popular Poetry.
A book of essays and popular poems, which will strongly appeal to those who are interested in the fresh literature of primitive thought and feeling, by Alfred M. Williams, author of "The Poets and Poetry of Ireland," "Sam Houston and the War of Independence in Texas," etc. 12mo, gilt top, $1.50.

Narragansett Ballads, with Songs and Lyrics.
A tasteful book of thoughtful, refined, lyrical poems, by Caroline Hazard, author of "College Tom," etc. 16mo, gilt top, $1.00.

Sold by all Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by
HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

Fragility sometimes blossoms in the strangest places! The daintiest of book-making has commonly come from centers like Paris, London or New York; but from the town of Portland, Me., there have recently been issued, under the title of "The Bibelot Series," some little paper-covered volumes of poetry which are as luxurious and artistic as anything that hails from France or England. Mr. T. B. Mosher is the publisher of these bits of clever workmanship.—New York Tribune, Dec. 31, 1893.

FALL ANNOUNCEMENT.

THOMAS B. MOSHER,

PORTLAND, MAINE.

THE BIBELOT SERIES.

The BIBELOT SERIES is modeled on an old style format, narrow 8vo, and beautifully printed in italic on Van Gelder's hand-made paper, uncut edges; done up in flexible Japan vellum, with outside wrappers and dainty gold seals. Each issue has besides an original cover design and is strictly limited to 725 copies.

PRICE PER VOLUME, $1.00 NET.

Two New Volumes in Press:

III. Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam

Rendered into English verse by EDWARD FITZGERALD, with a List of Editions and Versions in English.

IV. Felise.

A book of Lyrics chosen from the earlier poetical works of ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.

The Previous Issues are:

I. Songs of Adieu.

A little book of Finalé and Farewell, chosen from recent English lyrics not generally known.

II. Old World Lyrics.

A little book of Translations from VILLON, DU BELLAY, RONSARD and later French poets.

THE ENGLISH REPRINT SERIES.

THE EDITION IS AS FOLLOWS:

400 Small Paper copies on Van Gelder's Hand-made Paper done up in Japan vellum wrappers, uncut edges, numbered 1 to 400.

40 Large Paper copies (Post 4to), uncut edges, numbered 1 to 40.

10 Large Paper copies on Japan vellum, numbered 1 to 10, signed by publisher.

No more copies will be printed.

The New Volume in Press:

III. Robert Bridges.

THE GROWTH OF LOVE, WITH A BRIEF AND GENERAL CONSIDERATION BY LIONEL JOHNSON.

Small Paper, $1.50 net; Large Paper, $5.00 net; Japan Vellum, $10.00 net.

Previous Issues:

I. George Meredith.

MODERN LOVE, WITH FOREWORD BY E. CAVAZZA.

Small Paper, $2.50 net; Large Paper, $7.50 net; Japan vellum all sold.

II. James Thomson.

THE CITY OF DREADFUL NIGHT, WITH INTRODUCTION BY E. CAVAZZA.

Small Paper, $2.00 net; Large Paper, $7.50 net; Japan Vellum, $12.50 net.

Bookbuyers are requested to send for my New List of Limited Editions, a choice little specimen of typework and paper.

THOMAS B. MOSHER, 37 Exchange St., Portland, Me.

The Round Robin Reading Club.

DESIGNED FOR THE PROMOTION OF SYSTEMATIC STUDY OF LITERATURE.

The object of this organization is to direct the reading of individuals and small classes through correspondence conducted by competent specialists, who will furnish lists of books, criticise papers, and personally assist each member. Having no limits imposed by a given system, the Club is free to meet the needs of those who desire to read for special purposes, for general improvement, or pleasure, and to supplement University Extension Work. For particulars address

Miss LOUISE STOCKTON,
4213 Chester Avenue, Philadelphia.

FRANK T. SABIN'S CATALOGUE of FINE and RARE BOOKS, ENGRAVINGS, AUTOGRAPHS, etc. (52 pp.), is NOW READY, and will be sent on application.

118 SHAFTESBURY AVE., LONDON, W.

NEW BOOKS.

 Mailed prepaid on receipt of price.

THE RELIGION OF THE FUTURE. By the Rev. DAVID J. BURRELL, D. D. 304 pp. 12mo. $1.25.

"Full of vitality, spirituality, evangelical truth and common sense."

PATHS AND BY-PATHS. By Mrs. M. A. PICKFORD. 352 pp. 12mo. 5 illustrations. $1.25.

"A useful story, designed to show the right way to settle many social questions which trouble tender consciences."—New York Observer.

WON BY LOVE. By Mrs. S. S. WOOD. 12mo. 252 pp. 4 illustrations. $1.00.

"A well-told story. The family of a sick mother is vividly presented, and the struggle of some of her children to supply her place evokes the sympathy of the reader."—Religious Herald.

COSEY CORNER STORIES. By A. L. NOBLE and E. A. HUNTER. 4to. Colored covers. 12 full-page cuts in each. 4 vols. in a box, $1.00; separately, 25 cents.

Fido and His Friends. Favorite Pets.
Between-Times Stories. Fireside Stories.

Capital books to read to children or for the children themselves to read. Large type and fine paper.

RACHEL'S FARM. By Miss A. L. NOBLE. 223 pp. 12mo. 4 illustrations. $1.00.

"An attractive, elevating and helpful story. The outcome is delightful, and the lesson one of courage, faithfulness and hope."—Zion's Herald.

THE STARRY SKIES. By AGNES GIBERNE. Profusely illustrated. 234 pp. 12mo. $1.00.

"A well-written book, containing much information concerning the solar world which sets the readers to thinking and instructs while it amuses them."—The Interior.

BOOKS FOR EVERYBODY. Ten capital stories, illustrated. Manilla covers. 4 cents. Specially adapted for distribution in the homes of working men. Send a two-cent stamp for sample.

THE FAMILY CHRISTIAN ALMANAC for 1895. 10 cents. A welcome annual visitor in many homes for half a century.

ASSYRIAN ECHOES OF THE WORLD. By THOMAS LAURIE, D. D. 380 pp. 8vo. $2.00.

"Every student of the Bible and every teacher of a Bible class will find this book a most interesting and helpful one."—Christian Work.

CRUMBS OF COMFORT. By Mrs. F. A. NOBLE. Square 24mo. Dainty cloth, gilt, 40 cents.

"This is a sweet little book that will bring comfort to many a sorrowing heart."—Central Baptist.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY,

10 EAST 23d STREET, NEW YORK.

Boston, 54 Bromfield St.
Rochester, 93 State St.
Cincinnati, 176 Elm St.
Philadelphia, 1512 Chestnut St.
Chicago, 211, 213 Wabash Ave.
San Francisco, 735 Market St.

There is but one Meisterschaft System

FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH, ITALIAN, Actually Spoken and Mastered in Ten Weeks, without leaving your homes, by the Meisterschaft System. 550th Thousand. Pupils taught as if in the presence of the teacher. Terms for membership, $5.00 for each language. All questions answered and exercises corrected free of charge. Specimen copy of Part One, any language, sent free on receipt of 2 cent postage stamp.

Meisterschaft Publishing Co.

No. 196 Summer Street,
Boston, Mass.

IF YOU ARE GOING
WEST
TAKE THE RELIABLE
Hoosac Tunnel Route.
ELEGANT SLEEPING CARS
Boston to Chicago and Boston to St. Louis
WITHOUT CHANGE.

For time tables, rates of fare, etc., apply at 250 Washington St., Boston.
J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

NEW PUBLICATIONS OF THE

Presbyterian Board of Publication and Sabbath-School Work.

The Pilgrim's Progress.

By JOHN BUNYAN. With the author's marginal notes 12mo, cloth, 341 pages, 75 cents.

The Holy War.

By JOHN BUNYAN. With the author's original notes. 12mo, cloth, 312 pages, 75 cents.

"The Holy War" is not so well known as Bunyan's greater work. Yet Lord Macaulay has told us that were there no "Pilgrim's Progress," "The Holy War" would be the best allegory that ever was written.

Bunyan Characters.

Lectures delivered in St. George's Free Church, Edinburgh. By ALEXANDER WHYTE, D. D.

First Series. 1 vol., 12mo, $1.00. A study of the leading characters which Bunyan gives us in his books.

Second Series. 1 vol., uniform with above, $1.00.

Wedded Life.

By J. R. MILLER, D. D. New edition. Square 12mo, 112 pages, handsomely bound in white cloth, gilt edges, in neat box, $1.00.

Reset from new type and containing a number of new features, the most important of which is the introduction of two Marriage Services—one, a form used by Dr. Miller himself, and the other, the service of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Ragweed.

A West-World Story. By JULIA MACNAIR WRIGHT. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

This book tells how five children were reclaimed from the degrading influence of a family of "Wagon Tramps," or "Movers."

Jacob's Heiress.

By ANNETTE L. NOBLE, author of "The Rhyhoves of Antwerp," "The Professor's Girls," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

An historical story of the persecutions of the Protestants in Holland and France during the sixteenth century.

While Shepherd's Watched.

An Exercise for Christmas Day, arranged by J. R. MILLER, D. D. 16 pages, 5 cents a copy; $4.00 per hundred.

All orders should be addressed to

JOHN H. SCRIBNER, Business Sup't,

Presbyterian Board of Publication and Sabbath-School Work,

1334 CHESTNUT STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address

Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.

Send your lists of wants to

N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston

Large Stock of Old English and American Books.

History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

SIGN OF THE ARK.

Noah Farnham Morrison,

Rare, Old and Curious Books,

877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.

Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line,	20 cents.
Other advertising pages,	16 "

Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

Macmillan & Co.'s New Books for October.

JUST READY: F. MARION CRAWFORD'S NEW STORY,

LOVE IN IDLENESS.

By F. Marion Crawford, author of "Katharine Lauderdale," "Saracinesca," "Pietro Ghisleri," etc. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, with decorative cover, uniform with the Cranford Series. $2.00.

New Edition.

The Makers of Florence.

By Mrs. Oliphant, author of "Francis of Assisi," "Royal Edinburgh," etc. New Miniature Edition, uniform with William Winter's Works, with all the Illustrations and Plates, and additional Plates. 4 vols., 18mo, cloth, gilt top, in box, $3.00. Sold separately, 75 cents each. Vol. I. Dante; Vol. II. Savonarola; Vol. III. The Cathedral Builders; Vol. IV. The Piagnoni Painters.

New Book by Karl Károly.

Raphael's Madonnas and Other Great Pictures,

Reproduced from the Original Paintings. With a life of Raphael and an Account of his Chief Works. By Karl Károly, author of "The Paintings of Florence." With 53 Illustrations, including Photogravures. Columbier 8vo.

New Book by Mr. William Winter.

THE LIFE AND ART OF JOSEPH JEFFERSON.

Together with some Account of his Ancestry, and of the Jefferson Family of Actors. By William Winter, author of "The Life and Art of Edwin Booth," "Shakespeare's England," etc. With Frontispiece, and Photogravure Plates and other Illustrations. 12mo, cloth gilt, $2.25. Uniform with William Winter's "Life and Art of Edwin Booth" published last year.

Now Ready, New and Cheaper Edition.

The Life and Art of Edwin Booth.

By William Winter, author of "Old Shrines and Ivy," "Wanderers," etc. New, revised and cheaper edition. With new Frontispiece Portrait in Character. 18mo, cloth, gilt top, 75 cents.

Harvard College. By an Oxonian.

By George Birkbeck Hill, D. C. L., Pembroke College, Oxford, editor of "Boswell's Life of Johnson," author of "Writers and Readers," etc.

Miss Fielde's New Book, with Illustrations in Color.

A CORNER OF CATHAY, STUDIES FROM LIFE AMONG THE CHINESE.

By Adèle M. Fielde, author of "Chinese Nights' Entertainments." With colored Plates, reproduced from original Pictures by artists in the celebrated school of Go-Leng at Swatow, China. Small 4to, cloth gilt, $3.00.

By the Ven. Archdeacon Farrar.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST AS REPRESENTED IN ART.

By Frederic W. Farrar, D. D., F. R. S., Archdeacon and Canon of Westminster, author of "The Life of Christ," "Seekers after God," etc. With numerous Illustrations and Frontispiece. 8vo, cloth gilt.

By the Author of "Building Superintendence."

Architect, Owner, and Builder before the Law.

By T. M. Clark, Fellow of the American Institute of Architects, author of "Building Superintendence." 8vo. Just Ready.

New Book on Nursing.

Text-Book of Anatomy and Physiology for Nurses.

Compiled by Diana Clifford Kimber, Assistant Superintendent New York City Training School, Blackwell's Island. With Illustrations. 8vo.

By the Author of Familiar Quotations.

BARTLETT'S COMPLETE SHAKESPEARE CONCORDANCE.

A New and Complete Concordance, or Verbal Index to Words, Phrases and Passages in the Dramatic Works of Shakespeare. With a Supplementary Concordance to the Poems. By John Bartlett, A. M., Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, author of "Familiar Quotations," etc. 4to, half morocco, in box, $14.00 net.

By the Author of "The Memories of Dean Hole."

More Memories.

By the very Rev. S. Reynolds Hole, Dean of Rochester, author of "Reveries," "A Book about Roses," etc. $2.25. Just Ready.

By Professor Erman.

Life in Ancient Egypt.

Described by Adolf Erman. Translated by H. M. Tirard. With numerous Illustrations and Maps. Superroyal 8vo. Just Ready.

Mr. Charles Dexter Allen's New Book on Ex-Libris.

AMERICAN BOOK-PLATES.

A Guide to their Study, with Examples. By Charles Dexter Allen, Member Ex-Libris Society, London; Member Grolier Club, New York. With a Bibliography by Eben Newell Hewins, Member Ex-Libris Society. Illustrated with many reproductions of rare and interesting Book-plates, and in the finer editions with many prints from the original coppers, both old and recent. Imperial 16mo, gilt top, $3.50 net.

SEPTEMBER NUMBER NOW READY.

BOOK REVIEWS.

A Monthly Journal devoted to New and Current Publications. Price, 5 cents each number; subscription, 50 cents a year. The leading article this month is entitled "Subconscious Suggestions," by Prof. J. Mark Baldwin, Princeton.

Send stamp for New Complete Catalogue of Macmillan & Co.'s Publications, now ready.

MACMILLAN & CO., 66 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Public Library,

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 Somerset Street
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy
BOSTON 20 OCTOBER 1894 Vol. XXV No. 21 Whole No. 517

Macmillan & Co.'s New and Recent Books.

JUST PUBLISHED. TRANSLATION OF PROF. ERMAN'S IMPORTANT WORK.

LIFE IN ANCIENT EGYPT.

Described by ADOLF ERMAN. Translated by H. M. TIRARD. With 400 Illustrations and 12 Plates. Super royal 8vo, $6.00.

A HISTORY OF ROME.

To the Battle of Actium. By EVELYN S. SHUCKBURGH, M. A., late fellow of Emanuel College, Cambridge, author of "A Translation of Polybius," etc. With Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo, $1.75 net.

"It supplies us with a full, accurate, vigorous, and, on the whole, carefully balanced narrative of the history of Rome down to the point where Mr. Bury takes it up." —Manchester Guardian.

Just Published: Vol. IV.

THE HISTORY OF SICILY FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES.

By EDWARD A. FREEMAN, M. A., Hon. D. C. L., LL.D., author of "The History of the Norman Conquest," "Historical Essays," etc.

Vol. IV. From the Tyranny of Dionysios to the Death of Agathokles. Edited from Posthumous MSS., with Supplements and Notes, by ARTHUR J. EVANS, M. A. With Maps and Numismatic Plate. 8vo, cloth, $5.25 net.

NOW READY: VOLS. I. AND II.

"COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY BIOLOGICAL SERIES."

Edited by HENRY FAIRFIELD OSBORN, Sc. D., DA COSTA Professor of Biology in Columbia College.

Vol. I. From the Greeks to Darwin.

An Outline of the Development of the Evolution Idea. By HENRY FAIRFIELD OSBORN, Sc. D. 8vo, buckram, $2.00 net.

Vol. II. Amphioxus and the Ancestry of the Vertebrates.

By ARTHUR WILLEY, B. Sc., Tutor in Biology in Columbia College. With Illustrations. 8vo, buckram, $2.50 net.

Just Published.

THE SENILE HEART.

Its Symptoms, Sequelæ, and Treatment. By GEORGE WILLIAM BALFOUR, M. D., LL. D. With Illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

Just Published.

CHAUCER'S CANTERBURY TALES.

Edited, with Notes and Introductions, by ALFRED W. POLLARD. In two volumes, uniform with the works of John Morley, Matthew Arnold, R. H. Hutton, etc. 12mo, cloth, $3.00.

Just Published.

CO-OPERATIVE PRODUCTION.

By BENJAMIN JONES. With Prefatory Note by the Rt. Hon. A. H. DYKE ACLAND, M. P., Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education. Cheaper Edition. 1 vol. 12mo, cloth, $2.50 net.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

ESSAYS ON QUESTIONS OF THE DAY: POLITICAL AND SOCIAL.

By GOLDWIN SMITH, D. C. L. Second Edition. Revised and in great part re-written. Large 12mo, cloth, $2.25.

NEW VOLUME WITH HUGH THOMSON'S ILLUSTRATIONS.

OLD ENGLISH SONGS.

With Introduction and Notes by AUSTIN DOBSON, and 100 Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON. Crown 8vo, gilt, or edges uncut, $2.00.

COMPLETION OF THE "DRYBURGH WAVERLEY."

Just Ready. Vol. XXV. Large 12mo, Cloth, $1.25.

THE SURGEON'S DAUGHTER AND CASTLE DANGEROUS.

By Sir WALTER SCOTT, Bart. Illustrated by PAUL HARDY and WALTER PAGET. Being Vol. XXV. (final volume) of the popular "Dryburgh" Edition of the Waverley Novels. In twenty-five volumes, each volume containing a complete novel, illustrated with full-page plates engraved on wood. Large 12mo, cloth. Price, $1.25 each. The set, in box, $30.00.

JUST READY. MRS. MOLESWORTH'S NEW STORY.

MY NEW HOME.

A New Story for Children by Mrs. MOLESWORTH, Author of "The Cuckoo Clock," "The Rectory Children," etc. With Illustrations by L. LESLIE BROOKE. 12mo, uniform with the New Edition of Mrs. Molesworth's Stories. $1.00.

OCTOBER NUMBER READY.

BOOK REVIEWS.

A Monthly Journal devoted to New and Current Publications. Price, 5 cents each number; subscription, 50 cents a year. The current number contains some delightful Reminiscences of the late Walter Pater, by Prof. E. B. TITCHENER, Cornell University.

MACMILLAN & CO., 66 Fifth Avenue, New York.

BOOKS OF PERMANENT INTEREST.

The Development of English Literature and Language.

By Prof. A. H. WELSH, A. M. Two volumes. 8vo, 1,100 pages, $4.00. Seventeenth thousand now selling.

"The most noteworthy history of English literature ever written. It will, in our opinion, serve better than any other work of its kind as a guide for those who wish to go into a thorough study of the subject. Its classification is admirable. Its selection of representative authors is generally wise. Its facts are of typical importance."—The Churchman, N. Y.

"It steps with conscious power and authority into the front rank of histories of English literature."—Literary World, Boston, Mass.

Manual of Classical Literature.

Comprising Biographical and Critical Notices of the Principal Greek and Roman Authors, with illustrative extracts for popular reading. By CHARLES MORRIS. 12mo, 420 pages, $1.50.

"The author has been particularly successful in preparing a book for readers who, not having had the advantages of a classical course of study, would nevertheless gain an intelligent insight into the world's most remarkable uninspired ancient thought and speech."—The Advance, Chicago.

"The book presents a more complete survey of classical literature than can elsewhere be found in the same compass."—Scotsman, Edinburgh, Scotland.

The Aryan Race;

Its Origin and Its Achievements. By CHARLES MORRIS, author of "A Manual of Classical Literature." 1 vol., 355 pages. Second edition. $1.50.

"This book is thoroughly simple and popular, and will be read with avidity by persons that have a taste for the study of language and institutions. It will help plain men and women to form an idea as to the origin of our language, our social institutions, and our particular race."—The Beacon, Boston.

Civilization;

An Historical Review of Its Elements. By CHARLES MORRIS, author of "The Aryan Race; Its Origin and Its Achievements." 2 vols., 12mo, over 1,000 pages, $4.00.

"From the mass of modern knowledge concerning the development of man the author has himself acquired a clear and philosophical idea of the relations of one step to another and of the bearing of each advance or retrogression of the past towards the present condition of man, and this broad and general view he conveys with admirable clearness to the reader."—The Philadelphia Inquirer.

Hindu Literature;

Or, THE ANCIENT BOOKS OF INDIA. By ELIZABETH A. REED, Member of the Philosophical Society of Great Britain and Member of the International Congress of Orientalists. 1 vol., 428 pages, cloth, $2.00.

"To summarize this work it is enough to say that it contains the philosophy, science, language, literature, and religion of the ancient Hindus as embodied in poems, hymns, histories, laws, and didactic treatises, and the whole is presented in an orderly and attractive form, making it a most valuable handbook on the subject which it treats."—The Methodist Review, New York City.

Persian Literature;

ANCIENT AND MODERN. By ELIZABETH A. REED. 12mo, cloth, $2.50.

"It embodies not alone the cream of all that has been published on the subject, but also much of the unpublished results of late research which the author has gleaned through correspondence with the foremost Oriental scholars of Europe."—Public Opinion, Washington, D. C.

History of the Literature of the Scandinavian North.

From the most ancient times to the present. By FREDERICK WINKEL HORN and Prof. R. B. ANDERSON. With a bibliography of the important books in the English language relating to the Scandinavian countries, by Thorvald Solberg. 8vo, 520 pages, $3.00.

"This is a work of great interest to scholars and literary men, likewise a most important and valuable contribution to literary history. Between its covers is comprehended the whole field of Scandinavian literature, including that of the nineteenth century."—Publishers' Circular, London, England.

☞ Sold by Thompson, Brown & Co., 23 Hawley St., and other booksellers, or sent, postage paid, on receipt of price, by

S. C. GRIGGS & CO., Publishers,

262 and 264 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

MASTERPIECES OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

Now Ready. New Editions.
Profusely Illustrated.

McCARTHY MODERNIZED.

A History of Our Own Times.

From the Accession of Queen Victoria to the General Election of 1880. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M. P. With an Introduction and Supplementary Chapters Bringing the Work Down to Mr. Gladstone's Resignation of the Premiership (March, 1894). With a New Index and additions to the survey of the Literature of the Reign. By G. MERCER ADAM, author of "A Précis of English History," etc.

Profusely illustrated with new half-tone portraits of statesmen and littérateurs, including, among others:

Mr. Gladstone,
A. J. Balfour,	Joseph Chamberlain,
Lord Salisbury,	Mr. Goschen.
W. E. Forster,	Earl Granville,
Lord Beaconsfield,	Justin McCarthy,
Rudyard Kipling,	J. M. Barrie.

2 vols., 12mo, handsome cloth, $3.00; or in three-quarter calf, $5.00. Popular edition, 2 vols., 12mo, without illustrations, cloth, $1.50.

History of the English People.

By JOHN RICHARD GREEN, M. A. Standard Edition, 4 vols., embellished with half-tone portraits, cloth, $5.00; or, three-quarter calf, $10.00. Edition de Luxe, 4 vols., 8vo, with Photogravure Portraits and Illustrations, cloth, $7.50; or three-quarter calf, $15.00. Popular Edition, 5 vols., 12mo, without illustrations, cloth, $2.50.

The Victorian Age of English Literature.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Handsome Library Edition; with 15 Photogravure Portraits of the Representative Writers of the Reign. 2 vols., 8vo., handsome cloth, $3.50; or, three-quarter levant, $7.00. Cheaper Students' Edition, without Portraits, 1 vol., 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

The Last Days of Pompeii.

By LORD LYTTON. De Luxe Edition. 2 vols., 8vo., handsome cloth, superbly illustrated with 16 Photogravures, representing artistic and antiquarian scenes in this famous historical romance.

☞ In 2 vols., cloth, $3.50; or, in three-quarter levant, $7.00. Popular edition, 2 vols. in one, Century Series, cloth, 75 cents.

Specimen pages and illustrations of the above works will be sent to any one on receipt of postage, 5 cents.

NEW AND STRIKING FICTION.

JULES VERNE'S NEW BOOK.

The Special Correspondent; or, The Adventures of Claudius Bombarnac in China.

By the author of "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," etc. Profusely illustrated, 12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents. A story of rattling adventure, full of exciting incident.

Salammbo.

By GUSTAVE FLAUBERT. Authorized translation. Illustrated, 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Popular edition of this French masterpiece, which recreates Carthage at the close of the First Punic War. A very strong story.

A Patrician Singer.

From the French of A. GENNEVRAYE. By B. M. SHERMAN. Illustrated, cloth, $1.25; paper, 50 cents.

A charming story, narrating how a woman nearly lost her lover from jealousy of her own voice.

Struthers; and the Comedy of the Masked Musicians.

By ANNA BOWMAN DODD, author of "Three Normandy Inns," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, illuminated cover, 50 cents.

"A story of Anglomania and of lord hunting, with a fresh and charming treatment."—N. Y. Sun.

A Burne-Jones Head.

By CLARA SHERWOOD ROLLINS. 12mo, handsome cloth, with frontispiece, $1.00.

"The book has distinction, it has art, it has humor, it has purpose."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The New Rector.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN, author of "A Gentleman of France," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

A clerical Comedy of Errors, exceedingly amusing.

A Soldier and a Gentleman.

By J. MACLAREN COBBAN. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

A bright, breezy, wholesome, and entertaining story.

UNITED STATES BOOK CO., 310-318 Sixth Avenue, New York.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address
Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

THE MANUSCRIPT MARKET.

Expert assistance to authors in placing their MSS. to the best advantage is given by THE WRITER'S LITERARY BUREAU (established in 1887), which is prepared to undertake every kind of work required between author and publisher. Honest advice and frank criticism of MSS. by competent readers given when desired; MSS. typewritten, revised, and sold on commission. Before sending MSS. write for circular giving terms and send ten cents for a sample copy of THE WRITER, the only magazine in the world devoted solely to explaining the practical details of literary work. Address The Writer's Literary Bureau, P. O. Box 1905, Boston, Mass. Mention the Literary World

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY'S
Autumn Announcements.

HISTORY, BELLES-LETTRES, FICTION, AND MISCELLANEOUS.

Thiers's History of the French Revolution.

New Edition, uniform with the New Edition of Thiers's "History of the Consulate and the Empire of France." Illustrated with 41 steel engravings. 5 volumes, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00 per volume; three-fourths morocco, $5.00 per volume.

This Edition will be uniform with the New Edition of Thiers's "History of the Consulate and the Empire of France," and will be published in monthly volumes, commencing September, 1894. Subscriptions will be received for complete sets only by all booksellers and the publishers.

Thiers's History of the Consulate and the Empire of France.

Now complete. Illustrated with 36 steel engravings. 12 volumes, 8vo. Cloth, $36.00; half morocco, gilt top, $60.00.

The only good edition of the English translation has long been out of print, and the present publishers, in connection with an English house, have brought out a limited edition to meet the demand of the libraries and book-buyer. The last volume of this sumptuous edition has just been issued.

Napoleon at Home.

The Daily Life of the Emperor at the Tuileries. By FREDERIC MASSON. With 12 full-page illustrations by F. DE MYRBACH. 2 volumes, 8vo. Cloth, $7.50.

Napoleon and the Women of His Court.

By FREDERIC MASSON. With numerous illustrations in the best style of French Art. 1 volume, 8vo.

Around a Throne.

Catherine II., of Russia, her Collaborators, her Friends, and her Favorites. By K. WALISZEWSKI, author of "Romance of an Empress." 2 volumes, 8vo, cloth.

The Marquis de La Fayette in the War of the Revolution.

With some Account of the Attitude of France toward the War of Independence. By CHARLEMAGNE TOWER, Jr., LL. D. 2 volumes, royal 8vo. Cloth, gilt top, uncut.

Henry of Navarre and the Religious Wars.

By EDWARD T. BLAIR. With 55 cuts in the text and 4 full-page photogravures by BOUSSOD, VALADON ET CIE. Square 8vo.

In preparation.

Colonial Days and Dames.

By ANNE HOLLINGSWORTH WHARTON, author of "Through Colonial Doorways." Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth, extra, $1.25.

Edition de Luxe limited to the number of subscribers.

The Colonial Library.

COLONIAL DAYS AND DAMES.
THROUGH COLONIAL DOORWAYS.
2 volumes, 12mo, in box, $2.50.

Books and Plays.

By ALLAN MONKHOUSE. 100 printed for America. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

Pen and Pencil Sketches.

By HENRY STACY MARKS, R. A. With 4 photogravure plates and 124 facsimile illustrations. 2 volumes, 8vo. Irish linen, gilt top, $8.00.

There will be included in the volume many unpublished drawings left by Fred. Walker, the remarkable young English artist who is drawn by Du Maurier in the character of "Little Billee" in Trilby.

The Birds About Us.

By CHARLES CONRAD ABBOTT, M. D., author of "Recent Rambles," "Travels in a Tree-Top," etc. Illustrated with upwards of 75 Bird Portraits. 1 volume, 12mo. Cloth, $2.00.

A book for every lover of birds. It is written in a familiar and genial style, and is not burdened with technicalities, while being accurate in every particular.

Irving (Washington). Sketch Book.

New Edition. 2 volumes, 12mo. Illustrated with Engravings on Wood, from Original Designs. Price in cloth, extra, gilt top, $4.00; half calf or half morocco, $7.00.

The illustrations of this edition were made for the Artist Edition, the type is new, and the size suitable for the library and the table, making the most desirable edition of this popular classic now published.

Madonna and Other Poems.

By HARRISON S. MORRIS. Illustrated. 1 volume, 12mo. Extra cloth, $2.00.

This is the first collected edition of the author's poems, many of which have never previously appeared. The edition is printed from type, and limited to 750 copies for America and England.

Sorrow and Song.

By COULSON KERNAHAN, author of "A Book of Strange Sins," "A Dead Man's Diary," etc. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

Mr. Kernahan's work is not only intensely interesting as literary criticism, but, owing to its searching investigation and powerful delineation of the motives and the sins of the human soul, it is strangely fascinating for the general reader.

Hazlitt (William). Liber Amoris.

A newly printed edition containing numerous passages omitted in the editions of 1823. The volume will contain a fine reproduction of William Bewick's chalk drawing of William Hazlitt, a facsimile of a letter from Hazlitt to Rathmore, and one of Sarah Walker to Hazlitt (the only one known to exist). Edition limited to 400 copies for England and 100 for America. Price $6.00 net.

Carlyle's (Thomas) Translations.

3 volumes. 8vo. Uniform with the Ashburton Edition of his works. Cloth, $7.50.

The Works of Laurence Sterne.

Edited by GEORGE SAINTSBURY, with illustrations by E. J. WHEELER. 6 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $6.00; half calf and half morocco, $13.50; large paper edition, 6 volumes, buckram, $18.00.

Published in connection with Dent & Co., of London.

Corinne, or Italy.

By MADAME DE STAEL. Translated. With illustrations. 2 volumes. Cloth, $2.00; half calf and half morocco $4.50; large paper edition, 2 volumes, buckram, $6.00

Published in connection with Dent & Co., of London.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY'S AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENTS—Continued.

Early English Ballads.

Chosen by R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON. With about 200 illustrations by William Cubitt Cooke. 4 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $5.00; half calf or half morocco, $10.00.

The text of the Old Ballads has been carefully prepared from the original sources in each case, though the spelling is modernized so far as can be done without injuring the rhythm or accentuation. Brief historical and explanatory notes to many of the ballads are added to the Table of Contents, and the meanings of obsolete terms are explained in foot-notes. Published in connection with Dent & Co., of London.

Tom Cringle's Log.

By MICHAEL SCOTT. 2 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $2.00; half calf or half morocco, $4.50.

Cruise of the Midge.

By MICHAEL SCOTT. 2 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $2.00; half calf or half morocco, $4.50.

The brilliant papers that make up these volumes were commenced in Blackwood's Magazine in 1829. Coleridge, in his "Table-Talk," spoke of them as "most excellent." Wilson, in "Noctes Ambrosianæ," says, "Cringle indeed is a giant."

Burns (Robert). Poetical Works.

Complete. Chronologically Arranged, with Notes, Glossaries and Index. By W. SCOTT DOUGLAS. 3 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $2.25; half calf, $5.00.

In this edition the poems of Burns are presented unabridged and untampered with, and arranged in chronological order, the date of each composition being recorded.

Thomas A'Kempis's Imitation of Christ.

Edited by CANON FARRAR. Illustrated by new and quaint illustrations. Illuminated with Initial Letters, making the most desirable edition published. Price, in cloth, $1.50; limp morocco, $4.00.

Published in connection with Methuen & Co., of London.

Australasia.

Volume I.—Australia and New Zealand. By ALFRED B. WALLACE, LL. D., D. C. L., F. R. S. With many maps and illustrations. Crown 8vo. Price $4.50.

Volume II. ready shortly. To be followed by volumes on North America, Europe, Asia, Africa and South America.

Chambers's Concise Gazetteer of the World.

Topographical, Statistical and Historical. 1 volume, crown 8vo. Uniform with Reader's Reference Library. Half morocco, $2.50.

This work does not claim to be exhaustive. Its aim has been to tell everything that may be reasonably wanted about every place likely to be looked for.

My First Book.

The Experiences of Walter Besant, James Payn, W. Clark Russell, Grant Allen, Hall Caine, George R. Sims, Rudyard Kipling, A. Conan Doyle, M. E. Braddon, F. W. Robinson, H. Rider Haggard, R. M. Ballantyne, I. Zangwill, Morley Roberts, David Christie Murray, Marie Corelli, Jerome K. Jerome, John Strange Winter, Bret Harte, "I," Robert Louis Stevenson and Robert Buchanan. With an Introduction by JEROME K. JEROME. Profusely illustrated, $2.50.

A New Novel by W. E. Norris.

Matthew Austin.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In "Lippincott's Series of Select Novels" for October.

A New Novel by Mrs. D. M. Croker, author of "A Third Person," etc.

Mr. Jervis.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In "Lippincott's Series of Select Novels" for November.

A New Novel by Effie Adelaide Rowlands, author of "My Pretty Jane," etc.

The Spell of Ursula.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In "Lippincott's Series of Select Novels" for December.

A New Novel by Rosa Nouchette Carey.

The Old, Old Story.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Ready in September.

A New Novel by Captain Charles King, U. S. A.

Under Fire.

Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A New Novel by Julien Gordon, author of "A Diplomatic Diary," etc.

Poppæa.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Ready in October.

A New Novel by W. E. Norris.

The Despotic Lady.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Ready in November.

A Volume of South Sea Island Stories by Louis Becke.

By Reef and Palm.

With Introduction by Lord PEMBROKE. Tall 16mo, cloth, 75 cents.

Ready in October.

A New Novel by James Payn.

In Market Overt.

Copyrighted edition in preparation.

A Volume of Short Stories by Mrs. L. T. Mead, author of "The Honorable Miss," etc.

Stories from the Diary of a Doctor.

24 full-page illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A Remarkable Story of Adventure by Wm. Laird Clowes, author of "The Captain of the Mary Rose," etc.

The Double Emperor.

With 8 full-page illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A Book for Young Girls, by Amy E. Blanchard, author of "Twenty Little Maidens."

Two Girls.

Illustrated by IDA WAUGH. 12mo, cloth, extra, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A Book for Girls by Mrs. Molesworth.

Olivia.

Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, upon receipt of price by the publishers,

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, 715 and 717 Market Street, Philadelphia.

The Literary World

Vol. XXV BOSTON 30 OCTOBER 1894 No. 21

CONTENTS

Songs from Vagabondia 345
Miss Wormeley's Molière 345
General Robert E. Lee 346
The Green Carnation 346
Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan . . . 347
Coöperative Production 348
The Napoleon Romances 348
Poems New and Old 349

Poetry:
Dr. Holmes at Forty. James Russell Lowell, 350
Oliver Wendell Holmes 350
London Letter 350
Fiction:
The Chase of Saint-Castin 351
Vignettes of Manhattan 351
My Lady Rotha 351
A Husband of No Importance 352
A Monk of the Aventine 352
Miss Hurd: an Enigma 352
On Cloud Mountain 352
The Search for Andrew Field 352
Minor Notices:
Diary of Anna Green Winslow 353
A Song of Companies 353
Christianity in the Home 353
Periodicals 353
News and Notes 354
Publications Received 356

SONGS FROM VAGABONDIA.*

IT is more than likely that Messrs. Richard Hovey and Bliss Carman have sent out this little book with well-judged confidence in the taste of their readers. Vagabondia, that is to say the poet's Vagabondia, has many aspects which appeal occasionally even to the most incorrigible of Philistines, even to him who has left Bohemia farthest behind him, if indeed he ever entered its borders at all. "Life's duty of duties, honest sincerity," the comrade heart which can share hardship with a brother and laugh over it, the joy of song and the delights of wandering — all these may stir the blood even of "those highly respectable buyers and sellers," who awaken here the poets' scorn and can seldom sing as do these:

> We go or we stay
> At our own sweet will.

There is not a glimmer of ideal purpose, not a shadow cast by any feeling of responsibility in the whole book; but there is the rich, absorbing delight in life for its own sake, the feeling of close kinship with nature, and, stronger than almost anything else, the constant sense of companionship to sweeten life. There are a few poems here that charm and satisfy, many that interest and demand re-reading. Among the first of these we count the spring song, which begins:

> Make me over, Mother April,
> When the sap begins to stir, and from which one would like to quote were it not that each stanza belongs in the whole poem. In its verse the longing for life, the ache for another taste of the joys of being, beats and quivers; no curiosities of rhyming or eccentricities of fancy can spoil this. "Down the World with Marna" is another poem where the swing of the movement and the freedom of the thought take one captive. "The Joys of the Road" reminds one in spirit and form of some of the Wander-lieder. The first poem of all is the maddest, not the merriest, though indeed none of them can really be called that. This chases the joy of wine, song, and love through the night:

> When Richard or Bliss come,
> Or Tom with a flagon,
> Or Karl with a jag on;

but the joy seems to keep just ahead, and one cannot but imagine it finally vanishing in a headache next morning. Joy once overtaken leaves no room for railing at "custom, frugality, use, and morality," nor would there have been time for the explanation:

> I tell you that we,
> While you are smirking
> And lying and shirking —
> We are in verity
> Free.

It is poor criticism that lingers long over singular rhymes, especially in a short notice, but such curiosities as "decenter" and "please inter;" "Gounod's," "Bluenose" and "who knows;" "tree-toad" and "three-toed;" "abroad" and "maraud," deserve simple mention. The faces of the poets and of the designer, Tom B. Meteyard, outlined on the cover, are interesting.

As a fair example of these poems one would gladly quote "The Mendicants," but since that is too long let it be one of the shortest, called "A Waif:"

> Do you know what it is to be vagrant born?
>   A waif is only a waif. And so
> For another idle hour I sit,
>   In large content, while the fire burns low.
>
> I gossip here to my crony heart
>   Of the day just over, and count it one
> Of the royal elemental days,
>   Though its dreams were few and its deeds were none.
>
> Outside the winter, inside the warmth
>   And a sweet oblivion of turmoil. Why?
> All for a gentle girlish hand
>   With its warm and lingering good-by.

MISS WORMELEY'S MOLIERE.*

MISS WORMELEY, whose praises as the best translator Balzac has ever had are in the mouths of all the critics, has but lately issued the twenty-eighth volume, Catherine de' Medici, in her admirable series. She has been so industrious that a version of Molière has been on her hands before Balzac was dismissed from them. The great dramatist has not needed a new and complete version of his productions into English so much as the author of the Comédie Humaine. Mr. Van Laun's translation and that of Mr. C. H. Wall (in the Bohn Library) are only some seventeen years old, and both are so good that the need could not be called crying of a new English edition. But though the number is constantly increasing of those who read Molière in the original with larger pleasure than they can take in any translation, the number increases faster of those who do not know French well, but are very desirous of an acquaintance with the first of French dramatists such as only an excellent translator could give them. The latest comer in the field of traduttore has the advantage, too, over all his predecessors in that he can avoid those defects which made them traditore ("translator, traitor," says the Italian proverb). If very conscientious he will, to be sure, omit to reproduce some felicitous renderings of his predecessors lest he should seem to be a copyist. But plagiary is a crime that should never be imputed to a translator, whose first duty it is to lay hands on the best equivalent for the original whether it has been used before or not. Miss Wormeley we have sometimes suspected of taking a synonym instead of a word used by a predecessor, even when the latter was the same word in both languages. In one case, for instance, she translates discours "address," though "discourse" would be the better word. We hope that she will not be so over-scrupulous hereafter.

A careful comparison of these five plays, in their whole extent, with the originals leads us to the conclusion that we have here a version which does even so skilled a translator as Miss Wormeley special credit. It is literal in the greater part of the text where this almost translates itself, and it is free where the French idiom or allusion is one that has a virtual equivalent in English but in other words. One is rarely if ever sensible of a difference of tone or color in the version from that of the French. Miss Wormeley is lively, with conversational quickness and lightness of touch, where Molière is so, and she is more serious and measured where the Misanthrope pours out his imaginary wrongs. (How extremely overrated this play is, by the way, and how stilted a dogmatist is the inflated Alceste, declaiming on his solitary virtues in a world of vice and shame!) She is at her very best, we think, where she feels freest — in the rendering of verse. What could be better than this version of the old song that Alceste sensibly prefers to the finest things of the day!

> If the king had given to me
> His great town, his belle Paris,
>   Would I but leave my sweet, my dear,
>   My dear I love so well;
> I should say to the King Henri,
> Take back, take back your belle Paris.
>   I love my love,
>   O gay!
>   I love my love too well.

Among the five plays we incline to rank Miss Wormeley at her best in Les Pre-

---

* Songs from Vagabondia. By Richard Hovey and Bliss Carman. Copeland & Day. $1.00.

* Molière. Translated by Katharine Prescott Wormeley. With a preface by Balzac, criticisms by Sainte-Beuve, and portraits by Coypel and Mignard. Vol. I. The Misanthrope; Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme. Vol. II. Tartuffe; Les Précieuses Ridicules; George Dandin. Roberts Brothers. $1.50 per vol.

cieuses and Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, and as least successful in Tartuffe. In the last play "naturally just" is not a happy rendering of "dans la juste nature" (page 67); "false sanctimony" is bad for "faux éclat" (page 70); on page 120 "but what my sinful soul deserves yet more" is evidently an oversight for "but that;" "dashing transports" is surely neither good English in itself nor the equivalent of "transports éclatans" (page 153). But these are not samples of many errors or infelicities; they are almost all the motes the beam in the critic's eye allows him to see in a long play. The constant impression the reading of the two volumes makes is that we are in the hands of an extremely competent mistress of both languages, who has given us an English version of Molière which would highly please the writer himself could he read it.

The publishers have brought out this first pair of volumes in very attractive guise. They are bound in half Russia; the margins are wide; the page is open and otherwise pleasant to the eye; the paper is good; there are gilt tops, a ribbon to mark the place, and all the other signs and tokens of an attractive library edition. In all mechanical features the volumes far outrank any English edition of Molière we know. Miss Wormeley has prefixed Balzac's preface to his edition and an admirable criticism, or appreciation rather, by Sainte-Beuve, in which he well states the lasting claim that lucid and wholesome spirit has on our regard:

> To love Molière is to have a protection within one's self against many defects, many caprices, many vices of the mind. . . . It is to love uprightness and health of mind in others as well as in ourselves.

GENERAL ROBERT E. LEE.*

THE editor of this popular and successful series in military biography has been especially fortunate in his choice of the author of this book; he is the nephew of the great Confederate general, and was himself a cavalry commander during the late war. Unfortunately Gen. Robert E. Lee never wrote anything concerning his career and campaigns, though he intended before he died to record the deeds of his soldiers, but not to write his own personal memoirs. From his family letters, however, there has been gathered a vast mass of information, so that we have his impressions and opinions on most of the great events with which he was so closely connected. The volume possesses unusual interest as a digest of what General Lee wrote to his friends. The "note" of the book is abundant information. For example, twenty pages are devoted to the ancestry of the greatest of the Lees. Col. Richard Lee hired a Dutch vessel, freighted it himself, and, going over to Holland where the runaway King Charles II was, obtained from the crownless king a commission, and even offered the exiled monarch an asylum in the new world. Fortunately for us the invitation was not accepted, but the loyal emigrant reached Virginia. Two years before the king's restoration in England Richard Lee aided Governor Berkeley in proclaiming the degenerate scion of the Stuarts king of Great Britain, Ireland, and Virginia.

Our Robert Lee was the fourth son of his parents, and was born on January 19, 1807, inheriting the splendid traits of his ancestry. He was fortunate in having a mother who seems in all respects to have been the equal of the father in whatever goes to the making of a good son. Lee's record at West Point was one of the best. He chose the engineering course, and before many years had an opportunity to show how well he understood his profession. It was the naval battery at Vera Cruz which first breached the city walls with the 68-pounders brought off from the ships, and this was constructed by Robert Lee in such a way as to resist the shots from the city forts as well as the raking fire from the castle. To show his faith in his own work he remained inside the battery during most of its trial by shot and shell, sharing in its triumph. General Scott wrote in after years that his own success in Mexico was largely due to the skill, valor, and unbounded courage of Robert E. Lee, and old "Fuss and Feathers" even predicted that if an opportunity came to the young man, then forty years of age, "he would show himself the foremost captain of his time."

At Harper's Ferry Lieutenant Lee had charge of the work of demolishing the little slaveless confederacy which John Brown attempted to set up. When the war broke out his abilities were quickly recognized. Four fifths of the book are devoted to the description of this great epoch in our national history. Lee was fifty-four years old in 1861, and had behind him the record of thirty-two years' honorable service as an army officer. The author tries his best to justify secession and the slaveholders' rebellion, but after reading his plea with interest — and, we trust, with impartiality — we turned to the three or four lines which Abraham Lincoln wrote:

> Much is said about the sovereignty of the States. . . . What is sovereignty in the political sense of the term? Would it be far wrong to define it "a political community without a political superior?" Tested by this, no one State, except Texas, ever was a sovereignty.

We recommend Lincoln's wisdom and decision rather than Fitzhugh Lee's arguments. Our author furthermore shows his familiarity with a hostile but baseless tradition in asserting foolishly that "the Mayflower which landed the Pilgrim Fathers on Plymouth Rock sailed on its very next voyage with a cargo of slaves," though, even if she did, it would be hard to see how the fact can strengthen the biographer's argument for secession or slavery.

These limitations, however, are to be expected; yet, for the popularity of the book, it is to be regretted that the 424 pages of rather solid text could not have been condensed, for while facts and spirited narratives are desirable the average man of the sword is rather too anxious to compare his hero with pretty nearly all the strategists and tacticians from Alexander and Hannibal down to Bonaparte and Von Moltke, and this to the average reader is a bore.

But after all just criticism has been made the book is delightful reading. It has a fresh flavor and is easily gone through. The story of Gettysburg seems almost like the description of something which has not been described before. The maps and the battle plans are clear, the portrait is wonderfully lifelike, and there is a good index. We heartily recommend this book, the work of a scholar and a gentleman. Its pages, freighted as they are with culture and scholarship and stating as they do a good many things that Northerners ought to read, will increase that mutual respect between men of all sections which is the surest bond of our national union.

THE GREEN CARNATION.*

THIS very clever little volume is said to have created much amusement, as it well deserved to do, in London, where it came out anonymously a few weeks ago. A more telling satire on "modernity" and the décadent could not easily be written. It may be reckoned one of the compensations for such books as A Yellow Aster that it has been followed by this extremely keen take-off. The writer may very well desire to keep in the shade, for he (or she; is it Mrs. Linton?) indulges freely in raps at other authors of the day, as when Madame Valtesi says of the Straits Settlements where Lady Locke has spent eight years: "It sounds like one of the places where that geographical little Henry Arthur Jones sends the heroes of his plays to expiate their virtues." Whoever the author be, his pages are one steady crackle of epigrams from beginning to end, whether his characters talk or he writes in his own person, and only rarely do we come to a paragraph where he refrains from rhetoric of this kind. Inevitably the epigrams are not all of equal value, and after the trick of the speech of Lord Reggie Hastings and his friend, Mr. Esmé Amarinth, is seen to be the simple inversion of all common rules and maxims, it occasionally becomes a little tiresome; but The Green Carnation could only have been written by a very brilliant person, with a sound feeling for sense and reason.

---

* Great Commanders — General Lee. By Fitzhugh Lee. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

* The Green Carnation. D. Appleton & Co. 75c.

Lord Reggie is a "young man with pale gilt hair and blue eyes," and not ashamed of his love of his own beauty. He is very vicious and very frank:

> When he could not be witty, he often told the naked truth; and truth, without any clothes on, frequently passes for epigram. It is daring, and so it seems clever. . . . He was too modern to be very reticent, and he liked to be wicked in the eye of the crowd. Secret wickedness held little charm for him. . . . He believed that Art showed the way to Nature, and worshiped the abnormal with all the passion of his impure and subtle youth.

Mr. Amarinth, a married man, is the Pythias on whom this precious Damon forms himself. His sorrows and his joys are quite unusual:

> It makes me perpetually sorrowful in London to meet with people doing their duty. I find them everywhere. It is impossible to escape from them. A sense of duty is like some horrible disease. It destroys the tissues of the mind, as certain complaints destroy the tissues of the body. . . . The mind should never be afraid of [a sensation]; it should never put one aside from an absurd sense of right and wrong.

Lady Locke, a young widow, has just come into an immense fortune, and Mrs. Windsor, her cousin, thinks it would be a fine thing for her to marry Lord Reggie—she being but three years older than the future marquis, who wears the dyed carnation, "the arsenic flower of an exquisite life," in Mr. Amarinth's words, which blends so well with the color of absinthe. These four characters of the novelette go down to Mrs. Windsor's cottage in Surrey for a week in June and cultivate rusticity, and Madame Valtesi, an elderly cynic, joins them. There they patronize Nature with discrimination, make sport of the austere curate, and indulge in a little careless love-making, which of course amounts to nothing, as Lord Reggie has no intentions, saying, "The only people who have ever achieved anything have been those who have had no intentions at all." "Nothing that is beautiful can possibly be wrong," he says again, and he is "sedulously unexpected" in all he does or says. Lady Locke, however, who has a good deal of character, treats him to a dose of the unexpected; and the country party breaks up, after Mr. Amarinth has discoursed profusely of the silliness of virtue and the attractiveness of vice, and Madame Valtesi has delivered many cynical sayings. Lord Reggie hears these sane words from Lady Locke:

> If you could forget what you call art, if you could see life at all with a straight untrammeled vision, if you could be like a man instead of nothing at all in heaven or earth except that dyed flower, I might perhaps care for you in the right way. But your mind is artificially colored; it comes from the dyer's. It is a green carnation.

GLIMPSES OF UNFAMILIAR JAPAN.*

WITH a frank and outspoken bias against Christianity Mr. Hearn utters his conviction, which he reënforces as that also "of many impartial and more experienced of observers of Japanese life, . . . that Japan has nothing whatever to gain by conversion to Christianity, either morally or otherwise, but very much to lose." Whether the Christianity which Mr. Hearn refers to is that which he has studied so long in Louisiana and the West Indies, the Christianity he has read about in the books of its friends or in those of its enemies, or that which he has himself experienced or failed to experience, we do not know. It seems pretty certain, however, that he started out with the idea of seeing all that was beautiful and lovely in the Japanese religion and character. Having in a literary review no quarrel with his prejudices or opinions, we can say that his spiritual nudity, so to speak, has enabled him to take the impression of the Japanese mental climate as faithfully as a Creole or Mandingo receives upon his skin the effect of the winds and sunbeams. He has gone about, as it were, with the shutters of his kodak-like brain ready to snap open at the least provocation. His brain box has been well stored with rolls of filament, and his pictures, though minute, are marvelously exact and clear. One does not get an impression of Japan as a great nation or of the people as a power, and in spite of all his loving tenderness and sympathy, which remind one of a passionate lover, we are not helped to believe that Japan's intellectual product is likely to influence the world's course of thought. Notwithstanding the almost belligerent defiance thrown out at anybody who would try to convert, criticise, or modify the Japanese ways, one feels that, despite its vastly superior insight, this book must be associated with that of Sir Edwin Arnold. To say this is very far from praise, but we are critics and appreciators, not flatterers.

These two handsome volumes contain twenty-seven sketches, only ten of which have appeared in the Atlantic Monthly or in other periodicals, and even these are here given in an altered form. During four years Mr. Hearn has been living in Japan and most of the time in classic Idzumo, where there are more survivals of the ancient religions and customs than in any other part of Japan probably. The author insists upon what is perfectly true, that in this region Buddhism, instead of swallowing and digesting Shintō, the indigenous religion, as elsewhere in the empire, has itself been overmastered and almost assimilated by Shintō.

Dwelling among the people, learning their language, making himself in many ways like them, Mr. Hearn has been able to seize and record a host of impressions to which the average traveler and tourist are utter strangers. We are very doubtful of the propriety of interlarding his pages so freely with Japanese words and phrases, but to old dwellers among the Japanese this is quite excusable. Furthermore the legends, fairy tales, folklore, and mythology which he spreads so freely before us have been already frequently told. Only Mr. Hearn's wonderful style and literary skill will lead the average reader to go through his two volumes. He was certainly wise in writing down at once his first impressions, but his books have the charm, also, of the combination of first sensations with the later accuracy which comes from observation, comparison, and reflection. As a man familiar with pen and ink almost from infancy, he tells us a good deal that is interesting about Japanese penmen, calligraphists, and artists. Kōbō, the Japanese Ezra, is the especial favorite of the people. It would require an encyclopedia to describe all the wonderful things, which, if he had really done them, would need more than Methuselah's limit of life.

Not content with simply looking at the idols and images in the temples and wayside shrines, Mr. Hearn studies their symbolism and meaning. He is commendably wise in this respect, that, besides seeking counsel in the study of the alien scholars and translators, the archaic books and literature, he talks freely and without pose or attitude of superiority to his servants and companions. In this way he draws from them those naïve expressions of belief which even the scholars' books do not give. Hence his volumes form a rich storehouse of delight to the reader and of material for the scholar. Some of the sacred places have been seen through foreign eyes for the first time by Mr. Hearn. He unravels the mystery of the gardens, revealing to us what does not meet the alien's eye. He opens pages of his own diary as a teacher. Like the photography of astronomers, which reveals what the eye even when reënforced by lenses and mirrors does not see, he presents us a wonderful picture of the Japanese soul. What Mr. Percival Lowell has attempted on the one side by means of speculation, comparison, and reasoning, Mr. Hearn gives us from exceedingly close observations, long and patient and sympathetic waiting, and profound comparison—all issuing in a literary performance of the highest merit. Indeed, in this work he reminds us of those photographers who, after others have failed in fastening upon the sensitized paper a dim and nearly invisible original, triumph by a long exposure of the plate during a favorable opportunity skillfully seized. His chapters on ghosts and goblins and on souls illustrate the point we have made. As a profound study in psychology we recommend the reading of the chapter on "The Japanese Smile." Altogether this brace of volumes forms a unique addition to our knowledge of the mind of the people of Japan.

---

* Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan. By Lafcadio Hearn. Two volumes. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $4.00.

COÖPERATIVE PRODUCTION.*

THIS bulky volume is valuable as a compilation of facts relating to all forms of coöperation by the workingmen of Great Britain, whether distributive or productive. Mr. Jones is one of the most efficient business men in the great Wholesale Society of the distributive movement, and he has shown a rare degree of industry in collecting the ascertainable facts of the very many cases of coöperative production which have had failure written over them, sooner or later, and the less numerous successful cases. When one has added that Mr. Jones' occasional remarks on the unwisdom of the rules, arrangements, or practices of most of the unsuccessful societies are often sagacious, one has about exhausted the list of his qualifications for a historian of coöperative production. He is, very plainly, a Philistine intellect by the side of the men of ideas like E. V. Neale, J. M. Ludlow, and Thomas Hughes, who have given the English coöperators a large part of their title to respect from the outside world. With the other Philistines of the Wholesale Society Mr. Jones shows the strong points of the Philistine, especially his ability to conduct routine business and build it up on a large scale in a field where a great market is already assured by the millions of coöperators who will buy of their own stores.

In every respect the authorities of the Wholesale possess the strong qualities of the man of business successful in a limited field, free from the speculative element. The weaknesses are just as patent to the philosophical observer. It was not such men, the stolid conservatives of their class, who originated distributive coöperation, or consumers' societies as they are properly entitled. When they discuss the principles of coöperation proper they show a painful inability to reason from anything but their prejudices, and when they make addresses on such subjects the limitations of the English middle-class intellect have more light shed on them than the professed subject of their discourse. If rarely, as here, one of them writes a book, it is deficient in nearly every good quality of a true book except zeal and industry. Mr. Jones has furnished a well-nigh endless series of papers on his subject to the Coöperative News of Manchester, and he has made a volume of them by adding a few chapters before and behind. He calls his book, without restriction, Coöperative Production, but it contains no references to any experience outside of Great Britain. It does not define the subject, but uses the term "coöperation" in a very loose manner for the most part; much of the matter is handled awkwardly as to its literary form, and the book is consequently extremely dry and monotonous. At the same time this volume is quite invaluable for the great amount of detailed information drawn from society records, fugitive publications, and personal interviews, concerning community experiments, labor exchanges, redemption societies, and coöperative production in the so-called domestic trades, corn milling, cotton and woolen factories (119 pages), other textile works, boot and shoe societies, in the iron trade, collieries, building, agriculture, typographical industries, and miscellaneous societies.

But when the worthy Mr. Jones leaves his safe ground of recitation of facts (often without other form than that of the ordinary newspaper column) and gives us his general comments we are reminded of the brilliant Dogberry, as in this "conclusion to which the theory of coöperation on the basis of the consumers leads us . . . that the nation, being itself the consumer or user, should undertake to perform for itself, as part of the ordinary functions of government, everything that is required to be done if the thing required is wanted in sufficiently large quantities to justify the formation of an establishment for doing it." This is, indeed, a truly enlightening statement, casting darkness visible on its subject. Some might well object that, as a plain matter of fact, no contrast could be greater than that of the economy and efficiency of the Wholesale (a private voluntary society) with the waste and inefficiency of the usual government, and that few phenomena show better the needlessness of government ownership than the success of the English coöperators in what they have undertaken. Mr. Jones is an advocate for the consumer first and last, and is apparently sure men can eat their way into the kingdom of heaven:

> After the nation and the local authorities have coöperated for the performance of all the services that the citizens have deemed it desirable for them to undertake, the voluntary coöperative associations of consumers, both individualistic and federal, come into use and fill up the gaps and vacancies that have been left; and finally, after them should come the associations of people with capital and people without capital but willing to work, who should coöperate to supply or exchange services with those people who do not wish to coöperate or who are in a position — which will occur while society is in a state of transition — where they cannot coöperate. But this imperfect form must be prepared to give way to the more perfect form of coöperation by the consumer as soon as the people left outside the coöperative ranks are willing to be enrolled in them.

Mr. Jones' work should be taken by the friends and the critics of coöperative production for what it is — a very valuable digest of information collected by an industrious man biased against the method, whose statements of fact are, for the most part at least, quite trustworthy, but whose reasonings are unworthy of preservation, save as illustrations of the various forms of fallacy on which the so-called practical man is wont to plume himself — logic being, in his estimation, his strong point!

THE NAPOLEON ROMANCES.*

M. DUMAS claims that he writes more for the instruction than for the amusement of his readers, and certainly he adheres remarkably to the truth of history and imparts a great deal of information as he goes along. In the present remarkable revival of interest in Napoleon few romances could be more timely reproduced than the four volumes first named below, and it is doubtful if they contain more fiction than many volumes do which purport to be sober history. Their subject is Napoleon under the Directory and in the Consulate. The Companions of Jehu begins with his return from Egypt, and The Whites and the Blues fills the interval between this event and the end of the Marie Antoinette romances. The first part of The Whites and the Blues, "The Prussians on the Rhine," is mainly derived from the personal experiences which Charles Nodier, Dumas' friend, actually underwent. "The Thirteenth Vendémiaire" and "The Eighteenth Fructidor" bring us to "The Eighth Crusade," the subject of which is the siege of Acre, Ptolemais, and Aboukir.

The Companions of Jehu, one of the most stirring of Dumas' many works, has an abundance of preliminary matter from the editor and the author, and it contains an excellent portrait of the novelist. The She-Wolves of Machecoul is a story of the Vendéan rising, under Louis Philippe, provoked by the Duchesse de Berry. A hundred pages of the second of the two volumes that tell the tale of the two beautiful women so misnamed by envy are filled with a translation of The Corsican Brothers, on which the well-known play is founded. There are twelve etchings and photogravures, and as many half-tone plates in the six volumes. Of these the best are the portraits, and the half-tones are the poorest. The general style of the volumes is that of the earlier romances, and it is in every respect attractive. They are to be congratulated who have the opportunity to learn rightly of French history from these fascinating volumes and their predecessors.

---

*Coöperative Production. By Benjamin Jones. Pp. viii, 839. Macmillan & Co. $2.50.

*The Whites and the Blues. 2 vols. The Companions of Jehu. 2 vols. The She-Wolves of Machecoul. The Corsican Brothers. 2 vols. By Alexandre Dumas. Little, Brown & Co. $1.50 per vol.

POEMS NEW AND OLD.[*]

THIS volume, by William Roscoe Thayer, shows the man of letters as well as the man who writes poetry, the man who is critical as well as creative, and who adds vigor of thought and wide culture to his genuine inward desire for the adequate expression of feeling. Sometimes in one or two of the short lyrics or in those echoes from the garden of Hafiz, which bring the murmur of a lute and "the laughter clear of revelers unwearied" over seas and centuries to us, we feel the poet only; oftener, as in "Waverley Revisited," we find the poet and the thinker together; here and there we have the thinker only. In the first class is the sad, tender strain entitled "Bereft:"

> At night, in the haunts of slumber,
>   Wakeful I lie and weep,
> For the burden of loss is upon me
>   And will not let me sleep.
>
> Far off the desolate ocean
>   Utters its old refrain —
> The sigh of eternal passion,
>   The sob of eternal pain.

The leading poem in the volume is in narrative form, and assumes to be a tale told at the tomb of the Khalifs by Halid, "the man unpermitted to die." To live after life has been drained dry of all that makes it dear is a familiar conception in literature, as is also the lesson that God may punish him who demands an unhallowed boon by granting his prayer. This poem contains some impressive lines on "the ebb and flow of the fate of man," the eternal certainty of change and slow measuring of the "indolent centuries." "The Last Hunt" is a ballad and in different style from any of the other verses, but it is spirited and simple as a ballad should be. The dedication, "To Elizabeth," is one that is not quickly forgotten:

> Set her among the angels! let her shine a star!
>   Nay, call her woman, never more divine
> Than when she walks the levels where our human longings are
>   And lightens up the prison where we pine.
>
> Be angel to my worship! be star my steps to lead
>   From earth's deep gloom to thy radiance above!
> The daily inspiration of thine influence I need,
>   But O! be simply woman to my love!

—A writer in the current Edinburgh Review who descends to the frivolous theme of contemporary fiction is puzzled by the equal and simultaneous success of novels of the type of Mr. Benson's Dodo and the works of Mrs. Humphry Ward. How is one to judge of the condition of the public taste in presence of a piece of evidence so self-contradictory? If we are to judge by the success of Dodo — whose vogue, says the Edinburgh, is attributed to its being, as Martin Chuzzlewit said of the New York Stabber, abominably personal, a novel in which "the vapid talk inspired with absurdities" and "emancipated woman revels in the abuse of extravagances" — we would have to conclude that the novel reading world is "foolish, feeble, and frivolous as the fare it seems to fancy." And the success of Dodo does not stand alone. But here is Mrs. Humphry Ward to remind us that the matter is not so easily disposed of. "As we should have thought that Mr. Benson's books," says the Edinburgh, "were beneath the average intelligence, so we should have supposed that those of Mrs. Ward were above it." And it cannot even be said of Mrs. Ward's books that their first purpose is the old-fashioned one of entertaining and amusing, yet no novelist of the day is more successful than the author of Robert Elsmere. Certainly the Edinburgh critic has here hit upon a phenomenon which presents something of a crux. Do different sets of readers devour Dodo and Robert Elsmere? Or do the same people find delight in both? And if so, how account for their taste? Is the religio-controversial novel taken as a salve to the British conscience for its indulgence in the frivolo-raffish? This latter would be a truly national explanation, which we would commend to our kind philosophic critics across the channel. — The Speaker.

—The New York Evangelist announces the result of the vote recently taken among the Presbyterian Sunday schools of the country to determine the "best one hundred books for a Sunday-school library." General Lew. Wallace's Ben-Hur leads, appearing upon ninety-one per cent of the lists, while the Prince of India is number forty-five. John Halifax, Gentleman, by Miss Mulock, stands in the twelfth place, and the same author's A Noble Life is number forty-six. Among Charles C. Coffin's numerous works the Story of Liberty is preferred. It falls well within the century mark, while the others do not. As might have been expected, works of fiction are most popular. Poetry, biography, history, and moral philosophy find but little place; but the character of the fiction is notably high, both as regards its literary merit and its moral tone. Only fifteen of the one hundred volumes were written by men. The authors of eighty-five per cent of the books most in request for Presbyterian Sunday-school libraries in this country are women.

—"How many men has Macaulay succeeded in reaching to whom all other history and criticism is a closed book or a book in an unknown tongue! If he were a sciolist or a wrong-headed fanatic, this would be a serious evil. But as he is substantially right in his judgments, brimful of saving common sense and generous feeling, and profoundly well read in his own periods and his favorite literature, Macaulay has conferred most memorable services on the readers of English throughout the world. He stands between philosophic historians and the public very much as journals and periodicals stand between the masses and great libraries. Macaulay is a glorified journalist and reviewer, who brings the matured results of scholars to the man in the street in a form that he can remember and enjoy when he could not make use of a learned book. He performs the office of the ballad-maker or story-teller in an age before books were known or were common. And it is largely due to his influence that the best journals and periodicals of our day are written in a style so clear, so direct, so resonant. We need not imitate his mannerism; we may all learn to be outspoken, lucid, and brisk. It is the very perfection of his qualities in rousing the interest of the great public which has drawn down on Macaulay the grave rebukes of so many fine judges of the higher historical literature. Cotter Morison, Mark Pattison, Leslie Stephen, and John Morley all agree that his style has none of the subtler charms of the noblest prose; that his conception of history is radically unsound; that, in fact, it broke down by its own unwieldy proportions. Mr. Morison has very justly remarked that if the History of England had ever been completed on the same scale for the period intended it would have run to fifty volumes and would have occupied one hundred and fifty years. As it is, the eight duodecimo volumes give us the events of sixteen years, from 1685 to 1701; so that the history of England from Alfred would require five hundred similar volumes. Now, Gibbon's eight octavo volumes give us the history of the world for thirteen centuries; that is to say, Gibbon has recounted the history of a century in nearly the same space that Macaulay records the history of a year. There cannot be a doubt that Gibbon's Decline and Fall is immeasurably superior to Macaulay's fragment, in thought, in imagination, in form, in all the qualities of permanent history; it stands on a far higher plane; it will long outlast and overshadow it. Compared with this Macaulay's delightful and brilliant pictures are mere glorified journalism." — Frederic Harrison, in the Forum.

—Prof. P. J. Blok, late of the University of Groningen, and author of the best Dutch history of the Netherlands, has been appointed to the professorship of history in Leyden University made vacant by the retirement of Prof. R. Furrier, the brilliant critic of Motley. Part of Professor Blok's duties is the instruction of the little Queen Wilhelmina in the history of the Vaderland.

—The slab that is to cover the grave of Robert Browning in Westminster Abbey is almost completed, and will be sent to England quite shortly from Venice. Owing to the limitations of the allotted space, it was not easy for Mr. Barrett Browning to decide upon a design. The gravestone will be of Oriental porphyry, of which the poet was particularly fond. It was difficult to find a piece sufficiently large, but finally Mr. R. B. Browning met with one at Rome. It has been put into a frame of Siena marble, and the whole, though rich, is of the greatest simplicity and in accordance with what would have been the poet's taste. The inscription will consist of only the name and date of birth, with an English rose at the head and a Florentine lily below.

—Somebody is bringing out a catalogue of Adam Smith's library. The Royal Burgh of Kirkcaldy in which he lived has "gone one better" than that. The citizens of "the lang toun" are reputed to be the "nearest" in all the Lowlands of Scotland, and standing in need of a new town hall they hit upon an excellent expedient for achieving it at the expense of the English-speaking world. They successfully got up by public subscription the Adam Smith Memorial Hall. The tall gray house in which The Wealth of Nations was written still stands in an alley off the High Street of Kirkcaldy.

---

[*] Poems New and Old. By William Roscoe Thayer. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.

The Literary World

BOSTON 20 OCTOBER 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

Dr. Holmes at Forty.

There's Holmes, who is matchless among you for wit —
A Leyden jar always full-charged, from which flit
The electrical tingles of hit after hit;
In long poems 'tis painful sometimes, and invites
A thought of the way the new Telegraph writes,
Which pricks down its little sharp sentences spitefully
As if you'd got more than you'd title to rightfully,
And you find yourself hoping its wild father Lightning
Would flame in for a second and give you a frightening.
He has perfect sway of what I call a sham meter;
But many admire it, the English pentameter,
And Campbell, I think, wrote most commonly worse,
With less nerve, swing, and fire in the same kind of verse,
Nor e'er achieved aught in't so worthy of praise
As the tribute of Holmes to the grand Marseillaise.
You went crazy last year over Bulwer's New Timon;
Why, if B., to the day of his dying, should rhyme on,
Heaping verses on verses and tomes upon tomes,
He could ne'er reach the best point and vigor of Holmes.
His are just the fine hands, too, to weave you a lyric
Full of fancy, fun, feeling, or spiced with satiric
In a measure so kindly you doubt if the toes
That are trodden upon are your own or your foes'.

— Lowell in the Fable for Critics, 1848.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

THE departure before him from these earthly shores of his younger contemporary, Lowell, left Dr. Holmes for some years the solitary survivor of a group of men of letters who made an era for America. As Emerson, Longfellow, Whittier, and Lowell crossed the bar one by one, those who remained with us became more dear, and when he stood alone the Autocrat swayed all hearts with a peculiar veneration through the love and pride they felt for the kindly poet, essayist, and novelist. He has left a great void in our affections, and has made it hard for any one, even of our oldest authors left, to assume a similar place. Happy in this fond regard which a whole country felt for him, Dr. Holmes was in nearly every respect one of the most fortunate of men. Other things being equal, quantity of life is a blessing, and he had his large allowance of days. As he said not long ago: "The twelfth septennial period has always seemed to me one of the natural boundaries of life. One who has lived to complete his eighty-fourth year has had his full share even of an old man's allowance. Whatever is granted over that is a prodigal indulgence on the part of nature." He lived on until the force of nature could no farther go, and then, exhausted by the weight of years, fell asleep, fortunate to the last. One affliction old age inevitably brings in that it removes from the fireside some who might otherwise mourn us, not be mourned by us. So Dr. Holmes' wife and daughter passed away before him, robbing his last years of those sweet consolations they only could impart.

Belonging to the Brahmin caste, Holmes enjoyed all the advantages which a thrice-born man of Boston could have. Connected by birth and marriage and professional relations with the aristocracy of his native city, he was free from care for bread, while too much a New Englander to idle his way through life. Bred to a congenial profession, he renewed with marvelous wit and sound learning the tradition of the doctors of medicine who have been greater doctors of the mind in the world of letters. A real master of one of the more artificial meters and skilled in others, he was a modern minstrel in his readiness to adorn each prominent occasion with a contribution of graceful, humorous verse. He was an improvisatore whose inspiration never seemed to fail, and it is hardly probable that Harvard College will have in any of its future classes, however large, another poet who can celebrate his comrades as Dr. Holmes sang the famous Class of 1829. In humorous poetry his place is secure through "The One Hoss Shay" and shorter earlier poems; but not only "The Chambered Nautilus" and his noble hymns will keep his name alive as a writer of serious verse; there are poems like "Under the Violets" which cannot be bettered in their pure feeling and exquisite refinement of diction.

It has often been said of late that Dr. Holmes will survive mainly as a poet; but this seems a strange verdict to pass upon the inimitable Autocrat of the Breakfast Table. Where can one find in the language such another union of penetrating thought, keen wit, poetic sympathy, comprehensive humanity, and religious interest? The scope is wide, but the touch is just and sure, whether the subject be manners or theology, the trifles of the day or the tremendous issues of human life and death. Dr. Holmes, like most great wits, was fundamentally serious, and his interest in spiritual matters was deep and continuous. One can now see, looking back to the days of the Autocrat, how greatly religion has been humanized and theology rationalized, and in this process, which goes to make life truly harmonious and fruitful, Dr. Holmes had a great work to do. Not a reformer of the ordinary type, not a mystic, not a saint, he loved his kind in a warm human fashion, believed in man, rejoiced in the comfortable earth, and found in love and reason the two pillars of his cheerful faith.

Dr. Holmes' fame as a novelist rests upon Elsie Venner and The Guardian Angel, for A Mortal Antipathy was a failure. To our mind these two books have a sure place in the library of English fiction. The first, more especially, will endure and grow in interest as the type of New England life which it pictures fades away. Dr. Holmes knew the Yankee mind and expressed the Yankee dialect and the Yankee character as no other writer of distinction but Lowell has done. Abel Stebbins, Dr. Kittredge's "hired man," and the other inhabitants of Rockland stand out in Elsie Venner with all the force and color of nature itself. New England life has nowhere else been more sympathetically portrayed in fiction.

Father Time tests and winnows with a severe hand the works of mortal men. Especially is his judgment austere upon the performance of those who were favorites of their day and generation. But even to them, were they true to their gift and deep lovers of their kind, he grants a long continuance in the grateful minds of a world delighted and refreshed by their wholesome, cheerful message. Dr. Holmes has been for many years a force in our America making for illumination and encouragement; he has sweetened life for many a doubting soul; he has banished Giant Despair from many a heart; he has seen clearly and spoken wisely in many issues of moment to our time, and we follow with benediction the passage of his genial spirit out of the world he loved into the mystery he did not fear, his outgrown shell left by life's unresting sea.

LONDON LETTER.

THE books are beginning to come with the thickness of autumn leaves. The most interesting contribution this season to fiction will be George Meredith's short stories, which are shortly to be published by Ward, Lock & Bowden. These stories, which have long been ardently desired by Meredithians, formed the subject once of an essay by Mr. Barrie, "On the Lost Works of George Meredith." I remember to have read some of them in an American newspaper, the Providence Sunday Journal, which, under its last editor, Mr. Alfred M. Williams, was as literary as a high-class magazine. We are not promised a Hardy book immediately, and Mr. Barrie has been too ill for literary work this past summer. Mr. Stevenson's Ebb-Tide, written in collaboration with Mr. Lloyd Osbourne, his stepson, makes one rage against the collaboration of little men with great men. It has true Stevenson bits here and there in the waste of Mr. Lloyd Osbourne. The collaboration in this case is as unfortunate as that of Mr. Kipling and his late brother-in-law in The Naulahka. Mr. Heinemann publishes The Ebb-Tide. One of the successes of the season is bound to be Stanley Weyman's My Lady Rotha, a historical romance of the Thirty Years' War. Mr. Weyman is the most gallant, romantic, stirring, and generous writer of modern times. Personally I have the bad taste to prefer Weyman to Scott. If I had a boy to cater for in the way of books, I should set him Weyman's stories beside the Border Ballads and a few old favorites, and feel I had earned his eternal gratitude.

There is a very interesting exhibition now proceeding at the Gallery of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-Colors, Piccadilly, of the drawings made by a young group of English artists for Messrs. Dents' exquisite productions in books within the last few years. The exhibition is indeed most characteristic. The skill in line of the great Aubrey Beardsley is lived up to, without his objectionableness, by several of his fellows. Mr. Batten is exquisite at comicalities. The fairy tales illustrated by him are a delight forever. Then, as an ideal artist, Mr. Anning Bell is admirable. At this show the most delicate and distinguished drawings, including Mr. Beardsley's, can be picked up for a beggarly sovereign or two.

The separation between Messrs. Mathews & Lane is now almost accomplished. Mr. Mathews keeps the little low-browed shop in Vigo Street, inseparably associated with the historic sign of the Bodley Head. Mr. Lane, however, takes the title and transfers it to his rooms in the Albany, from which workmen these days are breaking a door into Vigo Street. This is indeed desecration for the Albany, where forty years ago there was no resident to be found less in social status than at least a guardsman. The residential flats for bachelors which have sprung up all over the West End are responsible for the comparative decay of these once sacred precincts. You enter the Albany by a low door in Vigo Street, jealously guarded by a uniformed porter. The houses go down each side with a suggestion of cloisters, and there is a line of trees between. The Albany looks as if no breath of air could ever creep down to the lower rooms from the line of sky far above. Mr. Lane has the rooms inhabited by Lord Macaulay when he wrote his history. In the same rooms lived Clyde Fitch, your American dramatist, when he first came over, a handsome and eager young fellow, to take the dramatic world by storm. Mr. Lane's rooms will make a delightful publisher's sanctum, with his collection of old English china and beautiful glass, and the many interesting mementos of his poetical clients everywhere.

Mr. Mathews will publish about October 20 Mr. Frederick Wedmore's English Episodes. A day or two later he will have Mr. Lionel Johnson's poems ready for publication. Mr. Johnson is one of the most remarkable of the younger English poets, though this is his first separate book. We have known him hitherto only in the pages of the Rhymers' Books. He is an Irishman, born in Wales. Another Irishman, Mr. W. B. Yeats, the finest young voice in poetry we have at present, with perhaps the exception of Francis Thompson, will publish with Mr. Mathews this autumn his poetical play, "The Shadowy Waters." By spring he hopes to have ready a new volume of poems, The Wind among the Reeds. Mr. Yeats selects admirably poetical titles. Mr. Mathews will also publish a volume of stories by a new writer, Out of Egypt. A volume of poems by Mr. Ernest Dowson may shortly be looked for. This will be very good news to lovers of poetry, for Mr. Dowson's contributions to the two series of the Rhymers' Book were each most gracious, subtle, and exquisite poems. He has a touch of Elizabethan distinction.

Mr. Lane will publish shortly a volume of stories, Discords, by the author of Keynotes, He has one or two discoveries in prose and poetry for the forthcoming publishing season. but is reticent of details. The next Yellow Book will bear only Mr. Lane's imprint. It will have drawings by Mr. Beardsley, Mr. Sargent, Mr. Wilson Steer, and Mr. Walter Sickert, besides literary contributions by Mr. Richard Le Gallienne, Mr. Herbert Crackanthorpe, Mr. John Davidson, Mr. Ernest Rhys, Mr. Dowson, Mr. Lionel Johnson, Miss Ella D'Arcy, and others. There will also be an anonymous article on "Women as Wives and Mothers."

Of late years there has been a flood tide of good literature for the masses produced in an essentially cheap manner. Messrs. Methuen are about to make a most interesting experiment in bringing out a luxurious series of English Classics edited by the best men of letters and at a moderate price. They will be printed by Constable on laid paper with deckle edges, and bound in buckram. The price will be five shillings a volume, and there will be a small edition of seventy-five copies on Japanese vellum for epicures in literature. Mr. W. E. Henley will be editor-in-chief of the series. The venture is actually launched, for Tristram Shandy, with an introduction by Mr. Charles Whibley, was to be published on Monday. Mr. R. L. Stevenson is to edit The Pilgrim's Progress. The other announcements include Congreve's Plays, with an introduction by Mr. J. S. Street; Walton's Lives, with an introduction by Mr. Vernon Blackburn; The Adventures of Hajji Baba of Ispahan, with an introduction by Mr. E. G. Browne, reader in Persian at the University of Cambridge; Johnson's Lives of the Poets; and the poems of Burns. These volumes will follow each other at monthly intervals in the immediate future. Other volumes arranged for are Lyly's plays, with an introduction by Mr. Marriot Watson; Miss Austen's Pride and Prejudice, with an introduction by Mrs. Meynell; Sheridan's plays, Joseph Andrews, Humphry Clinker, Boswell's Journey, and Shakespeare's poems, all with the most competent editors. It will be a strange thing if this spirited venture does not have a striking success.

A novel of the hour is Mr. Frankfort Moore's witty, entertaining, audacious, outrageous One Fair Daughter, just published by Messrs. Hutchinson. It is not a novel for the young person, and indeed one fears that Mr. Moore has let his audacity run away with him, especially in the over-insistent suggestiveness of the last pages of the book; but it is immensely clever, and, unlike some of Mr. Moore's books, does not sacrifice the interest to the esprit.

A Husband of No Importance and The Silver Christ, by Ouida, are the two latest volumes of the Pseudonym Library. The Husband is poor stuff, but Ouida's two Italian stories are very picturesque and pathetic. It is a quieter Ouida, but an infinitely superior one to her of the guardsman, so jealously forbidden to us in our unsophisticated youth.

KATHARINE TYNAN HINKSON.

FICTION.

The Chase of Saint-Castin.

Mrs. Mary Hartwell Catherwood has made her readers expect to find in her books a high order of merit, but not so high an order of interest. The Chase of Saint-Castin is not an exception to this rule. Mrs. Catherwood's stories of the French in Canada all show research and careful work, but they do not show the story-teller's gift. "The Chase of Saint-Castin" and the six other tales in this volume are not without value from a historical point of view, and those who realize history best through the medium of historical fiction will do well to read them, but human interest is sadly lacking. Here and there the author displays unusual delicacy in her description of nature. One sentence we quote, so like is it to Eugénie de Guérin's loving appreciation of the minor cadences of the natural world: "The waiting April woods, sensitive in every leafless twig to spring, stood in silence and dim nightfall around a lodge." Mrs. Catherwood's fiction is very far removed from the slapdash, startle-you-at-all-hazards style of the fashionable story-tellers of the day, and we are glad to say that her comparative dullness is of a well-bred kind, which is rather a relief after the bustling vulgarity of many novels of the period. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

Vignettes of Manhattan.

A dozen stories, or vignettes, as Mr. Brander Matthews calls them, make up his latest volume. The sketches of New York life from Mulberry Bend to Fifth Avenue are of varying interest, but all are entertaining and well written. The Bowery "tough;" the earnest young fellow who lives in the College Settlement; the Western cowboy on a vacation, seeing New York and bringing his unsophisticated taste to bear on its attractions; the adopted son of New York, whose enthusiasm for his chosen city is so much greater than that of the New Yorker born and bred — these are some of the Manhattan types that Mr. Brander Matthews sets before us. His art is rather superficial and the dénouements of his stories for the most part very inadequate. If he had called his book "arabesques" it would have been a more suitable title, for the beginnings of his stories are carefully elaborated, and then when we come to the end we find little except meaningless scrollwork. The charm of the volume lies in its local color; and those who love New York from Central Park to the Battery, who feel the varying charm of the unpicturesque, ill-built town, whose very ugliness is so alluring, will welcome the glimpses which Mr. Matthews gives of Fifth Avenue on a frosty Thanksgiving Day, of the Park on a warm afternoon in October, of Delmonico's and the Madison Square Gardens, of the "Little Church round the Corner," and a hundred other familiar landmarks. — Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

My Lady Rotha.

The latest historical romance by Mr. Stanley J. Weyman is written with all the vigor of action and fascinating reproduction of earlier times that characterized and made interesting his other books. It is crowded brim full of exciting adventures and thrilling situations. The scene is laid in Germany at the time when Gustavus Adolphus championed the cause of Protestantism; and those troublous days, with alternations of victory and defeat and their contrasts between the imperious soldiery and the suffering peasants, are vividly set forth. The characters are new in fiction, or at least they present new combinations, and the reader follows with equal interest the varying course of Lady Rotha's capricious fancies, the honest love of her servitor, who tells the story, and the brave yet meek Catholic maiden, or the wonderful escapes of all from ever present danger. The world is not yet ready to give up its story-tellers who can make even a serious-minded reader forget time and place in following their fancies; and although we welcome the writers who make us think and who open to us unknown phases of the life around us, yet perhaps they do their work all the better when occasionally relieved by one like Mr. Weyman, who asks nothing of our brains or consciences, but skillfully weaves his tales, capturing imagination and interest together. — Longmans, Green & Co. $1.25.

A Husband of No Importance.

In Marcella Mrs. Humphry Ward made the opening plea for the unfortunate lovers and husbands of the so-called "modern woman." We had a second novel written on behalf of this down-trodden class of society in George Mandeville's Husband, and now comes a third brief in the Incognito Library. "Rita" has written a very clever little novel, although the didactic element is a little too strong for the plot. The heroine is the typical "modern woman" of the day — clever, intellectual, earnest, hard-working, totally devoid of sense of humor, and despising men as a race. She is, if the vulgarity of the phrase may be pardoned us, decidedly "struck on herself," and regards her husband as a mere trifle whose serious opinions are never to be taken into account. The development of the story is unfortunately a little too obviously in accord with the moral effect to be produced, and very much too good to be true, but as a whole A Husband of No Importance is a delightful book. The character-drawing is skillful, the conversations, with a few exceptions, entertaining, and the general trend of the book so good that we heartily recommend it to all, except those who are so fanatically attached to the "modern woman" that they cannot bear to see her submitted to a little wholesome ridicule. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

A Monk of the Aventine.

The old-fashioned style of romance, with much sentiment, sufficient moral lesson, and no delineation of character, still flourishes in Germany, and it is a work of supererogation on the part of the publishers to inform the readers of A Monk of the Aventine that the book is translated from the German. The scene of Ernst Eckstein's novel is laid in the tenth century during one of the numberless Roman insurrections. The hero is a monk, and the heroine Julia Colonna; this does not sound moral, but Herr Ernst Eckstein manages to make it perfectly so. The attractive part of A Monk of the Aventine is the poetry of the descriptions and the enthusiasm for "the Eternal City;" both of these are commendable, but the rest of the book is dull and unprofitable reading. — Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

Miss Hurd: an Enigma.

Mrs. Anna Katharine Green Rohlfs has completed an even dozen of detective stories, in which she traces the development, culmination, and explanation of the weirdest mysteries that ever puzzled a reader. They are published in ten volumes, including this last one, or rather latest one, for there is no reason for supposing either that Mrs. Rohlfs' ingenuity or the interest of her friends has given out. This is the story of "a strange, impenetrable, fascinating woman" who makes repeated attempts to escape from a hated husband, only to return meekly to him whenever he seeks her out and beckons her away. He is devoted to her, and he cannot help wanting her with him. After her final escape certain mysterious and ghastly circumstances lead to the suspicion that he has murdered her, and he is arrested. It would be unfair to relate the climax and outcome. The story is not nearly so exciting as some of the others, but, on the whole, it is cleverly managed. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

On Cloud Mountain.

"O, I'm out of conceit o' life — I've seen too much o' it. If anybody but the Lord had 'ranged it, ye'd heeir a turble howlin'; but as it is, 'pears like everybody feels bound to stick up t' everything's all right, 'n' it's our own fault if things ain't the way we want 'em. Ye' low I'm a wicked ole critter to talk so, don't ye? Well, I useter be a purty good Christian myself afore the Lord got down on me, 'n' even arter that I useter pray 't my faith might overtop my reason; but now I think what I like, 'n' speak right up in meetin' if I feel like it, 'n' if the Lord don't find it agribble he needn't listen. I don't 'pose to go atiptoein' through life, afeerd o' disturbin' him. He don't take me into 'count when he does disagreeable things." Thus speaks Mr. Irish, the most amusing of the characters of Mr. Frederick T. Clark's noteworthy novel, On Cloud Mountain. In spite of many faults of construction and a painfully weak ending, Mr. Clark's story of Colorado life is well worth reading for its sense of humor as well as for the remarkable study of the revolt of a weak, timid woman against her brutal husband, and of the slow growth of fear into an absolute hatred which stops at nothing, not even at murder. The character of Julius Irish, though carefully elaborated, is dim and shadowy, perhaps on account of the very fact of the elaboration with which he is described. As a whole, On Cloud Mountain is an unusually strong novel. — Harper & Brothers. $1.00.

The Search for Andrew Field.

In this book Mr. Everett T. Tomlinson begins a series of stories for young people based upon incidents in the War of 1812. It is a praiseworthy plan, and if the coming volumes are as interesting as this the class of readers for whom they are intended will get an insight into the condition of things and the circumstances and events of a period with which they have hitherto had comparatively slight acquaintance. Andrew Field is a bright, manly young fellow who is seized by the "press gang" while out on a fishing trip with his brother. The story tells how two heroic and loyal boys set out to find and rescue him. The narrative is spirited; the places visited and the events are historic. Apart from the fascination boys will find in these pages there is a probability that their minds will be stimulated to a study of the history of those times. The author twice falls into the error of having Andrew's family sing a favorite hymn which, as a matter of fact, was not written till many years later. — Lee & Shepard. $1.50.

Bohemia as typified by Parisian studio life is an excellent thing for a young American girl to keep out of, especially if she goes there expecting to find American codes and principles in force. Miss Gertrude Christian Fosdick takes the heroine of her novel through various studio experiences, and finally brings her Out of Bohemia unscathed, although she undergoes a number of unpleasant adventures en route. This is rather an absurd little story, but it will prove a most valuable book if it should open the eyes of American parents to the risks they run in allowing their daughters to go to Paris to study art or music alone and unchaperoned, expecting that they will meet with the respect and consideration which they would find in an American city. But one may hope that the average American girl art-student would at least know better than to dance "that most abandoned of all dances, the Spanish cachucha," at a public, art-students' ball, and so avoid some of the misadventures into which Miss Fosdick's heroine falls. — George H. Richmond & Co.

Any one who longs for the bracing air of Colorado and cannot get it will do the next best thing by reading Miss Anna Fuller's Peak and Prairie. The little book is refreshing from cover to cover. The reader may breathe in new life through these pages. The stories are Colorado breezes. The book is one of ranch life and primitive school teaching, mining speculations and symphony concerts, college graduates and cowboys. When Pratt Portraits appeared Miss Fuller's forte seemed to be drawing New England character, but now she has proved herself so sympathetically conversant with "all sorts and conditions" that it would be no surprise if her next venture was in the far, far South. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.

With the Help of the Angels, by Wilfrid Woollam, is a story of the wanderings of an unfortunate artist and his best friend, a little ten-year-old boy. The artist was heartsick because his world cared more for money than for art. The little boy did not belong to any one, so the two ran away together. Their love for each other, and the subsequent test of the love when the child's father is found, make up the story, with just the tinge of a woman's influence in the background. There are a good many clever touches that one will read over twice to be sure and remember. — Harper & Brothers. 50c.

Lesser's Daughter, in the Incognito Library, is a well-written but painful story by Mrs. Andrew Dean. The characters are drawn with skill and sustained throughout. Lesser is of Jewish race, awkward and unattractive, and wedded to a superbly beautiful woman who married him for his money and despises him. The relations between the two and the only daughter are inharmonious. The devotion and the weakness of the father are pathetic. The little story is a study of individuals in a false but not uncommon situation. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

Eleven stories reprinted from American and foreign periodicals make up the contents of the volume entitled Before the Gringo Came, by Gertrude Atherton. All relate to old California, and, naturally, have thrilling and often tragic episodes. They are written in a vivacious style, and have a novelty and picturesqueness peculiarly their own. They are legendary and romantic, with Indians, charming señoritas, caballeros, brigands, priests, and roving Americans among the chief characters. — J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $1.00.

The second issue in the pretty and handy Autonym Library contains two stories by Mary Putnam Jacobi — Found and Lost, first published in the Atlantic Monthly, and A Sermon at Notre-Dame, which appeared in Putnam's Monthly. Both are characterized by intensity of feeling; the subjects are unique, and the style is finished and classic. They are worthy of preservation in their present form. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

MINOR NOTICES.

Diary of Anna Green Winslow.

The handiwork of our great-grandmothers is recalled at the sight of the canvas covers of this little volume, with its quaint lettering in faded colors and decorative lines after the pattern of the old-fashioned "samplers." Equally quaint is the text, the Diary of a Boston Schoolgirl, written by Anna Green Winslow in 1771. This child, for she was only a child of ten at the time, was sent from Nova Scotia to Boston, the birthplace of her parents, to be "finished" in Boston schools. The loving and thoughtful little creature began to keep a journal forthwith, partly for the sake of those at home and also for her own mental improvement. She makes a note of the Sunday sermons, and comments upon the same with a gravity becoming her years. She writes about her hats and ribbons and gloves, her new shifts, her patchwork, and her "Heddus" (headdress), about funerals, weddings, dances, parties, the weather and people, touching on a hundred topics in her child way, giving glimpses inadvertently of the Boston of that time as she knew it. The little Anna was not as rare and choice a being as precious Marjorie Fleming, yet on every page she reminds one of that immortal child. Six old-time pictures illustrate the book, and there are about fifty pages of introduction and valuable historical notes, the careful work of the editor, Mrs. Alice Morse Earle. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

A Song of Companies.

Orrin Cedesman Stevens, who published a small volume of poems entitled An Idyl of the Sun a few years ago, now sends out another. These poems are thoughtful and earnest in spirit, with considerable felicity of expression, at least occasionally. Usually they are speculative and philosophical, but verses like "Lynched" show eager indignation against present wrongs. "A Winter Night" is the one we like best of all, and it contains some fine lines:

Intense preoccupation of the sky,
Faced by the earth's impenetrable sleep.
Standing alone upon a hillock steep,
I am as one between, whom both deny.
Chill seem those starry fires; they are too high
For any warmth down to this heart to creep;
And earth's concentrate passion lies too deep
To be unloosened by a human cry.

Strange, mystic anger swells into the heart;
Some older rock of knowledge seems its source,
And pains of long-numbed thought within me dart;
Vaguely I feel as part of that old force
That set the heavens at their silent toils,
And lays the earth in slumber's icy coils.

— Holyoke, Mass.: H. C. Cady.

Christianity in the Home.

In the sunset hour of life, and looking back over it through a long perspective of sympathetic work for humanity, Doctor Theodore L. Cuyler sends forth from time to time a volume which in words and spirit is as sweet as honey dropping from the comb. He knows well the average man, but knows him not as does the cynic or the misanthrope, but as the kindly friend and loving helper. He also loves the good old Anglo-Saxon, and is fond of small words that are like arrow tips sharp and penetrating. In the right sense of the word he draws a long bow, sending his shafts well feathered with illustrations straight to the mark. He takes the old Biblical characters and shows their counterparts in the life of today, applying the changeless lessons of morality and the higher truths of the gospel to the heart and mind of his readers. There is none of the garrulousness of age in this book, for he who was so long a popular Metropolitan preacher still believes in short sermons. The homilies in this handy volume average only ten pages. The titles are delightfully suggestive. Of several of which we have tasted, we have enjoyed for its wit, "snap," common sense, and genuine Christianity that entitled "Sampsons under the Shears," while those entitled "Olive-tree Christians and Palace Car Piety" are especially good. A vein of optimism runs through the doctor's discourses, and probably the best expression of it in a single sermon is in the one entitled "Blue Skies after Rain." — The Baker & Taylor Co.

Lieut. A. W. Greely has done well to condense the well-known account of his Lady Franklin Bay expedition of 1881–84 into one large volume of some seven hundred pages. Three Years of Arctic Service retains all the photographic reproductions of the larger work, and only such scientific and historical portions have been omitted as were not needful for a full understanding of the expedition. It is a story of heroism and adventure that has few parallels. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $5.00.

The Catalogue of Greek, Etruscan, and Roman Vases in the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, fills a handsome volume of some two hundred and fifty pages. Mr. Edward Robinson, the curator of classical antiquities, furnishes a scholarly introduction, giving a sketch of the history of Greek vases, an account of the methods of manufacture, and a list of makers and painters. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

Mr. Edward Whymper's remarkable book of Travels amongst the Great Andes of the Equator, which is a rare combination of scientific research and bold adventure, is reissued by the Scribners at a reduced price, but without abridgment of the text or impairment of the mechanical quality of the volume. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.00.

PERIODICALS.

The New England Magazine in its October number has a fine portrait of Bryant and a thoughtful paper on "Bryant, the Poet of Nature," by Forrest F. Emerson. An anniversary article which will be eagerly read, especially by New England people, is that on "Rehoboth and Attleboro." Middlebury College is the theme of another fully illustrated article. This little Vermont college has had a noble career. Francis S. Fiske contributes a stirring article, "At the Battle of Bull Run with the Second New Hampshire Regiment." Herman Babson, in a fully illustrated article, describes the building of the great new breakwater at Cape Ann. Oscar Fay Adams pays a tribute to Samuel Longfellow. An article on "Gleanings in Carlyle's Country," by Henry Charles Shelley, is illustrated by views of Carlyle's birthplace and grave and many scenes in Ecclefechan and the other Scotch places which his life touched. The Editor's Table is devoted to a critical study of John Cotton's farewell sermon to Winthrop's company at Southampton, on "God's Promise to His Plantations," the historical significance of which seems to have been strangely overlooked, but which holds the same relation to the Massachusetts colony which John Robinson's famous farewell address at Delfshaven holds to the Pilgrim Fathers.

The Economic Journal for September opens with an address by Prof. J. S. Nicholson, on "Political Economy and Journalism," of much interest. The second part of Mr. Edwin Cannan's paper sketches "Ricardo in Parliament." Prof. F. Y. Edgeworth continues his "Theory of International Value" in a paper full of those curves and diagrams which do so much to darken economics. Mr. L. L. Price is much more complimentary to "The Report of the Labour Commission" than Mrs. Webb. He shows how important is the office of arbitration and conciliation, which "impatient reformers" think little of, but on which "sober common sense" will dwell with emphasis. Mr. A. W. Flux begins a consideration of "The Commercial Supremacy of Great Britain," and Mr. C. S. Loch severely criticises "Mr. Charles Booth on the Aged Poor." In his review of Mr. Kidd's Social Evolution Mr. Price expresses the sober second thought of many when he says, "We have rarely read a book more interesting and more stimulating, which yet appears, the longer we reflect upon it, to grow vaguer, more paradoxical, and more elusive." There is the usual abundance of strong book reviews and valuable "notes and memoranda," many of which are really short articles on their subjects.

Charles Malato, an anarchist, paints "Some Anarchist Portraits" in the Fortnightly Review for September, which no one but an anarchist will probably recognize; but M. Paul Verlaine's "Shakespeare and Racine" is almost as amusing in its sober balancing of the French dramatist with the English. Mr. Lionel Johnson writes eulogistically of "The Work of Mr. Pater," saying "there could hardly have been a greater loss to contemporary literature just at the present time; the champion of no school, he was almost alone among the writers of English prose in simply maintaining an ideal of high severity and excellence." Prof. Karl Pearson scores Lord Salisbury severely in his article on "Politics and Science." "Oxford vs. Yale," "The Rajahs of Sarawak," "Professor Henry Drummond's Discovery," and "The Municipal Museums of Paris" are other subjects here treated.

"The Seven Lord Roseberies" is the title of the first article in the Nineteenth Century for September, by St. Loe Strachey, the hostile animus of which can easily be conjectured. The Countess of Galloway gives a brief account of "Wagner at Bayreuth." Prof. Max Müller easily disposes of "The Alleged Sojourn of Christ in India." R. Vasudeva Rau, a Mohammedan, answers the question, "Did Omar destroy the Alexandrian Library?" in the negative, but his paper reads like a special plea. Prof. A. R. Wallace's "Suggestion to Sabbath-Keepers" is that they relieve those who have to work seven days in the week by voluntary relief on Sunday or a part of it. "A Dialogue on Dress," by the Hon. Mrs. Chapman; "A Scottish Vendetta," by Sir Herbert Maxwell; and "A Trip to Bosnia-Herzegovina," by Mons. de Blowitz, are three other noticeable articles.

In the Contemporary Review for September Mr. Herbert Spencer takes up "Weismannism Once More," of course disposing of it effectually to his own mind; the current of scientific thought seems to be setting against the German professor, however. A. N. Jannaris thinks that he has discovered many inaccuracies in "The English Version of the Lord's Prayer," but his foreign birth will probably account for the novelty, to him, of most of his discoveries. "Joseph Priestley in Domestic Life" is an interesting narrative by Bessie Rayner Belloc. The "Poets of Provence" are again described by Cécile Hartog. Mr. John Rae shows what "The Work of the Beer-Money" has been in building up technical education in England in the last few years. Prince Kropotkin is "Our Most Distinguished Refugee" whom Edith Sellers rapturously depicts.

The Portfolio for September is an appreciative monograph on Thomas Gainsborough, by Mr. Walter Armstrong. It has four plates and twenty-one illustrations in the text. Mr. Armstrong concludes that "Gainsborough's position in the hierarchy of artists . . . depends on qualities analogous to those which have put Burns in the front rank among poets. . . . His art was all art. It was the pure, spontaneous expression of a personality into which no anti-artistic leaven had been mixed. In his finest portraits of women he touches a height reached by no one else. . . . No other painter has dazzled us with means so slight. Many of his most perfect things are at once superb in color and scarcely more than monochromes. [His pictures] are simply germs born of the fire struck out at the contact of a rare artistic spirit with the beauty of the world."

In the Magazine of Poetry for October George P. Morris, J. G. Saxe, and Halleck furnish three subjects for portraits and selections; but the popular poet of the number is certainly Stephen C. Foster, the composer, whose songs, "Old Kentucky Home," "Old Dog Tray," "Willie, We Have Missed You," "Massa's in de Cold Ground," and "Old Folks at Home," are given.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—Messrs. T. & T. Clark of Edinburgh announce a new series of Commentaries on the Old and New Testaments, under the editorship of Professors S. R. Driver, Alfred Plummer, and C. A. Briggs. Among contributors to the series will be, besides the editors, in England, Professors Davidson, Cheyne, Kirkpatrick, Sanday, A. R. S. Kennedy, and G. A. Smith, and in America, Professors Francis Brown, W. R. Harper, G. F. Moore, and Warfield. The first two commentaries, to be published early in the new year, will be those on Deuteronomy, by Professor Driver, and Judges, by Prof. G. F. Moore.

—Dyrsen & Pfeiffer issue a prospectus of L'Art de l'Imprimerie pendant la Renaissance Italienne, which is to be issued in sumptuous fashion by Ferd. Ongania, Venice. The division will be chronologically by cities, from Rome, 1465, to Forli, 1495, each city having a volume to itself. There will be in each ninety-six pages of facsimiles of printers' marks, type, ornaments, bindings, etc., calculated to serve as models of taste to our modern printers and bookmakers. The subscription price per series is ten francs, or 140 for the whole.

—The reports of the ladies selected by the Gilchrist Trustees to study and report upon secondary schools for girls and training colleges for women in the United States of America are about to be published (with a preface to each by Dr. Roberts) by Messrs. Sonnenschein & Co., under the following titles: (1) The Training of Teachers in the United States, by Misses Bramwell and Hughes; (2) The Education of Girls in the United States, by Miss Burstall; (3) The Methods of Education in the United States, by Miss Zimmern; (4) The Graded Schools of the United States, by Miss Page.

—Tell me, Mrs. Sarah Grand
(What I ill can understand),
Why your men are all so horrid,
All with "a retreating forehead?"

Why your women all are decked
With every gift of intellect,
And yet—invariably wed
These knights of the retreating head?

She, as bright as a geranium;
He, a simian type of cranium—
Why, with decent chaps all round her,
Choose an atavistic Bounder?

We are apes—well, let that pass,
Need she, therefore, be an ass?
Tell me, tell me, Sarah Grand,
For I do not understand!

—Westminster Gazette.

—Professor F. N. Scott of Ann Arbor has prepared a circular of questions upon disputed points of English usage, which he will send to any one interested in the subject who will take the trouble to answer the questions.

—Corea, the Hermit Nation, by the Rev. Dr. William Elliot Griffis, is one of the timeliest books of the day, though it was published by Charles Scribner & Sons in 1882. When he wrote it, Dr. Griffis was already known as the author of The Mikado's Empire, published by Harper & Brothers. He was engaged in educational work in Japan for several years before the latter book appeared. Since he resigned the pastorate of the Shawmut Congregational Church in Boston, Dr. Griffis has been stationed at Ithaca, N. Y.

—The prices of rare books constantly fluctuate and from many causes, but nothing more frequently induces depreciation in value than the sudden discovery of a parcel of copies long hidden and unknown. Until quite recently one of the scarcest of the first editions of the writings of Charles Dickens was a thin octavo pamphlet of seventy-one pages, entitled The Village Coquettes: a Comic Opera (in two acts. London: Richard Bentley, 1836). So rare was this book that very few collectors could boast the possession of it, and an uncut example might always be sold for £30 or £40. About a year before his death Dickens was asked by Mr. Locker-Lampson whether he had a copy; his reply was, "No, and if I knew it was in my house, and if I could not get rid of it in any other way, I would burn the wing of the house where it was"—the words, no doubt, being spoken in jest. Not long since a mass of waste paper from a printer's warehouse was returned to the mills to be pulped, and would certainly have been destroyed had not one of the workmen employed upon the premises caught sight of the name of "Charles Dickens" upon some of the sheets. The whole parcel was carefully examined, and the searchers were rewarded by the discovery of nearly a hundred copies of The Village Coquettes in quires clean and unfolded. These were passed into the market, and the price at once fell to something like £5. A fine copy in handsome binding has just been sold by Messrs. Sotheby for £6 10*s*.—London Chronicle.

—Mr. Pater's last publication, The Child in the House, contains reminiscences of his own early years and deals particularly with his first impressions of death—"the fear of death intensified by the desire of beauty." Though issued only a few weeks ago from the press of the author's friend, Mr. Daniel at Oxford, The Child in the House was actually written in 1878. Only 250 copies were printed, and Mr. Pater intended to issue it later as one of a second series of Imaginary Portraits. He had two or three other chapters in view for this volume, including a paper published not long ago in an American magazine.

—What promises to be a volume specially interesting to book-lovers is in course of preparation by Mr. Roberts, the editor of the Bookworm. It is to be called A Book-Hunter in London: Historical and Personal Studies of Book-Collectors and Book-Collecting. It will tell the story of the author's many years of inveterate book-hunting, and will be rich in historical notes on book-hunters and thieves, collectors, catalogues and prices. It is to have many illustrations.

—Mr. Fisher Unwin has arranged to publish a translation of Professor Villari's Storia di Firenze. The work (part of which has already appeared in the Italian) will be comprised in two volumes and give a general history of all the political revolutions of Florence, together with that of the numerous constitutions and forms of government from the origin of the commune to a period a little later than the death of Dante. The first volume will appear in the autumn.

—The Soldier's Pocket Bible, which is usually called "Cromwell's Soldiers' Bible," was compiled by Edmund Calamy and published by authority in 1643. The only copy known in England is in the British Museum. This is being reproduced in facsimile by Mr. Elliot Stock, and will be issued very shortly. An introduction, giving an account of the origin of the Bible and the various forms in which it was published, will be added, and Lord Wolseley furnishes a preface.

—Messrs. Methuen & Co. have in preparation a new series of English classics, edited by Mr. W. E. Henley. Mr. R. L. Stevenson has written an introduction to The Pilgrim's Progress, and other well-known authors have also promised to coöperate with the editor.

—Oliver Wendell Holmes was born in Cambridge, Mass., August 29, 1809, in the old Holmes house, since removed to make room for the Law School. His father, Abiel Holmes, a scholar and antiquarian, was pastor of the First Church for many years. His mother was a Wendell of Dutch descent. Governors Thomas Dudley and Simon Bradstreet were ancestors, and the Olivers, Quincys, and Jacksons were related families. The young Holmes went to school in Cambridgeport, and prepared for Harvard at Phillips Andover Academy. Among his classmates in the noted class of 1829 were W. H. Channing, James Freeman Clarke, B. R. Curtis, and Benjamin Pierce. For a year after graduation he studied law at Harvard, writing at this time "Old Ironsides" and "The Last Leaf." In 1833 he took up the study of medicine, and spent three years abroad in England and France. He was chosen professor of anatomy at Dartmouth College, which he left soon after his marriage, in 1841, to Amelia Lee Jackson, and in 1847 he became professor of anatomy and physiology in the Harvard Medical School. His volumes of poetry begin with the collection of 1836, then came Urania (1845), Astræa (1850), Songs in Many Keys (1861), Songs of Many Seasons (1875), The Iron Gate (1880). The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table was contributed to the Atlantic Monthly from its beginning in 1857; the Professor followed in 1859; thirteen years later Dr. Holmes renewed the series in the Poet. His two novels proper were Elsie Venner (1861) and The Guardian Angel (1868), to which is to be added A Mortal Antipathy (1885). Mechanism in Thought and Words appeared in 1871, the Memoir of John Lothrop Motley in 1879, and the Memoir of R. W. Emerson in 1884. One Hundred Days in Europe is an informal record of Dr. Holmes' second trip to Europe in 1887. His death, from old age, took place in Boston, on Sunday, October 7, and his funeral was observed in King's Chapel on October 10, Rev. E. E. Hale reading the service. Dr. Holmes sleeps in Mount Auburn by the side of his wife, who died in 1888. His son, bearing his name, is Mr. Justice Holmes of the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court.

—A private letter in the Friend's Intelligencer and Journal gives some interesting information about Mr. Ruskin:

> I am now in the old house of the lords of Borrowdale, with walls a yard thick and oak carving all about. I have come down the path from the Wastdale direction, which Macaulay says was kept as a secret by the lawless dalesmen in 1688. It was a great delight to me to meet my honored teacher, John Ruskin, at Coniston yesterday. Ten years ago he kindly showed me over his house and treasures; now he is feeble, both in body and mind, and goes very slow little constitutionals with a caretaker, but he remains the man best worth seeing in all England in my opinion. His stoop is become more pronounced, and his beard he has allowed to grow very long. His brown, soft hat almost touches his blue, smooth overcoat behind, and he carries his hands clasped behind his back. As I reverently raised my hat he responded by raising his, but looked just a little embarrassed rather than sociable, so I did not speak, but passed on. His mind has succumbed to cerebral inflammation, but he is happy and peaceful so long as he does not work. His cousin, Joan Severn, with her husband (an artist) and children, live with him, and Brantwood is a large and cheerful home.

—A contributor to the Pall Mall Gazette gives a doleful account of Carlyle's house in Chelsea. Outside and in, according to his description, it is in a state of lamentable decay and uncleanness. Broken glass, dirt, cobwebs, dilapidation — in a word, general foulness and squalor — distinguish the house in which lived the foremost man of letters of the nineteenth century. The whole forms a curious commentary on the English reverence for genius and the spirit of hero-worship so greatly extolled by Carlyle himself. Some years ago, we believe, Mr. Andrew Carnegie wished to buy the house, but there were legal difficulties in the way. Now these have evidently been removed, and the place is for sale. Indeed, an appeal has been made for funds to buy the property, and there is every prospect that money enough will be subscribed for the purpose. Those who are disposed to support the scheme are requested to communicate with Mr. A. C. Miller, 61 Cecil Street, Greenheys, Manchester.

—Mrs. Augusta Webster, who died lately in Kew, England, has been ranked by some critics as being second to Robert Browning as a dramatist and poet. She was born in 1840 at Poole, Dorsetshire, and was the daughter of Vice-Admiral George Davies. In 1863 she was married to Thomas Webster, a law lecturer and fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Among her best-known works are In a Day, a drama; Yu-Pe-Ya's Lute, a Chinese tale in English verse; Lesley's Guardians; The Prometheus Bound of Æschylus; The Auspicious Day, a drama; Disguises, a drama; and Daffodil and Croaxaxians, a romance of history. Many of her productions appeared under the pseudonym of Cecil Home.

—Mr. Noah Farnham Morrison's catalogue, dated this month, includes a varied list of rare and curious books and pamphlets on Americana, Indiana, masonry, and other subjects. His address is No. 877 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.

—Signor Crispi employs his scanty leisure moments in writing a History of the Marsala Thousand (Storia degli Mille), setting forth in detail Garibaldi's expedition at the head of his faithful 1,000 comrades against the kingdom of the Two Sicilies in 1860. The book will chronicle all the preparatory negotiations as well as the military events from the landing at Marsala to the capture of Gaëta. The Italian premier has a vast number of hitherto unpublished documents bearing on the troublous period in question to bring forward.

—Prof. David Swing, the popular liberal preacher, died in Chicago, Ill., on the 2d inst., aged sixty-four years. He was born in Cincinnati. In 1866 he became pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church of Chicago and continued for several years, but charges of heterodoxy were preferred against him by Rev. Francis L. Patton in 1874. He was acquitted after a long and sensational trial, upon the conclusion of which he withdrew from the Presbyterian Church. His sermons in book form became as popular in the West as Beecher's sermons in the East. Besides his sermons he also published Truths for To-Day, Motives of Life, and Club Essays.

—The committee, of which the Speaker of the House of Commons is president, having in charge the raising of a Jowett Memorial Fund reports that it has received from about 850 subscribers the sum of £10,100, of which £600 will be devoted to a bust for deposit in the Bodleian and a monument in the chapel where Dr. Jowett used to preach. The remainder will be used to carry out the other and chief aim of the fund, viz., "to maintain, strengthen, and extend the educational work of Balliol College." Pledges are now called in, and may (along with new subscriptions) be sent to the Hon. Secretary, Philip Lyttelton Gell, Langley Lodge, Oxford.

—The title of Mr. J. M. Barrie's new novel will be Sentimental Tommy. It will not be completed until next spring.

—Congressman Champ Clark of Missouri is about to write a biography of Stephen A. Douglas.

—Mrs. Oliphant's only son died October 11. The distinguished authoress will have the sympathy of a wide circle of admirers in her loss.

—An inexpensive series of Economic Classics is to be published by Macmillan during the coming winter under the editorship of W. J. Ashley, professor of economic history in Harvard University. It will embrace three divisions into (1) select chapters from the great so-called classical economists — Adam Smith, Malthus, Ricardo (this with an eye to ready consultation by students); (2) reprints of older English works — Mun, Child, Petty; (3) translations of important foreign treatises — Roscher, Von Thünen, Hermann. The volumes will be uniform except in thickness and not numbered, and will be issued at 75 cents. The only notes will be biographical and bibliographical.

—George H. Richmond & Co., New York, have in press a series of satirical essays and humorous sketches relating to modern fiction, under the title of The Literary Shop, from the pen of James L. Ford.

—The World Beautiful, soon to be published by Roberts Brothers, is made up of recent articles in the Boston Budget and Le Beau Monde, by Miss Lilian Whiting.

—Not content with his successes in one branch of art, Mr. Aubrey Beardsley has decided to try his hand at another. Mr. John Lane will publish shortly a book by him with the following title: "The story of Venus and Tannhäuser; in which is set forth an exact account of the manner of state held by Madam Venus, Goddess and Meretrix, under the famous Hörselberg, and containing the adventures of Tannhäuser in that place, his repentance, his journey to Rome, and return to the loving mountain." The volume will contain about 130 pages of letterpress, "twenty full-page illustrations, and numerous ornaments from the same hand."

—Prof. Vincenzo Botta died in New York on the 5th inst., from the effects of a fall from a window in the third story rear of his house. He was born in Italy, November 11, 1818. After he was graduated from the University of Turin he became a professor in that institution. In 1853 he came to New York to study the public school system; he did not, however, return to his native country, but became naturalized, and was elected to fill the chair of languages in the University of New York. In 1855 he married Anna Charlotte Lynch, the author. Professor Botta's best-known works are: Account of the System of Education in Piedmont; Discourse on the Life, Character, and Policy of Cavour; Dante as a Philosopher, Patriot, and Poet; An Historical Account of Modern Philosophy in Italy, and An Introduction to Dante.

—The Tauchnitz Library has just reached its 3,000th volume.

— A book of great historical and social importance which may be expected soon is Horace Walpole's Memoirs of the Reign of King George the Third, first published by Sir Denis Le Marchant and now reëdited by G. F. Russell Barker. The book, which is in four volumes, will be published by Messrs. Lawrence & Bullen. It will contain several unpublished portraits of Reynolds.

— Wm. Blackwood & Sons, London, have just issued the late Professor Minto's Literature of the Georgian Era.

— Frederick H. Hitchcock, 55 West 26th St., New York, will publish, by subscription, a new and revised edition of the History of Amherst College, by the venerable Dr. William S. Tyler, the official historian of the college. At the time of the semicentennial celebration in 1871 he prepared the first and, until now, the only history of the college ever published. His long and intimate acquaintance with Amherst and the high positions he has held in connection with the administration of the college especially fit him to be the author of its history. There will be an author's autograph edition (numbered) and a plain edition.

— Several Kelmscott Press publications are nearly ready. Among them are The Wood Beyond the World, a new romance by William Morris, with a woodcut designed by Sir E. Burne-Jones; Shelley's Poems, in three volumes; Beowulf, Englished by William Morris and A. J. Wyatt; Psalmi Penitentiales, a fifteenth century paraphrase, edited by F. S. Ellis; and The Life and Death of Jason, by William Morris, with woodcuts designed by Sir E. Burne-Jones.

— E. P. Dutton & Co. have in press The Autobiography of a Show Dog, by Dr. Gordon Stables; The Lady of the Forest, by L. T. Meade; Hollyberry Janet, by Maggie Symington; also, That Bother of a Boy, by Grace Stebbing, and Lord Lynton's Ward, by Helena Brooks, both stories intended for children.

— Catechism for Social Observation is the title of a booklet prepared by Dr. Charles R. Henderson of the University of Chicago, whose Introduction to the Study of Dependent, Defective, and Delinquent Classes last year attracted much attention. The book will be published by D. C. Heath & Co., Boston.

— A comical tribute to the vigor of Mr. T. B. Aldrich's verse is mentioned by the Boston correspondent of the Book-Buyer. One of the poems in Aldrich's coming volume is entitled "Insomnia," and is a picturesque record of the "horrors of sleeplessness." When this first appeared in a magazine it so deeply impressed the public that the poet received from many sympathetic strangers advertisements of sure cures for the trouble so graphically described. "The amusing part of it is," adds the correspondent, "Mr. Aldrich admits that there never was a sounder sleeper than he."

— We hear that the late Mr. Walter Pater has left behind him a considerable number of unpublished essays, which are being prepared for he press by his friend, Mr. C. L. Shadwell, whose graceful and scholarly translation of the Purgatorio of Dante will be familiar to many of our readers. The first volume to be issued will be a collection of Greek Studies. It will be followed by another which will contain several essays of a similar character to those in Imaginary Portraits. Mr. Pater's unfinished work, Gaston de Latour will also be republished in due course. — The Bookman.

— The monument to Shelley, at Viareggio, was unveiled recently. The committee having the work in charge included Mr. Gladstone, Algernon Swinburne, Edmondo de Amicis, Felix Cavallotti, Ruggiero Bonghi, and Menotti Garibaldi, the Italians being also the principal contributors to the fund. The inscription on the monument is as follows: "To Percy Bysshe Shelley. Heart of Hearts. Drowned in this sea; cremated on this spot, where he composed Prometheus Unbound. A posthumous page wherein every generation will have a token of its struggles, its tears, and its redemption."

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the Literary World are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biography.

Boswell's Life of Johnson. Edited by Mowbray Morris. With thirty-four portraits. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $3.00

James Henry Chapin. A Sketch of his Life and Work. By George Sumner Wheeler, D.D. With illustrations and portrait. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

Life and Letters of Erasmus. By J. A. Froude. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50

The Empress Eugénie. By Pierre de Lano. Trans. by Ethelred Taylor. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25

The Writings of Thomas Paine. Collected and edited by Moncure D. Conway. Vol. II. 1779–1792. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50

Dictionary of National Biography. Edited by Sidney Lee. Vol. XL. Myllar–Nicholls. Macmillan & Co. $3.75

Napoleon, Lover and Husband. By Frédéric Masson. Trans. by J. M. Howell. The Merriam Co. $2.00

The Writings of Thomas Jefferson. Collected and edited by Paul Leicester Ford. Vol. IV. 1784–1787. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $5.00

Father Eells. A Biography of Rev. Cushing Eells, D.D. By Myron Eells. Congregational S. S. and Pub. Society. $1.25

William Shakspere. A Study in Elizabethan Literature. By Barrett Wendell. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.75

Child-Life and Girlhood of Remarkable Women. By W. H. Davenport Adams. E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.50

Economics and Politics.

Wealth against Commonwealth. By Henry Demarest Lloyd. Harper & Brothers. $2.50

City Government in the United States. By Alfred R. Conkling. D. Appleton & Co. $1.00

Educational.

Halévy's L'Abbé Constantin. Edited by Thomas Logie, Ph.D. D. C. Heath & Co. 30c.

Maynard's French Texts. Huit Contes. By Marie Minssen. Maynard, Merrill & Co. 20c.

Maynard's German Texts. Bilder aus der Turkei. Maynard, Merrill & Co. 25c.

Nature Stories for Young Readers. Animal Life. By Florence Bass. D. C. Heath & Co. 35c.

The History of the English Language. By Oliver Farrar Emerson. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

A Manual of Hygiene. By Mary Taylor Bissell, M D. The Baker & Taylor Co.

A Concise Anglo-Saxon Dictionary. For the Use of Students. By John R. Clark Hall, M.A., Ph.D. Macmillan & Co. $4.50

Second Book in Physiology and Hygiene. By J. H. Kellogg, M.D. Illustrated. American Book Co. 80c.

A Laboratory Manual in Elementary Biology. By Emanuel R. Boyer. D. C. Heath & Co. 80c.

Essays and Sketches.

Old European Jewries. By David Philipson, D.D. Jewish Publication Society of America.

Secrets of Happy Home Life. By J. R. Miller, D.D. T. Y. Crowell & Co. 35c.

My First Book. The Experiences of Walter Besant, James Payn, W. Clark Russell, Rudyard Kipling, and others. With an introduction by Jerome K. Jerome. J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.50

The Birds About Us. By Charles Conrad Abbott, M.D. J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.00

Character Studies, with Some Personal Recollections. Thomas Whittaker. $1.00

Childhood in Literature and Art. A Study. By Horace E. Scudder. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

The College Woman. By Charles Franklin Thwing, LL.D. The Baker & Taylor Co. $1.00

The English Novel. By Walter Raleigh. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25

German Society at the Close of the Middle Ages. By E. Belfort Bax. Macmillan & Co. $1.75

From Blomidon to Smoky, and Other Papers. By Frank Bolles. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

Is Suicide a Sin? Robert G. Ingersoll's Famous Letter, and Replies. Standard Pub. Co. 25c.

Woman's Share in Primitive Culture. By Otis Tufton Mason. Illustrated. D. Appleton & Co.

Fiction.

Pomona's Travels. By Frank R. Stockton. Illustrated by A. B. Frost. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00

When All the Woods are Green. A Novel. By S. Weir Mitchell. The Century Co. $1.50

Half Brothers. By Hesba Stretton. The Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

Nurse Elisia. By G. Manville Fenn. The Cassell Publishing Co. 50c.

The Untempered Wind. By Joanna E. Wood. J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $1.00

Writing to Rosina. By W. H. Bishop. The Century Co. $1.00

P'tit Matinic', and Other Monotones. By Geo. Wharton Edwards. The Century Co. $1.00

Gray Rocks. A Tale of the Middle West. By Willis George Emerson. Laird & Lee. $1.00

A Family Dilemma. By Lucy C. Lillie. Illustrated. Porter & Coates. $1.25

Lourdes. By Emile Zola. Trans. by Ernest A. Vizetelly. F. Tennyson Neely. $1.25

Catherine de' Medici. By Honoré de Balzac. Trans. by Katharine Prescott Wormeley. Roberts Brothers. $1.50

A Mild Barbarian. A Novel. By Edgar Fawcett. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Sir Robert's Fortune. A Novel. By Mrs. Oliphant. Harper & Brothers. $1.50

Danvis Folks. By Rowland E. Robinson. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

Another Girl's Experience. By Leigh Webster. Roberts Brothers. $1.25

The Green Carnation. D. Appleton & Co. 75c.

A Drama in Dutch. By Z. Z. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

The Count of Monte Cristo. By Alexandre Dumas. Illustrated. In two volumes. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $3.00

The Wagner Story Book. Firelight Tales of the Great Music Dramas. By Wm. Henry Frost. Illustrated. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

Thrown Away. By Nat Gould ("Verax"). George Routledge & Sons. 50c.

Gerald Ffrench's Friends. By George H. Jessup. Longmans, Green & Co. 50c.

The Sea Wolves. A Novel. By Max Pemberton. Harper & Brothers. 50c.

Mystery of Hotel Brichet. Trans. from the French of Eugene Chavette. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

Kathie's Margaret. By Lydia L. Rouse. American Baptist Pub. Society. $1.25

The Three Musketeers. By Alexandre Dumas. Illustrated by Maurice Leloir. Two vols. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $3.00

Tales of a Traveller. By Washington Irving. Student's edition. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

Norseland Tales. By Hjalmar Hjorth Boyeson. Illustrated. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25

The Great Cattle Trail. By Edward S. Ellis. Illustrated. Porter & Coates. $1.25

History.

Life in Ancient Egypt. Described by Adolf Erman. Trans. by H. M. Tirard. Illustrated. Macmillan & Co. $6.00

Following the Greek Cross; or, Memories of the Sixth Army Corps. By Thomas W. Hyde. With numerous portraits. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

A History of Our Own Times. By Justin McCarthy. Two vols. in a box. Lovell, Coryell & Co.

The Jews of Philadelphia. Their History from the Earliest Settlements to the Present Time. By Henry Samuel Morais. Philadelphia: The Levytype Co.

History for Ready Reference and Topical Reading. By J. N. Larned. Vol. III. Springfield: The C. A. Nichols Co.

Holiday Books.

Polly. A Christmas Recollection. By Thomas Nelson Page. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

Old English Songs, from Various Sources. With illustrations by Hugh Thomson, and introduction by Austin Dobson. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

Historical Characters of the Reign of Queen Anne. By Mrs. M. O. W. Oliphant. The Century Co. $6.00

Juvenile.

THE BROWNIES AROUND THE WORLD. By Palmer Cox. The Century Co. $1.50

RAGS AND VELVET GOWNS. By A. G. Plympton. Illustrated. Roberts Brothers. 50c.

THE YELLOW FAIRY BOOK. Edited by Andrew Lang. Longmans, Green & Co. $2.00

RICHARD DARE'S VENTURE; or, Striking Out for Himself. By Edward Stratemeyer. The Merriam Co. $1.25

GARRET GRAIN; or, The House Blessed. By Mrs. Frank Lee. Cong. S. S. and Pub. Society. $1.25

MY NEW HOME. By Mrs. Molesworth. Illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

THE BOY TRAVELLERS IN THE LEVANT. By Thomas W. Knox. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $3.00

BIBLE STORIES FOR YOUNG PEOPLE. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $1.00

NOT QUITE EIGHTEEN. By Susan Coolidge. Roberts Brothers. $1.25

PENELOPE PRIG, AND OTHER STORIES. By A. G. Plympton. Illustrated. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

JACKY LEE; His Lessons Out o' School. By Mrs. Harriet A. Cheever. Cong. S. S. and Pub. Society. $1.25

ENDEAVOR CHRIS'. By Isabella T. Hopkins. Cong. S. S. and Pub. Society. $1.50

THE MAN WHO MARRIED THE MOON, AND OTHER PUEBLO INDIAN FOLK-STORIES. By Charles F. Lummis. The Century Co. $1.50

ARTFUL ANTICKS. By Oliver Herford. The Century Co. $1.00

WITCH WINNIE AT SHINNECOCK. By Elizabeth W. Champney. Illustrated. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50

DAISY. By Marshall Saunders, author of "Beautiful Joe." American Baptist Pub. Society. 75c.

THE LAND OF PLUCK. Stories and Sketches for Young Folk. By Mary Mapes Dodge. The Century Co. $1.50

WHEN LIFE IS YOUNG A Collection of Verse for Boys and Girls. By Mary Mapes Dodge. The Century Co. $1.25

TOPSYS AND TURVYS. No. 2. By P. S. Newell. The Century Co. $1.00

TOINETTE'S PHILIP. By Mrs. C. V. Jamison. Illustrated. The Century Co. $1.50

IMAGINOTIONS. Truthless Tales. By Tudor Jenks. Illustrated. The Century Co. $1.50

THE CENTURY BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS. By Elbridge S. Brooks. Illustrated. The Century Co. $1.50

Poetry, Music, and the Drama.

FABER'S HYMNS. By Frederick William Faber, D.D. Illustrated. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25

POEMS AND LYRICS OF NATURE. Edited by Edith Wingate Rinder. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. 75c.

CHAUCER'S CANTERBURY TALES. Edited by Alfred W. Pollard. In two volumes. Macmillan & Co. $3.00

A PATCH OF PANSIES. By J. Edmund V. Cooke. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

THE FLUTE-PLAYER, AND OTHER POEMS. By Francis Howard Williams. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF GEOFFREY CHAUCER. Edited by Walter W. Skeat. Vol. IV. Macmillan & Co. $4.00

ONE HUNDRED SONNETS. By Julia Noyes Stickney. Groveland, Mass.: Ambrose & Co. 50c.

THE COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS OF SIR WALTER SCOTT. With an introduction by Charles Eliot Norton; biographical sketch by Nathan Haskell Dole. In two vols. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $3.00

ARMAZINDY. By James Whitcomb Riley. Indianapolis: The Bowen-Merrill Co. $1.25

FIVE BOOKS OF SONG. By Richard Watson Gilder. The Century Co. $1.50

IN SUNSHINE LAND. By Edith M. Thomas. Illustrated. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50

SONNETS OF THE WINGLESS HOURS. By Eugene Lee-Hamilton. Stone & Kimball. $1.00

THE LIGHT OF ASIA; or, The Great Renunciation. By Sir Edwin Arnold. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.00

ARTHUR O'SHAUGHESSY; His Life and his Work, with Selections from his Poems. By Louise Chandler Moulton. Stone & Kimball. $1.25

THE LAND OF HEART'S DESIRE. By W. B. Yeats. Stone & Kimball. $1.00

Religion and Theology.

GOLDEN WORDS FOR DAILY COUNSEL. Selected and arranged by Anna Harris Smith. Edited by Huntington Smith. In a box. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25

THE HERESY OF CAIN. By George Hodges. Thomas Whittaker. $1.00

GENESIS AND SEMITIC TRADITION. By John D. Davis, Ph.D. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

IN LOVE WITH LOVE. Four Life-Studies. By James H. West. James H. West. 50c.

"AS NATURAL AS LIFE." Studies of the Inner Kingdom. By Charles G. Ames. James H. West. 50c.

ST. LUKE. Thoughts for St. Luke's Day. Selected by a Daughter of the Church. New York: Crothers & Korth.

THE CHURCH AND THE KINGDOM. By Washington Gladden. Fleming H. Revell Co. 50c.

Scientific and Technical.

TEXT-BOOK OF ANATOMY AND PHYSIOLOGY FOR NURSES. Compiled by Diana Clifford Kimber. Macmillan & Co. $2.50 net.

AMPHIOXUS AND THE ANCESTRY OF THE VERTEBRATES. By Arthur Willey, B.Sc. Macmillan & Co. $2.50 net.

APPARITIONS AND THOUGHT-TRANSFERENCE. By Frank Podmore, M.A. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25

Travel and Observation.

WHEN WE WERE STROLLING PLAYERS IN THE EAST. By Louise Jordan Miln. With illustrations. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.50

SHAKSPEARE'S STRATFORD. A Pictorial Pilgrimage. By W. Hallsworth Waite. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. 50c.

ACROSS ASIA ON A BICYCLE. By Thos. Haskell Allen, Jr., and Wm. Lewis Sachtleben. The Century Co. $1.50

THE MOUNTAINS OF CALIFORNIA. By John Muir. The Century Co. $1.50

VOYAGE OF THE LIBERDADE. By Captain Joshua Slocum. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

Miscellaneous.

THE DOMINION OF CANADA. By Karl Baedeker. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50 net.

ANIMALS' RIGHTS. By Henry S. Salt. Also an Essay on Vivisection in America. By Albert Leffingwell, M.D. Macmillan & Co. 75c.

YALE WIT AND HUMOR: Being Selections of Prose, Poetry, and Drawings from the Yale Records of the years 1889–1893. Arranged and edited by Edwin Ruthven Lamson of '93. Boston: E. R. Lamson & Co., 15 Milton Place. $2.00

ARCHITECT, OWNER, AND BUILDER BEFORE THE LAW. By T. M. Clark. Macmillan & Co. $3.00

THE AGE OF FABLE; or, Beauties of Mythology. By Thomas Bulfinch. A new, enlarged, and illustrated edition. Edited by E. E. Hale. Lee & Shepard. $2.50

THE LIBRARY CATALOGUE OF BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, AND PRINTS. Lee & Shepard. $1.50

BIBLIOGRAPHICA. Part II. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons.

FILSON CLUB PUBLICATIONS. No. 9. THE POLITICAL CLUB, DANVILLE, KY. 1786–1790. By Thomas Speed. Louisville, Ky.: John P. Morton & Co.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS
OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - - $16,014,000.00
Liabilities, - $13,808,000.00
Surplus, - - $2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

The Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam.
Rendered into English Verse by EDWARD FITZGERALD. With a biography of Omar Khayyám, a Biographical Sketch of Mr. Fitzgerald, and 56 superb Illustrations by ELIHU VEDDER. Popular Edition. Crown 8vo, $5.00.

Philip and His Wife.
A strong story with a noble purpose, told with great power and grace, by Mrs. DELAND, author of "John Ward, Preacher," "Sidney," "Mr. Tommy Dove," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

Lucy Larcom: Life, Letters, and Diary.
A book of great interest about one of the noblest of American women, by Rev. DANIEL D. ADDISON. With a Portrait. 16mo, $1.25.

In the Dozy Hours, and Other Papers.
Another book of fresh, original, and delightful Essays, by AGNES REPPLIER, author of "Books and Men," "Points of View," "Essays in Idleness." Each 16mo, $1.25.

Master and Men: The Sermon on the Mountain practiced on the Plain.
A thoughtful book, contrasting current Christianity with that of Christ, and illustrating the Beatitudes by the lives of Moses, Paul, George Fox, General Gordon and George Macdonald. By Rev. Dr. W. B. WRIGHT, author of "Ancient Cities" and "The World to Come." 16mo, $1.25.

Bishop Andrewes.
A new volume in the series of English Leaders of Religion, devoted to one of the greatest preachers in the English Church of about three centuries ago. By R. L. OTTLEY. With a Portrait. 12mo, $1.00.

The Story of a Bad Boy.
By THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH. Holiday Edition. With numerous Illustrations by A. B. FROST. Crown octavo, finely printed and bound in attractive style, forming an exceedingly attractive book. $2.00.

Timothy's Quest.
A fine Holiday Edition of one of Mrs. WIGGIN'S most popular stories. Printed from new plates, very fully and artistically illustrated by OLIVER HERFORD, and attractively bound. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

Three Boys on an Electrical Boat.
A thoroughly interesting and exciting story of the adventures of three boys, who saw and heard and took part in a multitude of incidents, and learned a great deal, practically, of the wonders of electricity. By JOHN TROWBRIDGE, Professor in Harvard University. 16mo, $1.00.

DR. HOLMES'S WORKS.
Complete in a beautiful Riverside Edition, in 13 volumes (10 of prose, 3 of verse) at $1.50 each.

The Breakfast Table Series.
In very attractive style. Send for Catalogue.

JUST PUBLISHED:
The Last Leaf.
Popular Holiday Edition. Finely illustrated by HOPKINSON SMITH and G. WHARTON EDWARDS. With a touching Prefatory Letter by Dr. Holmes, reproduced in facsimile of his handwriting. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

Sold by all Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by
HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

D. APPLETON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

Woman's Share in Primitive Culture.

By OTIS TUFTON MASON, A. M., Curator of the Department of Ethnology in the United States National Museum. With numerous Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, $1.75.

This is the first volume in the ANTHROPOLOGICAL SERIES, edited by Prof. Frederick Starr of the University of Chicago. The series is undertaken in the hope that anthropology—the science of man—may become better known to intelligent readers. While the books are intended to be of general interest, they will in every case be written by authorities who will not sacrifice scientific accuracy to popularity. In the present volume is traced the interesting period when the fire-making began the first division of labor—a division of labor based upon sex—the man going to the field or forest for game, while the woman at the fireside became the burden-bearer, basket-maker, weaver, potter, agriculturist and domesticator of animals.

Systematic Science Teaching.

A Manual of Inductive Elementary Work for all Instructors in Graded and Ungraded Schools, the Kindergarten and the Home. By EDWARD GARDNIER HOWE. Vol. 27, International Education Series. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

A thoroughly practical and reliable guide to elementary instruction in science has long been a desideratum, and this work, embodying the results of fourteen years of actual classroom tests, will satisfactorily meet such a demand. The volume gives a general outline of work for the first three years.

UNIFORM WITH "THE MANXMAN."

The Deemster.

A Romance of the Isle of Man. By HALL CAINE, author of "The Manxman," "Capt'n Davy's Honeymoon," etc. New edition. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

"Fascinates the mind like the gathering and bursting of a storm."—Illustrated London News.

"Hall Caine has already given us some very strong and fine work, and 'The Deemster' is a story of unusual power. Certain passages and chapters have an intensely dramatic grasp, and hold the fascinated reader with a force rarely excited nowadays in literature."—The Critic.

A. CONAN DOYLE'S NEW BOOK.

Round the Red Lamp.

By A. CONAN DOYLE, author of "The White Company," "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes," "The Refugees," etc. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

The "Red Lamp," the trade-mark, as it were, of the English country practitioner's office, is the central point of these dramatic stories of professional life. There are no secrets for the surgeon, and, a surgeon himself as well as a novelist, the author has made a most artistic use of the motives and springs of action revealed to him in a field of which he is the master.

A Flash of Summer.

By Mrs. W. K. CLIFFORD, author of "Love Letters of a Worldly Woman," "Aunt Anne," etc. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

The mere announcement of a new novel by the author of "Love Letters of a Worldly Woman" will attract those who seek the most brilliant contemporary fiction. The new novel will be certain to add to the author's reputation.

The Green Carnation.

12mo. Buckram, 75 cents.

This brilliant little satire upon the London Bunthorne of the day will be read with keen delight. The "Decadent" of English society has never been so cleverly sketched, and his comments upon the literature and art of the day will be found as amusing as they are maliciously witty. We have had no recent fiction so thoroughly "up to date."

A Mild Barbarian.

By EDGAR FAWCETT, author of "An Ambitious Woman," "The House at High Bridge," etc. No. 153, Town and Country Library. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In the opinion of competent observers Mr. Fawcett has done nothing better than "A Mild Barbarian." Much of the scene is laid in New York, which the author knows so well, and the unusual type represented in his hero is drawn with a freshness and vividness which will stir the interest of even blasé novel readers.

The God in the Car.

A Novel. By ANTHONY HOPE, author of "The Prisoner of Zenda," etc. No. 154, Town and Country Library. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

This is the first novel that the author has written since "The Prisoner of Zenda." It is a story of the times, fresh in motive, subtle in its portrayal of character and dramatic in its effects. "The God in the Car" will enlarge the circle of this popular novelist's readers.

For sale by all booksellers; or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers,

D. APPLETON & CO.,
72 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.

JUST PUBLISHED: A TIMELY BOOK.

THE BOSS.

An Essay upon the Art of Governing American Cities, by Henry Champernowne. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

GEO. H. RICHMOND & CO.,
22 East 16th Street, New York.

A book to be read by every one who cares to know how and why our cities are misgoverned.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

Publishers, Importers, and Booksellers,

NEW YORK:	LONDON:
27 and 29 W. 23d St.	24 Bedford St., Strand.

Give prompt and careful attention to orders from libraries or from individual buyers, for English and Continental Publications. Books can, when desired, be sent to the customer by mail direct from the London office. Information and estimates furnished.

Fragility sometimes blossoms in the strangest places! The daintiest of book-making has commonly come from centers like Paris, London or New York; but from the town of Portland, Me., there have recently been issued, under the title of "The Bibelot Series," some little paper-covered volumes of poetry which are as luxurious and artistic as anything that hails from France or England. Mr. T. B. Mosher is the publisher of these bits of clever workmanship.—New York Tribune, Dec. 31, 1893.

FALL ANNOUNCEMENT.

THOMAS B. MOSHER,

PORTLAND, MAINE.

THE BIBELOT SERIES.

The BIBELOT SERIES is modeled on an old style format, narrow 8vo, and beautifully printed in italic on Van Gelder's hand-made paper, uncut edges; done up in flexible Japan vellum, with outside wrappers and dainty gold seals. Each issue has besides an original cover design and is strictly limited to 725 copies.

PRICE PER VOLUME, $1.00 NET.

Two New Volumes in Press:

III. Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam

Rendered into English verse by EDWARD FITZGERALD, with a List of Editions and Versions in English.

IV. Felise.

A book of Lyrics chosen from the earlier poetical works of ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.

The Previous Issues are:

I. Songs of Adieu.

A little book of Finalé and Farewell, chosen from recent English lyrics not generally known.

II. Old World Lyrics.

A little book of Translations from VILLON, DU BELLAY, RONSARD and later French poets.

THE ENGLISH REPRINT SERIES.

THE EDITION IS AS FOLLOWS:

400 Small Paper copies on Van Gelder's Hand-made Paper done up in Japan vellum wrappers, uncut edges, numbered 1 to 400.

40 Large Paper copies (Post 4to), uncut edges, numbered 1 to 40.

10 Large Paper copies on Japan vellum, numbered 1 to 10, signed by publisher.

No more copies will be printed.

The New Volume in Press:

III. Robert Bridges.

THE GROWTH OF LOVE, WITH A BRIEF AND GENERAL CONSIDERATION BY LIONEL JOHNSON.

Small Paper, $1.50 net; Large Paper, $5.00 net; Japan Vellum, $10.00 net.

Previous Issues:

I. George Meredith.

MODERN LOVE, WITH FOREWORD BY E. CAVAZZA.

Small Paper, $2.50 net; Large Paper, $7.50 net; Japan vellum all sold.

II. James Thomson.

THE CITY OF DREADFUL NIGHT, WITH INTRODUCTION BY E. CAVAZZA.

Small Paper, $2.00 net; Large Paper, $7.50 net; Japan Vellum, $12.50 net.

Bookbuyers are requested to send for my New List of Limited Editions, a choice little specimen of typework and paper.

THOMAS B. MOSHER, 37 Exchange St., Portland, Me.

FRANK T. SABIN'S CATALOGUE of FINE and RARE BOOKS, ENGRAVINGS, AUTOGRAPHS, etc. (52 pp.), is NOW READY, and will be sent on application.

118 SHAFTESBURY AVE., LONDON, W.

One way to cure INSOMNIA is to drink a glass of hot water at night. A better way is to use the hot water for heating the house hygienically.

THE HUB HOT-WATER HEATER

comes the nearest to this of any known apparatus, keeping the whole house at a normal temperature night and day, and supplying just the right thermal conditions for insuring good health and sound sleep. The system is extremely simple and powerful, combined with moderation in cost. Send for our special book entitled "Hot-Water Heating." Mailed free.

THE SMITH & ANTHONY COMPANY,
Makers of Highest Grade Heating and Cooking Apparatus,
48 to 54 UNION STREET, BOSTON.
Agencies in New York and Chicago.

THE LATEST NOVELS.

An Historical Novel.

BLANCHE OF BURGUNDY.

By SYLVANUS COBB, Jr., author of "The Gunmaker of Moscow," etc. Illustrated by H. M. Eaton. 12mo, 450 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, $1.00; paper cover, 50 cents.

"Blanche of Burgundy" is a novel based upon incidents and scenes of a most interesting period of French history. It is the time of Charles the Ninth. The realm is divided into twelve great baronies or fiefs, the heads of which are princes almost independent, owing military service and tribute to their sovereign. Charles has departed from France on the great mission of the Crusaders to rescue Palestine from the Moslem. The Duke of Burgundy, father of Blanche, is about to embark with his army for Egypt to join the king, but, before doing so, he awaits the marriage of his daughter, the beautiful Blanche, to Gregory of Franche Comte. The latter proves a difficult subject, and the complications which ensue make a highly interesting novel.

No. 52. Popular Series. Price, 25 Cents.

A CRUEL SUSPICION.

(SUSPECTED.)

By FAY P. RATHBUN.

This novel had a great success as a serial under the title of "Suspected." We were obliged to drop the original title, as another book had appeared under that title. The plot hinges on the fate of a girl whose father is accused of murder and hanged upon circumstantial evidence. There is a delightful love story thrown against the dark background of crime and misfortune. It is a deeply interesting and thrilling novel of American life.

Story of a French Millionaire.

MYSTERY OF HOTEL BRICHET.

After the French of EUGENE CHAVETTE. Illustrated by James Fagan. 12mo, 350 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, $1.00; paper cover, 50 cents.

This is a French novel, the scene of which is Paris of the last century. The great robber, Cartouche, on his trial betrays his associates, and it is through one implicated by his testimony that the author introduces the history of the House of Brichet. Truth is said to be stranger than fiction, but the story of the galley-slave who escapes from Toulon to figure as the possessor of millions in the capital of France will compare favorably with anything that ever happened in the world of reality. It is seldom that a novel filled with exciting incidents is so entirely consistent from beginning to end and which gains in interest as the plot develops. The novel has something of the spirit and "go" of Alexandre Dumas's famous guardsman series, the most amusing character being a guardsman, a swordsman, and a duelist.

A Novel by Fanny Lewald.

THE MASK OF BEAUTY.

After the German of FANNY LEWALD, by MARY M. PLEASANTS. Illustrated by F. A. Carter. 12mo, 340 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, $1.00; paper cover, 50 cents.

Fanny Lewald is one of the most celebrated writers of Germany. Her books have enjoyed great popularity, but few of them have been translated into English. This is a story of Hela, a peninsula jutting out into the Baltic Sea, of which Dantzig is the principal town. The maid of Hela is a poor orphan, whose rare beauty is the cause of her many trials. She is bred in a fishing village, among a superstitious people, full of curiosity, and isolated from her neighbors by reason of her parentage and religion. The story is a minute and realistic study of character, manners, and customs of an out-of-the-way corner of the world.

A Story of the French Revolution.

THE SHADOW OF THE GUILLOTINE.

By SYLVANUS COBB, Jr., author of "The Gunmaker of Moscow," "The Outcast of Milan," "Blanche of Burgundy," etc. Illustrated by Warren B. Davis. 12mo, 429 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, $1.00; paper cover, 50 cents.

A New Novel by the author of "In the China Sea."

TWO GENTLEMEN OF HAWAII.

By SEWARD W. HOPKINS, author of "In the China Sea," etc. Illustrated by M. Colin. 12mo, 244 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, $1.00; paper cover, 50 cents.

This novel deals with the revolution in the Hawaiian Islands. It takes the part of the revolutionists. It gives a complete account of the exciting events, beginning with the deposition of Queen Lilioukalani, the institution of the provisional government under President Dole and the offer of the islands to the United States. It is a thrilling picture of a period of intrigue, danger and revolutionary violence. Most of the characters are Americans concerned in the revolution, and the story is written from the point of view of a partisan who believes that the peace and prosperity of the islands are bound up with the new movement. It is a lively and interesting tale, full of sensation, with a vivid picture of the scenery and life of the islands and of the fatal malady with which the natives are afflicted. The terrors of leprosy are described. The superstitions of the islanders and the volcanic eruptions on the Island of Lanai form a tragic background to the story. At the present time, when public attention is engaged by the events transpiring in these islands, this novel has an especial attractiveness.

ROBERT BONNER'S SONS,

Cor. William and Spruce Sts., New York.

STORIES BY ANNA FULLER

5th 1,000.

Peak and Prairie.

From a Colorado Sketch-Book. By ANNA FULLER, author of "Pratt Portraits," "A Literary Courtship," etc. 16mo, cloth, uniform with "A Literary Courtship," with a frontispiece by Louis Loeb, $1.00.

"We may say that the jaded reader, fagged with the strenuous art of the passing hour, who chances to select this little volume to cheer the hours of a railway journey, will throw up his hat for sheer joy at having hit upon a book in which morbidness and self-consciousness are conspicuous by their absence. It will be to him like finding himself in the open, with the prairie before him and woman suffrage and social problems far, far behind him."—New York Times.

10th 1,000.

A Literary Courtship.

Under the Auspices of Pike's Peak. By ANNA FULLER, author of "Pratt Portraits." Fourth Edition. 12mo, illustrated, $1.00.

"If you know of any one in the blues, or contemplating a journey, or in any of the nine hundred and ninety-nine conditions when pleasant reading is likely to prove acceptable, advise him to get this little story, or, better still, make him a present of it."—Chicago Interior.

6th 1,000.

Pratt Portraits:

Sketched in a New England Suburb. By ANNA FULLER. Third Edition. 16mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

"One of the most worthy contributions to American literature of the past decade."—Rochester Herald.

"The lines the author cuts in her vignette are sharp and clear, but she has, too, not alone the knack of color, but, what is rarer, the gift of humor."—N. Y. Times.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, mail prepaid, on receipt of price.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

27 and 29 West 23d St., N. Y. City.

Low Tariff Prices

ON

Electric

AND

Gas Fixtures

AND

Fine Lamps.

Our customers will at once reap the benefit of the reduced rates at which we are able to make our importations.

Novelties Constantly Arriving.

Inspection Invited.

R. HOLLINGS & CO.

Manufacturers and Importers,

523-525 Washington Street.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Count of Monte Cristo.

By ALEXANDRE DUMAS. Complete and accurate translation. Printed from new plates on fine paper. 18 new illustrations by FRANK T. MERRILL. Photogravure frontispieces. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $3.00; white back, gilt top, $3.00; half-calf, gilt top, $6.00.

The Three Musketeers.

By ALEXANDRE DUMAS. With new introduction by his son, and 250 illustrations by MAURICE LELOIR. Photogravure frontispieces. Complete and accurate translation. 2 vols. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $3.00; white back, gilt top, $3.00; half-calf, gilt top, $6.00.

History of the Christian Church.

By H. C. SHELDON, Professor in Boston University. 5 vols., 8vo, per set, $10.00.

THE EARLY CHURCH. $2.00.
THE MEDIÆVAL CHURCH. $2.00.
THE MODERN CHURCH. Part I. $2.00.
THE MODERN CHURCH. Part II. $2.00.
THE MODERN CHURCH. Part III. $2.00.

The Abbe Daniel.

By ANDRE THEURIET. Translated by HELEN B. DOLE. Fully illustrated. 16mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.00.

Faber's Hymns.

With 50 illustrations by L. J. BRIDGMAN. 16mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

Golden Words for Daily Counsel.

New Edition. Illustrated with 16 portraits of eminent divines and authors. 16mo, white and colors, gilt edges, $1.25.

Send for our illustrated catalogue of new and important publications.

T. Y. CROWELL & CO.,

NEW YORK AND BOSTON.

Noah Farnham Morrison,

SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,

877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.

Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son

Harper's Magazine

NOVEMBER.

166 Pages. Ready Oct. 22.

THE SEA-ROBBERS OF NEW YORK. By Thomas A. Janvier. With 5 Illustrations by Howard Pyle.

A PAINTER'S IMPRESSIONS OF RAJPOOTANA. By Edwin Lord Weeks. With 14 Illustrations by the Author.

THE COSSACK AS COWBOY, SOLDIER, AND CITIZEN. By Poultney Bigelow. With 11 Illustrations by Frederic Remington.

A SISTER OF THE ANNUNCIATION. A Story. By Marguerite Merington.

AT THE CAPITAL OF THE YOUNG REPUBLIC. By Henry Loomis Nelson. With 5 Illustrations by T. de Thulstrup.

ON THE TRAIL OF THE WILD TURKEY. By Charles D. Lanier. With 4 Illustrations by A. B. Frost.

PEOPLE WE PASS. II. THE LINEMAN'S WEDDING. By Julian Ralph. With 3 Illustrations by Clifford Carleton.

THE GOLDEN HOUSE. A Story. By Charles Dudley Warner. (Conclusion.) With 6 Illustrations by W. T. Smedley.

THE INTERLUDE. A Story. By Grace King.

GRAHAM'S VOICE. A Story. By Ewan Macpherson.

THE RELIGION OF THE SIOUX. By Lieut. William H. Wassell, U. S. A. With 5 Illustrations.

JONATHAN HOLT'S "THIRD." A Story. By Joan Gardner.

FULL PAGE ILLUSTRATION. By George Du Maurier.

EDITOR'S STUDY. By Charles Dudley Warner.

EDITOR'S DRAWER. With Introductory Story by Thomas Nelson Page.

LITERARY NOTES. By Laurence Hutton.

Subscription, $4.00 a Year.

Booksellers and Postmasters usually receive Subscriptions. Subscriptions sent direct to the publishers should be accompanied by Post-Office Money Order or Draft. When no time is specified, Subscriptions will begin with the current number. Postage free to all subscribers in the United States, Canada, and Mexico.

Harper & Brothers'

LATEST BOOKS.

TRILBY. A Novel. By George du Maurier, author of "Peter Ibbetson." With 120 Illustrations by the Author. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75. (Seventy-fifth Thousand in Press.)

PORTRAITS IN PLASTER. From the Collection of Laurence Hutton. With 72 Illustrations. Large Paper 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $6.00.

WIMPLES AND CRISPING PINS. Studies in the Coiffure and Ornaments of Women. By Theodore Child, Author of "Art and Criticism," "The Desire of Beauty," etc. Crown 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $2.00.

WEALTH AGAINST COMMONWEALTH. By Henry Demarest Lloyd. 8vo, Cloth, $2.50.

SIR ROBERT'S FORTUNE. A Novel. By Mrs. Oliphant. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

THE BOY TRAVELLERS IN THE LEVANT. Adventures of Two Youths in a Journey through Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, Greece, and Turkey, with Visits to the Islands of Rhodes and Cyprus, and the Site of Ancient Troy. By Thomas W. Knox. Profusely Illustrated. Square 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $3.00.

ENGLISH LITERATURE. History of English Literature, for Secondary Schools. By J. Logie Robertson, M. A., First English Master of Edinburgh Ladies' College. Post 8vo, Cloth.

A LITTLE ENGLISH GALLERY. By Louise Imogen Guiney. With Portrait. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental. (In the Series "Harper's American Essayists.") $1.00.

BIBLE STORIES FOR YOUNG PEOPLE. By the Right Rev. Henry C. Potter, D. D., the Rev. Bishop John F. Hurst, D. D., the Rev. John Hall, D. D., and Others. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00.

HIGHLAND COUSINS. A Novel. By William Black, Author of "The Handsome Humes," "A Princess of Thule," etc. Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75.

VIGNETTES OF MANHATTAN. By Brander Matthews, Author of "The Story of a Story," "Studies of the Stage," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

ON CLOUD MOUNTAIN. A Novel. By Frederick Thickstun Clark. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00.

IN OLD NEW YORK. By Thomas A. Janvier, Author of "The Aztec Treasure-House," "The Uncle of an Angel," etc. With Illustrations and Maps. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

The above works are for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by the publishers, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, Canada, or Mexico, on receipt of price. Harper's Catalogue will be sent to any address on receipt of Ten Cents in stamps.

LAWRENCE
Public Library,
LAWRENCE MASS.

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 Somerset Street
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy
BOSTON 3 NOVEMBER 1894 Vol. XXV No. 22 Whole No. 518

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS' NEW BOOKS.

GEN. W. T. SHERMAN and SEN. JOHN SHERMAN.

THE SHERMAN LETTERS. With Portraits. Crown 8vo, $3.00.

"Impressive and charming reading. We do not recall in the literature of war and statesmanship any correspondence like unto this. We must not only call the correspondence unique in literature; it is also a correspondence beautiful with the beauty of disinterested and unchanging love."—N. Y. Times.

*

GEORGE MEREDITH.

LORD ORMONT AND HIS AMINTA. 12mo, $1.50.

"It is equal to anything Mr. Meredith has ever done. It is romantic, plausible, dramatic, pregnant with philosophy, and far-reaching in its survey of human motive."—London Times.

*

NAPOLEONIC MEMOIRS.

THE PASQUIER MEMOIRS.

Edited by Duc D'Audiffret Pasquier. With Portraits. 3 vols. 8vo, each $2.50. Vol. III. now ready, completing the set.

"It will ever be in the first grade of the memoirs for which French literature is incomparable."—N. Y. Times.

*

JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF ERASMUS. 8vo, $2.50.

The Author, in concluding his work, says: "I have endeavored to put before you the character and thoughts of an extraordinary man at the most exciting period of modern history. It is a period of which the story is still disfigured by passion and prejudice. I believe that you will best see what it really was if you look at it through the eyes of Erasmus."

*

FRANK R. STOCKTON.

POMONA'S TRAVELS.

A Series of Letters to the Mistress of Rudder Grange from her former Handmaiden. Illustrated by A. B. Frost. 12mo, gilt top, $2.00.

"It forms one of the most delightful books Mr. Stockton has ever written. It is capital reading, and will more firmly establish Mr. Stockton in his place with Bret Harte among contemporary American writers. Mr. Frost's pictures are all admirable."—N. Y. Times.

*

THOMAS NELSON PAGE.

POLLY. Illustrated by A. Castaigne. Small folio, $1.50.

"In a companion volume to 'Marse Chan' and 'Meh Lady' comes 'Polly,' another of Mr. Page's delightful tales of Southern life. The illustrations are very effective, and the volume is tastefully bound."—Boston Times.

*

JOHN HAMPDEN PORTER.

WILD BEASTS. With illustrations from life. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

An interesting study of the Elephant, Lion, Panther, Leopard, Jaguar, Tiger, Puma, Wolf, and Grizzly Bear. In constructing his portraits the author quotes freely from the literature of the subject, citing innumerable incidents and describing many thrilling adventures which throw light on the characters and habits of the beasts.

*

HENRY KINGSLEY.

RAVENSHOE, 2 vols. AUSTIN ELLIOT, 1 vol. Each vol., 16mo, $1.00.

"Lovers of fiction who for one reason or another, or for many reasons combined, are weary of reading, or trying to read, the novels of today, will welcome the project of Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons of giving them something better in the shape of a reprint of the novels of Henry Kingsley, whom so good a master of the art as Mr. James Payn lately told the world that he considered a better novelist than his more famous brother Charles."—R. H. Stoddard, in the Mail and Express.

*

GEN. A. W. GREELY.

THREE YEARS OF ARCTIC SERVICE.

An Account of the Lady Franklin Bay Expedition of 1881–84 and the Attainment of the Farthest North. New Popular Edition. Fully illustrated. 1 vol. 8vo, $5.00.

"The most important work on Arctic matters that has been published in any country for many years."—Boston Herald.

*

MRS. ALICE MORSE EARLE.

COSTUME OF COLONIAL TIMES. 12mo, $1.25.

An alphabetically arranged glossary with introductory matter and comments descriptive of the costumes of Colonial America. It comprises a fuller list of items than has ever been published, and the subject is presented in the author's well-known attractive style.

*

PROF. BARRETT WENDELL.

WILLIAM SHAKSPERE. A Study in Elizabethan Literature. 12mo, $2.00.

"Barrett Wendell has come to be recognized as standing in the very first rank of our American essayists."—Boston Advertiser.

*

WILLIAM F. APTHORP.

MUSICIANS AND MUSIC LOVERS, and Other Essays. 12mo, $1.50.

Contents: Musicians and Music Lovers—Bach—Additional Accompaniments to Bach's and Handel's Scores—Meyerbeer—Offenbach—Two Modern Classicists in Music—J. S. Dwight—Some Thoughts on Musical Criticism—Music and Science.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 153-157 Fifth Ave., N. Y.

Essays and Addresses.

Religious, Literary and Social.

By the Rt. Rev. PHILLIPS BROOKS, D. D. Edited by the Rev. John Cotton Brooks. Large 12mo, 538 pages, gilt top, $2.00; large 12mo, 538 pages, white cloth, gilt edges, $2.50.

Among the thirty-seven Essays are "Heresy," "The Best Methods of Promoting Spiritual Life," "Authority and Conscience," "A Century of Church Growth in Boston," "The Conditions of Church Growth in Missionary Lands," "Poetry," "The Purposes of Scholarship," "Milton as an Educator," "Courage," "Dean Stanley," "Martin Luther," "Biography," "Literature and Life," etc.

"A welcome memorial of his life and work—another evidence of his widespread sympathies, his intellectual activity, and, above all, his loving and catholic Christianity. Every one of these essays and addresses is worth not merely reading, but study for its own sake, for its clearness and purity of style, its sincerity and suggestiveness, its information, its strength and purpose."—Churchman.

Letters of Travel.

By PHILLIPS BROOKS. Written to his family. Thirteenth thousand now ready. Large 12mo, cloth, $2.00; white and gold, $2.50.

"They abound in everything which can make such a compilation attractive—pleasing scenes and incident, good company, a light, dignified and vivacious style, and the strong, personal charm of a very unusual man driving the quill."—The Independent.

THIRTY-FIRST THOUSAND.

Phillips Brooks Year Book.

Selections from the Writings of the Rt. Rev. PHILLIPS BROOKS, D.D. By H. L. S. and L. H. S. 16mo, 372 pages, gilt top, $1.25; 16mo, 372 pages, flexible calf, $3.50.

"The thoughts are so deep and grand and uplifting, the beauty of the language so great, the selections so varied and so wonderfully chosen, and the poetry as if written for its place in the book! Your country owes you a debt of gratitude for stringing the pearls and arranging the gems so as to bring out their greatest beauty and make apparent their intrinsic value."—From an English Letter.

The Phillips Brooks Calendar for 1895.

Twelve leaves (8¼ x 10) with illustrations in colors, and selections from the last volume of Sermons. In box, $1.00.

Margaret Arnold's Christmas,

AND OTHER STORIES. By MARY D. BRINE, author of "Grandma's Attic Treasures," etc. Illustrated by Gordon, Hooper, etc. Large 12mo, cloth, gilt, $2.00.

Mrs. Brine's first volume of adult stories in prose.

Child Life and Girlhood of Remarkable Women.

A series of chapters from Female Biography. By W. H. DAVENPORT ADAMS. Large 12mo, 350 pp., cloth gilt, $2.50.

Goethe Year Book

Selections for every day in the year from the writings of JOHANN WOLFGANG GOETHE. 16mo, 167 pages, cloth, gilt top, $1.00.

Lizette

A Story. By EMMA MARSHALL. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

Gordon Stables.

Great Books for Boys. We have now ready four of this popular author:

FEARFUL ODDS. EXILES OF FORTUNE.
HEARTS OF OAK. TWO SAILOR LADS.

12mo, cloth, fully illustrated, each $1.50.

Miss Mackerell Skye.

A Fairy Tale for Young and Old. By HERBERT S. SQUANCE. 16mo, illustrated, 162 pages, cloth, $1.25.

An Easter Vacation.

By MOIRA O'NEILL. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Friend or Foe.

By Mrs. GREENE. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of prices.

E. P. DUTTON & CO.,
Publishers and Booksellers,
31 West 23d Street, New York.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.'S

NEW BOOKS.

Their Wedding Journey.

By W. D. HOWELLS. Holiday Edition. Fully Illustrated by CLIFFORD CARLETON, and bound in very attractive style from a design by Mrs. Whitman. Crown 8vo, $3.00.

Unguarded Gates, and Other Poems.

By T. B. ALDRICH. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1.25. A beautiful book, containing the poems written by Mr. ALDRICH in the last six years.

Whittier's Poetical Works.

Complete in a new Cambridge Edition. Printed from wholly new plates, large type, on opaque paper. With a Biographical Sketch, Notes, Index to Titles and First Lines, a Portrait, and an Engraving of Whittier's Amesbury home. Uniform with the Cambridge Longfellow. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $2.00; half calf, gilt top, $3.50; tree calf, or full levant, $5.50.

Whittier's Poetical Works.

New Handy-volume Edition. In four beautiful volumes, large type, opaque paper, tasteful binding. With four Portraits and a View of Whittier's Oak Knoll Home. Uniform with the Handy-volume Longfellow. 4 vols., 16mo, $5.00; half calf, extra, gilt top, $9.75; full morocco, flexible, in fine leather box, $9.75; full calf, flexible, $12.75.

BIOGRAPHY.

Life and Letters of John Greenleaf Whittier.

By SAMUEL T. PICKARD. With seven etched portraits and views. 2 vols. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $4.00. Nov. 10.

This work will be very acceptable to all who have been charmed and uplifted by his poetry.

Lucy Larcom: Life, Letters, and Diary.

By Rev. DANIEL D. ADDISON. With a fine new portrait. 16mo, $1.25.

This book on Miss Larcom cannot fail to be very welcome to those who have found inspiration and help in her writings.

The Life of Frances Power Cobbe.

Written by herself. With a Portrait. 2 vols., gilt top, $4.00.

Miss Cobbe is one of the most famous of living Englishwomen, and the story of her life is a book of extraordinary interest.

Familiar Letters of Henry David Thoreau.

Edited with an Introduction and Notes, by FRANK B. SANBORN. Uniform with Riverside Edition of Thoreau's Works. With a full Index. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1.50.

ESSAYS.

Childhood in Literature and Art.

A book of high critical character and interest, studying the meaning of the appearance and disappearance of childhood as a subject for story, poetry and art, in Greece, Rome, Judæa, in the Middle Ages and in Modern Times. By HORACE E. SCUDDER, author of "Men and Letters," etc. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1.25.

Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan.

A work of great interest on the less-known portions and customs of Japan. By LAFCADIO HEARN. 2 vols., 8vo, gilt top, $4.00.

"A very great book."—New York Times.

A Florida Sketch Book.

A charming outdoor book on things observed in Florida. By BRADFORD TORREY, author of "Birds in the Bush," "The Foot-Path Way," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

Riverby.

A volume of eighteen characteristic outdoor papers on flowers, eggs, birds, mountains, prairies, and other appetizing subjects, treated with great freshness and insight. By JOHN BURROUGHS, author of "Wake Robin," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

From Blomidon to Smoky, and Other Papers.

A book of exquisite observation in the Provinces and elsewhere. By the late FRANK BOLLES, author of "Land of the Lingering Snow," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

Sold by all Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

G. P. Putnam's Sons

HAVE NOW READY:

The Sketch-book.

By WASHINGTON IRVING. The Van Tassel Edition, uniform in general style with the Holiday Editions of "The Alhambra," "Granada" and "Knickerbocker." Two volumes, octavo, printed from new type, with artistically designed borders and 32 illustrations. Cloth extra, $6.00; three-quarter levant, $12.00. One hundred numbered copies will be printed, with proofs of the plates on Japan paper. Half leather, gilt tops, Roxburgh style, $15.00.

The Story of the Civil War.

A Concise Account of the War in the United States of America between 1861 and 1865. By JOHN CODMAN ROPES, author of "The Army Under Pope," "The First Napoleon," etc. To be complete in three parts, printed in three octavo volumes. Each part will be complete in itself and will be sold separately.

Part I. Narrative of Events to the Opening of the Campaign of 1862. With 5 maps, 8vo, $1.50.

Cicero,

And the Fall of the Roman Republic. By J. L. STRACHAN DAVIDSON, M.A., Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. (Being No. X. of the "Heroes of the Nations" Series.) Large 12mo, illustrated, cloth, $1 50; half leather, gilt top, $1.75.

"A valuable addition to this splendid series of biographical studies."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The Story of Venice,

From the Earliest Times to the Fall of the Republic. By ALETHEA WIEL. (No. 42 in the "Story of the Nations" Series.) 12mo, cloth, fully illustrated, $1.50; half leather, gilt top, $1.75.

"This book is one of the most intensely interesting and instructive of any of the publications that have occurred during the present year."—New Haven Register.

The Ariel Shakespeare.

Each play is in a separate volume, 3½ x 5 inches. Printed from new type. The text is complete and unabridged, and conforms to the latest scholarly editions. With 500 illustrations by FRANK HOWARD. Now complete in 40 volumes, and issued in four styles:

A.—Garnet cloth, each, 40 cents; per set, 40 volumes, in box, $16.00.
B.—Full leather, gilt top, each (in a box), 75 cents; per set, 40 volumes, in box, $30.00.
C.—40 volumes bound in 20, cloth, in box, per set (sold in sets only), $15.00.
D.—40 volumes bound in 20, half calf extra, gilt tops, in box, per set (sold in sets only), $35.00.

"The best handy-volume edition upon the market, in text, letter-press, illustration and binding."—Boston Globe.

The Egyptian Book of the Dead.

The most ancient and the most important of the extant religious texts of ancient Egypt. Edited with introduction, a complete translation, and various chapters on its history, symbolism, etc., by CHARLES H. S. DAVIS, M.D., Ph. D. With 99 full-page illustrations from the Turin and the Louvre Papyri and 25 designs representing the Egyptian Gods. Large 4to, cloth, $5.00.

About Women:

What Men Have Said. An Every-Day Book. Compiled and arranged by ROSE PORTER. 16mo, ornamental cloth covers, $1.00.

Napoleon.

By ALEXANDER DUMAS. Translated from the French by JOHN B. LARNER. 12mo, cloth, $1 50.

The Artificial Mother.

A Marital Fantasy. By G. H. P. With six illustrations by Van Deusen. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

"It is a quaint little story and bristles with genuine wit. The book is handsomely bound and illustrated." Albany Times-Union.

NEARLY READY.

The Play-Actress.

By S. R. CROCKETT, author of "The Raiders," "The Stickit Minister," etc. 16mo, in same general style as "A Literary Courtship," with frontispiece by McCullough, $1.00.

---

27 and 29 West 23d St., New York.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY'S

Autumn Announcements.

HISTORY, BELLES-LETTRES, FICTION, AND MISCELLANEOUS.

Thiers's History of the French Revolution.

New Edition, uniform with the New Edition of Thiers's "History of the Consulate and the Empire of France." Illustrated with 41 steel engravings. 5 volumes, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00 per volume; three-fourths morocco, $5.00 per volume.

This Edition will be uniform with the New Edition of Thiers's "History of the Consulate and the Empire of France," and will be published in monthly volumes, commencing September, 1894. Subscriptions will be received for complete sets only by all booksellers and the publishers.

Thiers's History of the Consulate and the Empire of France.

Now complete. Illustrated with 36 steel engravings. 12 volumes, 8vo. Cloth, $36.00; half morocco, gilt top, $60.00.

The only good edition of the English translation has long been out of print, and the present publishers, in connection with an English house, have brought out a limited edition to meet the demand of the libraries and book-buyer. The last volume of this sumptuous edition has just been issued.

Napoleon at Home.

The Daily Life of the Emperor at the Tuileries. By FREDERIC MASSON. With 12 full-page illustrations by F. DE MYRBACH. 2 volumes, 8vo. Cloth, $7.50.

Napoleon and the Women of His Court.

By FREDERIC MASSON. With numerous illustrations in the best style of French Art. 1 volume, 8vo.

Around a Throne.

Catherine II., of Russia, her Collaborators, her Friends, and her Favorites. By K. WALISZEWSKI, author of "Romance of an Empress." 2 volumes, 8vo, cloth.

The Marquis de La Fayette in the War of the Revolution.

With some Account of the Attitude of France toward the War of Independence. By CHARLEMAGNE TOWER, Jr., LL. D. 2 volumes, royal 8vo. Cloth, gilt top, uncut.

Henry of Navarre and the Religious Wars.

By EDWARD T. BLAIR. With 55 cuts in the text and 4 full-page photogravures by BOUSSOD, VALADON ET CIE. Square 8vo.

In preparation.

Colonial Days and Dames.

By ANNE HOLLINGSWORTH WHARTON, author of "Through Colonial Doorways." Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth, extra, $1.25.

Edition de Luxe limited to the number of subscribers.

The Colonial Library.

COLONIAL DAYS AND DAMES.
THROUGH COLONIAL DOORWAYS.
2 volumes, 12mo, in box, $2.50.

Books and Plays.

By ALLAN MONKHOUSE. 100 printed for America. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

Pen and Pencil Sketches.

By HENRY STACY MARKS, R. A. With 4 photogravure plates and 124 facsimile illustrations. 2 volumes, 8vo. Irish linen, gilt top, $8.00.

There will be included in the volume many unpublished drawings left by Fred. Walker, the remarkable young English artist who is drawn by Du Maurier in the character of "Little Billee" in Trilby.

The Birds About Us.

By CHARLES CONRAD ABBOTT, M. D., author of "Recent Rambles," "Travels in a Tree-Top," etc. Illustrated with upwards of 75 Bird Portraits. 1 volume, 12mo. Cloth, $2.00.

A book for every lover of birds. It is written in a familiar and genial style, and is not burdened with technicalities, while being accurate in every particular.

Irving (Washington). Sketch Book.

New Edition. 2 volumes, 12mo. Illustrated with Engravings on Wood, from Original Designs. Price in cloth, extra, gilt top, $4.00; half calf or half morocco, $7.00.

The illustrations of this edition were made for the Artist Edition, the type is new, and the size suitable for the library and the table, making the most desirable edition of this popular classic now published.

Madonna and Other Poems.

By HARRISON S. MORRIS. Illustrated. 1 volume, 12mo. Extra cloth, $2.00.

This is the first collected edition of the author's poems, many of which have never previously appeared. The edition is printed from type, and limited to 750 copies for America and England.

Sorrow and Song.

By COULSON KERNAHAN, author of "A Book of Strange Sins," "A Dead Man's Diary," etc. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

Mr. Kernahan's work is not only intensely interesting as literary criticism, but, owing to its searching investigation and powerful delineation of the motives and the sins of the human soul, it is strangely fascinating for the general reader.

Hazlitt (William). Liber Amoris.

A newly printed edition containing numerous passages omitted in the editions of 1823. The volume will contain a fine reproduction of William Bewick's chalk drawing of William Hazlitt, a facsimile of a letter from Hazlitt to Rathmore, and one of Sarah Walker to Hazlitt (the only one known to exist). Edition limited to 400 copies for England and 100 for America. Price $6.00 net.

Carlyle's (Thomas) Translations.

3 volumes. 8vo. Uniform with the Ashburton Edition of his works. Cloth, $7.50.

The Works of Laurence Sterne.

Edited by GEORGE SAINTSBURY, with illustrations by E. J. WHEELER. 6 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $6.00; half calf and half morocco, $13.50; large paper edition, 6 volumes, buckram, $18.00.

Published in connection with Dent & Co., of London.

Corinne, or Italy.

By MADAME DE STAEL. Translated. With illustrations. volumes. Cloth, $2.00; half calf and half morocco $4.50; large paper edition, 2 volumes, buckram, $6.00

Published in connection with Dent & Co., of London.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY'S AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENTS—Continued.

Early English Ballads.

Chosen by R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON. With about 200 illustrations by William Cubitt Cooke. 4 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $5.00; half calf or half morocco, $10.00.

The text of the Old Ballads has been carefully prepared from the original sources in each case, though the spelling is modernized so far as can be done without injuring the rhythm or accentuation. Brief historical and explanatory notes to many of the ballads are added to the Table of Contents, and the meanings of obsolete terms are explained in foot-notes. Published in connection with Dent & Co., of London.

Tom Cringle's Log.

By MICHAEL SCOTT. 2 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $2.00; half calf or half morocco, $4.50.

Cruise of the Midge.

By MICHAEL SCOTT. 2 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $2.00; half calf or half morocco, $4.50.

The brilliant papers that make up these volumes were commenced in Blackwood's Magazine in 1829. Coleridge, in his "Table-Talk," spoke of them as "most excellent." Wilson, in "Noctes Ambrosianæ," says, "Cringle indeed is a giant."

Burns (Robert). Poetical Works.

Complete. Chronologically Arranged, with Notes, Glossaries and Index. By W. SCOTT DOUGLAS. 3 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $2.25; half calf, $5.00.

In this edition the poems of Burns are presented unabridged and untampered with, and arranged in chronological order, the date of each composition being recorded.

Thomas A'Kempis's Imitation of Christ.

Edited by CANON FARRAR. Illustrated by new and quaint illustrations. Illuminated with Initial Letters, making the most desirable edition published. Price, in cloth, $1.50; limp morocco, $4.00.

Published in connection with Methuen & Co., of London.

Australasia.

Volume I.—Australia and New Zealand. By ALFRED B. WALLACE, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S. With many maps and illustrations. Crown 8vo. Price $4.50.

Volume II. ready shortly. To be followed by volumes on North America, Europe, Asia, Africa and South America.

Chambers's Concise Gazetteer of the World.

Topographical, Statistical and Historical. 1 volume, crown 8vo. Uniform with Reader's Reference Library. Half morocco, $2.50.

This work does not claim to be exhaustive. Its aim has been to tell everything that may be reasonably wanted about every place likely to be looked for.

My First Book.

The Experiences of Walter Besant, James Payn, W. Clark Russell, Grant Allen, Hall Caine, George R. Sims, Rudyard Kipling, A. Conan Doyle, M. E. Braddon, F. W. Robinson, H. Rider Haggard, R. M. Ballantyne, I. Zangwill, Morley Roberts, David Christie Murray, Marie Corelli, Jerome K. Jerome, John Strange Winter, Bret Harte, "I," Robert Louis Stevenson and Robert Buchanan. With an Introduction by JEROME K. JEROME. Profusely illustrated, $2.50.

A New Novel by W. E. Norris.

Matthew Austin.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In "Lippincott's Series of Select Novels" for October.

A New Novel by Mrs. D. M. Croker, author of "A Third Person," etc.

Mr. Jervis.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In "Lippincott's Series of Select Novels" for November.

A New Novel by Effie Adelaide Rowlands, author of "My Pretty Jane," etc.

The Spell of Ursula.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In "Lippincott's Series of Select Novels" for December.

A New Novel by Rosa Nouchette Carey.

The Old, Old Story.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Ready in September.

A New Novel by Captain Charles King, U. S. A.

Under Fire.

Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A New Novel by Julien Gordon, author of "A Diplomatic Diary," etc.

Poppæa.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Ready in October.

A New Novel by W. E. Norris.

The Despotic Lady.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Ready in November.

A Volume of South Sea Island Stories by Louis Becke.

By Reef and Palm.

With Introduction by Lord PEMBROKE. Tall 16mo, cloth, 75 cents.

Ready in October.

A New Novel by James Payn.

In Market Overt.

Copyrighted edition in preparation.

A Volume of Short Stories by Mrs. L. T. Mead, author of "The Honorable Miss," etc.

Stories from the Diary of a Doctor.

24 full-page illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A Remarkable Story of Adventure by Wm. Laird Clowes, author of "The Captain of the Mary Rose," etc.

The Double Emperor.

With 8 full-page illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A Book for Young Girls, by Amy E. Blanchard, author of "Twenty Little Maidens."

Two Girls.

Illustrated by IDA WAUGH. 12mo, cloth, extra, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A Book for Girls by Mrs. Molesworth.

Olivia.

Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, upon receipt of price by the publishers,

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, 715 and 717 Market Street, Philadelphia.

The Literary World

Vol XXV BOSTON 3 NOVEMBER 1894 No. 22

CONTENTS

Danvis Folks 365
Froude's Erasmus 365
Personal Recollections of Sixteen Presidents, 366
My First Book 367
Childhood in Literature and Art . . . 368
The Sherman Letters 368
Following the Greek Cross 369

Poetry:
  Trilby. Alice Brown 370
  What the Sonnet Is. Eugene Lee-Hamilton, 370
Two English Story-Tellers 370
Wealth Against Commonwealth . . . 370
Philadelphia Notes 371
Fiction:
  Sweet Clover 371
  Catherine de' Medici 371
  Sir Robert's Fortune 371
  Cœur d'Alene 372
  The Voyage of the Liberdade 372
  Nero. Part II 372
  A Drama in Dutch 372
Minor Notices:
  Venice 372
  A Corner of Cathay 373
  The Pearl of India 373
  The Birds About Us 373
  Costume of Colonial Times 373
  Chaucer's Canterbury Tales 373
  The New Acts of the Apostles 373
  Eastern Customs in Bible Lands 374
Periodicals 374
News and Notes 375

DANVIS FOLKS.[*]

NO one who has read "Uncle 'Lisha's Shop" and "Sam Lovel's Camps" will need any introduction to this new volume by the same author. Most of the characters reappear, and the scene is that same little hamlet of Danvis, under the shadow of Vermont mountains, in the old times when men could still tell stories of how they "fit tu Hubbar'ton and Bennin'ton, to say nothin' o' takin' Ticonderogue." The most delightful of all these characters is the old man who has his military doings forever on his tongue, "Gran'ther Hill." He is really the hero throughout this record of Danvis life. Even Uncle 'Lisha and Pelatiah and Sam Lovel himself fall into the background when this doughty hero appears. His language is more potent than refined, but it carries conviction and is irresistibly amusing. Of all the entertaining and laughter-provoking chapters in Mr. Robinson's three books there is nothing that goes beyond the opening one in this, "Gran'ther Hill's Pa'tridge," in which the shrewd octogenarian and his bright boy accomplice outwit Jozeff and Marier.

Another chapter has a tender phase, an aspect of delicate and subtle pathos, when Uncle 'Lisha and his wife, a veritable old Darby and Joan, come back homesick from their short residence in "Westconstant" (Wisconsin) to spend the remainder of their days among their Danvis friends. The happenings when they draw near the village; when they see the horse they used to own; when 'Lisha hops out of the cart at sight of the brook, declaring, "It is three year sen' I hed a drink o' what you might call water, an' I'm drier 'n a graven image! Naow I'm goin' ter ha' some;" when they meet the old neighbors one after another; when they revisit the deserted house and shop; when they arrive at Sam Lovel's — all these are most deftly told, with alternations of humor and tenderness, revealing the neighborly kindness of warm hearts among a primitive people possessing those genuine feelings that are true to all time and all localities.

Danvis folks are very real people, of flesh and blood; and Mr. Robinson understands their kind as no one can who has not had experience among them and appreciation of the strong, primal traits for which they are conspicuous. His skill in reproducing the idiomatic language of those times is remarkable. It is to be hoped that in some cases this is overdone, although even now in some localities one meets a Pelatiah and hears the vernacular of Uncle 'Lisha. Haply, too, the homely virtues as exemplified by Sam Lovel, Huldah, and others are in vigorous activity in many a rural district in New England.

It would be unfair to the author not to mention his keen, observant eye for all aspects of outward life, shown in a hundred touches in these chapters. The changing scenes under the influence of the seasons, the quickening of the spring and the aspects of autumn, are daintily but vividly pictured in a few skillful touches, subtle, indeed, but not lost on one who is in sympathy with the world out of doors. This picture of the deserted homestead illustrates one characteristic:

> It was told by the ruined chimney and broken hearthstone; the crumbling wall of the cellar, now a shapeless, shallow pit; the sprawling lilacs and blossoming fox lilies, long since run wild away from the sunken doorstep; . . . by the untrimmed, sprouty-rooted cherry trees, straggling along the fallen wall that was matted by gall-bulbed stalks of golden rod, lopped upon it by the winter snows; and by the rank tansy bed — the dry, brown heads overshadowing the young leaves that no more furnished medicine for the sick or garniture for the dead.

FROUDE'S ERASMUS.[*]

THERE is a pathetic interest attaching to this book. As we lay it down, fascinated by the charm of its contents and style, we read of the death of its illustrious author. It is not our place to set forth here a full judgment upon his life, personality, and work. He did not belong to the school of historians of which the late Edward A. Freeman was a distinguished exemplar. Reading the books of the author of The Norman Conquest one gets an idea that history is almost wholly political, and that religion, trade and industry, art and architecture, dress and manners, feelings and passions, are but very subordinate factors in making the story of nations and the world. On the contrary, Froude shows us what men and women wore, what they ate, and how they quarreled. Froude paints a picture in words which an artist might take as a sketch for outline and tints, or a tapestry weaver for a cartoon. He shows what real human beings were and are. He is an artist in language, and words have for him colors, forms, and values apart from their utility as mere conduits of information. Indeed, sometimes in reading Froude we imagine ourselves, as it were, in a great cathedral of language, wherein are stained glass windows, statues, and paintings, masonry which effloresces in art, while organs peal out harmony and evoke echoes, memories, sweet associations, ancestral and rational pride, and gratulation.

In this, his last book, the master's hand shows no weakness. Its cunning is unimpaired and the brightness of his eye is undimmed. He sees men and women as they are, however clothed or uniformed or pretending the motives which move only good angels. He has given us an amazingly bright and clear picture of the most intellectual of Dutchmen — the literary king of Christendom when all Christendom was one realm. Froude never pretended to be able to formulate a philosophy of history, but he does set forth in shining sentences and in rich measure the philosophy of individual life, of special epochs and ages, of institutions and of nations, and one feels all the time like quoting him. This is a dangerous volume for a book-lover to take out from a library where the law against annotations or pencil marks brands such indulgences as crimes punishable by law. We confess to a deal of what would be called defacing good books, and our copy shows much graphite alongside the printer's ink.

Without a table of contents and without any preface worth speaking of, the regius professor of modern history at Oxford, who delivered these lectures in 1893 and 1894, plunges right into his work and tells about the birth of the son of Gerhard at Rotterdam in 1467, Latinized as Desiderius and Grecized as Erasmus. The story of Erasmus being a "love child" and born outside of matrimony is declared by the author to be a lie, either in whole or in part. Froude ridicules the folly of historians in devoting so much space to kings and queens and such trash, and wonders why history does not devote more space to more valuable and interesting human beings. He quotes Voltaire, who says there is an indescribable pleasure in speaking evil of dead kings, because one cannot speak evil of them while they are alive for fear of one's ears. To the regius professor Erasmus is king enough. Froude believes he was an honest man who had his foibles and weaknesses, but acted consistently and conscientiously. One reads with envy the superb translation of the Latinity of Erasmus. The exquisite English makes music to the ear, besides being a faithful and fearless reproduction of the honest Dutchman's thoughts. With a mastery like that of an organist over his three banks of keys and his scores of stops, Froude evokes the harmonies of the grand English tongue — its Saxon thunder, its Norman sonorousness, its virility, depth, tone, tint, and prismatics of the centuries and of yesterday — and shows how clearly Erasmus thought. He depicts the long struggles of the boy in resisting monkish vows and incarceration in a monastery — a "furnace of licentiousness." He shows how, by becoming the secretary of a bishop, he became a friar out on leave. Thus Erasmus was able to visit Paris and England. By natural endowment of genius, indomitable industry, and powers enriched through congenial association with the wise and the witty, the once obscure boy could start the laughter of Europe which rocked down the monastic towers and strongholds, while with his Greek New Testament, accompanied by a Latin translation and paraphrases, he built a sure foundation for the Reformation. Almost to the last Erasmus, basking in the favor of popes and rulers, hoped that reformation would proceed from within. He hated war and the clash of arms, and liked everything to be done in good form, intellectually, and, as it were, with propriety, elegancy, and rose water. He claimed that, though he was charged with laying the egg which Luther hatched, what he provided for was a hen, while Luther was a gamecock. Hardly realizing how much of a reformer he really was, the great scholar passed away.

---

[*] Danvis Folks. By Rowland E. Robinson. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

[*] Life and Letters of Erasmus. By J. A. Froude. Chas. Scribner's Sons. $2.50.

One who has impartially studied the religious controversies of the last twenty-five or even the last five years in these United States will be delighted with this book. It is astonishingly timely, although it pictures men who were called Catholics and Lutherans. The photographs were taken three centuries ago, but the book shows the unchangeableness of human nature. Simply alter the names of individuals and of parties and let them be those of persons and factions of today and one will have a marvelously accurate picture of our own times. Here were the same men who condemned a man's book without reading it; bandied all sorts of vile epithets and indulged their angry passions, labeling them the while with names that suggest zeal for God, for Christ, for truth, and for the Church. When the volcano is extinct it requires an expert to be able to tell from the scoria exactly what sort of a fire the original eruption was. The common man cannot do it. So, also, in religious controversy later generations cannot tell the difference between the tweedledum and tweedledee of the quarrel the nature of which is concealed by holy words and phrases. It is only when we take into account human nature, with its passions, its prejudices, its selfishness, its wickedness, its tendency to cover up self and selfishness with God's name and command, that we can at all understand what the disturbance was all about.

Froude's work has all the excellences, with the pronounced limitations manifest in his former works, and upon the latter we need not dwell. Though he says a good deal about Erasmus' use of language, he does not seem to know that Erasmus all his life could talk only one language well, and that was his native Dutch, which he loved with passionate loyalty. He could make use of Latin to a considerable extent as a medium of learned but hardly of ordinary conversation. In the society of scholars he was as good a listener as talker, even more so, and he often required an interpreter for a full enjoyment of the puns, jokes, and witty sayings. In English, French, German, and Italian he was a hopeless flounderer, and often got himself into unpleasant situations by his lack of knowledge of the modern vernacular. He was a typical product of the love of schools and learning which possessed Holland, both popularly and officially, during the days of the Brethren of the Common Life.

The last page of the book bears signs that Mr. Froude's illness which ended his life had already begun to weaken him, for he leaves himself "no time for concluding reflections." It contents him to say that he has put before us "the character and thoughts of an extraordinary man at the most exciting period of modern history." We can see what that story really was if we look at it through the eyes of Erasmus.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF SIXTEEN PRESIDENTS.*

OUR country has had, in its one hundred and five years of national existence, twenty-one Presidents. That there is a man living who has known personally every one of these since Madison, and has seen every one but the first two, seems almost incredible. But Col. Richard W. Thompson, whose volume on the Jesuits we reviewed but lately, is this man, and he has done well to write down his recollections of this long succession of chief magistrates of the Republic. Colonel Thompson sat in the Indiana Legislature of 1834, of which he is the only survivor, and in the Twenty-Seventh Congress, which Robert C. Winthrop and he alone represent among the living. He saw John Quincy Adams fall dead at his side while he was serving in the Thirtieth Congress. He has been at numerous presidential inaugurations, has known most of the noted public men of America for sixty years back, and rounded out his public career by filling the office of Secretary of the Navy under Hayes. His leisure since his retirement has been given to literary labors, of which this volume of recollections is not the least valuable.

This is not a book of anecdotes and personal reminiscences; it tells few stories and does not enter into the private life of the sixteen Presidents; but it is the notebook of an honest politician and an energetic statesman, and its subject is the Presidents in their public life — how they came to be nominated and what they did in office. The excellent spirit of the work is indicated by one of its mottoes, taken from Gouverneur Morris: "Let us forget party and think of our country. That country embraces both parties. We must endeavor, therefore, to serve and benefit both. This cannot be effected while political delusions array good men against each other." Colonel Thompson has been an earnest Whig and Republican, but he writes without animosity and with the just kindliness of old age and its temperate judgment on all who were his political opponents. The book is more properly an important contribution to our political history than a series of biographical sketches. As such it will take an honored place among the sources which the student of our political development will consult with pleasure and profit, and its wide circulation should do much good. It gives one of those personal views of parties and policies which make an invaluable supplement to histories and biographies alike — occupying a middle ground between them. A few extracts will give our readers an idea of the varied interest of this record.

Jefferson's Louisiana purchase as well as Monroe's acquisition of Florida Colonel Thompson disapproves as unconstitutional and setting dangerous precedents. He would have the House of Representatives made a party to all treaties with foreign nations. Jefferson is the first of the Presidents here commemorated:

> In the spring of 1825 I visited Charlottesville, Albemarle County, Virginia, and then had an opportunity to observe Jefferson somewhat closely. He had come to town from Monticello in a light colored carriage, drawn by two horses and driven by an old negro man. The object of his visit > seemed the purchase of goods, as I found him in a store thus engaged. I was scarcely old enough to form intelligent conclusions regarding him from observations so casual, yet to a youth like me it appeared something more than a mere privilege that I should be permitted to look upon the author of the Declaration of Independence, who was one of the foremost men in the country, and who had reflected honor upon his and my own native State, as well as upon the nation. So closely did I scrutinize him that the scene was photographed upon my mind and memory, and has been recalled vividly to my recollection many times. He was then two years younger than I am, eighty-five years, but bore the marks of decrepitude, the wearing away of the vigorous energies of manhood. Notwithstanding the thoughts that crowded my youthful mind I could not avoid observing the plain and almost simple rusticity of his dress. He belonged to that class of men, who disregarding the frivolities of society, devote their best faculties to other and greater objects. I observed his eyes, which had lost somewhat of their brilliancy, but were still clear, penetrating, and bright. His voice was feeble and slightly tremulous, but not sufficiently so to leave the impression that he was not susceptible of distinct and clear enunciation when there was occasion for it.

---

* Personal Recollections of Sixteen Presidents, from Washington to Lincoln. By Richard W. Thompson. Sold by subscription. Bound in buckram, gilt top. Two volumes. Pp. viii, 438. Indianapolis and Kansas City: The Bowen-Merrill Co. $6.00.

Madison was better known to our biographer:

> I looked upon James Madison as next to Washington — esteeming him as the father of the constitution and Washington as the father of the nation. His country residence was in Orange County, Virginia, within less than thirty miles of the place of my nativity. I frequently saw him, and was enabled to realize to myself that his personal appearance indicated the possession of the high qualities universally assigned him. After I had seen Jefferson I could not avoid observing the contrast between them — Madison being below the average height, while Jefferson was tall. I was more attracted by the expression of his countenance than by that of Jefferson. It seemed to me each time I observed him that I had rarely seen a face in which more calm and quiet composure was expressed. It was a complete personification of gentleness and benevolence. This, however, was altogether consistent with the prominent characteristics assigned him by the whole community. By different marriages I was brought into close relations to relatives of Madison and those who followed his counsels and learned to appreciate his virtue.

Colonel Thompson rejects, of course, the absurd "bargain and corruption cry" raised against John Quincy Adams, who was afterwards his colleague in the House:

> He died like a true knight, with his armor on, and ready up to the last moment to measure lances with any adversary. I had many opportunities of observing him closely, especially when he was arraigned before the House for treasonable intent because he presented a petition from a few citizens of Haverhill, Mass., praying that the Union be dissolved. All that happened during that extraordinary proceeding came under my personal observation, and very few incidents have so impressed my mind as this attempt to fasten the stigma of disgrace upon him for what he considered a simple and harmless performance of official duty.

An anecdote of Jackson should not be passed over. The young Thompson called on the President once with his father, who happened to mention that his son was not in sympathy politically with Old Hickory:

> I was somewhat embarrassed at this, because of the apprehension that I should be lectured for disobedience to parental instruction. Instead of this, however, he approached, and placing his hand upon my head said in a kind and gentle tone of voice, "My son, I have no advice to give you about your politics except this — always think for yourself and let your conscience be your guide."

In the latter part of his reminiscences Colonel Thompson has to deal with another order of men in Van Buren, Tyler, Polk, Pierce, and Buchanan, but he does not indulge in mere denunciation, and his verdicts are those on which most fair-minded students of their times have already agreed. The portraits of eighteen Presidents down to Lincoln and two of the author are the illustrations of two volumes gotten up in excellent style.

MY FIRST BOOK.*

THE twenty-two authors whose contributions to his magazine, the Idler, Mr. Jerome has assembled in an attractive volume are, without exception, novelists. The fact witnesses to the immense vogue of fiction at the present time and to the insatiable curiosity of the public concerning the authors whom it likes — a curiosity which is gratified here, not only by the autobiographical sketches of the first children of these authors' brains, but also by many illustrations of the houses, the studies, and libraries, the haunts, the pets, and other objects too numerous to mention connected with these favorites. Of course their portraits are given — an excellent series on the whole — with their wives and children in most cases.

It certainly will not be the fault of the fiction authors of the present day if their contemporaries do not know all that can be known about the origin and fortunes of their books, their methods of composition, their likes and their dislikes, and many other similar matters, to tell of which the interviewer delights. The fine art of privacy is apparently getting to be one of the lost arts among popular authors. The judicious, who are not pleased with this overexhibition of themselves instead of their works by authors of the day, will be consoled by reflecting on the very probable indifference of posterity to most of the novels and novelists named in this gossipy book. This is not to deny the cleverness of the mass of the fiction here in question, but the far larger part of it is likely to be little more lasting than the day's newspaper. It meets a temporary need of something to fill the idle hour and is then dismissed. Meanwhile the thrifty novelist, well aware of this fact, exhibits himself at so much a page to a gaping public, "whose testing thumb leaves everywhere its smutch," and congratulates himself that if he is to have a biographer some day he has saved that person much trouble, and that in any case sundry ducats have been added to his purse.

If one can put aside his regret at the lack of reserve which most of these writers manifest he will find a deal of amusing and instructive matter here. It should be especially instructive to would-be authors. These are so great a multitude nowadays that this book should have a large sale among them alone. The chief instruction will be a lesson of patience and hopefulness. The usual course of things with these writers has been a long period of apprenticeship in story-telling in the less known papers and magazines, a series of manuscripts rejected by cautious publishers, and a final success, often traceable to the trying discipline. Mr. Hall Caine, indeed, has no such history to tell. "No tale of mine has yet passed from publishing house to publishing house. Except the first of the series, my stories have been accepted before they have been read." But this is true only of his career as a novelist. He had a "semi-subterranean career" as a poet and a critic before he found his work in fiction. The story of his incessant labors on his first novel gives, moreover, a bright example to novices of the genius that consists in taking infinite pains. If, besides this industry, they are Hall Caines to begin with — then they will probably all succeed! The mixture of their colors with brains is a more difficult matter than melting an obdurate publisher.

Miss Marie Corelli, who seems on the whole the most self-satisfied of these twenty-two writers, has had no difficulty whatever in making her career or winning her public. She has "never had a word of open encouragement or kindness from any leading English critic." She attributes her success to the simple fact that she has always tried to write straight from her own heart to the hearts of others "regardless of opinions and indifferent to results." The sales of her books certainly prove there are people enough in the world to like this sort of thing, so that the author will receive a solid compensation for her work, however little value this may seem to have in the eyes of critical experts.

The amount of unconscious plagiarism in first books is one of the striking points in these confessions. Mr. Stevenson says of his Treasure Island that "plagiarism was rarely carried farther" than in its debt to Irving's Tales of a Traveller, but he had no notion of it at the time of writing: "It seemed to me original as sin; it seemed to belong to me like my right eye." So Mr. David Christie Murray is quite sure now "that if there had been no David Copperfield there would have been no Life's Atonement;" but at the time he was utterly unconscious of the debt.

Mr. Kipling and Mr. Bret Harte relate the history of two volumes of poetry —

---

* My First Book. With an Introduction by Jerome K. Jerome and 185 Illustrations. J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.50.

the first, Departmental Ditties; the second, a collection of California verse. Mr. Kipling's poems appeared first in the journal on which he served, and they had to contend often with the advertisements for space to show themselves in:

> Rukn-Din, the foreman of our side, approved of them immensely, for he was a Muslim of culture. He would say: "Your potery very good, sir; just coming proper length today. You giving more soon? One third column just proper. Always can take on third page."

My First Book is an extremely readable volume, and beside those who will run it through for mere amusement it may be found valuable by professors and students of literature for its numerous hints and illustrations drawn from actual experience. Such clever writers as Messrs. Besant, Payn, Clark Russell, Grant Allen, George R. Sims, Dr. Doyle, Miss Braddon, F. W. Robinson, Haggard, Ballantyne, Zangwill, Morley Roberts, Jerome, J. S. Winter, "Q," and Robert Buchanan, beside those previously named, could not make a dull book if they tried.

CHILDHOOD IN LITERATURE AND ART.*

IN these days when Wordsworth's prophecy is so thoroughly fulfilled, when "the child" is not only "father of the man" but also schoolmaster, a study of Childhood in Literature and Art is sure of a warm welcome. Parents will read such a book with longing regret for the happy past when the revised version of the Fifth Commandment was not yet in force and "Honor your sons and your daughters that your days may be comfortable in the house you live in" was not the ruling motto in every household. Children will read Mr. Scudder with deep gratitude and self-congratulation as the picture of the dependent and obedient state from which they have so triumphantly emancipated themselves is unrolled before them.

Mr. Scudder's sketch of the influence of childhood from the days of the Greeks until our own time is a very scholarly performance, and his illustrations from literature are selected with excellent tact and taste. Childhood, he says, "in Roman literature is not contemplated as a fine revelation of nature. In the grosser conception children are reckoned as scarcely more than cubs. . . . There is scarcely a child's voice to be heard in the whole range of Greek poetic art. The conception is universally of the child, not as acting, far less as speaking, but as a passive member of the social order." The Hebraic attitude towards the child was more modern than that of either Greek or Roman. "It is, indeed, the expectation of what this child will be and do which moves the pious souls about it;" but "we may fairly contend that the apprehension of the sanctity of childhood was more positive with the Jew than with either the Greek or the Roman."

In early Christian ages the child was prominent as martyr and confessor, but in the later Middle Ages the rigor of life seemed to shut out childhood from all influence. Dante, in his great, all-embracing picture of the life of his age, has barely a reference to childhood; the picture of Count Ugolino with his children in the Hunger Tower, perhaps the most poignant description of a father's love in all literature, is the only reference worthy of note in the Divine Comedy. With the Renaissance the child in art came into prominence; but with a few beautiful exceptions in Chaucer and Shakespeare — notably Hugh of Lincoln, Arthur in "King John," and the princes in the tower in "Richard III" — we might say childhood is absent from literature until the period of the French Revolution, when Rousseau, Bernardin de St. Pierre, William Blake, and, above all, Wordsworth inaugurated the new era. These greater names are followed by a host of lesser lights; Miss Edgeworth, Jane and Ann Taylor, and Mrs. Barbauld have all added their quota to the literature of childhood.

Thus briefly does Mr. Scudder outline the course of the influence of child life in the book world and in the art world until the present day. Besides this general survey he gives separate chapters to French, German, and American literature regarding the child. Since the Renaissance, with its countless representations of the divine Child, the infant Saint John, and the attendant cherubs, no other country has been so deeply influenced by childhood in its art life as England. Mr. Scudder instances Sir Joshua Reynolds, Gainsborough, Sir John Millais, Kate Greenaway, and Richard Doyle. He has treated his subject thoroughly, and his volume is in every respect a noteworthy publication.

THE SHERMAN LETTERS.*

UNDER date of May 4, 1884, Senator John Sherman writes from Washington to General W. T. Sherman:

> It is certain that if Blaine is not nominated in the early ballots a movement will be made for your nomination, and if entered upon will go like wildfire. . . . My own opinion is still, that while you ought not to seek, or even beforehand consent, to accept a nomination, yet if it comes unsought and with cordial unanimity you ought to acquiesce. . . . I see no prospect or possibility of my nomination, and not much of my election if nominated, but yours is easy.

Senator Sherman has usually been justified in his political prophecies, and it is altogether probable that he was correct in his anticipation in this case. But General Sherman was unalterable in his determination not to be a candidate for the presidency, although he had a letter from Mr. Blaine to the effect that, in the case of a deadlock between President Arthur and himself in the convention, General Sherman's name would inevitably be used and that he had no right to decline. But he replied firmly in the negative.

Such a correspondence between two brothers is unique in our history. This whole volume is full of letters showing the same absolute trust in each other on the part of these two eminent men, one great in the arts of war, the other great in the arts of peace, and it will occupy a distinct and high place in the memoirs pour servir of American military and political history. This was a noble pair of brothers, occupying stations all but the highest in the most critical period of our nation, and this intimate correspondence does honor to them both, showing the purity of their motives, the manliness of their temper, and the sincerity of their patriotism. It begins with letters from the young cadet of seventeen at West Point, in 1837, to his brother, his junior by three years, and it ends on February 3, 1891. The letters of Senator Sherman are the smaller part of the correspondence, but they are valuable commentaries on the course of politics before, during, and after the war. Both brothers were conservative, the general in political affairs, for which he had much distaste, being naturally more so than the senator. In 1854, for instance, he believed that free negroes would not work well in the South, and he did not agree with his brother, later, that negro suffrage was desirable. He had a poor opinion of politics and politicians in general, as his vigorous letter to Schuyler Colfax in August, 1864, showed. Replying to an intimation that certain Indiana regiments should be ordered where they could be furloughed so as to vote in the fall elections, he wrote:

> Of course it is impossible. . . . I think you need not be concerned about the soldiers' vote. They will vote — it may not be in the coming election — but you may rest assured the day will come when the soldiers will vote, and the only doubt is if they will permit the stay-at-homes to vote at all.

In 1865 General Sherman declared to his brother: "I would rather be an engineer of a railroad than President of the United States or any political officer;" and nine years later he repeated this feeling: "Don't ever give any person the least encouragement to think I can be used for political ends. I have seen it poison so many otherwise good characters that I am really more obstinate than ever. I think Grant will be made miserable to the end of his life by his eight years' experience." All that the professional politician loves to do to advance himself this able general detested, as this letter of December, 1863, shows:

> Dear Brother: I have been importuned from many quarters for my likeness, autographs, and biography. I have managed to fend off all par> ties and hope to do so till the end of the war. I don't want to rise or be notorious, for the reason that a mere slip or accident may let me fall, and I don't care about falling so far as most of the temporary heroes of the war. The real men of the war will be determined by the closing scenes, and then the army will determine the question. Newspaper puffs and self-written biographies will then be ridiculous caricatures. Already has time marked this progress and indicated this conclusion. If parties apply to you for materials in my behalf give the most brief and general items and leave the results to the close of the war or of my career. As well might a judge or senator seek for fame outside their spheres of action as an officer of the army. We must all be judged by our own peers, stand or fall by their verdict. I know I stand very high with the army, and feel no concern on that score. Today I can do more with Admiral Porter or the generals than any general officer out West except Grant, and with him I am as a second self. We are personal and official friends.

---

* Childhood in Literature and Art. A Study. By Horace E. Scudder. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

* The Sherman Letters. Correspondence between General and Senator Sherman, from 1837 to 1891. Edited by Rachel Sherman Thorndike. With portraits. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50.

But the love and appreciation of his soldiers were dear to Sherman. Writing from Savannah, December 31, 1864, one of the few letters composed on the famous March to the Sea, he says:

> I hear the soldiers talk as I go by, "There goes the old man; all's right." Not a waver, doubt, or hesitation when I order, and men march to certain death without a murmur if I call on them, because they know I value their lives as much as my own. I do not feel any older, and have no gray hairs yet. My health is good, and, save a little rheumatism in my right arm during the last march, I have not been indisposed a day, and even then I rode daily a march. . . . I do not fear want of appreciation, but, on the contrary, that an extraordinary faith will be generated in my ability that no man can fulfill.

Especially notable among Senator Sherman's letters are that of December 22, 1860, describing the situation in that perilous time, where he says, "The Constitution provided against every probable vacancy in the office of President, but did not provide for utter imbecility," and those written during Johnson's administration. The distinction which Senator Sherman has enjoyed is accounted for in some degree by what he says in August, 1862, when he writes:

> Since my return I have spent most of my time in my library. I have always felt that my knowledge of American politics was rather the superficial view of the politician and not accurate enough for the position assigned me. . . . I therefore read and study more and speak less than usual.

Mrs. Thorndike has connected the letters with brief biographical data, and her editorial work has been performed with much thoroughness. We have noted only two slight errors in her text. In the note on page 2 she mentions the Muskingham River for the Muskingum, and the letter on page 116 should evidently be dated April 30 instead of May 30, 1861.

FOLLOWING THE GREEK CROSS.*

WHO does not know of the Sixth Corps, composed of "the saviors of Washington" during the Civil War? Their badge was a Greek cross, and wherever there was fighting to be done the Sixth Corps was very likely to be on hand. There was room for just the kind of a book which General Hyde has written, for this book is one of the readable sort. The author does not profess to give us the whole philosophy of the art of war or an encyclopedia of information more or less dry and remote from human interests, but a thoroughly enjoyable story of personal experience of march, camp, and battle. While his book is spirited and full of dramatic detail, he has a genius for leaving out disagreeable and uncanny things. He has studied realism so as to know what to set in shadow, while offering only that which is best. Knowing that personal narratives of the Napoleonic campaigns, scant as they are, are of rare interest, he has yearned for personal stories of experience in the Revolutionary War; hence he knows what to write for us.

Beginning at Augusta, Me., after having taught the students the Zouave drill at Bowdoin College, young Hyde began recruiting for the Seventh Maine Infantry. Before he had had time to give the regiment cohesion by a short period of camp life in Augusta this newly fledged major, with no superior officers yet appointed, had to take this mob of one thousand men to Washington. When in Faneuil Hall the regiment filed in to take a lunch provided by the city, the spectators must have been as much impressed by the heterogeneousness as with the solid qualities of the men. Here were long, lithe sons of Aroostook, Indians from the Penobscot tribe, pale-faced clerks from the towns, river drivers from the Androscoggin, sailors just off blue waters, keen-eyed hunters from Moosehead Lake, old soldiers of Her Majesty, and a few of the Irish, who in all times have scented the battle from afar. They made the Cradle of Liberty ring with their cheers. The worst enemy of the men, however, both before, during, and after the battles, was John Barleycorn. However, they got into Virginia, tasted opossum soup, started for the peninsula, and smelt their first battle smoke and were for the first time under fire at Lee's Mills, near Yorktown. There the major saw the foe face to face and near enough to count his buttons. There, also, he saw the first man killed in the Army of the Potomac — Joe Pepper of Bath, and when the officer took out from the private's bloody pocket his wife's picture he felt as if he would like to get out of the army; but instead he plunged again into hard-tack, mud, and rain, built corduroy roads, and had picket fights. With a head still full of Yankee common sense, our author gives his opinion of McClellan, who, he thinks, was in some sense an exponent of the army. At that time the army thought that their general did all things well, and it is certain that McClellan thought the same. General Hyde describes the various episodes of the peninsula campaign, and gives a picture which in detail and in outline is as fascinating as anything we have read in the now voluminous war literature. He tells of his furloughs and home experiences during the war. After showing how the Army of the Potomac was literally misled, he warms up to his work when he pictures the great struggle at Gettysburg and the new spirit that seemed to come into the Army of the Potomac when Grant took charge of the veterans.

Although we have in this book wonderfully vivid relations of actual experiences in battle (some of the sentences would serve well to inspire artists), yet we have also a true perspective of a soldier's life, for, after all, soldiers spend more time in eating, drinking, smoking, chatting, and sleeping than in fighting, and the camp occupies a larger space in their memory even than the battle. To our taste the descriptions of the rations and of camp life are inimitable. There are fourteen excellent illustrations, the portraits being especially satisfactory. For real enjoyment to the reader we know of no small war book that excels this.

— The Rev. Edward Abbott writes from Cambridge, Mass., these commendatory words concerning the Rev. Mr. Arbuthnot of England, now in this country: "The Rev. George Arbuthnot, rector of Holy Trinity, Stratford-on-Avon, gave his lecture on 'Shakespeare and His Home' in this city, October 17, to a large and delighted audience. The lecture in itself was excellent, and the views illustrating it were beautiful. Whoever succeeds in securing the lecture, sharing the profits with Mr. Arbuthnot, will be fortunate. His address is to care of Drexel, Morgan & Co., New York City. He started for a trip across the continent last week via Chicago and Omaha."

— The Green Carnation, which was only published the other day in the Pioneer series and has already roused considerable notice because of its obvious portrait of a prominent literary man and of several persons well known in certain circles of society, is said to be the work of two authors who printed a volume some months ago under their own names. — The Athenæum.

— The Authors' Guild, with Gen. James Grant Wilson in the chair, held its third annual meeting October 9 in New York. Resolutions concerning the death of Dr. Holmes were passed; new members and new officers were elected, the office of president being left vacant as there did not seem to be any eligible candidate to fill it. The new officers elected were: vice-presidents, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Maurice Thompson, and Albert Matthews; secretary, Craven L. Betts; treasurer, Dr. Titus M. Coan; managers, Edwin H. Shannon, W. H. Beard, Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton, Mrs. Kate Tannatt Woods, Mrs. Elizabeth Akers Allen, Mrs. Ellen Hardin Walworth, and Dr. Newland Maynard.

— Miss Christiana Rossetti is confined to her bed by an organic trouble from which she is not likely to recover. Her friends realize her danger and have very little reason to feel any hope.

---

* Following the Greek Cross; or, Memories of the Sixth Army Corps. By Thomas W. Hyde. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

The Literary World

BOSTON 3 NOVEMBER 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

Trilby.

O living image of eternal Youth!
Wrought with such large simplicity of truth
That, now the pattern's made and on the shelf,
Each swears he might have cut it for himself;
Nor marvels that we sang of empty days,
Of rank-grown laurel and unpruned bays,
While yet, in all this lonely Crusoe land,
The Trilby footprint had not touched the sand.
Here's a new carelessness of Titan play!
Here's Ariel's witchery to lead the way
In such sweet artifice of dainty wit
That men shall die with imitating it.
Now every man's old grief turns in its bed,
And bleeds a drop or two, divinely red;
Fair baby joys do rouse them one by one,
Dancing a lightsome round, though love be done;
And Memory takes off her frontlet dim
To bind a bit of tinsel round the rim.
Dreams come to life and faint foreshadowings
Flutter anear us on reluctant wings.
But not one pang, nay, though 'twere gall of bliss,
And not one such awakening would we miss.
O comrades, here's true stuff, ours to adore,
And swear we'll carve our cherry stones no more.

— Alice Brown, in the Chap-Book.

What the Sonnet Is.

Fourteen small broidered berries on the hem
Of Circe's mantle, each of magic gold;
Fourteen of lone Calypso's tears that rolled
Into the sea for pearls to come of them;

Fourteen clear signs of omen in the gem
With which Medea human fate foretold;
Fourteen small drops, which Faustus, growing old,
Craved of the Fiend to water Life's dry stem.

It is the pure white diamond Dante brought
To Beatrice; the sapphire Laura wore
When Petrarch cut it sparkling out of thought;

The ruby Shakespeare hewed from his heart's core;
The dark, deep emerald that Rossetti wrought
For his own soul to wear forevermore.

— Eugene Lee-Hamilton.

TWO ENGLISH STORY-TELLERS.

BOSTON has had the pleasure in the last few days of seeing and hearing two popular English novelists — Mr. David Christie Murray and Dr. A. Conan Doyle. Mr. Murray has delivered three lectures, entitled "The Making of a Novelist," "The Novelist's Notebook," and "The Poet's Notebook." The title, however, has almost as little to tell of the contents of Mr. Murray's so-called "lecture" as the text has of the sermon with some preachers. As his managers say, Mr. Murray's discourses are not "lectures at all in the ordinary sense of the word." The matter of the first was a vivid description of several dramatic episodes in his career as a journalist, a strong recital of Robert Buchanan's poem on Judas Iscariot, and happy imitations of the oratory of John Bright and Lord Beaconsfield. All these were delivered without notes, and Mr. Murray, who has the story-telling faculty and has seen a great deal of the world, takes possession of his audience at once. One hears from him neither general literary criticism nor a specific account of his own career as a novelist; instruction is not his aim, but entertainment, and entertainment of a very picturesque and dramatic quality may be expected by every one who has the pleasure of listening to Mr. Murray.

Dr. Doyle's "Readings and Reminiscences," on the other hand, bear strictly upon his life as an author, from his first composition on the man who met the tiger down to the latest volume of his stories, Around the Red Lamp. He tells the story of his early love for books and story-telling developing into his popular novels of adventure in a manly, modest fashion, which wins his audience very soon. He is not, like Mr. Murray, a born actor, but his voice is pleasant and strong, and his reading of his stories is animated and effective. Sherlock Holmes was, of course, a prominent person in both the reminiscences and the readings. Dr. Doyle has written twenty-six stories about this popular character, and he was obliged to kill him off finally in self-defense, as he did not wish to be known to fame chiefly as a writer of detective stories. Holmes became a very real person to many of Dr. Doyle's readers, and requests for a lock of his hair have been many. Some persons have even supposed Dr. Doyle as skilled a detective as his fictitious character, and his services in ferreting out criminals have been in demand in numerous quarters. Dr. Doyle has also been asked to revive Sherlock Holmes and put him through further adventures!

It is a notable fact that both these novelists are excellent speakers; they will not send many of their audience away disappointed as to hearing them and consoled only by seeing them. Both are genial personalities, while their good feeling for America is evidently unfeigned, and their cordial expressions of amity find a quick response from their hearers. It is, indeed, pleasant to become a little better acquainted with a favorite novelist by listening to him for an hour in the flesh. Although, more than serious writers, the writer of fiction hides himself behind his characters and their conversations, the natural desire to know more of those who have given us many hours of sincere delight brings the author and his readers together in the lecture hall. Such a desire is seldom more agreeably gratified than in the case of Messrs. Murray and Doyle, to whom one must wish full success in their American tours.

WEALTH AGAINST COMMONWEALTH.*

MR. H. D. LLOYD of Chicago has before this written vigorously of the Standard Oil Company in the magazines, and he has also described a long conflict in the coal business in his Strike of Millionaires against Miners. He has made the great Oil Trust the subject of such careful study that it was very natural he should go on and produce a book about it. Had Mr. Lloyd less pronounced rhetorical and more obvious logical gifts, and were his literary skill in condensation as great as in sustained declamation, he would have given the public a volume both easier to read and more effective in attaining his desired end — the destruction of the Standard Oil Company and all other trusts, and the assumption of their functions by government. Mr. Lloyd appears to be a thoroughgoing socialist; he has certainly one of the distinguishing marks of the systematic socialist — the extreme propensity to paint the present situation as black as possible, and the immeasurable credulity as to what "The People" can do if they will. The limitations placed on human desire by natural law are overlooked by the socialist in the glow of his enthusiastic visions of a world become entirely happy because it has adopted his pet scheme of industrial salvation — so much better than that slowly evolved by the age-long experience of total society!

As the prelude to a book about a matter of the first importance to the interests of our whole people — a matter, therefore, demanding clearness of sight, calmness and sobriety of statement, a steady reliance upon facts, and a resolute abstinence from cheap rhetoric for the best effect — Mr. Lloyd's beginning is very unpromising:

> Nature is rich; but everywhere man, the heir of nature, is poor. . . . The world, enriched by thousands of generations of toilers and thinkers, has reached a fertility which can give every human being a plenty undreamed of even in the Utopias. But between this plenty ripening on the boughs of our civilization and the people hungering for it step the "cornerers," the syndicates, trusts, combinations, with the cry of over-production — too much of everything.

The thorough sentimentalism of such paragraphs — and Mr. Lloyd has many like them afterward — must at once repel a mind that has heard of the "struggle for existence," or felt its power in human life, and has realized in some degree what the pressure of population on the means of subsistence implies. That between all our economic and industrial distresses and entire plenty for every person there only lie the trusts and their friends — this is Mr. Lloyd's simple thesis — its simplicity being enough to condemn it in the eyes of philosophic minds. We have searched this volume in vain for any recognition of the truths perceived by many economists already, that trusts and combinations are a natural development from a period of pure competition, and that wisdom lies in the path of recognition of the good uses they have and legislative suppression of their evils by a stricter control than has hitherto been practiced. In various essays by such writers as President Andrews and Prof. J. W. Jenks, to name but two writers of sound judgment, may be found a statement of the situation and the probable best remedy far preferable to Mr. Lloyd's on every ground of sobriety and feasibility.

The strong point of Mr. Lloyd's book — which is a history of the Standard Oil Company in the utmost detail, based on very laborious researches into all its proceedings from the days of the South Improvement Company, the Tide Water Pipe Line, and the Vacuum Oil Company down to the Toledo municipal natural gas lines and the very latest developments of this present year — is its abundance of information. Its weakest point is its thoroughly partisan tone. No reader can imagine for a moment that he is in the hands of a cool, deliberate judge dispassionately summing up the evidence. Mr. Lloyd prefers the rhetorical way of putting things wherever it is possible, and his rhetoric is often ingenious and surprising; even the rebate, most prosaic of terms one would suppose, becomes here "the smokeless rebate." Mr. Lloyd's talents, of no mean order, are those of the special pleader, the partisan, the orator. These characters have their place — on the stump, in the court room, and in many other directions they are only too effective. But if there be such a thing, either in existence or to seek, as economic science, they are utterly out of place in it. The undoubted and fully proved evils of the monopoly practiced by the Standard Oil Company and its compeers are great enough to need no artificial heightening; the suppression, on the other hand, of the good part they actually play, or can be made to play, is here continuous. Mr. Lloyd is far from having written a thoroughly reliable or fair-minded account of this whole astonishing development; he has been more intent on telling his story dramatically, with rhetorical effect, than on weighing good and evil in just balances on which no wind of passion or verbal vanity should be allowed to blow — no, not for an instant, if truth be the main thing. Students of economics will resort to this volume for many facts not otherwise obtainable, but it is written in a style which we trust is to fall more and more into disuse among us; it must do so if men are reasoning and not merely declamatory animals.

---

* Wealth against Commonwealth. By Henry Demarest Lloyd. Pp. 563. Harper & Brothers. $2.50.

PHILADELPHIA NOTES.

As nothing is so hard as to gain a hearing from your own community, I suppose nothing is so certain as that you deserve it when you do gain it. This is the case at present with the little knot of authors who make Philadelphia their home and whose books have been coming forth for the past few years with a persistency which has begun to win recognition abroad, and now, as an expected sequence, at home. Dr. S. Weir Mitchell has always had a high place among our men of letters, but his recent books have been so successful and have come so quick in succession, and his unpublished work, known to the few, is so sure an advance over even his published volumes, that his position has become confirmed as the leader among the native authors. Says one keen critic, "That there has been a new birth of activity in creative literature in Philadelphia has for some time been noticeable to those persons who take note of the city's intellectual currents." This from a newspaper writer in Philadelphia is refreshing and new. Another great daily has just brought together on a single page extended reviews of five new books just issued by as many different publishers, all by authors who hail from the Quaker City, and there are still more to be heard from as the publishing season advances. Dr. Mitchell's When All the Woods Were Green; Dr. Abbott's The Birds About Us; Henry Morais' The Jews of Philadelphia; and The Flute Player, and Other Poems, by Francis Howard Williams, were among the above mentioned. Among those yet to come are Miss Agnes Repplier's In the Dozy Hours and Other Papers; Miss Anne H. Wharton's Colonial Days and Dames; Charlemagne Tower's The Marquis de La Fayette in the War of the Revolution; a volume of his collected short stories of the Wild West by Owen Wister; a life of Henry B. Hurst, poet, Bohemian, and friend of Poe in his Philadelphia days, by Dr. Matthew Woods; Henry Pancoast's Introduction to English Literature; a volume of autobiography by John Sartain, the associate of Graham and the brilliant wit of old Philadelphia in its magazine period; a biological work by Dr. Horace Jayne; and a book of addresses and papers by Dr. William Pepper, ex-provost of the university.

Beside these evidences of genuine literary activity there are articles and poems by bright townsmen and women accepted — for perhaps Horatian probation — by several of the leading monthlies; and Mr. Ernest Lacy's plays are fast making for him a place as a successful dramatist. His play founded on "Japhet in Search of a Father" has been accepted by Mr. Mansfield, and he is full of ideas for other dramas drawn from his early reading in solid literature.

Of the people who make the books it is also pleasant to record some facts. Miss Agnes Repplier is now in Vienna, whence she travels to Buda-Pesth, to Belgrade, and Constantinople, and afterwards to Greece and Egypt. Mr. Edward W. Bok, editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, is rusticating in the Berkshire Hills, where he means to stay for some time. Dr. Charles C. Abbott is always at home near Trenton, N. J., where, in swamp and meadow and up and down stream, he cultivates, besides his farm, the ideas and observations which make his charming books. He is now in love with the night, and we may expect a book of moonlight and hushed noises. Mr. Charles Leonard Moore, author of A Book of Day Dreams, has moved into Philadelphia from Hickory Town, where he has been spending the summer in rustic associations and pursuits. Miss Anne H. Wharton has returned from Bedford Springs. Dr. Weir Mitchell is just back from Europe. Mr. Owen Wister is resting at home from his Western experiences.

Dr. A. Conan Doyle is expected as the guest of Mr. Craige Lippincott, and it is proposed that there shall be several receptions for him while he is in Philadelphia, but his movements seem so uncertain that nothing definite can now be fixed.

It is fitting that a letter devoted to Literary Philadelphia should close with a reference to the newest candidate for honors. This is Miss Anna Robeson Brown, the daughter of the late Henry Armitt Brown, whose repute as an orator was so wide and whose eloquence was so marked. Miss Brown has hitherto contributed some verses to the monthlies, but she has now taken a conspicuous place in the magazine ranks. A story by her, founded on old English life, will appear as the complete novel in the March or April Lippincott's.

Harrison S. Morris.

FICTION.

Sweet Clover.

Mrs. Clara Louise Burnham has laid the scenes of her pleasant, pure-toned romance among the glories of the White City. It is delightful to have them reanimated in such a vivid manner, for their significance and their art are treated with a moral perspective that is not destroyed by too much effusion. The love-making is sprightly; the two sisters and their lovers are noble-minded and genuine, so that the tale is as entertaining as it is useful as a reminiscent guide-book. The fire is described with real power, and as we read of it regret breaks forth again at the short-lived reality of the beauty of the White City. The peristyle becomes the climax of emotion, but just how we leave the reader to find out. Sweet Clover is one of the most agreeable love stories which have appeared for a long time. Possibly it has a trifle too much religious sentiment, but amid the many weak or perverted books of the day its simplicity is refreshing. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

Catherine de' Medici.

Miss Wormeley has won, long ago, such recognition for the excellence of her translations that it is quite superfluous to say that the English rendering of Catherine de' Medici is beyond criticism. Balzac is far less great as a historical novelist than as a describer of the types of human character and passion of his day and generation. His very power of analyzing such characters as he met in his daily life detracted from his ability to recreate the past. It is rarely that a man can make the past vivid except through a multitude of picturesque and elaborate details which throw a fictitious aspect of reality upon the main figures. Dumas was a past master in this art of detail, but Balzac's fashion of throwing all the light on one central figure and leaving the minor characters and surroundings in comparative darkness unfits him for a historical novelist. In spite of some passages of marvelous insight into the human heart and the motives which control and actuate it, Catherine de' Medici is decidedly one of Balzac's least interesting works. It is too inconsequent and lacking in sustained power. As a study of the queen it is not without interest, although it is not subtle enough to convey an accurate picture of that remarkable mixture of fear and ambition. — Roberts Brothers. $1.50.

Sir Robert's Fortune.

Mrs. Oliphant always writes readable stories, except when she ventures into the realms of the supernatural, and Sir Robert's Fortune is no exception to this rule. The scene is laid in Scotland sixty years ago, and the plot concerns itself with the history of a secret marriage between a young girl, who is innocent, unsuspicious, and not too acute of conscience, and a fortune-hunter, who persuades her into a marriage in hopes of getting the fortune she is expected to inherit from her uncle, Sir Robert Ramsay. The best drawn characters in the book are three old Scotch servants, whose devotion to the heroine is of the type to be found only on the stage nowadays. The story is rather too long, but it is always fairly interesting, and Mrs. Oliphant manages to retain the reader's sympathy for her heroine through a number of not too admirable adventures. — Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

Cœur d'Alene.

Mrs. Mary Hallock Foote has many of the qualifications of a good novelist — so many that they make her faults peculiarly irritating. This story opens with the arrival of a pretty, attractive girl in a miner's camp for shelter from a severe storm. The miners' union and the Molly Maguires who were employed in the mine determine to have the life of the Scotch hero. After more than one hairbreadth escape, Darcy is rescued, and the troops arrive and prevent any further bloodshed. The story is full of incident and action, but Mrs. Foote lacks dramatic power and is not able to move us by her most intense situations. Cœur d'Alene is readable and written with considerable power, but it has none of the humor or pathos of Bret Harte's stories of Western life. Mrs. Foote has a story to tell, and it is not an old story; but she has not the art of making us smile or cry. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

The Voyage of the Liberdade.

Captain Joshua Slocum describes a trip made with his family from New York to Montevideo, and gives an account of their various adventures and misfortunes there and at other South American ports at which they were forced to stop. Shortly after starting on the homeward voyage the vessel was wrecked in a Brazilian port, and being left with neither friends nor funds with which to procure a passage the captain pluckily set to work building a boat out of the remains of the wreck. It is with the construction of this craft and its subsequent adventures that the narrative commences — the first half of the book being but little more than a rather long and uninteresting introduction to the real story. This boat, which was only thirty-five feet long, was finally completed after several weeks' labor, and being launched on the 13th of May — the anniversary of the Brazilian emancipation — was christened the Liberdade in honor of the occasion. In it the family of four began their long and hazardous voyage across the open ocean — a voyage lasting nearly two months and covering over five thousand miles, ending without an accident to any of the participants. The author is evidently more familiar with seamanship than with writing, but great interest naturally attaches to the narrative of so unusual an affair as this voyage, and boy readers will delight in the adventures of the brave little party. — Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

Nero. Part II.

With this second part of Nero, Mr. Robert Bridges finishes his series of eight plays. The first part is out of print; but as the second part, "from the death of Burrus to the death of Seneca, comprising the conspiracy of Pisa," is complete in itself it may be judged as a separate play. Mr. Bridges announces that this production is written "in the Elizabethan manner," and so it is, in so far that it is written in blank verse. Mr. Bridges has attained a certain reputation among the younger school of English writers which we hardly think this play sustains. With the exception of one scene, where Seneca takes leave of his friends and wife before he is led off to die, there is not a scene in the whole five acts which arouses the slightest feeling of enthusiasm or pity for a single one of the actors in the tragedy. There are a few paragraphs where the lyric note which we associate with the Elizabethan drama makes itself heard faintly, as when Petronius says:

> And knew no more of it
> Than doth a diver in Arabian seas,
> Plunging for pearls beneath the lonely blue.

These lines and those in the same speech,

> Till the shy stars
> Once more are venturing forth and I awake, are the only ones in the play of any especial beauty. The plot of the play is well chosen and has the material for a fine drama, but Mr. Bridges has not been able to infuse any life into his subject. — Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

A Drama in Dutch.

There is very little drama here discoverable. If Z. Z. had called his novel "Ennui in Dutch" the world would have exclaimed, "What a subtle study in dullness! After all the Dutch are the people for delicate analysis." But Hamlet with Hamlet left out is not a greater paradox than this entirely undramatic Drama in Dutch. The scene opens with a description of a dull, sordid household; it closes with a description of another dull, sordid household. Nothing happens in either of these households except daily chronicles of the rise and fall in the butter, egg, and cheese trade. All the characters in the book are described as being fat and greasy. Balzac might have taken such a plot and such households and have given us another such picture as the wonderful sketch of the rise and fall of Cæsar Birotteau's fortunes in the perfume business; but Z. Z. has managed to eliminate all human interest from his story, and to draw a picture no more inspiring to the imagination than may be seen in any cheap market where a dirty and dishonest Jew endeavors to pass off stale butter as fresh. — Macmillan & Co. $1.00.

Rosa Nouchette Carey rarely has anything but an old story to tell, but she has a knack of telling it in such a style as to make it seem new and interesting to a certain class of uncritical readers. In our public libraries her novels are read until they fall to pieces, and each new one is eagerly awaited by the weary shopgirl or the overworked seamstress who forgets her own woes in the successful struggles of the romantic and utterly unnatural heroines. In The Old, Old Story the vicar's daughter is left penniless, and is obliged to accept the hospitality of her uncle, a provincial bookseller. The class distinctions are made very prominent and important, of course; and when she eventually marries the squire, and goes to preside over a large house with an immense retinue of servants and wears the family diamonds, her cup of earthly happiness overflows. Carlyle speaks of "pap and treacle fiction," and this book seems to belong to the variety. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

Among the numerous reprints of enduring fiction that publishers much incline to in these days we have received from G. P. Putnam's Sons that standard favorite Quits, by the Baroness Tautphoeus, in attractive print and binding (two volumes, $2.50). That perennial delight, The Count of Monte Cristo, by Alexandre Dumas, has been issued by T. Y. Crowell & Co. in their Illustrated Library, with pictures by Frank T. Merrill, which do him credit. The publishers say they have corrected no less than fifteen thousand faults in the best translations, especially in the nautical terms, and they have inserted an occasional footnote, and they therefore claim that this is "the first accurate English version" of this masterpiece of Dumas (two volumes, $3.00). Henry Kingsley is a novelist who should not be forgotten, and Ravenshoe (two volumes) and Austin Elliot are, fortunately for lovers of good novels, reissued by the Scribners in a very convenient form. — $1.00 per volume.

A Bad Lot, by Mrs. Lovett Cameron, opens with a description of a pretty and innocent young girl who is in the toils of an elderly man determined to win her. The girl's mother had gone to the bad, and the world was quite ready to pronounce her a bad lot. Her native purity and guilelessness saved her from ruin, but her intercourse with the ancient roué compromised her in the eyes of the world, and made a timid and conventional young man, years later, afraid to marry her. The true hero, however, appears after many years, and "the bad lot" makes him a sweet and good wife. The book takes one into bad company, and its tone is low and unclean without being exactly immoral. The aged grandmother, with her taste for vile scandal, is one of the most unpleasant characters. The story leaves a bad taste behind it. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

An Altar of Earth, a novelette by Thymol Monk, belongs to the weird, suggestive, pathological tales at present in vogue. It deals with one or two episodes in the lives of two girls who cannot love the men who care for them. One of these maidens has an incurable disease in spite of her loveliness, which is so great that her morning bath is described with classic fervor. Her struggles against fate are hinted until she died amid the pines and a toad "nestled against the fingers." She had previously induced one of her lovers, a land speculator, to deed his real estate to the city of London. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.

It is odd that the author of Matrimony, Mr. W. E. Norris, could write a novel with such ample padding as A Victim of Good Luck, his new version of an old theme, possesses. A nephew is wrongly deprived of his inheritance, which falls to a maiden. She proposes to bestow upon him her wealth, but after a series of mishaps she compromises by marrying him. There is a good deal of dry humor in the tale, but with this exception the rest of the book is neither unprofitable nor exciting. It is an ordinary, moral novel without any tendency towards the unhealthy or the pathetic side of life. — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

MINOR NOTICES.

Venice.

Most admirably has Mrs. Alethea Wiel given the history of Venice in the series of the Story of the Nations, a tale the early obscurity, breadth, and variety of which required careful research. It necessarily embraces a lengthy outline of battles and rivalries innumerable. Yet out of such mass of details she has made salient certain points in Venetian history — the preponderance of the state and the subservience of the citizen; the mistaken policy and ambition which led Venice to prefer increasing her dominion on the mainland to extending her sway over the sea; her independence of the papacy; her devotion to her business interests in other lands to the frequent exclusion of loyalty and justice; the decline of democracy into aristocracy; and the lessening of her wealth by the discovery of new paths of navigation to the New World.

The story is divided into three periods — the growth of the power of the Doges and of the Great Council, 697–1172; the height of Venetian glory to 1457; its decadence to 1797, followed by Austrian rule and the final absorption of Venice in the kingdom of Italy. Mrs. Wiel inclines to the date of 452 for the foundation of the city; she touches scantily upon the controversy concerning the early freedom or dependence of Venice and the later hesitation between acceptance of the authority of the Franks or of Constantinople, and the final choice of independence. She shows that Venice joined in the Crusades for the purposes of self-maintenance. The history of the personal power of the Doges, of the dwindling of the Great Council to the Council of Ten and later to that of Three (which is defended as a rightful state, not papal, inquisition) is given with too much detail for the ordinary reader, who would prefer a fuller account of Venetian greatness in art than is presented. Though often alluding to the Winged Lion, Mrs. Wiel does not explain its origin as an emblem, yet she mentions the substitution in 1797, under Napoleon's sway, of the words, "Rights of Man and of Citizenship," for the Pax tibi Marce, which always before was on the book between the lion's paws — a change which made a gondolier say, "St. Mark has at last turned over a new leaf." No part of the history is better treated than the period 1585–1623, when Venice met the papal interdict with scorn and Paolo Sarpi enabled her to uphold her dignity against all anathemas until she settled upon terms of peace through the mediation of Henry IV of France. The book is enriched with numerous excellent illustrations. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

A Corner of Cathay.

Now is the time to learn about the Chinese, and, indeed, now is the time for them to learn about themselves. We have in this book no frothy, soda-water-like draught, but a good goblet of rich wine, so to speak. Unlike the hasty tourist, or the foreigner petrified in his own prejudices, Miss Adele M. Field has patiently studied the Chinese in their own home. She resided fifteen years in Southeastern China; she made her tongue master the monosyllables of Sinim, and with persistent questioning she drew out from the women and other folks ideas and information not often gained by the alien. She has a clear, pleasant, conversational style, and she has invoked the aid of the native artists in the celebrated school of Go Leng. The beautifully colored illustrations, twelve in number, seem like work in gold and silver and niello, so richly tinted and spirited in form are they. The story of household life, of marriage, and of burial is told in such a way that we get very close to the actual scene. Child life, from the days of early babyhood to graduation from school and entrance upon office or marriage, is pictured in suggestive words. Yet it is not only the outside of things that Miss Field sketches for us, but, like Dante holding Virgil's hand, she escorts us into the region of the unseen. There we see what kind of stuff Chinese dreams are made on, and learn all about mythical zoölogy and men who have holes in their bodies and go riding on a rail, apparently enjoying the trip without any lubricating oil on the axle-pole. Snatches of poetry and proverbs and other literary tidbits make the page decidedly attractive, and he must be a poor fellow who cannot get a very good idea of the virtues and defects of the Chinese folk from this charming volume. Religion is not forgotten, and we have several chapters on Confucius, the Tauists, and the Chinese theory of evolution. This is a capital book, that deserves to live for a good many Christmases. — Macmillan & Co. $3.00.

The Pearl of India.

Mr. M. M. Ballou is a well-known traveler. He has been north, south, east, and west, so that there are few places left on this round globe for him to visit. This time it is Ceylon which he describes, and he tells us that "no point presents more varied attractions to the observant traveler, more thoroughly and picturesquely exhibits equatorial life, or addresses itself more directly to the delicate appreciation of the artist, botanist, and general sportsman." Its equatorial situation endows Ceylon with endless summer. The wife of an English officer says: "We are always upon a dead level, and eternal summer palls upon one. Perpetual youth in the vegetable kingdom seems as unnatural and undesirable as it would be in human life."

Among the remarkable monuments of great antiquity in Ceylon, Mr. Ballou recalls the elaborate cave temples of Dambula, hewn out of the primitive rock, which are two thousand years old. The natives in Ceylon, when not eating or sleeping, are incessantly chewing the betel nut, which gives to their lips a color as if they were covered with blood. The practice of chewing this nut is very ancient, and women of the highest class indulge in the habit. Ceylon has sometimes been called the "Snake Isle," and until lately there has been a snake temple where many serpents, including a number of deadly cobras, were nourished and cared for. Mr. Ballou has a happy narrative style, and gives us all kinds of facts, natural and historical, about this interesting island. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.

The Birds About Us.

Dr. C. C. Abbott's new book on birds is admirably adapted for popular use. The great majority of bird-lovers have hardly the time or knowledge to study their feathered friends in a scientific and technical manner, while they do feel keen interest in their general characteristics, habits, phases of life, and migrations. Information on all these matters and many of kindred importance is to be found in these pages. It is a very fascinating book, full of those picturesque and gossipy bits which every reader of Dr. Abbott associates with his accounts of life out of doors and the records of his many personal experiences, observations, and adventures. The volume is profusely illustrated by more than twenty full-page plates and about fifty engravings in the text. In general the pictures are excellent, some of them being very carefully engraved. Considering how difficult it is to secure a good likeness of a bird in motion, the result is highly praiseworthy. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.00.

Costume of Colonial Times.

Another contribution to literature concerning the manners and customs of the early times in this country has been made by Mrs. Alice Morse Earle. She gives a concise history of colonial dress and a very full description of all the different articles worn by men, women, and children, and the various fabrics so far as known. Her investigation has been very thorough, her material has been gathered from ancient wills, records, and other documents, and she has with great painstaking followed every clew afforded by obsolete words. The result is a dictionary, carefully arranged, with descriptive matter and facts enough to stimulate the student of colonial matters to further research. It is an entertaining book to read and a valuable one for reference. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

Chaucer's Canterbury Tales.

The fourth volume of Prof. W. W. Skeat's definitive edition of Chaucer's works contains the complete text of the Canterbury Tales. It owes nothing to the previous printed editions, but is founded on the Ellesmere MS., with a collation of the five other texts in the Chaucer Society's six-text edition, and the Harleian MS. The textual footnotes have been made as concise as possible. The editor has prefixed three short poems, discovered too late to be inserted in Vol. I. — Macmillan & Co. $4.00.

Alfred W. Pollard, who has written a Primer of Chaucer, has prepared for the Eversley series two comely and convenient volumes, giving the text of the Canterbury Tales with footnotes, critical and explanatory, at the foot of the page. His introduction is mainly concerned with Chaucer's obligations to other writers in several tales. In the "Knight's Tale" Mr. Pollard marks by dots at the side the lines directly translated from Boccaccio's Teseide, and by a perpendicular line the lines which bear a more or less close resemblance to it. A glossary of common words completes a very taking edition of this great classic, which will be especially acceptable to those who care little for the niceties of textual criticism to which Professor Skeat applies himself. — Macmillan & Co. $3.00.

The New Acts of the Apostles.

The author of this book, Rev. Dr. Arthur T. Pierson, is a Presbyterian clergyman of wide information as to Christian missions. His subject is missionary work and workers in modern times, giving the epithet "modern" a pretty liberal scope. The contents of the book are lectures delivered in Scotland last year. The range of topics is extensive. Examples are taken from many centuries and from all Christian denominations. The introductory pages, some sixty in number, are diffusive and tedious, but when the author fairly settles down to work he becomes interesting. The portraits of great missionaries are framed in their fields of labor. It shows how incomplete the survey is to remark that Bishop Hannington seems to be not even mentioned, and Bishop Selwyn is called only by name. But everything cannot be told of missions and missionaries in one book. Dr. Pierson is an enthusiast, and has faith as well as zeal. These pages contain many facts and narratives in compact form. An admirable map on cloth, in colors, showing the religious complexion of the world, is folded into a pocket against the rear cover; this map is worth the price of the book. — Baker & Taylor Co. $1.50.

Eastern Customs in Bible Lands.

The Canon of Durham, H. B. Tristram, is an indefatigable traveler in the East and student of the Old Testament writers. Few men seem to be able to combine more attractively the results of study indoors with outside illustration, test, and verification. Dr. Tristram has not only traveled in the lands fringing the Eastern Mediterranean, but also in Chinese and Hindu Asia. When, therefore, he takes hold of a passage of Scripture which suggests dramatic and picturesque details, he is able to cast a good many "slant lights upon the topic." Furthermore, he knows Old English, and realizes, as few readers do, how much the verbal form of the English Bible has still on it the creases, lines, and defects of its vernacular mold. As with the chisel and file of the finisher, this literary artisan chips off and smooths the text of its Occidentalisms, and restores the Oriental polish and smoothness as well as points and outlines which belong to the original. In this way, and with delightful literary art, Canon Tristram sets before us a pleasing store of suggestive illustrations which will greatly help the preacher and Sunday school teacher. Almost every phase of Oriental life is here presented without waste of words. We heartily recommend the book. — Thomas Whittaker. $1.50.

The Football Facts and Figures, compiled by Mr. Walter Camp, were collected by a committee consisting of Hon. J. W. Alexander, Rev. J. H. Twichell, Hon. H. E. Howland, Rev. Endicott Peabody, Robert Bacon of the Harvard Overseers, and Mr. Camp. Letters from players, members of college faculties, and head masters of schools on the physical, moral, and intellectual results of the game as it has been played supplement a body of statistics concerning players collected by the committee and some sixty pages of "facts and opinions expressed by those who have studied the subject." This designation is a sign of the rather partisan temper in which Mr. Camp's book takes up the matter. But the temperate words of Prof. J. B. Ames of Harvard on page 15 seem to us to put the matter fairly when he says that "the game hitherto has been unnecessarily dangerous;" that the reform already made "will go far to minimize the physical perils," and that further legislation should follow. When he says that "the successful football player must control his temper in the face of strong temptation" many will reflect that most football players are not of the age when temptation to bad temper is likely to be successfully resisted in the face of a multitude eager for the victory of its favorite team. Of the brutalizing effect of these contests on the spectators nothing is said here. Obviously those who have cried out against the abuses of football have done public service. — Harper & Brothers. 50c.

Yale Wit and Humor is a handsome quarto volume of selections of prose, poetry, and drawings from the Yale record of the years 1889–93, arranged and edited by Edwin Ruthven Lamson of '93. Its ninety quarto pages are full of lively college jokes and squibs, much of the humor having reference naturally to football and other college contests. The fair sex occupies a very prominent place in the undergraduate mind at New Haven, it is evident. Yale graduates will find a special attraction in the amusing collection. — 15 Milton Place, Boston: Published by the editor. $2.00.

PERIODICALS.

The first part of "The Trumpeter," by Mrs. Foote, and "Rosa," a story of Sicilian customs by G. Pitrè, are the fiction of the November Atlantic. "Tammany Points the Way" to municipal reform, according to Mr. H. C. Merwin, by showing the importance of leadership and a "totem" — some bond of visible union — in city politics; Mr. Merwin is unusually suggestive, but he fails to understand what reformers mean by calling for a "business management" of city affairs. "From My Japanese Diary" is another installment of Mr. Lafcadio Hearn's raptures. Dr. G. B. Hill describes "Boswell's Proof-Sheets" which he inspected last year when over here. Misses Preston and Dodge contribute the first part of a valuable account of "Reginald Pole." "The Growth of American Influence over England" is Mr. J. M. Ludlow's unusual subject. "Maurice Maeterlinck," by R. Burton; "The Academic Treatment of English," by H. E. Scudder; "Seward's Attitude Toward Secession," by F. Bancroft; "Hadrian's Ode to His Soul," by William Everett; "Whittier's Life and Poetry," and a review of Mr. Howells' recent books fill out a fine number.

The romance of pirates and privateers fills the opening pages of Harper's Magazine for November in an illustrated article by Thomas A. Janvier, wherein Captain Kidd reappears. Mr. Edwin Lord Weeks, the artist, continues his glowing and fascinating descriptions of scenery and life in India, giving this month his impressions of Rajpootana; the engravings are numerous and fine. Charles D. Lanier follows the "Trail of the Wild Turkey," a sporting sketch with spirited illustrations. "The Cossack as Cowboy, Soldier, and Citizen" is intelligently described by Poultney Bigelow, and "The Religion of the Sioux," by Lieut. W. H. Wassell, U. S. A. This last is an instructive and valuable testimony, and makes an important weight in the scale. It shows conclusively the amount and result of Christian work among the Indians in the Northwest. Fiction and poetry furnish the filling in among these grave articles of an excellent number.

Mr. Julian Ralph describes "Election Night in a Newspaper Office" in the November Scribner's with his usual graphic force. Col. H. G. Prout's second article on "English Railroad Methods" shows the solid construction and the thorough organization of railways in Great Britain. Professor Shaler writes of "The Horse," with admirable illustrations by M. Delort. Emily M. Aylward gives information of much interest and value to art students in her account of "The American Girls' Art Club in Paris." "True Pictures Among the Poor" are given by four writers. "How Whalebone Caused a Wedding," by Joel Chandler Harris, and "The Third Relief," by George I. Putnam, are two good stories; while "The King of Currumpaw," by E. E. Thompson, is a true narration, illustrated by photographs, of an enormous wolf, long a terror to the ranchmen of New Mexico. M. Louis Deschamps is the subject of Mr. Hamerton's sketch, and his "Charity" is the frontispiece.

Prof. William M. Sloane's "Life of Napoleon Bonaparte" begins in the November Century and is its most important feature. In a long residence abroad as private secretary to Mr. Bancroft he had access to the archives of the French office, and thoroughly studied papers never before used except by Lanfrey. The history is fully illustrated, and the pictorial side of the biography alone makes it very interesting. There is a lively description of Chinese shopkeepers, by an English member of Parliament, "In the City of Canton." "The Hawthornes in Lenox" is a pleasant series of letters telling about the Hawthorne family life in Berkshire county. "The Making of Thieves in New York" is one of Mr. Riis' semi-philanthropic sketches; the hard little faces in some of his groups of boys are almost too pathetic. "A Bachelor Maid" is ended in a good, old-fashioned, happy way. It is an agreeable story, but not a great one. "M'Graw" is a short story told in a very condensed and graphic style. F. Marion Crawford's new serial has a nun for the heroine. This is a rich number, full of good things.

The complete novel in the November issue of Lippincott's is "Dora's Defiance," by Lady Lindsay, an author who has made her mark in England, though little known as yet in this country. "An Arizona Speculation," by Mary E. Stickney, has the Western flavor, and depicts a character evidently drawn from life. Ella Higginson narrates briefly but forcibly a tragical episode, "In the Bitter Root Mountains." In "Rector Warne's Heresy" Gillam W. Ford shows how duty came to the front and drove doctrine into the background. Virginia Woodward Cloud brings to life "The Man Who Died at Amdheran," and gives him something to live for. "The Roses" of which Fannie E. Newberry tells were sent to the wrong lady, with curious results. Under the heading, "Ten Dollars a Day—No Canvassing," Philip G. Hubert, Jr., discusses some queer circulars and the dubious opportunities of wealth they offer. W. S. Walsh collects a number of interesting anecdotes of dignitaries and others who have gone about "Incognito." E. J. Gibson explains the labors of "The Washington Correspondent," and Frederic M. Bird discourses on "Magazine Fiction, and How Not to Write It." Passing to distant lands, we go "Bargaining in Russia" with Isabel F. Hapgood, and learn about "Rabbits in New Zealand" from J. N. Ingram. Coming home again, we listen to Col. Richard Malcolm Johnston's recollections of "My Schools," and to Edgar Fawcett's of "Old New York Restaurants."

In the Popular Science Monthly for November first comes a fully illustrated account of "The Glaciers of Greenland," by Prof. Angelo Heilprin. In "Preparation for College by English High Schools" Mr. John F. Casey tells what boys who enter college without Greek are doing. Dr. C. Hanford Henderson contributes the first of two articles on "Manual Training," in which he shows what a well-planned manual training course consists of. "The Cobra and Other Serpents" are described, with illustrations, by Mr. G. R. O'Reilly, who has lived among snakes in various parts of the world. This number contains also the recent address of the Marquis of Salisbury upon assuming the presidency of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. There is an admirable little scientific temperance lecture by Dr. Justus Gaule, under the title "Alcohol and Happiness." A description of "The Swiss Watch Schools" is given by Theodore B. Willson. "Redonda and its Phosphates" are described by Fred W. Morse. W. T. Freeman calls attention to "Some Analogies and Homologies" in animal and vegetable life. Something of "The Chemistry of Cleaning" is explained by Prof. Vivian Lewes. There is an account of the career of Philibert Commerson, "the king's naturalist," while the subject of the usual sketch and portrait is Sears C. Walker, astronomer of the United States Coast Survey in its early days.

The Magazine of Art has been so successful this year in spite of bad times that it is to be enlarged by the addition of a fourth plate to the three now regularly given in each number. A series of "Great Poems Re-Illustrated" will be found in the new volume, and the Art Notes will be more fully illustrated. In the November number the Punch Dinner, Prof. Fred Brown, Paul J. R. Sinibaldi, the Noble Town and Cloth Halls of Flanders, and Siena are the topics of the finely illustrated articles, while V. Brozik's "Communion of the Two Elements Among the Early Protestants of Bohemia" is the conspicuous engraving.

In Macmillan's for October Mrs. Ritchie gives another chapter of her unwritten memories, being an account of the trip to Italy after her father's return from America. Mr. Saintsbury concludes his admirable and suggestive treatise on the historical novel. Henry Esmond he calls "an imperishable masterpiece," and Beatrix an "incomparable character," adding that she is "the one complete woman of English prose fiction." He ranks Hypatia very high, and says of Westward Ho! that it has never had its due yet. The fiction of the number is a unique little legend of Yucatan, "The Little Clay God," and "Sister Cordelia," an unsigned sketch concerning a fair advocate of woman's independence of love and all sentiment of that kind. A lucid exposition of the new Japanese constitution and its possible influence is from the pen of C. B. Roylance-Kent. One episode in the West Indian rebellion of 1795 is the subject of a paper by J. W. Fortescue, who will continue his history of that terrible war of the black man against the white. "Cromwell's Views on Sport" and "British Rights in Egypt" are among the more solid articles; three in lighter vein, "Sentimental Travelling," a study by Mrs. Steel, and "A New Pipe Plot," complete the list of contents.

The October Portfolio is a monograph on "Bookbinding in France," by William T. Fletcher of the British Museum. It is illustrated with eight beautiful plates and thirty-one pictures in the text. These show finely the admirable work of Grolier, Eve, Le Gascon, and others.

— Readers of David Copperfield will regret to learn that the old buildings of Doctor's Commons, which Dickens has there described with such picturesque and accurate detail, are doomed to destruction. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners have, in defiance of antiquarian sentiment and the sacredness of old associations, granted a building lease for the extension of adjacent warehouses on one side and to the post office for an extension of the Savings' Bank Department on the other. — The Bookseller.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— Messrs. Macmillan & Co. announce amongst their forthcoming books Mr. Lowell in England, a series of familiar letters, edited, with an introduction, by George Washburn Smalley; Mrs. Oliphant's Historical Sketch of the Reign of Queen Anne; Life of Sir A. C. Ramsay, by Sir Archibald Geikie, with portraits; The Story of Sonny Sahib, by Sara Jeannette Duncan; and The Rubies of St. Low, by Charlotte M. Yonge.

— Dr. E. J. Dillon's book, The Sceptics of the Old Testament, will appear in November. It is an amplification of his Contemporary Review articles on the Book of Job and Ecclesiastes, with new matter, together with the text of both books according to his version of them.

— Mr. Thomas Hardy's new story, "The Simpletons," will be begun in the December number of Harper's, and be continued till November, 1895. In "The Simpletons" Mr. Hardy will keep to his old field — that which is far from the madding crowd; and while the frankness which has characterized his later art must be expected, there will be nothing, it is said, in the treatment of the theme to offend the sensibilities of the reader. The story will be fully illustrated by W. Hatherwell.

— A very amusing story is being told of Mr. Oscar Wilde and a certain poet, who shall be nameless. The bard complained to the æsthete that a book of his had been practically ignored by certain critics. "There is a conspiracy of silence against my book," he said. "What should you do about it if you were I?" "Join it," was the answer. — London Bookman.

— Mr. George Moore will shortly publish a new book, entitled Celibates, containing three stories. One of these, "John Norton," is founded on Mr. Moore's A Mere Accident; but not merely is it condensed to about a third of the original size, it is entirely reconstructed and the main interest transferred from one character to another. Mr. Moore's "celibates" are people who are averse to marriage, and the book is a study of a particular point of view.

— Prof. John Nichol died in London, October 12, aged sixty-one years. He was educated at the University of Glasgow and at Balliol College, Oxford. In 1861 he was appointed professor of English literature in the University of Glasgow, which chair he resigned in 1889. He took part in political and other controversies as an advocate of the North in the American Civil War, and as a friend of secular education and of broad church theology. Dr. Nichol was the author of American Literature: an Historical Review; Lord Bacon's Life and Philosophy; Tables of European Literature and History; Robert Burns: a Sketch of His Career and Genius, and other works.

— Mr. William Watson has in preparation a new volume of poems, which will appear at the end of the year.

— Thomas Hardy is making his début as a poet in Lionel Johnson's new book, discussing him in his character of novelist. The verse there printed in full is a Wessex ballad called "The Fire at Tranter Sweatley's." The volume contains also a bibliography of Hardy's writings, by John Lane, and a portrait, etched from life, by William Strang. It is entitled The Art of Thomas Hardy, and is published by Elkin Mathews of London.

— Macmillan & Co. announce a complete edition of Chaucer in one volume, with an introduction and glossary made especially for it by Professor Skeat.

— On October 9 a tablet of antique bronze, mounted on oak, was unveiled in the library of the Hazard Memorial at Peace Dale, R. I., bearing this inscription:

IN MEMORY OF ESTHER BERNON CARPENTER,
AUTHOR OF
"THE HUGUENOTS IN RHODE ISLAND; JOHN SAFFIN — HIS BOOK,"
"SOUTH COUNTY NEIGHBORS," ETC.
FOR MANY YEARS A CONSTANT READER IN THIS LIBRARY.
BORN APRIL 4, 1848.
DIED OCTOBER 22, 1893.

Commemorative remarks on the life and work of this remarkable woman were made by Miss Caroline Hazard, Mr. Alfred M. Williams, Miss Sara F. Hopkins, and Miss Katharine H. Austin, and Rev. E. E. Hale wrote:

> I find I recur again and again to the sketches she has printed, and I am sure they are going to come into our permanent literature, and this not because we are Rhode Islanders merely, but because they are so simple and true to nature; and what is simple and true to nature is as good in one generation as another and always helps all mankind.

Mr. Stedman's note said:

> There was something deeply interesting about a woman living her retired and localized life, seemingly unused to the literary atmosphere and usages, who had so thoroughly the instincts of the best literary artists. She took the life close around her, saw it as it was, yet idealized it and painted it with unpretentious mastery. She found, like all true observers, just as much tragedy and comedy, just as much passion and conviction, in this retired but most distinct community as in the best-known centers of populous life. Her touch came to her by nature, just as it came to the Brontë girls and to our own Miss Woolson and Miss Wilkins. Her South County stories charmed me by their originality and by their veritable capture of the peculiar spirit of the locality in which she moved and had her being.

— The novels of Hermann Heiberg, one of the ablest delineators of German family life, are about to appear in a popular serial edition through Herr Wilhelm Fredrich of Leipzig. The first series, of twelve volumes, will comprise eight longer novels and some short stories. This first series will be issued in eighty parts.

— There is a movement on foot in England to place a memorial to Elizabeth Barrett Browning in Westminster Abbey beside that raised to her husband.

— "The Letters of Matthew Arnold," says the Westminster Budget, which Mr. G. W. E. Russell is editing for Macmillan & Co., "are not likely to be issued for some time — not this year at all events. Mr. Russell has only just got to work on them, and there are a great many to go through."

— Maelcho, the Hon. Emily Lawless' new novel of sixteenth century life, will be published in the course of a fortnight by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co., in two volumes.

— Miss Annie Payson Call, author of Power Through Repose, has written a similar work, which she calls As a Matter of Course. It will shortly be published by Roberts Brothers. Miss Call gave a course of lectures at Cambridge, England, last summer.

— Messrs. Chapman & Hall announce a new biography of Warren Hastings, by Colonel G. B. Malleson, the historian of the French in India and of the mutiny. It will be in two volumes, illustrated with a portrait.

— In another column we give a review of the late Professor Froude's last book, with some estimate of his work as a historian and a master of English style. James Anthony Froude died October 20, aged seventy-six years. He was born at Darlington, Devonshire, Eng., April 23, 1818, and was the son of R. H. Froude, archdeacon of Potnes. He was educated at Westminster and at Oriel College, Oxford, where he was graduated in 1840. In 1842 he obtained the chancellor's prize for an English essay, and in the same year became a fellow of Exeter College. Being in full sympathy with Rev. Drs. Newman and Pusey, he studied for the ministry and was ordained a deacon in the Established Church. He at once identified himself with the High Church party, and wrote The Lives of the English Saints. Under the assumed name of "Zeta" he published in 1847 a volume entitled Shadows of the Clouds, which embraced two stories — "The Spirite Trials" and "The Lieutenant's Daughter." His Nemesis of Faith appeared in 1848. These publications marked his defection from the teachings of the Church of England, and were both severely and emphatically condemned by the university authorities. In consequence of this condemnation he resigned his fellowship and was also obliged to resign an appointment which he had received to an educational institution in Tasmania. Though ordained a deacon he never assumed any clerical duty, giving up theology for literature and largely discarding the opinions engendered by the influence of Dr. Newman. For about three years he was a frequent contributor to the Westminster Review and Frazer's Magazine. One of his papers upon the Book of Job was reprinted in a separate form in 1854. In 1856 he published the first two volumes of his History of England from the Fall of Wolsey to the Defeat of the Spanish Armada, which was completed in 1870. Its favorable estimate of Henry VIII is well known, but it has not been accepted by the historians. Mr. Froude's contributions to various periodicals have been reprinted under the title of Short Studies on Great Subjects. He also published, in 1871, a volume on Calvinism. He was installed as lord rector of the University of St. Andrews in March, 1869. In 1872–73 he delivered a series of lectures in the United States on "The English in Ireland in the Eighteenth Century," which appeared in London in three volumes. Other works by Mr. Froude are Bunyan, Luther, Thomas à Becket, Cæsar, The English in the West Indies, and The Divorce of Catherine of Aragon. He was an intimate friend and the literary executor of Thomas Carlyle. The manner in which he discharged his delicate office was such as to offend all friends of Carlyle, and it had the effect of setting that great genius in a false light, which has been gradually dispelled by the wiser words of Professor Norton, Sir Charles Duffy, Mr. Espinasse, and many others. Oceana was a narrative of his personal experiences of a journey round the world in 1884–85. In 1892 he was appointed to the regius professorship of modern history at Oxford, left vacant by the death of Professor Freeman. Erasmus was his final book.

— Miss Lilian Whiting's forthcoming volume, The World Beautiful, is in part made up of articles contributed to the Boston Budget under the title of Le Beau Monde, used in the sense of the World Beautiful on the spiritual side; these had no relation to the world of fashion, as the item in regard to the book in our last issue might lead some to suppose. The aim of the volume is to "emphasize the elements of happiness and success that are all about us as an atmosphere."

— Mrs. Sarah Knowles Bolton is to have a small volume of poems, with a portrait, issued by T. Y. Crowell & Co., for the holidays.

— Readers of that naughty under-the-skin parody, The Green Carnation, are asking for a key to the three or four characters who talk and walk through the brilliant nonsense of the book. No one seems quite able to fix their identity, beyond "Amarinth" being Oscar Wilde, who is undoubtedly its author; "Mme. Valtesi," who is Mme. Gabrielle, a well-known figure in London society. "Mrs. Windsor" is merely guessed at, but "Lord Reggie" is known to all men about that center of the world, and needs no name beyond his own. The one natural person in the book is "Lady Locke." — Boston Herald.

— Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. published October 20 Philip and His Wife, by Margaret Deland; The Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám, rendered into English verse by Edward Fitzgerald, illustrated by Elihu Vedder, Popular edition; The Story of a Bad Boy, by Thomas Bailey Aldrich, Holiday edition; Timothy's Quest, by Kate Douglas Wiggin, Holiday edition, with many illustrations by Oliver Herford; Lucy Larcom: Life, Letters, and Diary, by Rev. Daniel D. Addison; Master and Men: the Sermon on the Mountain Practiced on the Plain, by Wm. Burnet Wright, D.D.; In the Dozy Hours, and Other Papers, essays by Agnes Repplier; and Three Boys on an Electrical Boat, by John Trowbridge, professor in Harvard University.

— Thomas Whittaker announces for early publication Historic Doubts as to the Execution of Marshal Ney, by Rev. James A. Weston, rector of Ascension Church, Hickory, N. C., "which will prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the famous Marshal Ney, whom Napoleon called 'the bravest of the brave,' instead of having been executed by French bullets, as history records, was in reality secretly conveyed after his supposed death to Charleston, S. C., and lived in North Carolina for upwards of thirty years."

— The latest publications of D. Appleton & Co. include Popular Astronomy: a General Description of the Heavens, by Camille Flammarion; Children of Circumstance, by Iota; Handbook for Voters in the City of New York, compiled by Alfred R. Conkling; the second volume of A History of the United States Navy, from 1775 to 1894, by Edgar Stanton Maclay, A.M.; Songs of the Soil, by Frank L. Stanton, with a preface by Joel Chandler Harris; The Lilac Sunbonnet, by S. R. Crockett, author of The Stickit Minister; and a Treatise on American Football, by A. A. Stagg and H. L. Williams. They have in press for immediate publication The Three Musketeers, by Alexandre Dumas, an édition de luxe (limited to 750 copies) with 250 illustrations by Maurice Leloir; Towards Utopia, being speculations in social evolution, by A Free Lance; The Golden Fairy Book, with 110 illustrations by H. R. Millar; Evolution and Ethics, and Other Essays, by Thomas H. Huxley, the ninth (and last) volume of the author's collected essays; and Maelcho, by the Hon. Emily Lawless.

— Dr. Elliott Coues has lately been elected honorary member of the Minnesota Historical Society, in recognition of his extensive original researches in Mississippian history in connection with Zebulon M. Pike's expedition to the sources of that river.

— D. C. Heath & Co. have in press for immediate issue in Heath's Modern Language series Victor Hugo's Ruy Blas, edited with a careful preface and with scholarly notes by Professor Samuel Garner, Ph.D.

— Among the books announced for early publication by A. C. McClurg & Co. are Things of the Mind, by the Rt. Rev. J. L. Spalding, bishop of Peoria; The Power of an Endless Life, by the Rev. Thomas C. Hall; A Book of Heavenly Birthdays, by E. V. B., author of Days and Hours in a Garden; and The Price of Peace, an Old Testament novel, by A. W. Ackerman.

— Mr. William Watson's new volume, which will shortly be published by Mr. John Lane, is to be entitled Odes and Other Poems. The verse printed within the last few months in the Spectator, the Daily Chronicle, and the Yellow Book will be included in the volume. The same publisher is preparing Mr. Arthur Christopher Benson's new volume of poems, which, like his book of last year, is largely nature poetry.

— The Funk & Wagnalls Co. announce that after five years of labor, with the help of 247 editors and the expenditure of nearly one million dollars, the last page of the second, the concluding, volume of the new Standard Dictionary is now in type. This volume will be ready for delivery in November.

— Henry Holt & Co. have just ready The Honorable Peter Sterling and What People Thought of Him, a novel by Paul Leicester Ford, well known as a historical student and as editor of the Writings of Thomas Jefferson. They announce for immediate publication a new novel by Anthony Hope, with the title The Indiscretion of the Duchess. This will be shortly followed by another book by the same writer, The Dolly Dialogues, a series of clever, witty dialogues so connected that they tell a story. These have been characterized by George Meredith as "the best of modern dialogues."

— Thomas Y. Crowell & Co. have just published Mr. Erving Winslow's translation of Pélléas and Mélisande, the masterpiece of Maurice Maeterlinck; Twenty-five Years of Scientific Progress, and other essays, by William North Rice, Ph.D., LL.D., professor of geology in Wesleyan University; and American Charities, a study in philanthropy and economics, by Amos G. Warner, Ph.D., professor of economics in the Leland Stanford, Jr., University, this being the fourth volume in Crowell's Library of economics and politics.

— Laird & Lee have just issued the eleventh and last volume of Schiller's works reproduced from the authorized German edition of the Bibliographisch Institut of Leipzig. They have also purchased the Schick collection, embracing about forty sets of plates.

— Ginn & Co. have ready in their International Modern Language series Lessing's Emilia Galotti, edited, with introduction and notes, by Max Poll, Ph.D., instructor in German in Harvard University, Cambridge.

— Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. published October 27 Their Wedding Journey, by W. D. Howells, Holiday edition, with illustrations by Clifford Carleton; The Complete Poetical Works of John G. Whittier, new Cambridge edition, and a new Handy-Volume edition in four volumes; Unguarded Gates and Other Poems, by Thomas Bailey Aldrich; Riverby, by John Burroughs; and The Bell-Ringer of Angel's, and Other Stories, by Bret Harte.

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. have recently published as No. 67 of the Riverside Literature series Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar, especially edited for school use. The text used for this book is that of the Riverside Shakespeare edited by Richard Grant White. This play will also soon be published with The Merchant of Venice (No. 55 of the same series), in one volume, linen covers.

— A. C. Armstrong & Son publish this day The Trial and Death of Jesus Christ, by Rev. James Stalker, D.D., author of Imago Christi; Christian Doctrine, by R. W. Dale, D.D., of Birmingham; and the third and concluding volume of Dr. Alexander Maclaren's Exposition of the Book of Psalms in the Expositor's Bible series.

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

Life of Edward Bouverie Pusey, D. D.
By HENRY PARRY LIDDON, D. D., D. C. L., LL. D. Edited and prepared for publication by the Rev. J. O. JOHNSTON, M. A., Vicar of All Saints', Oxford, and the Rev. ROBERT J. WILSON, D. D., Warden of Keble College. 4 vols. With portraits and illustrations. Vol. III. now ready. $4.50 net.

Practicable Socialism: Essays on Social Reform
By the Rev. CANON S. A. BARNETT and Mrs. BARNETT. New and much enlarged edition. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

Studies of Nature on the Coast of Arran
By GEORGE MILNER. With 10 full-page Copper Plates and 12 illustrations in the Text by W. NOEL JOHNSON. 12mo, colored top, $2.00.

Wandering Words. Reprinted Papers from Various Sources
By SIR EDWIN ARNOLD, M. A., K. C. I. E., C. S. I., Author of "Seas and Lands," etc. With 44 illustrations, of which 22 are full-page. 8vo, 384 pages, $5.00.

The Yellow Fairy Book
Edited by ANDREW LANG. With a large number of illustrations. Cloth, gilt edges, $2.00.
⁂ Uniform with "The Blue Fairy Book," "The Green Fairy Book," etc.

Preparatory Physics: A Short Course in the Laboratory
By WILLIAM J. HOPKINS, Professor of Physics in the Drexel Institute. With many illustrations, etc. Crown 8vo, $1.25 net.

Sold by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, by
LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.,
Publishers,
15 East 16th Street, New York.

"THE BEST OF CHILDREN'S MAGAZINES,"—AND NOW THE ONLY ONE.

ST. NICHOLAS
FOR YOUNG FOLKS.

Beginning a New Volume. Now is the time to subscribe. The November Number.

THE greatest year ST. NICHOLAS has ever had is just closing. "The best of children's magazines" is now the only high-class monthly for young folks published in America. It is without a rival.

Rudyard Kipling's famous "Jungle Stories," written especially for ST. NICHOLAS, were a great feature of 1894, and it will be pleasant news that Mr. Kipling will continue them in the coming volume, which begins with the beautiful November issue now ready everywhere.

While their elders are reading Prof. Sloane's Life of Napoleon in The Century, the boys and girls will be enjoying a story life of the same great hero, told by Elbridge S. Brooks, and superbly illustrated.

"A Boy of the First Empire" is the title, and its hero renders a service to Napoleon, becomes one of his pages, and finally an aide. He is with him at the most critical times of his life — at the departure for Elba, and at Waterloo. The story glows with pageantry, and is a truthful account, verified by the latest information, of the life of "the man of destiny." "A Boy of the First Empire" begins in November.

"The Quadrupeds of North America," entertaining and up-to-date chapters on animals, will be contributed during the year by the well-known naturalist Prof. W. T. Hornaday, and Theodore Roosevelt will write a series to be called "Hero-Tales from American History," recounting famous deeds of heroism which young people ought to know more about. The series on "Historic Dwarfs" will be continued, and Prof. Brander Matthews will include in his entertaining papers on "The Great American Authors" accounts of the lives of Bryant, Emerson, Longfellow, Hawthorne, Whittier, Poe, and Lowell.

Five Serial Stories
are among the features: one called "Chris and the Wonderful Lamp" recounts the marvelous adventures of a modern boy who became the accidental purchaser of Aladdin's lamp. A delightful story of college girls, "The Three Freshmen," will appeal to every girl; and "Teddy and Carrots," James Otis's serial of newsboy life, will be read by every boy. A serial story by Frances Courtenay Baylor is to appear.

"West Point" will receive attention from Lieut. Putnam, and Life on a Man-of-War will be described by Ensign Ellicott, of the flag-ship "Chicago." Stories of Famous Horses in history and mythology — Bucephalus, Napoleon's and Sheridan's horses, etc. — will be told. City Fire Departments will be treated, and The Boys' Brigade. More of Palmer Cox's famous "Brownies" are promised.

No home where there are children should be without the influence of ST. NICHOLAS.

Begin to take it with November. This number is on every news-stand; price, 25 cents. A year's subscription costs $3.00. All dealers, or the publishers,

THE CENTURY CO., Union Sq., New York.

SENT FREE A catalogue of VALUABLE ENGLISH BOOKS—new and fresh—at half price, and a catalogue of CHOICE OLD BOOKS at greatly reduced prices. Send your address on a postal card.

ESTES & LAURIAT, 301 Washington Street, Opp. Old South Church, BOSTON.

HAVE YOU A HOME
With poorly ventilated, unsanitary rooms?

If so, you can give them pure air with the added blessing of warmth and cheerfulness at a very slight cost by using The Mayflower Portable Fireplace.

It can be used in any room and requires only a joint of smoke pipe to connect with the chimney. Can be fitted for burning coal if desired. Shipped safely to any part of the country. Send for special circulars and terms.

SMITH & ANTHONY COMPANY,
Makers Hub Stoves and Ranges,
48 to 54 UNION ST., BOSTON.

D. APPLETON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

SECOND VOLUME OF

A History of the United States Navy,

From 1775 to 1894. By EDGAR STANTON MACLAY, A. M. With Technical Revision by Lieut. Roy C. Smith, U. S. N. In two volumes. Vol. II. With numerous Maps, Diagrams and Illustrations. 8vo. Cloth, $3.50 per volume.

In this volume Mr. Maclay depicts the closing scenes of the War of 1812, and recounts the events of consequence in the history of the navy down to the Civil War. The larger part of the volume is naturally devoted to the war, and in view of the author's exhaustive researches and the collaboration of many officers who were actors in this great drama, the publishers feel justified in emphasizing the importance of the succinct but comprehensive naval history of the Civil War presented in this volume. The concluding chapters relate to the naval happenings of importance since the war down to the launching of the Columbia, and the building up of the new navy is fully described.

Treatise on American Football.

By A. A. STAGG and H. L. WILLIAMS. With Diagrams illustrating over 100 plays. 16mo. Cloth, $1.25.

"The most elaborate and practical pocket manual that beginners in the game have yet had their attention called to. Stagg and Williams are both well known, the former as Yale's end rusher in '88-'89, and one of the closest and most thorough students of the game; and Williams as the Yale half-back in '90, and a player who thought out and brought many new plays to practical success. There are chapters for beginners and spectators, on team-play, tactics, training, and on the several positions. It is an extremely useful book."—CASPER W. WHITNEY, in Harper's Weekly.

Songs of the Soil.

By FRANK L. STANTON. With a Preface by Joel Chandler Harris. 16mo, cloth, gilt top, uncut. Price $1.50.

"Here is one with the dew of morning in his hair, who looks on life and the promise thereof and finds the prospect joyous. Whereupon he lifts up his voice and speaks to the heart; and lo! here is Love, with nimble feet and sparkling eyes; and here is Hope, fresh risen from his sleep, and here is Life made beautiful again."—JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS.

The Lilac Sunbonnet.

A Love Story. By S. R. CROCKETT, author of "The Stickit Minister," "The Raiders," etc. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

In this charming idyl the author adds a rare grace and delicacy to the qualities of sustained and dramatic narration which he has shown before. This is his first long novel since "The Raiders," and in the opinion of competent observers it represents his finest work.

Children of Circumstance.

A Novel. By IOTA, author of "A Yellow Aster." No. 155, Town and Country Library. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In this strong work the author offers a striking study of the womanhood of today. Her book does not represent "advanced" opinion, but it is rather an earnest attempt to point out the true sources of woman's strength.

Popular Astronomy:

A GENERAL DESCRIPTION OF THE HEAVENS. By CAMILLE FLAMMARION. Translated from the French by J. ELLARD GORE, F. R. A. S. With 3 Plates and 288 Illustrations. 8vo, cloth, $4.50.

"M. Camille Flammarion is the most popular scientific writer in France. Of the present work no fewer than one hundred thousand copies were sold in a few years. It was considered of such merit that the Montyon Prize of the French Academy was awarded to it. The subject is treated in a very popular style, and the work is at the same time interesting and reliable. It should be found very useful by those who wish to acquire a good general knowledge of astronomy without going too deeply into the science."—From Translator's Preface.

For sale by all booksellers; or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the publishers,

D. APPLETON & CO.,
72 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS.

Dodd, Mead & Company

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

MISTS.

A New Novel by FLETCHER BATTERSHALL, whose notable novel, "A Daughter of this World," published last fall, attracted an attention accorded to few first stories. It is a study of pessimism, as well as a delightfully romantic love story, laid among the piquant scenes and characters of Bar Harbor. 12mo, $1.25.

Mrs. Oliphant's New Novel.

A House in Bloomsbury.

Second Edition. $1.25.

"The best story she has written since 'Lady Jane.'"—The Athenæum.

"Far above the fiction of the day."—The Speaker.

Kitty Alone.

By S. BARING GOULD. A novel of remarkable power and vigor. 12mo, $1.25.

Where Honour Leads.

A sequel to her bright and winning story, "A Question of Honour." By LYNDE PALMER, author of "The Magnet Stories," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

Domestic Manners of the Americans.

By Mrs. TROLLOPE. 2 vols. 12mo. Reprinted from the first edition of 1832, now rare, with 24 illustrations from contemporary drawings, $3.50.

Memoirs of the Duchess de Gontaut,

Gouvernante to the Children of France during the Restoration, 1773-1836. Translated by Mrs. J. W. Davis. 2 vols., 8vo, with 13 portraits in photogravure, gilt top, $5.00.

The author personally knew Napoleon I., the Duke of Wellington, and many other English and French celebrities during the period dating from the French Revolution down to the Restoration. Her pages sparkle with vivacity, and are full of heretofore unrecorded anecdotes and reminiscences.

The Empress Eugenie.

The initial volume of "The Secret of an Empire," by PIERRE DE LANO, from the seventh French Edition. With portrait, 12mo, $1.25.

⁂ Write for our Illustrated Holiday Catalogue.

DODD, MEAD & COMPANY,
5 East 19th St., bet. Broadway and 5th Ave.

LANGUAGES MASTERED IN 10 WEEKS.
Part I. (3 Lessons), either language, sent for 25c.
MEISTERSCHAFT BUREAU, Boston, Mass.
FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH, ITALIAN.

FREDERICK WARNE & CO.'S

New and Selected Publications.

A NEW COLLECTION OF SHORT STORIES.

Quiet Stories from an Old Woman's Garden.

Silhouettes of English country life and character. By ALISON M'LEAN, author of "A Holiday in the Austrian Tyrol." With photogravure frontispiece. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

"Wholesome and refreshing enjoyment is afforded to the contemporary novel reader. . . . 'Quiet Stories' cannot be too widely read or earnestly taken to heart."—Daily Telegraph, London.

For the Reference Library, Clergymen, Lawyers, Literary Workers, etc.

Wood's Dictionary of Quotations.

From Ancient and Modern English and Foreign Sources. 30,000 references alphabetically arranged, and with an exhaustive subject Index. Demy 8vo, cloth, $2.50; half calf, gilt top, $4.50.

"Puts the reader at once on the track of the best thoughts of thinking men of all ages on a given topic."—The Boston Herald.

"Especially comprehensive. . . . Deserves to rank very high in the class to which it belongs."—Review of Reviews.

ENGLAND'S STORY BRIEFLY TOLD.

History of England and the British Empire.

A Record of Constitutional, Naval, Military, Political and Literary Events from B. C. 55 to A. D. 1890, by EDGAR SANDERSON, M. A., late scholar of Clare College, Cambridge. With tinted maps and genealogical tables. In one handsome 8vo volume, 1134 pp., cloth, $3.00.

"Mr. Sanderson has tried, he says, to make his history interesting. In this effort he has met with a surprising degree of success."—The New York Times.

"It is to his credit that he treats the subject with breadth and does not sink Colonial topics into abeyance. . . . One glides as through the pages of a novel over this chronicle of national progress."—Public Ledger, Philadelphia.

Now Ready. Suitably bound for wedding gifts, presentation, etc.

The Lansdowne Shakespeare.

INDIA PAPER EDITION. In six volumes, pocket size, insuring the perfection of printing with compactness in shape and size, borders and title pages rubricated. In cloth, cased, $8.00 per set; Spanish morocco, in morocco case, $15.00; fine German calf, or real Turkey morocco, $22.50.

TWO NEW BOOKS FOR BOYS.

Stirring Tales of Colonial Adventure.

By SKIPP BORLASE, author of "Daring Deeds," etc. With page illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt, $1.50.

Tales of Queensland, Australian Bushranging, exciting adventures in India, New Guinea, etc.

Ivanda; or The Pilgrim's Quest.

A Tale of Thibet. By Captain CLAUDE BRAY. With illustrations. Square 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

May be obtained of any bookseller, or will be sent free by mail, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

F. Warne & Co., 3 Cooper Union, New York

Some Good Books

THE ETHICS OF GEORGE ELIOT'S WORKS

In response to many inquiries we have made a new edition of this remarkable book by JOHN CROMBIE BROWN, with the introduction as written by Rev. Charles Gordon Ames. Printed on heavy laid paper, title in two colors. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

GEORGE ELIOT'S TWO MARRIAGES

By CHARLES GORDON AMES. "The ablest, wisest and best article written about George Eliot." Sixth edition, wide margin, uncut, paper covers, 20 cents.

BIBLE HEROES

By WILLIAM HARDCASTLE BROWNE. A fascinating way of presenting the tales of the heroic characters of the Old Testament. One lady says: "I enjoy the stories as much as the children, and have learned some things that never impressed me before." Shows the power of the writer. Beautifully illustrated and bound in cloth covers. Price 75 cents.

STOPS; OR, HOW TO PUNCTUATE

A wonderful little book. You will be surprised at its clearness and general good sense. Each rule is followed by practical examples. Can you do without it? Cost trifling—25 cents.

Any book by mail; we pay postage.

ARNOLD & COMPANY,
420 Library Street, Philadelphia.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

Napoleon, Lover and Husband.

BY FREDERIC MASSON.

Translated from the 14th French Edition

BY J. M. HOWELL.

Five Photogravure Plates, 320 Pages, 8vo, Cloth, Gilt Top, $2.00.

"This story of Napoleon's loves and his family life will be a valuable addition to our knowledge of the most famous man of his time."—Boston Times.

"Masson's book is exciting a sensation from St. Petersburg to Rome."—New York World.

For Sale at all Bookstores.

THE MERRIAM COMPANY,
Publishers and Booksellers,
67 FIFTH AVENUE - NEW YORK.

F

Before you think of

U

buying furs this fall

R

send for Lamson & Hubbard's new catalogue.

S

Lamson & Hubbard,
90 and 92 Bedford St.,
BOSTON.

Leading Furriers.

The finest line of Furs in Boston to select from.

BANGS & CO.,

739 and 741 Broadway, New York,

ANNOUNCE THE SALE OF THE

UNIQUE COLLECTION made by CHARLES B. FOOTE, Esq., of this city, of First Editions of the following American authors:

R. W. Emerson,
Nathaniel Hawthorne,
Oliver Wendell Holmes,
Henry W. Longfellow,
James Russell Lowell,
Edgar Allan Poe,
and John G. Whittier.

This Library is the result of ten years' constant research, and represents the best collection of these authors ever made or offered for sale.

The condition of these volumes is the best possible, in many cases the choice of several copies purchased.

The value of the books is very much increased and their interest enhanced by the insertion of Autograph Letters, Verses or other interesting autograph material relating to them or their authors.

To take place November 23d.

FRANK T. SABIN'S CATALOGUE of FINE and RARE BOOKS, ENGRAVINGS, AUTOGRAPHS, etc. (52 pp.), is NOW READY, and will be sent on application.

118 SHAFTESBURY AVE., LONDON, W.

The dinner eaten, and that with zest,
Then comes the time for toast and jest,
With them let light resplendent shine
"Across the walnuts and the wine."

Banquet Lamps FOR Thanksgiving.

Infinite in Variety. Moderate in Cost.

R. Hollings & Co.,
MANUFACTURERS & IMPORTERS,
523-525 Washington Street.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - -	$16,014,000.00
Liabilities, -	$13,808,000.00
Surplus, - -	$2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT, OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

New Publications.

The Life and Inventions of Thomas A. Edison.

By W. K. L. Dickson and Antonia Dickson. With numerous drawings and photographs. 4to, cloth, gilt top, boxed, $4.50.

This volume has been prepared with Mr. Edison's consent and approval, and furnishes a trustworthy account of the wonderful history and inventions of the famous "Wizard of Menlo Park."

Scott's Complete Poetical Works.

With introduction by Prof. Charles Eliot Norton. Carefully edited, with explanatory notes. Printed from new plates on fine paper. With 34 illustrations by eminent artists. Photogravure frontispieces. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $3.00; white back, gilt top, $3.00; half calf, gilt top, $6.00.

Twenty-five Years of Scientific Progress.

A series of lectures by Wm. North Rice, Professor of Geology in Wesleyan University. 16mo, 75 cents.

Pelleas and Melisande.

A drama by Maurice Maeterlinck, "the Flemish Shakespeare." Translated by Erving Winslow. 16mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.00.

Famous Leaders Among Men.

By Sarah K. Bolton. With portraits of Napoleon, Wendell Phillips, Thomas Arnold, Charles Kingsley, and others. 12mo, cloth, uniform with previous volumes, $1.50.

The Building of Character.

By the Rev. J. R. Miller, D. D. 16mo, white back, gilt top, boxed, $1.00; white and gold, gilt edges, $1.25; levant morocco, flexible, gilt edges, $2.50.

T. Y. CROWELL & CO.,

New York and Boston.

THE

POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY

FOR NOVEMBER.

The Glaciers of Greenland. (Illustrated.) By Prof. Angelo Heilprin.

An account of the scene of Peary's explorations and the destination of the ill-starred Miranda Expedition.

Preparation for College by English High Schools. By John F. Casey.

Sets forth the principles of the modern liberal education, and tells what boys who have entered college without Greek are accomplishing.

Unsolved Problems of Science. By the Marquis of Salisbury.

Inaugural address of the ex-Premier of England as President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science.

The Cobra and Other Serpents. (Illustrated.) By G. R. O'Reilly.

A lover of snakes tells about their ways and corrects several popular errors.

The Sioux Mythology. By Dr. Charles A. Eastman. An educated Sioux on the beliefs of his people.

OTHER ARTICLES:

Alcohol and Happiness; Manual Training; The Swiss Watch Schools (illustrated); Redonda and its Phosphates; Some Analogies and Homologies; The Chemistry of Cleaning; Philibert Commerson, "The King's Naturalist"; Sketch of Sears Cook Walker (with Portrait).

Editor's Table; Literary Notices; Popular Miscellany; Notes.

50 cents a number; $5.00 a year.

D. APPLETON & CO., NEW YORK.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address

Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

A NEW LIFE OF NAPOLEON

Magnificently Illustrated,

will be the chief feature of The Century Magazine in 1895. It is written by

PROFESSOR WILLIAM M. SLOANE, who has spent many years in preparation for the work. The interest in Napoleon has had recently a revival that is phenomenal in its intensity. Thus far no biography of the "man of destiny" has appeared in either English or French that is both free from rancor and attentive to the laws of historical criticism. THE CENTURY has secured it—a complete and interesting history of the life of one of the most marvelous of men. Every one will want to read this, no matter how much he may already know of Napoleon;—here is the concentration of all the lives and memoirs. In preparing it the author has had access to original sources of information, and his work has the advantage of coming after the numerous volumes of memoirs. It begins in

The November Number of

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE

Now Ready. Sold Everywhere.

Every resource of THE CENTURY has been brought to bear to enrich the narrative with pictorial illustrations not unworthy of the subject. European and American collections have been ransacked for portraits of the period, and for the most trustworthy pictures by contemporaries of the events described. To these have been added many of the greatest modern masterpieces of French art—the works of Meissonier, Detaille, Gérôme, Vernet, Delaroche, Lefevre, etc. In addition, many original pictures have been made by French and American artists. The theme creates an opportunity for the most interesting and most brilliant pictorial series of a historical character yet presented in the pages of a magazine.

A New Novel by Marion Crawford,

A Romance of Italy, Illustrated by Castaigne,

"Casa Braccio," begins in the November Century. It is considered by Mr. Crawford his best work—setting forth, in a striking and original manner, the tragedy of human passion.

"Washington in Lincoln's Time,"

A Series of Papers by Noah Brooks, begins also in the November Century, with chapters on "The Capital as a Camp," "Conversations with Lincoln," "Some Famous Men of the Period."

"THE CATHEDRALS OF FRANCE" is the title of a valuable series of articles by Mrs. Schuyler van Rensselaer, with illustrations by Joseph Pennell, which begins in the November Century, following the brilliant papers on English Cathedrals, by the same writer and artist. "THE MAKING OF THIEVES IN NEW YORK," by Jacob A. Riis, interesting REMINISCENCES OF HAWTHORNE, by his daughter, "IN THE CITY OF CANTON" (richly illustrated), complete stories by Hezekiah Butterworth, and others, are in the November Century.

This number begins a new volume. The next issue of The Century—a superb Christmas number—will contain

RUDYARD KIPLING'S FIRST AMERICAN STORY, "A WALKING DELEGATE."

If you are not already a reader of The Century, begin with the November number, now on every news-stand; price, 35 cents. Price, $4.00 a year. All dealers take subscriptions, or remittance may be made by check, draft, money-order, or express-order to the publishers,

THE CENTURY CO·
UNION SQUARE·NEW YORK

Noah Farnham Morrison,

SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,

877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.

Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.

Send your lists of wants to

N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston

Large Stock of Old English and American Books.

History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

Public Library,
LAWR

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 SOMERSET STREET
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 17 NOVEMBER 1894 Vol. XXV No. 23 Whole No. 519

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Now Ready. With Numerous Illustrations. By the Ven. Archdeacon Farrar.

The Life of Christ as Represented in Art.

By FREDERIC W. FARRAR, D. D., F. R. S., Archdeacon and Canon of Westminster, author of "The Life of Christ," "Seekers After God," etc. With numerous Illustrations and Frontispiece. 8vo, cloth, gilt, $6.00.

A New Book by Frederic Harrison,

The Meaning of History, and Other Historical Pieces.

By FREDERIC HARRISON, author of "The Choice of Books," etc. Large 12mo, gilt top, $2.25.

A New Book by Sir John Lubbock.

The Use of Life.

By the Rt. Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M. P., F. R. S., D. C. L., LL. D., author of "The Beauties of Nature," "The Pleasures of Life," etc. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

Translation of Professor Erman's Important Work. Copiously Illustrated.

LIFE IN ANCIENT EGYPT.

Described by ADOLF ERMAN. Translated by H. M. TIRARD. With 400 Illustrations and 12 Plates. Super-royal 8vo, $6.00.

"A better or fuller work on the subject could hardly be desired. It covers the whole range of Egyptology, and the author has shown a singular skill in gathering together all that is likely to interest the general reader. . . . A most fascinating book."—The Scotsman.

Now Ready. Vol. I.

THE HISTORY OF GREECE,

From its Commencement to the Close of the Independence of the Greek People. By ADOLF HOLM. Authorized translation from the German. In 4 vols. Vol. I.: Up to the End of the Sixth Century B. C. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, $2.50.

A New Complete Edition.

The Poetical Works of Robert Browning.

New and Complete Edition of the Works of ROBERT BROWNING, in nine volumes, crown 8vo. In addition to the matter heretofore included in the sixteen-volume edition, this contains "Asolando," together with Historical Notes to the Poems, making a Complete Definitive Edition of the poet's works. Cloth, gilt top. Price, each volume, $2.25. The set, 9 vols., in box, $20.00.

A Sumptuous Art Work.

Pen Drawing and Pen Draughtsmen.

Their Work and Their Methods. A Study of the Art Today, with Technical Suggestions. By JOSEPH PENNELL. A New and Enlarged Edition, with over 400 Illustrations, including many examples from original drawings by Sir F. Leighton, Sir J. E. Millais, Sir F. Burne Jones, E. Pinwell, F. Walker, E. A. Abbey, Holman Hunt, F. Parsons, Aubrey Beardsley, etc. 4to. Bound in buckram. Printed on J. Dickinson & Co.'s Art Paper. $15.00.

Jane Austen Illustrated by Hugh Thomson.

PRIDE AND PREJUDICE.

By JANE AUSTEN. With Preface by GEORGE SAINTSBURY, and 90 Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt or edges uncut, uniform with "Cranford," "Shakespeare's England," "Our Village," etc. $2.25.

⁂ Also an Edition de Luxe, limited, on handmade paper, super-royal 8vo, $18.00 net.

By Mr. F. Marion Crawford.

Love in Idleness: A Tale of Bar Harbour.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD, author of "Katharine Lauderdale," "Saracinesca," "A Roman Singer," etc. With illustrations reproduced from drawings and photographs. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, uniform with "Rip Van Winkle," "Our Village," etc. $2.00.

"A charming love story."

A New Volume of Short Stories by the late Editor of the "Fortnightly Review."

Elder Conklin, and Other Stories.

Tales of Western Life. By FRANK HARRIS, late editor of the Fortnightly Review. Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.25.

In the Lion's Mouth.

The Story of Two English Children in France, 1789–1793. By ELEANOR C. PRICE, author of "Gerald," "The Foreigners," "Valentina," etc. 12mo, ornamental cloth, $1.50.

Illustrated by Hugh Thomson.

Old English Songs.

From Various Sources. With illustrations by HUGH THOMSON and an Introduction by AUSTIN DOBSON. Uniform with "The Vicar of Wakefield," "Cranford," etc. 12mo, cloth, gilt, or edges uncut, $2.00.

A New Novel by the Author of "A Village Tragedy."

The Vagabonds.

By MARGARET L. WOODS, author of "A Village Tragedy," "Lyrics and Ballads" and "Esther Vanhomrigh." Crown 8vo, uniform with "The Raiders" and "The Stickit Minister." $1.50.

By the author of "Wheat and Tares."

Sibylla.

A Novel. By Sir H. S. CUNNINGHAM, author of "The Coeruleans: A Vacation Idyll," "Wheat and Tares," etc. Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.25.

The November Number Now Ready.

BOOK REVIEWS.

A Monthly Journal Devoted to New and Current Publications. Price 5 cents each number; subscription 50 cents a year. The leading article this month is the Fourth Paper on "A Modern View of Mysticism," by Mr. F. MARION CRAWFORD.

MACMILLAN & CO., 66 Fifth Avenue, New York.

A. C. McClurg & Co.'s New Books.

England in the Nineteenth Century. By Elizabeth Wormeley Latimer, author of "France in the Nineteenth Century," etc. Handsomely illustrated with half-tone portraits of celebrated characters. 8vo, $2.50.

"Mrs. Latimer has already created an audience with her former books on historic interest. 'France in the Nineteenth Century' and 'Russia and Turkey in the Nineteenth Century.' . . . There is a personal element in Mrs. Latimer's book which is particularly pleasing. . . . We are all supposed to be familiar with the history of our own time, but there are many of us who will be surprised at the amount we have forgotten when we read this book."—Jeannette L. Gilder, in the Chicago Tribune.

My Lady. By Marguerite Bouvet, author of "Sweet William," etc. With illustrations and cover design by Margaret and Helen Armstrong. 16mo, $1.25.

This is a delightful story for adults from the same author who has already charmed the thousands who have read her favorite children's stories, "Sweet William," "Prince Tip Top," etc. It is a fine example of the power to tell a tale of tender love in pure Saxon English. Recounting the fortunes of French refugees to England in the days of the Revolution of '93 and of Bonaparte, it affords glimpses of life both in England and France. The book is sure to increase its author's fame both by its fascination as a story and by its simple, unaffected style.

Reminiscences of a Portrait Painter. By G. P. A. Healy. With illustrations after the original paintings by Mr. Healy. 12mo, 221 pages, $1.50.

"That famous artist, the late G. P. A. Healy, left behind him a record of his life that will be a valuable addition to that class of literature that always has a fascination—the recollections of one who has known personally the most famous men and women of the last half-century, both in this country and Europe. . . . He has written in a charming, easy style. . . . It is without doubt the most fascinating book of reminiscences that has been published for a long while."—The Boston Times.

Tales from the Ægean. By Demetrios Bikélas. Translated by Leonard E. Opdycke. With an introduction by Henry A. Huntington. 16mo, 258 pages, $1.00.

Mr. Bikélas is, perhaps, the most popular living author in his own land, and his name is a household word among all who take an interest in the modern Greeks. Of these eight tales some are sad, some imbued with a gentle humor, and all are pure and refined in sentiment. Their especial value lies in the realistic pictures they paint of Greek life in our own times.

Jewish Tales. Translated from the French of Leopold von Sacher Masoch, by Harriet Lieber Cohen. 16mo, 317 pages, $1.00.

These highly entertaining prose idyls—racy, piquant, spirited—have already attained great popularity in France, and their realistic pictures of Jewish life in the good old times, both in its comic and serious aspects, will assure them a warm welcome here.

In Bird Land. A book for bird lovers. By Leander S. Keyser. 16mo, 269 pages, $1.25.

"I have read your book with great pleasure. You are one of the few who write what they see, and do not draw on their imagination, nor on the old books."—Olive Thorne Miller, in a letter to the author.

The Price of Peace. A Story of the Times of Ahab, King of Israel. By A. W. Ackerman. 12mo, 390 pages, $1.25.

This book will be found intensely interesting because of the light it throws on an eventful period in the history of the people of Israel. Dealing with the times of the weak-minded King Ahab and his idolatrous wife Jezebel, it sets before the reader, in the attractive form of a tale, something of the domestic as well as the military life of those troublous times. The interest is greatly enhanced by the exquisitely pure love story that is interwoven with the stirring historical events.

The Crucifixion of Phillip Strong. By Charles M. Sheldon. 12mo, 267 pages, $1.00.

A novel of unusual interest and timeliness, which deals with the church and modern society. The author sees and clearly presents the difficulties which lie in the way of a man honestly determined to do his duty and live and act as he believes Christ would have him live and act. It is a strong arraignment of a lethargic church, and a call to higher and better things.

The Power of an Endless Life. By the Rev. Thomas C. Hall. 12mo, 190 pages, $1.00.

"These sermons are not ambitiously 'great' but they are intensely Christian in spirit, thought and purpose. . . . The style as well as the thinking is simple, positive, direct, straightforward."—The Advance.

Things of the Mind. By the Rt. Rev. J. L. Spalding, Bishop of Peoria. 12mo, 235 pages, $1.00.

Bishop Spalding is here in his chosen field, and writes in a delightfully clear and terse style of Education, Culture, Religion and Patriotism. Essays of this character are all too rare, and they are to be welcomed for their tendency to draw the mind from things material to things spiritual.

Woman in Epigram: Flashes of Wit, Wisdom and Satire from the World's Literature. Compiled by Frederick W. Morton. 16mo, $1.00.

The book is full of variety, wit, brilliancy, humor and wise aphorisms. The aim has been to gather together in convenient form thè best things said in praise or condemnation of women, and the sharp contrast afforded will probably be found not less entertaining and instructive than the views advanced and the bright, epigrammatic form in which they are cast.

For sale by booksellers generally, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of the price by the publishers.

A. C. McCLURG & CO., CHICAGO.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

John Greenleaf Whittier.

Life and Letters. By Samuel T. Pickard. With 7 Portraits and Views. 2 vols., crown 8vo, gilt top, $4.00.

A work which all admirers of the poet and all lovers of the man will welcome with peculiar gratitude.

George William Curtis.

An appreciative and admirable account of this knightly man and great citizen. By Edward Cary, in American Men of Letters Series. With a Portrait. 16mo, $1.25.

The Story of Lawrence Garthe.

A very bright and engaging novel of New York life, though not a society novel. By Ellen Olney Kirk, author of "The Story of Margaret Kent," "Ciphers," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

A Century of Charades.

By William Bellamy. A hundred original charades, very ingenious in conception, worked out with remarkable skill, and—many of them—genuinely poetical. 18mo, $1.00.

When Molly was Six.

A delightful story, simple, natural, engaging and of charming literary quality. By Eliza Orne White, author of "Winterborough." Illustrated by Katharine Pyle. An exquisite Holiday book. Square 16mo, $1.00.

Fagots for the Fireside.

One hundred and fifty games. By Lucretia P. Hale. Enlarged edition, with 29 new games, including Golf. 12mo, $1.25.

"Even the lady from Philadelphia could not make a better book."

READY NOVEMBER 21:

The Oliver Wendell Holmes Year Book.

Selections from Dr. Holmes's prose and poetry for Every Day of the Year. With a fine portrait. Attractively bound. 16mo, $1.00.

Talk at a Country House.

Interesting imaginary conversations, at an English country house, on famous Englishmen, English society, politics and literature, Assyrian inscriptions, etc. By Sir Edward Strachey. With a portrait and engraved title-page. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

Religious Progress.

A small book on a large subject treated with admirable learning, rare breadth of view, and a finely tolerant spirit. By A. V. G. Allen, author of "The Continuity of Christian Thought." 16mo, $1.00.

The Great Refusal:

Letters from a Dreamer in Gotham. A romance in which the sentiment is cherished mostly by the "dreamer," who writes in admirable style of many interesting things besides love. By Paul E. More. 16mo, $1.00.

A Story of Courage:

Annals of the Convent of the Visitation at Georgetown. By George Parsons Lathrop, LL. D., and Rose Hawthorne Lathrop. With illustrations. 12mo, $2.00.

Mr. and Mrs. Lathrop tell in excellent style and with much enthusiasm the story of the founding of the Convent and Academy of the Visitation of the Blessed Virgin Mary at Georgetown. Their book is valuable as setting forth the principles, methods, aims and spirit of the institution, and it will be of interest to Protestants as well as Catholics, and an excellent souvenir for those who have studied in the academy.

Hymns and Verses.

By Samuel Longfellow. 16mo, $1.00.

Some of the Rev. Samuel Longfellow's hymns are among the noblest, sweetest and most devout in the world's hymnal, and many will eagerly welcome this tasteful volume which garners poems so admirable.

Sold by all Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY'S

Autumn Announcements.

HISTORY, BELLES-LETTRES, FICTION, AND MISCELLANEOUS.

Thiers's History of the French Revolution.

New Edition, uniform with the New Edition of Thiers's "History of the Consulate and the Empire of France." Illustrated with 41 steel engravings. 5 volumes, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00 per volume; three-fourths morocco, $5.00 per volume.

This edition will be uniform with the New Edition of Thiers's "History of the Consulate and the Empire of France," and will be published in monthly volumes, commencing September, 1894. Subscriptions will be received for complete sets only by all booksellers and the publishers.

Thiers's History of the Consulate and the Empire of France.

Now complete. Illustrated with 36 steel engravings. 12 volumes, 8vo. Cloth, $36.00; half morocco, gilt top, $60.00.

The only good edition of the English translation has long been out of print, and the present publishers, in connection with an English house, have brought out a limited edition to meet the demand of the libraries and book-buyer. The last volume of this sumptuous edition has just been issued.

Napoleon at Home.

The Daily Life of the Emperor at the Tuileries. By Frederic Masson. With 12 full-page illustrations by F. de Myrbach. 2 volumes, 8vo. Cloth, $7.50.

Napoleon and the Women of His Court.

By Frederic Masson. With numerous illustrations in the best style of French Art. 1 volume, 8vo.

Around a Throne.

Catherine II., of Russia, her Collaborators, her Friends, and her Favorites. By K. Waliszewski, author of "Romance of an Empress." 2 volumes, 8vo, cloth.

The Marquis de La Fayette in the War of the Revolution.

With some Account of the Attitude of France toward the War of Independence. By Charlemagne Tower, Jr., LL. D. 2 volumes, royal 8vo. Cloth, gilt top, uncut.

Henry of Navarre and the Religious Wars.

By Edward T. Blair. With 55 cuts in the text and 4 full-page photogravures by Boussod, Valadon et Cie. Square 8vo.

In preparation.

Colonial Days and Dames.

By Anne Hollingsworth Wharton, author of "Through Colonial Doorways." Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth, extra, $1.25.

Edition de Luxe limited to the number of subscribers.

The Colonial Library.

COLONIAL DAYS AND DAMES.
THROUGH COLONIAL DOORWAYS.
2 volumes, 12mo, in box, $2.50.

Books and Plays.

By Allan Monkhouse. 100 printed for America. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Pen and Pencil Sketches.

By Henry Stacy Marks, R. A. With 4 photogravure plates and 124 facsimile illustrations. 2 volumes, 8vo. Irish linen, gilt top, $8.00.

There will be included in the volume many unpublished drawings left by Fred. Walker, the remarkable young English artist who is drawn by Du Maurier in the character of "Little Billee" in Trilby.

The Birds About Us.

By Charles Conrad Abbott, M. D., author of "Recent Rambles," "Travels in a Tree-Top," etc. Illustrated with upwards of 75 Bird Portraits. 1 volume, 12mo. Cloth, $2.00.

A book for every lover of birds. It is written in a familiar and genial style, and is not burdened with technicalities, while being accurate in every particular.

Irving (Washington). Sketch Book.

New Edition. 2 volumes, 12mo. Illustrated with Engravings on Wood, from Original Designs. Price in cloth, extra, gilt top, $4.00; half calf or half morocco, $7.00.

The illustrations of this edition were made for the Artist Edition, the type is new, and the size suitable for the library and the table, making the most desirable edition of this popular classic now published.

Madonna and Other Poems.

By Harrison S. Morris. Illustrated. 1 volume, 12mo. Extra cloth, $2.00.

This is the first collected edition of the author's poems, many of which have never previously appeared. The edition is printed from type, and limited to 750 copies for America and England.

Sorrow and Song.

By Coulson Kernahan, author of "A Book of Strange Sins," "A Dead Man's Diary," etc. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

Mr. Kernahan's work is not only intensely interesting as literary criticism, but, owing to its searching investigation and powerful delineation of the motives and the sins of the human soul, it is strangely fascinating for the general reader.

Hazlitt (William). Liber Amoris.

A newly printed edition containing numerous passages omitted in the editions of 1823. The volume will contain a fine reproduction of William Bewick's chalk drawing of William Hazlitt, a facsimile of a letter from Hazlitt to Rathmore, and one of Sarah Walker to Hazlitt (the only one known to exist). Edition limited to 400 copies for England and 100 for America. Price $6.00 net.

Carlyle's (Thomas) Translations.

3 volumes. 8vo. Uniform with the Ashburton Edition of his works. Cloth, $7.50.

The Works of Laurence Sterne.

Edited by George Saintsbury, with illustrations by E. J. Wheeler. 6 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $6.00; half calf and half morocco, $13.50; large paper edition, 6 volumes, buckram, $18.00.

Published in connection with Dent & Co., of London.

Corinne, or Italy.

By Madame de Stael. Translated. With illustrations. 2 volumes. Cloth, $2.00; half calf and half morocco, $4.50; large paper edition, 2 volumes, buckram, $6.00.

Published in connection with Dent & Co., of London.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY'S AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENTS—Continued.

Early English Ballads.

Chosen by R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON. With about 200 illustrations by William Cubitt Cooke. 4 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $5.00; half calf or half morocco, $10.00.

The text of the Old Ballads has been carefully prepared from the original sources in each case, though the spelling is modernized so far as can be done without injuring the rhythm or accentuation. Brief historical and explanatory notes to many of the ballads are added to the Table of Contents, and the meanings of obsolete terms are explained in foot-notes. Published in connection with Dent & Co., of London.

Tom Cringle's Log.

By MICHAEL SCOTT. 2 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $2.00; half calf or half morocco, $4.50.

Cruise of the Midge.

By MICHAEL SCOTT. 2 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $2.00; half calf or half morocco, $4.50.

The brilliant papers that make up these volumes were commenced in Blackwood's Magazine in 1829. Coleridge, in his "Table-Talk," spoke of them as "most excellent." Wilson, in "Noctes Ambrosianæ," says, "Cringle indeed is a giant."

Burns (Robert). Poetical Works.

Complete. Chronologically Arranged, with Notes, Glossaries and Index. By W. SCOTT DOUGLAS. 3 volumes, 16mo. Cloth, $2.25; half calf, $5.00.

In this edition the poems of Burns are presented unabridged and untampered with, and arranged in chronological order, the date of each composition being recorded.

Thomas A'Kempis's Imitation of Christ.

Edited by CANON FARRAR. Illustrated by new and quaint illustrations. Illuminated with Initial Letters, making the most desirable edition published. Price, in cloth, $1.50; limp morocco, $4.00.

Published in connection with Methuen & Co., of London.

Australasia.

Volume I.—Australia and New Zealand. By ALFRED B. WALLACE, LL. D., D. C. L., F. R. S. With many maps and illustrations. Crown 8vo. Price $4.50.

Volume II. ready shortly. To be followed by volumes on North America, Europe, Asia, Africa and South America.

Chambers's Concise Gazetteer of the World.

Topographical, Statistical and Historical. 1 volume, crown 8vo. Uniform with Reader's Reference Library. Half morocco, $2.50.

This work does not claim to be exhaustive. Its aim has been to tell everything that may be reasonably wanted about every place likely to be looked for.

My First Book.

The Experiences of Walter Besant, James Payn, W. Clark Russell, Grant Allen, Hall Caine, George R. Sims, Rudyard Kipling, A. Conan Doyle, M. E. Braddon, F. W. Robinson, H. Rider Haggard, R. M. Ballantyne, I. Zangwill, Morley Roberts, David Christie Murray, Marie Corelli, Jerome K. Jerome, John Strange Winter, Bret Harte, "I," Robert Louis Stevenson and Robert Buchanan. With an Introduction by JEROME K. JEROME. Profusely illustrated, $2.50.

A New Novel by W. E. Norris.

Matthew Austin.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In "Lippincott's Series of Select Novels" for October.

A New Novel by Mrs. D. M. Croker, author of "A Third Person," etc.

Mr. Jervis.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In "Lippincott's Series of Select Novels" for November.

A New Novel by Effie Adelaide Rowlands, author of "My Pretty Jane," etc.

The Spell of Ursula.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

In "Lippincott's Series of Select Novels" for December.

A New Novel by Rosa Nouchette Carey.

The Old, Old Story.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Ready in September.

A New Novel by Captain Charles King, U. S. A.

Under Fire.

Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A New Novel by Julien Gordon, author of "A Diplomatic Diary," etc.

Poppæa.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Ready in October.

A New Novel by W. E. Norris.

The Despotic Lady.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Ready in November.

A Volume of South Sea Island Stories by Louis Becke.

By Reef and Palm.

With Introduction by Lord PEMBROKE. Tall 16mo, cloth, 75 cents.

Ready in October.

A New Novel by James Payn.

In Market Overt.

Copyrighted edition in preparation.

A Volume of Short Stories by Mrs. L. T. Mead, author of "The Honorable Miss," etc.

Stories from the Diary of a Doctor.

24 full-page illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A Remarkable Story of Adventure by Wm. Laird Clowes, author of "The Captain of the Mary Rose," etc.

The Double Emperor.

With 8 full-page illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A Book for Young Girls, by Amy E. Blanchard, author of "Twenty Little Maidens."

Two Girls.

Illustrated by IDA WAUGH. 12mo, cloth, extra, $1.25.

Ready in October.

A Book for Girls by Mrs. Molesworth.

Olivia.

Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, upon receipt of price by the publishers,

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, 715 and 717 Market Street, Philadelphia.

The Literary World

Vol XXV BOSTON 17 NOVEMBER 1894 No. 23

CONTENTS

A LITTLE ENGLISH GALLERY 385
A FLASH OF SUMMER 385
WINTER'S LIFE OF JOSEPH JEFFERSON . . . 385
THOREAU'S FAMILIAR LETTERS 386
LOURDES 386
A FLORIDA SKETCH-BOOK 387
ARTHUR O'SHAUGHNESSY 387
MEDIÆVAL GERMAN SOCIETY 388
UNGUARDED GATES AND OTHER POEMS . . . 388
GENESIS AND SEMITIC TRADITION 388
AN ACTRESS IN THE FAR EAST 389

ORIGINAL POETRY:
  Miss Wilkins' Characters. ALICE ELIZABETH SAWTELLE 390
THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF WHITTIER . . . 390
NEW YORK LETTER 391
FICTION:
  The Trail of the Sword 392
  Matthew Austin 392
  When All the Woods Are Green 392
  The Untempered Wind 392
  Centuries Apart 392
  A House in Bloomsbury 392
  Pomona's Travels 393
MINOR NOTICES:
  From Blomidon to Smoky 393
  Studies of Nature on the Coast of Arran . . 393
  Rambles through Japan without a Guide . . 393
  The Mountains of California 393
  The Story of the Pilgrims 393
  The Empress Eugénie 394
PERIODICALS 394
NEWS AND NOTES 394
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED 396

A LITTLE ENGLISH GALLERY.*

THIS is one of the most delightful collection of essays published for years. While Miss Guiney is destitute of that delicious wit and humor which make Miss Agnes Repplier's essays so unusual, Miss Guiney far surpasses Miss Repplier in the delicate discrimination of her criticism. Where Miss Repplier loves to keep in the highroads of literature, saying keen words about the books and characters dear to us all, Miss Guiney has a knack of discovering delightful byways in the book world, and introducing new friends to us, whose names we already knew, but whose characters were quite unknown to us before.

A Little English Gallery gives us a delightful picture of George Herbert's mother, afterward Lady Danvers; a careful and sympathetic criticism of Henry Vaughan's life and poetry; and a very entertaining sketch of Samuel Johnson's friends, Topham Beauclerk and Bennet Langton. The other two essays in the volume, on Farquhar and Hazlitt, are much less interesting; the one on Hazlitt is especially lacking in clearness and precision.

The best essay is the one on Vaughan, which is fine and really masterly in its way. Miss Guiney's taste in quotation is very happy, and we cannot forbear requoting one of the characteristic verses which she chooses from Vaughan's beautiful but too little known work:

> Follow the cry no more. There is
>   An ancient way,
> All strewed with flowers and happiness,
>   And fresh as May.

One could wish that Miss Guiney had a more flowing style; there is a certain congestion of ideas in her sentences which sometimes makes them difficult to follow. She is unfortunately not gifted with the limpid clearness which is one of the greatest charms in Miss Repplier's essays. Miss Guiney has a genius, however, for descriptive adjectives, and since Matthew Arnold we remember no one whose adjectives are more vividly and precisely used than Miss Guiney's. Altogether A Little English Gallery deserves to occupy an honored place among American essays.

A FLASH OF SUMMER.*

WE are accustomed to look for wit well tempered by shrewd common sense and knowledge of human nature in Mrs. Clifford's novels. The Love Letters of a Worldly Woman were remarkably witty, and Aunt Anne was one of the cleverest character sketches published in the last ten years. A Flash of Summer is not witty or amusing; it is simply a very delicate study of the character of a young girl who has been brought up in a quite lonely and forlorn household. At eighteen she is forced into marrying a man for whom she cares nothing and who marries her for her money. Katherine is entirely ignorant of the world and of life; she knows no one but her husband and the uncle who has brought her up. Both of them are hard, brutal men. She endures life with her husband for a year, during which period he neglects and maltreats her, and finally ends by striking her and confessing that he loves another woman. This is the last straw, and Katherine runs off to Italy, throwing away her wedding ring and resuming her maiden name. On the steamer going out she comes across an old friend, who persuades her to join forces with her and her mother-in-law. Mrs. Alford is a delightful old lady, motherly, a trifle rigid, but full of sweetness and charm; her affection and companionship are the first touches of softness that have ever come into Katherine's life. "The Flash of Summer" comes to Katherine when Mrs. Alford's youngest son joins his mother. Katherine has never told of her marriage, and when Alford falls in love with her at first she will give him no explanation of the reason why she will not marry him. There is a curious lack in Katherine of any sense of the sanctity of the marriage tie; her husband's brutality to her has killed all sense of duty towards him. When, through the influence of the Alfords, she is brought to see that she ought to return to her husband, she still does it more from love of Alford than from sense of duty.

The secret of Mrs. Clifford's success as a novelist lies in the way in which she accepts the facts of life. Brutal as Katherine's husband is to her, we still feel that there is some excuse for him, as there is generally some excuse for the brutes in the world which lies beyond the realm of books. Mrs. Clifford's heroes and heroines are not "too good to be true," but we feel that they are making for righteousness feebly and half regretfully, yet deliberately. In fine, Mrs. Clifford manages to steer clear of the Scylla of romanticism as well as of the Charybdis of that realism which devotes itself solely to examining the plague spots of human nature.

A Flash of Summer may not be as popular as Mrs. Clifford's former novels, but we recommend it highly to all who care for delicate and careful character studies, and whose literary enjoyment is not circumscribed to the stamping ground of plot and incident.

WINTER'S LIFE OF JOSEPH JEFFERSON.*

AFTER the peculiar fascination of Mr. Jefferson's own autobiography it is a dangerous task for even Mr. William Winter to write anything more about this remarkable family. Still this volume is very different from the other reminiscences, and many perhaps have become so interested in Jeffersoniana that they will gladly welcome any and every new fact about the family. Mr. Winter gives fully one third of his book to a description of the parents and grandparents of the present Joe Jefferson; another third to the contemporaries of Jefferson, his fellow actors; and the last third to the life and art of our dear Rip Van Winkle. Perhaps the writer overrates the last representative of the family as an actor, for it is almost impossible to find a biographer who is brave enough to tell the truth about a man while he is alive.

Mr. Winter is most indignant at the critic who speaks of Mr. Jefferson as a "one-part actor," and yet later he writes that "the comedian [Jefferson] assumes with perfect readiness the guise of a nature kindred with his own." The secret of the "vitality of Rip Van Winkle is its poetry. Jefferson's embodiment of Rip has been before the public for thirty years, yet it is not hackneyed. . . . Nothing is more clearly proved by all that is known of actors than the truth that an actor makes his most substantial success in a character which implicates his own nature." We incline to differ with Mr. Winter here. The second-rate actor chooses some one character which appeals to his own nature and acts that part best; but the great artist, like Sarah Bernhardt, is equally fine in "Jeanne d'Arc" and "Camille." What Bernhardt's character is, who knows or cares? But we all feel sure that Jefferson and the character of Rip Van Winkle have much in common.

---

*A Little English Gallery. By Louise Imogen Guiney. Harper & Brothers. $1.00.

*A Flash of Summer. By Mrs. W. K. Clifford. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

*Life and Art of Joseph Jefferson. By William Win Macmillan & Co. $2.25.

Besides the anecdotes and reminiscences of the Jefferson family, this volume includes brief biographies of Sothern, Raymond, Mark Smith, and Laura Keene. There is much that is pathetic as well as amusing in theatrical gossip, but it is the bright, happy side of the stage that Mr. Winter gives us here. His book is lively, agreeable reading from beginning to end, while it has not the rare charm of the Jefferson autobiography, and one can only recommend it as a supplement to that delightful book.

THOREAU'S FAMILIAR LETTERS.[*]

IN the preface to this characteristic collection Mr. Sanborn calls attention to the fortunes of Thoreau as an author. Only two of his books were issued during his lifetime, and these encountered much difficulty in finding a publisher. But in the thirty-two years that have elapsed since his death ten volumes have been prepared from his manuscripts and fugitive pieces. Twice in America and twice in England his biography has been written. "At present the sale of his books and the interest in his life are greater than ever, and he seems to have grown early into an American classic, like his Concord neighbors, Emerson and Hawthorne. . . . The letters of Thoreau, though not less remarkable in some aspects than what he wrote carefully for publication, have thus far scarcely had justice done them. The selection made for a small volume in 1865 was designedly done to exhibit one phase of his character — the most striking, if you will, but not the most native or attractive."

Emerson's rule of choice failed to satisfy Thoreau's sister Sophia, and it was her conviction of its inadequacy which determined Mr. Sanborn to present a fuller view of his friend when occasion should arise. In these letters the editor has not rejected the domestic and even the trivial elements, > being well assured that what the increasing number of Thoreau's readers desire is to see this piquant original just as he was — not arrayed in the paradoxical cloak of the Stoic sage, nor sitting complacent in the cynic earthenware cave of Diogenes and bidding Alexander stand out of his sunshine. He did those acts also, but they were not the whole man. He was far more poet than cynic or stoic; he had the proud humility of those sects, but still more largely that unconscious pride which comes to the poet when he sees that his pursuits are those of the few and not of the multitude. . . . Superiority — moral elevation, without peevishness or condescension — this was Thoreau's distinguishing quality. He softened it with humor, and sometimes sharpened it with indignation; but he directed his satire and his censure as often against himself as against mankind. Men he truly loved if they would not obstruct his humble and strictly chosen path.

This characterization is confirmed by the tenor of the letters now spread before us. They show a man who was a poet-philosopher to the core, whether he was making lead pencils for a livelihood in the morning, tramping across Concord meadows in the afternoon, or playing with Emerson's children just before their bedtime. "In his own home," says Ellery Channing, "he was one of those characters who may be called 'household treasures'. . . . No whim or coldness, no absorption of his time by public or private business, deprived those to whom he belonged of his kindness or affection. He did the duties that lay nearest and satisfied those in his immediate circle; and whatever the impressions from the theoretical part of his writings, where the matter is probed to the bottom good sense and good feeling will be detected in it."

Not only was Thoreau a sage, ever rejecting the artificial for the sake of the real, loving nature with a rare intimacy of spirit; he had also a sense of humor which continually adjusted his relations to his fellow men. Again and again the reader smiles at his keen comments upon current life, and sees in them the French or the Scotch element of his inheritance. It would be easy to fill columns with his epigrammatic sayings, but something would be lost in the transfer. A personality so strong and so exacting in its truthfulness was sure to attract choice friendships. Ingenuous thinkers, responding to his simple, searching utterances, called out letters of imperishable value, in which the tonic quality is always distinct. He bids his friend: "Make your failure tragical by the earnestness and steadfastness of your endeavor, and then it will not differ from success." A young man writes to him: "I read and reread your books with ever fresh delight. Nor is it pleasure alone; there is a singular spiritual healthiness with which they seem imbued — the expression of a soul essentially sound, so free from any morbid tendency."

The character revealed throughout this volume developed with a fidelity which suggests the growth of a crystal or a plant. How else, indeed, should the man have loved them so well?

LOURDES.[*]

IF one takes up M. Zola's latest novel with the expectation of finding anything like the usual work of fiction revolving around a love history, and occupied largely with more or less brilliant conversation, he will be disappointed, and will be tempted to say that the meaning of "lourdes" in French is well known. But if one acquainted with M. Zola's method of working up a so-called novel comes to these five hundred pages expecting to find a minute description of Lourdes and its pilgrims, and a careful exposition of the whole matter of the miraculous cures from the hand of a man of great talent, he will not be disappointed. There is here no plot of consequence, and the thread on which the whole vigorous and astonishing chronicle is strung is the journey of the "white train" (that which carries the worst cases) from Paris to Lourdes and back, and the intervening three days' stay in the famous resort for the diseased of every Catholic nation. On this train are the young Abbé Pierre Froment and the poor girl, Marie Guersaint, who had been paralyzed for seven years, it was supposed, as the result of an accident. Pierre belongs to a family in which the scientific passion is strong, and he goes to Lourdes with his former playmate and sweetheart to investigate for himself the actual truth of the reported cures. Marie goes in undoubting faith that she shall be healed, and she hopes that Pierre too may be cured of a worse disease — the skepticism which she had perceived in him.

The journey of the long white train, with its five hundred healthy pilgrims and its three hundred unhappy persons suffering from every manner of disease and infirmity, is described with all that abundant and pitiless detail which readers of M. Zola know well. The minute chronicle is lighted up occasionally by passages of feeling comment; it is too overloaded to be artistic in the highest sense, but its tone is sympathetic and pitiful, with no suggestion here or elsewhere of the vulgarity too common in other novels by this author. So vividly does he put before us the sad journey, the history of Bernadette, and the growth of Lourdes into a home of miraculous healing, and the experiences of his many characters in the three crowded days spent in hope and prayer before the Grotto, and ended most variously in submission, in improvement, or in cure, that the book is one to be placed in every theological library as a study in modern superstition. Scarcely the smallest fact in the history or topography or life of Lourdes appears to have escaped M. Zola's all-devouring notebook. Everything is reproduced here, set in the frame of a lifelike chronicle of what was seen, said, and done at Lourdes by the numerous persons of the story. Going to the Verification Office, Pierre sees many doctors assembled there, but soon realizes what a comedy the so-called verification is:

> Pierre had now begun to understand what was taking place at Lourdes, the extraordinary spectacle which the world had been witnessing for years amidst the devout adoration of some and the insulting laughter of others. Forces, as yet but imperfectly studied, of which one was even ignorant, were certainly at work — auto-suggestion; long-prepared disturbance of the nerves; inspiriting influence of the journey; the prayers

---

[*] Familiar Letters of Henry David Thoreau. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by F. B. Sanborn. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.

[*] Lourdes. By Émile Zola. Translated by Ernest A. Vizetelly. F. Tennyson Neely. $1.25.

> and the hymns; and especially the healing breath, the unknown force which was evolved from the multitude in the acute crisis of faith. Then it seemed to him anything but intelligent to believe in trickery. The facts were both of a much more lofty and a much more simple nature. There was no occasion for the Fathers of the Grotto to descend to falsehood; it was sufficient that they should help in creating confusion, that they should utilize the universal ignorance. It might even be admitted that everybody acted in good faith — the doctors, void of genius, who delivered the certificates; the consoled patients who believed themselves cured; and the impassioned witnesses who swore that they had beheld what they described; and from all this was evolved the obvious impossibility of proving whether there was a miracle or not. And such being the case, did not the miracle naturally become a reality for the greater number, for all those who suffered and had need of hope?

Yet truth is greater than all illusions. Marie is cured by a miracle, as she thought, not knowing her real trouble — a paralysis of the will, produced by long inaction and broken by a sudden access of strong emotion; but Pierre has left, after his return, only an immense feeling of compassion:

> Though thousands of pilgrims might each year go to Lourdes, the nations were no longer with them. This attempt to bring about the resurrection of absolute faith, the faith of dead and gone centuries, without revolt or examination, was fatally doomed to fail. History never retraces its steps; humanity cannot return to childhood; times have too much changed; too many new inspirations have sown new harvests for the men of today to become once more like the men of olden time. It was decisive — Lourdes was only an explainable accident, whose reactionary violence was even a proof of the extreme agony in which belief under the antique form of Catholicism was struggling. Never again, as in the cathedrals of the twelfth century, would the entire nation kneel like a docile flock in the hands of the Master. To blindly, obstinately cling to the attempt to bring this to pass would mean to dash one's self against the impossible, to rush, perhaps, towards great moral catastrophes.

A FLORIDA SKETCH-BOOK.*

MR. BRADFORD TORREY'S name is now so associated with bird life that in opening his newest sketchbook we are quite sure of finding the pages chiefly given to such pictures as words will paint of Florida songsters, even the rarest and shyest. With his field glass and his ever watchful eyes, backed by his brain full of bird-lore, he catches many delightful glimpses for our benefit. Here are pretty creatures in their habitat and characteristic motion, with some inkling as to their song. Here, too, are flowers, with suggestions of landscape and of the figures one may meet upon the road. In the mornings Mr. Torrey was ornithologist and botanist, but by afternoon the naturalist element in his composition became less insistent, and he loitered, quiet, incurious, and receptive of many gentle pleasures. If he feared losing his way in the pine lands, "where, of all places, it is easy to get lost and hard to find yourself," he had but to ask the man he should meet, "who not only appreciated the value of explicit instructions, but, being a Southerner, had leisure enough and politeness enough to give them." In the Tallahassee negroes he found "a gentleness of speech and a kindly, deferential air, neither forward nor servile, such as sits well on any man whatever the color of his skin." Among the semi-invalids at Daytona Beach he was not long in perceiving that "the Southern climate made patience a comparatively easy virtue, and fishing, by a natural consequence, a favorite avocation." Happily the lawmakers of the State forbid shooting from river boats of the regular lines, but on the deck of an excursion steamer Mr. Torrey has seen a young man do his worst to kill or maim every living thing that came in sight, from a sandpiper to a turkey buzzard. "Perhaps the sportsman was a Southerner, to whom river scenery of that kind was an old story. More likely he was a Northerner — one of the men who thank heaven they are 'not sentimental.'"

In spite of his lotus-eating mood, Mr. Torrey's Yankee eyes did not fail to note that in Florida orange peel is never picked up. On the whole he was well content. With Keats' poems in his hands he found charming spots "in which a man who wished to be both a naturalist and a nature lover, who felt himself heir to a double inheritance,

> The clear eye's moiety, and the dear heart's part, could for the time sit still and be happy." It is this combination that gives Mr. Torrey's jottings their attraction for the general reader. Gradually he and others of his type are persuading us that "nature never did betray the heart that loved her." The book ends with an affirmation that none can gainsay:

> To have lived in the sun, to have loved natural beauty, to have felt the majesty of trees, to have enjoyed the sweetness of flowers and the music of birds — so much, at least, is not vanity nor vexation of spirit.

ARTHUR O'SHAUGHNESSY.*

THE poems of Arthur O'Shaughnessy are but little known in this country. Indeed, with the exception of one or two short lyrics which have gone the rounds of the newspapers, they are totally unknown to the general public.

The attempt to popularize them through this volume of selections, edited by Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton, is therefore a fortunate event for lovers of poetry; heretofore the four volumes published in London have been very inaccessible to American readers. O'Shaughnessy is a delightful singer of minor cadences, and he has left behind him a handful of verses which deserve a wider recognition than they have so far obtained.

One third of this book is given to a sketch of his life and a critical introduction to his poems. Mrs. Moulton's work is done sympathetically, although it is a pity that she has written with a rather careless pen. Her description of O'Shaughnessy's London circle is delightful. His intimate friends were the delightful set of Pre-Raphaelite poets and painters — the Rossettis, the Morrises, the Bell Scotts, and the Madox-Brownes; Mr. Swinburne, Theodore Watts, and Philip Bourke Marston were also his intimates. He was thoroughly in sympathy with the half spiritual, wholly sensuous movement in art and poetry which we are wont to call Pre-Raphaelite. He had all the morbid sensitiveness of the school, all the glow of color which is so peculiarly characteristic of Pre-Raphaelite poems and pictures, and he combined with these qualities that "lyric cry" which gives his poems their personal and individual charm. His best known poem begins:

I made another garden, yea,
  For my new love;
I left the dead rose where it lay,
  And set the new above.
Why did the summer not begin?
  Why did my heart not haste?
My old love came and walked therein
  And laid the garden waste.

She entered with her weary smile
  Just as of old;
She looked around a little while,
  And shivered at the cold.
Her passing touch was death to all,
  Her passing look a blight;
She made the white rose petals fall
  And turned the red rose white.

The third verse of this song we do not quote; it is inferior to the first two, whose singing lilt seems to set itself to music.

O'Shaughnessy's favorite subject seems to have been the dead, "forgotten, out of mind," as when he sings:

Hath any loved you well, down there,
  Summer or winter through?
Down there have you found any fair
  Laid in the grave with you?

This very charming though not very wholesome note is dominant in O'Shaughnessy as in the rest of the Pre-Raphaelite brotherhood. The finest poem, "The Fountain of Tears," is unfortunately too long to quote, but it is full of a strange esoteric beauty and pathos. A thoroughly characteristic poem is this:

When the Rose came I loved the Rose,
  And thought of none beside,
Forgetting all the other flowers,
  And all the others died;
And morn and noon, and sun and showers,
  And all things loved the Rose,
Who only half returned my love,
  Blooming alike for those.

I was the rival of a score
  Of loves on gaudy wing —
The nightingale I would implore
  For pity not to sing.
Each called her his; still I was glad
  To wait or take my part;
I loved the Rose, who might have had
  The fairest lily's heart.

Much credit is due Messrs. Stone & Kimball for the excellence of their typographical work. The pages are as clear and artistic as Pickering's best; the paper is excellent; the shape and size of the book admirable; and the reproduction of Mr. O'Shaughnessy's picture very artistic. The cover of the book, however, is not on a par with the excellence of the rest of its make-up from a bibliophile's point of view.

---

* A Florida Sketch-book. By Bradford Torrey. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

* Arthur O'Shaughnessy. His Life and His Work, with Selections from His Poems. By Louise Chandler Moulton. Stone & Kimball. $1.25.

MEDIÆVAL GERMAN SOCIETY.*

THE social side of the Reformation in Germany has not yet been presented in attractive literary form. Too much attention has been devoted to the theological disputes then apparently uppermost in the thoughts of men, or to the purely political side of things. It is time now to rewrite history in the light of recent researches. Evidently the author of this work is well qualified for the task before him, for he has already written the story of the French Revolution and two volumes upon the religion and the ethics of socialism (the creed which he professes), besides a handbook of the history of philosophy. The present is one of at least three volumes which he has projected. Necessarily this initial work has a more general character than its successors will have, dealing as it does with the closing years of the fifteenth century and the first quarter of the sixteenth century down to the great Peasant Rising. After an introduction, which shows his power over both minutiæ and generalities, Mr. Bax pictures finely the first signs of social and religious revolt. At the opening of the sixteenth century public opinion seemed to sanction open plunder by the wearer of spurs and the possessor of a stronghold; the exercise of such a prerogative was honorable rather than disgraceful. On the other hand, the men of the cities hanged the knights whenever they could, and so perpetual feud existed; these belligerent relations were taken as a matter of course, and no disgrace attached to the occupation of highway robbery. In the evolution of history the knights gradually got the worst of it, while the cities grew stronger and the merchants increased in power and standing. It was found that in the long run it was cheaper to pay debts than not to pay them, and good meals were more likely to come by hard work than by stealing.

In his exposition of the great revolt the author shows himself a student of mind as well as of environment. Although the subject is one that has been well discussed, he treats with surprising freshness the intellectual as well as social movements among individuals and in the cities. In treating of the Reformation he rejects the "great man" theory of history, and shows that Martin Luther was a child of his time, as he was also a boon companion of it. Dr. Luther's enjoyment of the pleasures of the flesh as well as of the spirit is set forth with rather more freedom than is common in religious histories of the Reformation. Luminously and with sufficient fullness Mr. Bax exploits the literature and folklore of the Reformation, analyzes and finely pictures the German town and country at the end of the Middle Ages, and gives what seems to us to be an unusually interesting explanation of the revolt of the knighthood, the curious developments of military life, and the modifications in the soldierly ideal. The law and the courts are not neglected, and so we have a short but informing chapter on the new jurisprudence. Feudalism slowly but surely gave place to the new order. The issue of the Reformation was not permanent but transitional in a Europe which lasted until the eighteenth century and practically came to an end with the French Revolution.

If Mr. Bax carries out his plan as clearly, as compactly, and as interestingly as he has begun, we shall have a work that will interest not only the special student, but the general reader, on a phase of history that is becoming more and more worthy the attention of all whom the past history or the future progress of the race attracts.

UNGUARDED GATES AND OTHER POEMS.*

MR. ALDRICH disarms criticism by the quatrain which closes his latest volume of poems:

If my best wines mislike thy taste,
And my best service win thy frown,
Then tarry not, I bid thee haste;
There's many another Inn in town.

After this who could be unkind enough to condemn Mr. Aldrich because his pleasant, well-educated, well-intentioned muse is lacking in the divine fire? He apparently warns us that if we would have genius we must go elsewhere, but if smooth-flowing verse and excellent sentiments suit us his volume awaits our convenience.

The best poem in this volume is the "Prelude:"

In youth, beside the lonely sea,
Voices and visions came to me.

Titania and her furtive broods
Were my familiars in the woods.

* * * *

In every wind I felt the stir
Of some celestial messenger.

Later, amid the city's din
And toil, and wealth, and want, and sin,

They followed me from street to street,
The dreams that made my boyhood sweet.

* * * *

Now, one by one the visions fly,
And one by one the voices die.

More distantly the accents ring,
More frequent the receding wing.

Full dark shall be the days in store
When voice and vision come no more!

This is about the highest level here reached by Mr. Aldrich, although some few lines in "Sea Longings" are worth quoting:

The garden walks
Were choked with leaves, and on their ragged biers
Lay dead the sweets of summer — damask rose,
Clove-pink, old-fashioned, loved New England flowers.
Only keen salt sea odors filled the air.
Sea sounds, sea odors — these were all my world.

* * * *

Among the mountains I am ill at ease,
Missing the stretched horizon's level line
And the illimitable restless blue.

This is not great poetry in any sense of the word, but it has a certain freshness and charm of its own.

Mr. Aldrich's poem on "Insomnia" is included in this volume. This poem, if we may believe the newspapers, has aroused so much sympathy for Mr. Aldrich that his mail is filled with a constant stream of advice from other sleepless sufferers, and he receives daily presents of patent medicines warranted to cure his supposed malady.

GENESIS AND SEMITIC TRADITION.*

THIS is just the book which has long been needed. When the earth irritated by the spade casts out its dead the rival sects in religion and the rival schools in philology fight hard for possession of the corpse in order to reckon its available relics among their assets. The hand of the mummy is opened, and the wheat grains are taken out to be planted in hopes of a crop for one side or the other. The spectacle of Michael the archangel and Diabolus the leader of the other host contending and disputing about the body of Moses is sometimes more sensational than edifying. The accusations and recriminations oftentimes degenerate into railing. Professor Sayce, who scandalizes sober scholars as well as rejoices the orthodox, so called, is very apt to find nests which turn out to be those of mares. On the other hand it is undoubtedly true that many scholars, both real and reputed, who have a bias hostile to Christianity refuse to "confirm" current and traditional interpretations of Biblical record. What has long been needed is a bold and fearless scholar, master of his theme, who fears neither a heresy trial nor those who call their wild theories "science."

Dr. John D. Davis, who is professor of Semitic philology and Old Testament history in the Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J., seems to be a master of his theme. He has studied Assyriology with great care, but, so far as we can see, he has no respect of persons in making his decision. After decapitation of Dr. Briggs and the incorrigible bumptiousness of Professor Sayce, he tries to set forth the actual facts of Assyrian linguistics, archæology, and art so far as they bear upon the Biblical traditions, from the creation to the Babel Tower. He treats of the Sabbath — not finding in the ancient Assyrian world anything corresponding to the Hebrew Sabbath. He shows the vast difference between the Chaldean and the Genesis story of creation, and weighs all the facts to learn how far the Assyrian traditions have any connection with the Hebrew accounts of the creation of man and woman, the temptation, the serpent, the deluge, Nimrod, Babel, and other matters. There are several striking illustrations, well reproduced, which enable the reader to judge somewhat for himself.

---

* German Society at the Close of the Middle Ages. By E. Belfort Bax. Macmillan & Co. $1.75.

* Unguarded Gates and Other Poems. By Thomas Bailey Aldrich. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

* Genesis and Semitic Tradition. By John D. Davis, Ph.D. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

There is in this book the calm spirit of the real scholar, who does not seem to be anxious to "confirm" either current orthodoxy or current heterodoxy; nor is he, like so many men in the van of their special studies, flippant concerning his predecessors. He shows how the scholars of previous decades, whatever have been their personal beliefs, were deficient only so far as the science was not advanced. Those who will read this book in the spirit of the honest inquirer will be richly benefited, but those who crave "verdicts" and must have burning questions "settled" will vote the book worthless. Our country cannot have too many scholars or books of this sort. This little but weighty book ought to have had an index.

AN ACTRESS IN THE FAR EAST.*

NOWADAYS everybody can travel round the world. With steamships and railways whose regularity of movement is akin to that of the heavenly bodies, it is possible even to make social and professional engagements along the world's circumference and be again in one's haunts in London or New York, in unruffled temper, to keep appointments made months before. Mrs. Miln is one of those happy creatures who, like Dr. Holmes' friend, enjoys life with "four feet on the fender." With her husband she started on a theatrical tour over the beaten track through Asia. England, with all her conquests and her many lands stolen, bought, occupied, leased or coveted, has now as many coaling stations, ports, cities, and colonies of English-speaking people from Aden to Yokohama as there are beads on a rosary. He who receives much newspaper mail from Asiatic lands knows how often the "strolling players" are seen by gentlemen in swallow-tailed coats and ladies in low-necked dresses who speak English, and how much space the Anglo-Indian, Malay, Chinese, and Japanese newspapers give in praise or criticism of the players.

Mrs. Miln, after seeing the world as it looks from the footlights, has had the pleasure of visiting many homes of Asian and Eurasian people, and hence has made many acquaintances under tropical and sub-tropical skies. When at home, by making diligent use of the books in the British Museum, she has been able to add literary and historical perspectives to her sketches. Consequently she tells us not only about things of "contemporaneous human interest," but also about what happened to these sun-burned people's ancestors. She also takes the species missionary, puts the various specimens on pins, and looks at them through the microscope of literary criticism and the highly colored lenses of mercantile society in the ports, and delivers her inquest and verdict upon them. She is very fond of the native peoples, and tells us a good deal that is delightful about the Hindoo, Burmese, Chinese, and Japanese ladies, all of whom, of course, are delightful and charming. Her general style of talk about the Oriental ladies may be characterized as superlative. Everything is in the highest degree. She will have nothing said against her darlings. The style of her chapters is exactly like that of a rattling chat at a five o'clock tea; every lady is elegantly dressed and has on the most delightful millinery, and nothing disagreeable is allowed to mar the tone of the stylish gathering, while over all rises the fragrant aroma from Oriental decoctions. As an Englishwoman she uses the abominable vulgarism 'rickshaw, and of course the spectacles with which she looked upon the details of Japanese life, even upon the brothel quarters, were those loaned by Mitford. The book is finely printed and is richly illustrated with clear pictures from photographs, which have been carefully selected. Those who enjoy a bright and superficial sketch of a traveler, who saw life in its best aspects along the beaten route of travel on the sea fringes of Southern Asia, should get and read this book.

— In an article on "Epigrams" in the Manchester Monthly there are one or two that are not widely known, of which this of Lord Erskine's is perhaps the best:

The French have taste in all they do,
Which we are quite without;
For Nature, which to them gave goût,
To us gave only gout.

— Dr. Holmes' poem, "The Boys," read at the thirtieth anniversary of the Harvard class of 1829, has always provoked questions as to who were meant by his allusions in such stanzas as this:

We've a trick, we young fellows, you may have been told,
Of talking (in public) as if we were old;
That boy we call "doctor," and this we call "judge;"
It's a neat little fiction — of course it's all fudge.

The doctor was Dr. Chandler Robbins; the judge, George T. Bigelow of the supreme court; the speaker, F. B. Crowninshield, who held that office in the legislature of 1859; the mayor, George W. Richardson of Worcester; the congressman, the brilliant George T. Davis of Greenfield; "the reverend," James Freeman Clarke; the mathematician, the eminent Benjamin Pierce; the squire, Benjamin R. Curtis; the "nice young fellow of excellent pith," Rev. Dr. Samuel F. Smith, author of "My Country, 'tis of Thee." The "boy" that had done so much good is unidentified — there were several in the class who might answer in some measure the description. Of the men mentioned only Rev. Dr. S. F. Smith survives the laureate of the class, and but four names were without the death star in the quinquennial catalogue of 1890.

— A curious contrast between two distinguished men recently deceased.—One evening, two or three years ago, in the fine library at Heath's Court, Lady Coleridge was showing her guests some photographs illustrating a tour which she had taken with her husband when on circuit. One of the places represented was the church — we forget at this moment where — which contains a tombstone with, for epitaph, the single word Miserrimus. Some one present referred to Wordsworth's lines on the subject, and Lord Coleridge — always a model of courtesy to his visitors — allowed himself to be persuaded to read the poem aloud. This he did, his fine voice aiding the effect, with an exquisite appreciation of the intentions of the writer when he speculates as to the nature of that unnamed sorrow which gave one man a claim to be called wretched above all his fellows. Among those present was the late Mr. Jowett, and at the conclusion of the reading the first voice to break the silence was the reedy treble of the master of Balliol, exclaiming, "Pooh, the man was a hypochondriac — that was all!" — The Bookman.

— We mentioned last week M. Pierre Loti's account of his journey to Jerusalem, which is beginning to appear in the Nouvelle Revue. M. Loti is not the only contemporary French novelist and academician who has just now been distinguishing himself in this department of literature. M. Paul Bourget recently made a journey, not to Jerusalem, but to New York and Chicago, and for the last couple of weeks the Figaro and the New York Herald have been simultaneously publishing his notes of this expedition. The title M. Bourget gives to this work is "Outre Mer." It is naturally of a much more lively and social character than M. Loti's sentimental pictures of the lonely wastes and rugged nomads of Palestine. The novelist — who is essentially the ladies' novelist — was furnished with plenty of letters of introduction, and appears to have had a very good time. He strongly recommends Europeans who suffer from a slackness of energy to visit America. The experience will invigorate their will power and brace their nerves, he says, like mountain air. It would also diminish that dread of the future which is being prepared for us by democracy and science to which some people are liable over here. "For my part," he says in his dedication to Mr. Gordon Bennett, "I left France with a feeling of deep anxiety about the social future, but it was soothed and almost cured by the atmosphere of action that is breathed from New York to Chicago and from St. Paul to Florida." — The Speaker.

— "Apropos of The Green Carnation," says Mr. Arthur Waugh in the Critic, "it is now announced in the papers that the author is a Mr. R. S. Hichaus, who has not hitherto, I think, appeared in the ranks of fiction, though he enjoys some reputation as a writer of graceful words for music. He is said to be quite a young man, and will doubtless improve upon his first success, the cleverness of which is, perhaps, slightly marred by occasionally offensive impertinence. Nevertheless it is vastly clever."

— All the letters and papers in the hands of Mrs. Parnell belonging or having reference to her late husband have been placed within the reach of Mr. J. O'Kelly. Nothing definite as yet has transpired as to the probable date of publication, nor is it known who the publishers will be.

---

* When We Were Strolling Players in the Far East. By Louise Jordan Miln. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.50.

The Literary World

BOSTON 17 NOVEMBER 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

ORIGINAL POETRY.

Miss Wilkins' Characters.

No queenly rose she stops to cull,
  Nor lilies richly dight;
But wayside flowers, common, dull,
  That seem to shrink from sight.

No lordly knights nor ladies fair
  Within her world abide;
But homespun women, awkward men,
  Who live in life's aside.

One touch of her consummate art,
  And lo! a romance where
We thought was sordid commonplace
  And trivial round of care:

The drudge a heroine becomes,
  With heart of withered hopes;
The son of toil a hero true,
  As through the dark he gropes.

What scent from old-time gardens blows
  Across our hurried strife!
What pathos here! what humor there!
  Commingled to the life.

ALICE ELIZABETH SAWTELLE.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF WHITTIER.*

"THE thought that at some time the story of his life would be called for was not a pleasant one to Mr. Whittier," says his biographer, Mr. Samuel T. Pickard; "but fearing that, in the absence of correct data, a biography full of inaccuracies might be given to the public, about ten years before his death he authorized the collection of material for such a work, and assisted the friend to whom it was confided by suggestions of a general character. He had never kept a journal, nor charged his memory with dates, but he remembered his correspondents, and gave information which resulted in a large collection of letters, illustrating nearly every year of his life." From these records, which in a way may be said to bear a certain autobiographical value, the material for this Life and Letters is drawn. Mr. Pickard's share of the work is done with great taste, modesty, and discretion, and — in accordance, he tells us, with Whittier's own wish — he allows his distinguished subject, so far as is practicable, to speak for himself.

Of Whittier's earliest years no one except himself was qualified to speak. He was the second child in a family of four, and was born on the 17th of December, 1807, in the old farmhouse at Haverhill, Mass., which was built in 1688 by his great-grandfather, Thomas Whittier, first of his name in America, and supposed to be of Huguenot descent. John Whittier, the father of the poet, was born in 1760. His mother was Abigail Hussey of Somersworth, N. H., a descendant of that somewhat famous nonconformist preacher, the Rev. Stephen Bachiler, who found himself as much at odds in the Puritan community as in the English Church, and by his independence of mind and contempt for authority proved so veritable a firebrand in the Massachusetts Bay Colony that it was a relief to all concerned when he elected, at ninety-two, to return to his old home, where he died at Hackney, near London, in 1660, in the one hundredth year of his age. John Greenleaf Whittier and Daniel Webster were both descendants of this troublesome divine, and it was "the Bachiler eye," dark, deep set, and lustrous, which marked the cousinship that existed between them.

Life on the Whittier farm in the early days of our century knew few of the modern comforts and ameliorations. The old barn had no doors; winter winds whistled through it and snow drifted upon its floors for more than a century. "The pioneers and their descendants for four or five generations adopted the policy of 'toughening' themselves by exposure to cold, and they saw no reason for making their cattle more comfortable than themselves. Mr. Whittier was accustomed to attribute the delicacy of his health through life to the method in vogue when he was a lad. No flannels were worn in the coldest weather, and the drive to Friends' meeting in Amesbury, eight miles away, twice a week, with no buffalo robes or warm wraps, was thoroughly chilling and uncomfortable, and the meeting-houses in those days were seldom provided with means of heating." Cold was not the worst which the boy was called to endure. Whittier was always slender and never strong of muscle, and at the age of seventeen he sustained injuries from overexertion in farm work from the effects of which he never fully recovered. Thenceforth he was to all intents and purposes a lifelong invalid, handicapped by the fragility of his health in all the pursuits and pleasures of active life to a degree which, until the publication of these volumes, the public had little suspected.

Life in the old farmhouse had, however, its compensating side. Whittier's home affections were strong, and were fully met in the love borne him by his mother, a woman of noble strain, simple, devout, direct; her sister, the gentle "Aunt Mercy" of Snowbound; and his sister Lizzie, pet and darling of his childhood and the most intimate and confidential friend of his later years. He took, beside, great pleasure in the quiet river landscape about Haverhill, and had enjoyment in certain aspects of farm work. But he longed for education, for books; and poverty as well as the strict requirements of Quakerism stood in the way of his wish. While still in his teens he made a contraband purchase of Shakespeare's plays, and later a copy of one of the Waverley novels found its way into the home and was read with enthusiasm, by the light of surreptitious candles, by him and his sister; but neither dared to confess the fact to their parents, by whom such deviations from the strict rule would have been equally blamed and mourned.

"The Exile's Departure," the first of Whittier's poems printed, was sent by his sister Mary, without his knowledge, to the Free Press, a weekly paper published in Newburyport. Its appearance caused a stir in the quiet household, and emboldened the young author, then nineteen, to other ventures. William Lloyd Garrison, at that time the editor of the Free Press, formed so high an opinion of the boy's poems that he personally interceded with the father to give his son a classical education, and at last induced him to consent, while protesting that it was "contrary to Friends' custom to acquire the polish of literary culture." Young Whittier had permission to attend the academy, but he must pay his own way, which he did by a somewhat primitive form of shoemaking. He studied with avidity the ordinary English branches, took lessons in French, and for the first time in his life had the great world of books opened to him. He also laid the foundation of some valuable friendships which lasted to the end of his life. Later, he defrayed the expenses of his education by posting the books of a Haverhill merchant. In 1828 we find him in Boston helping to edit the American Manufacturer, a political journal friendly to Henry Clay. On his meager salary of nine dollars a week, we are told, he saved about half, which went toward freeing the farm from the incumbrance of a mortgage. In 1829 he was forced to relinquish his editorship because of the failing health of his father, which made his presence at home necessary. He remained at Haverhill till his father's death in 1830, spending his spare hours in study and in writing.

A correspondence which young Whittier had entered into with George D. Prentice led, in 1830, to his selection as editor of the New England Review, a leading party paper in favor of Clay, published in Connecticut. The editorship was a success; but at the end of the second year Whittier's health failed, and he was forced to return to Haverhill. Meantime, while working for Clay he had acquired a considerable political experience and influence. At the time of his physical breakdown he was considering a proposition made by his friends that he should become a candidate for Congress. He was not yet quite twenty-five years old. Up to this point his ambition had been political rather than either literary or humanitarian. The real bent of his energies was yet to be determined. The turning point of his life came in 1833, when a word from Garrison, who had become an intimate friend, called his attention to the importance of arousing the nation to a sense of its guilt in the matter of slavery. "He needed no change of heart to become an abolitionist, but he had been hoping by moral means and by efforts within the lines of the old parties to secure the gradual extinction of a system so out of harmony with our otherwise free institutions." He made a thorough study of the subject, counting the cost "with Quaker coolness of judgment, before taking a step which closed to him the gates of both political and literary preferment. . . . When he decided to enter on this contest he understood that his cherished ambitions must be laid aside and that an entire change in his plans was involved." Of the rewards which might come in the far future he thought little. Deliberately and after serious consideration "he united with the persecuted and obscure band of abolitionists, and to this course he attributed all the after success of his life." In old age he said to a boy of fifteen in his gentle voice, "My lad, if thou wouldst win success, join thyself to some unpopular but noble cause."

---

*The Life and Letters of John Greenleaf Whittier. By Samuel T. Pickard. 2 vols. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $4.00.

Whittier's pamphlet, "Justice and Expediency," published in 1833, produced a marked effect. Some idea of the temper with which it was received at the South is shown by the fact that for the crime of merely lending it to a friend Dr. Reuben Crandall of Washington was arrested and confined in the city prison till his health was destroyed, and he was liberated only to die. This incident prompted the lines in "Astræa at the Capitol:"

> Beside me gloomed the prison cell,
> Where wasted one in slow decline
> For uttering simple words of mine
> And loving freedom all too well.

Thenceforth till the matter of slavery was decided, in 1864, the cause of abolition became increasingly the work of Whittier's life and his ruling interest. He not only labored with his pen, he exerted a strong influence over men more directly connected with politics than himself, holding them to their task and to the keeping of their pledges by the application of other motives than argument. As a member of the legislature of Massachusetts he had chances, and as a trusted citizen in whom the electors of his district had confidence he possessed a valuable backing, and his Quaker astuteness helped him to perceive the proper point of leverage when the conscience of a member of Congress or a candidate for office needed prodding. Like his own hero he was willing to > Put to the Lord's work the sinner

> If the saint failed to do it.

Meanwhile the heroic band of reformers, despite all the contumely and rotten eggs with which they were occasionally visited, had among themselves, as Mr. Whittier used to tell them, "a very jolly time for a band of martyrs." They were a brilliant and able company; they had a cause in which they thoroughly believed, and the stanch, gentle, fragile Friend, who was one of their central sources of cheer and inspiration, was wont to say, "They may send us to Coventry, but we will set about making Coventry an agreeable place." And they did it. Sumner, Garrison, Caleb Cushing, Thomas W. Higginson, Lydia Maria Child, James Russell Lowell, Gerritt Smith, Richard H. Dana — a long list of distinguished names — were all included among the forces of the movement, and all became the personal friends of the quiet recluse, whose home had now been changed from Haverhill to Amesbury. His health obliged him to do his editorial and literary work in the country, under the care of his devoted mother and sister, and it was from this distance that during the years between 1847 and 1860 he acted as corresponding editor of the National Era, published in Washington. Now and again his labors were interrupted by severe illness, but the slender thread of his constitution was tenacious as tenuous. Sleeplessness, headache, and interruption of the heart action were the results of any severe or protracted excitement, however pleasurable. His life was literary, spent almost entirely in the rural quiet of his Massachusetts homes. He never went farther from them than Washington; he never visited Europe or our Great West, but in heart and mind he overleaped these limitations of the body and spanned in their sympathies the expanse from pole to pole.

Increasingly as the great struggle between slavery and freedom went on, the music of Whittier's song deepened and strengthened. The final arbitrament of war was a hard shock to his Quaker peacefulness; but he acknowledged the necessity, and was "conscious of a spirit warring in his members" against the wonted ways of the Society of Friends, and even of a "certain joy of battle." His "War Songs" are some of his finest lyrics, and have in them the stirring note of a clarion, firing men's hearts to conflict. Of personal courage Whittier had no lack, as is proved by the calmness with which he faced the mob now and again during the vicissitude of the anti-slavery struggle. He possessed, also, a quiet but distinct sense of humor. In 1857 he writes of Thoreau's Walden: "The practical moral of it seems to be that if a man is willing to sink himself into a woodchuck he can live as cheaply as that quadruped; but after all, for me, I prefer walking on two legs." Later he says of Browning's Men and Women: "It seemed to me like a galvanic battery in full play. Its spasmodic utterances and intense passion make me feel as if I had been taking a bath among electrical eels."

The day of peace found him in a saddened home, for his sister had died the year previous, and he was left alone. Thenceforth his life moved more and more in gentler and more pathetic currents. Old age drew on, but neither dimmed his insight nor chilled his sympathies. His older friends were gone, but a band of younger ones no less devoted gathered about the ripeness of his age. Companioned with "honor, love, obedience," he ended life two years ago in the same spirit of gentle and heroic trust with which he had endured it, and left

> A lifelong record closed without a stain,
> A blameless memory enshrined in song.

NEW YORK LETTER.

MAJOR J. B. POND, who is managing Dr. Conan Doyle's lecture course, returned the other morning from New England greatly pleased with the reception everywhere given his star. He said that Dr. Doyle, while prepared in advance for a pleasant visit to Boston, was wholly unprepared for the warmth of the greeting he did receive. Just how long the Briton will remain here is undecided. The main object of his visit to America, in fact the only object (for his lectures are incidental) is the necessity of finding a place where his wife can regain health and strength. For that reason Dr. Doyle has looked at the Adirondacks and at many places in the mountain regions of the New England States. It is barely possible that he may decide upon a spot in the Rocky Mountains, for I understand that no choice has yet been made. The newspapers here have been telling many anecdotes concerning Dr. Doyle, but as usual the Sun caps the climax. Mr. Dana recently published a brief note stating that when the creator of Sherlock Holmes was introduced to the leading literary club of Chicago the host presented him as "Canon" Doyle, and that all the guests addressed him as prelate, father, or monsignore. This little tale must be taken with caution, however, for I am informed by one who ought to know that it originated in the fertile brain of Major Moses P. Handy of the Mail and Express, who told it at a recent dinner given in the Waldorf.

Mr. A. D. F. Randolph, the oldest publisher of books in New York and one of the oldest in the country, recently celebrated his seventy-fourth birthday anniversary at his summer place on Lake George; he returned to town immediately afterward, and is actively in the harness every day at his office in Fifth Avenue near Twenty-third Street. Mr. Randolph does not look his age by a score of years. He is erect and energetic to a degree that many a younger man would be proud of. His heavy, iron gray hair is brushed far back from his brow; his dark eyes are full of sparkle, and his voice is as clear as it was two decades ago. Mr. Randolph has often been asked to write of his life, but has never acceded to the request, except that once he printed a little pamphlet for private distribution among his friends. Copies of this cannot be obtained, and he does not think he has a copy himself. Mr. Randolph commenced life by selling books on the head of a barrel away down town in New York, his son informs me; later, he sold them from stage coaches and even from the deck of a canal boat. He has known nearly all the persons of literary importance in this country for fifty years, and among them he has numbered many close friends.

Richard Henry Stoddard, one of the few who are left of the group of great men of a generation ago, and Mr. Randolph meet often and talk of the days gone by and of the notables who made them days to be remembered. Mr. Stoddard still continues to be the leading literary critic of the country in the amount of work he performs. His eyesight is not good, and he has to be very cautious when attempting to cross such crowded streets as Broadway; but whatever the condition of his eyes and muscles, his brain is as active and his judgment as sound as ever.

Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co. have just got settled in their splendid new home on Fifth Avenue and Twenty-first Street, adjoining the modern Scribner building. They have completed arrangements for republishing an abridged and amended edition of the London Bookman. Dr. Nichols, the originator of it, will contribute a London letter for each issue. Probably Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co. will make a strong effort to invade the field now held by such periodicals as Scribner's Bookbuyer and the Book-News brought out by John Wanamaker of Philadelphia. Of course these side ventures cannot compete with or injure the business of the LITERARY WORLD, the Critic, or the Dial of Chicago.

Every one here seems to be busy in writing or in selling books. The great increase in the number of magazines, large and small, has created a demand for matter of all kinds; and, as the supply of new authors does not seem to equal the new demand, writers who have made their reputations are overrun with requests for material. The editor of a prominent periodical told me not long ago that he suddenly determined to get up an extra holiday number as an experiment. He went to a "broker in brains" here, who usually can be depended upon to procure almost anything in the way of short stories, and told him to get a good one suitable for the season from either Mr. Kipling, Dr. Doyle, Mr. Stockton, or Mr. Richard Harding Davis. The broker reported that Mr. Stockton had not a single manuscript on hand of any nature, excepting a short sketch for juvenile readers; that Mr. Kipling would not write a story for less than a thousand dollars, and was busy, anyhow; that Dr. Doyle had nothing on hand and no time to write anything; and that young Mr. Davis was hard at work on his first novel and so occupied that he could not even consider more work. The editor was in despair, but I understand that he has about prevailed on one of those mentioned to break in upon his present task, for the sake of the emergency, and turn out a story of the nature desired.

Mr. John D. Barry's name is familiar to the readers of the LITERARY WORLD; his novel, A Daughter of Thespis, has completed a successful run as a serial in the New York Tribune. Mr. Barry is now in Europe, and will remain abroad until spring.

The Chap-Book sells for five cents per copy, and is only a year or so old; but copies of the first volume have sold here, within a week, for three to five dollars each.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Stockton will leave their charming country home at Convent Station, New Jersey, on December 1, to spend the winter in the city.

Mr. Edward W. Bok, editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, has had to relinquish work for the present, upon orders of his physician, who says he has greatly overtaxed his strength.

Mr. Julian Ralph, who is acting as war correspondent in Corea for Harper's Weekly, will penetrate into China when hostilities are concluded, and endeavor to obtain for Harper's Magazine information as to men, women, and affairs in the great empire.

HENRY EDWARD ROOD.

FICTION.

The Trail of the Sword.

Mr. Gilbert Parker is an admirable story-teller. His Trail of the Sword is a bit of clean workmanship — spirited, picturesque, and free from superfluous detail. It is full of human interest, although the scene is in Canada two centuries ago, and the life is more warlike than modern feeling craves. Frontenac himself steps into sight more than once. A gallant young Frenchman and an Englishman equally gallant find their national enmity deepened by their rivalry in love. Jessica, the English girl who commands their homage, has ours also in increasing measure to the end of the book. — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

Matthew Austin.

Evidently Mr. W. E. Norris has worked with real affection upon this novel, which might properly be called the "Portrait of a Gentleman." Not only was Matthew Austin a gentleman, he was one exceptionally altruistic, whose friends could always count upon his self-effacement in their behalf when they were in dilemmas. "He looked sympathetic for the simple reason that he was so. He generally knew, or thought he knew, how other people were feeling — a gift which has its disadvantages as well as its advantages." His modesty, refinement, and calm good sense are so consistently apparent throughout all his experiences that he never savors of the prig, nor does his goodness seem impossible. He is the foil to various types of character that confront him on his path. He is also their conqueror, in the sense that his influence evokes in most of them some degree of betterment. Happily for the reader's comfort, Matthew Austin in the long run is by no means a martyr to his virtues. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

When All the Woods Are Green.

Any novel by Dr. S. Weir Mitchell is worthy of careful study, for he writes as a physician, as well as a man who has a story to tell. Though this present book has much dramatic power, it has not the sustained, vigorous action of his other novels. There is too much exasperatingly brilliant conversation in it, which fills the pages with coruscations of wit, quotations, and epigrams. Canadian woods and streams form the background against which stand forth the characters of a father and his family who go a-camping. The daughter, Rose, meets another camper-out, and the action of the story centers around their growing affection and fishing experiences with the elusive salmon. The delineations of the lives of two backwoods couples, one villainous, the other fairly brilliant with common sense and sympathy, form the best part of the book. There is no end of bright sayings in it which might be quoted. Not to remember the name of an author when using his words is said to be like taking a gift and forgetting the name of the giver; and wonder is expressed at the probable feelings of Eve when one of her grandchildren brought her an apple. The invalid aunt is a strong presentation of what an invalid should be, and surely no one knows this better than Dr. Mitchell. The tone of the novel is so elevated and cheery, its love for nature so genuine, and its delight in fishing so spontaneous, that it does one good to read it; and its bits of glorified common sense persist in the memory. — The Century Co. $1.50.

The Untempered Wind.

To show that a woman needs pity and forgiveness when she is "a mother but not a wife" is the moral purpose of this novel, by Joanna E. Wood. Her earnestness is so intense that it is all the more to be regretted that she has unduly exaggerated the implacableness of church members towards sinners, ministerial denunciations, and the cruelty of village gossip. Doubtless there are such communities and such individuals as she describes, but both are exceptional; and little sympathy is gained for an unfortunate woman by excusing or idealizing her sin as the result of love or belief in a man's promise to marry her. We deprecate any story or teaching which offers excuse for what never should have been. However, this book may serve as an argument for the single standard of right and wrong for men and women, for the story is very powerful; the plot unusual; its treatment pathetic and vivid; the literary style good; the contrast in character effectively sustained; and the working out of the law of retribution, even to the "nameless child," is dramatic. The strong point of the tale is Myron's early fidelity to her betrayer and her later fidelity to herself, which prevents her from yielding to another. — J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $1.00.

Centuries Apart.

Some people seem to have a morbid taste for stories of life as it was not in the beginning, is not now, and never shall be. The enormous sale of such books as Looking Backward and its many imitations proves the existence of a large class of minds who must enjoy pictures of well-spiced unrealities. Mr. Edward T. Bouvé has a novel idea in Centuries Apart; his hero is one of an expedition sent out to help the Mexicans against Maximilian with a small fleet of men-of-war. On the voyage around Cape Horn they are driven out of their course and discover Southern England, a country in the Antarctic Ocean which was peopled by fugitives from England during the Wars of the Roses; they have made no discoveries since that day. Americans in 1863 naturally surprised Englishmen with the habits and customs of the fifteenth century a good deal, and herein lies the gist of Centuries Apart. There is nothing to object to in the novel except that it is objectless. — Little, Brown & Co. $1.50.

A House in Bloomsbury.

This is one of Mrs. Oliphant's old-fashioned but always delightful stories. A House in Bloomsbury is improbable, but it is very pleasant reading, and will interest young and old alike. The scene is laid in London in an unfashionable lodging house. The writer weaves the fortunes of all the lodgers together in a charming but perfectly improbable manner. The heroine is a young girl of fifteen, named Dora, who, with her father, lived on one floor in the lodging house. The description of the father's illness and the scientific but expensive trained nurses, who had no consideration for the family purse, is very well done. Of course Dora has a fortune left her, and of course the father recovers from his illness, and of course everything happens in that good, wholesome, story-book fashion which is very refreshing occasionally. — Dodd, Mead & Co. $1 25.

Pomona's Travels.

The Pomona of Rudder Grange has developed wonderfully since those remote days when an amused public found great entertainment in her irrepressible ways and aboriginal sayings. Here is Pomona, with a difference, toned down, cultivated, and wide awake to her better position and mental improvement. She goes abroad with Jone and writes home letters to her former mistress, Euphemia. While truth compels us to say that we like the old Pomona best, and were more entertained and interested in her as she was in the crude and unsophisticated state in which Mr. Stockton discovered her, we must admit that her present career has in it much to hold our attention. She has a fit companion in Jone, and his prompt and desperate decisions when exigencies arise prove him worthy to share his life with her. The two have a most delightful time, ignoring conventionalities and doing things that no sane American would dare do, but of course everything comes out right to the irresponsible and irrepressible couple. They order the four-in-hand and it comes to the door; they fairly subdue the high-toned waiters at the aristocratic hotel; they do audacious things; and, strangest of all, Pomona manages to spoil a hunt. The book is very enjoyable, needless to say, and is profusely and well illustrated by A. B. Frost. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00.

Writing to Rosina is the title of a ludicrous novelette by William Henry Bishop. It is full of puns, points, and jokes, Lanfair, the hero, is a good salesman, but so poor a hand at writing love letters that he induces a friend to attend to this part of his courtship for him. His betrothed, who had objected to his business, slangy telegrams, in turn employs her friend to answer the rhapsodical letters which she now receives. Of course the complications end satisfactorily, but just why the story should be worth a dollar puzzles us, except because people are willing to pay more for fun than for advice. — The Century Co. $1.00.

The Sea Wolves, by Max Pemberton, is a highly sensational story of unscrupulous adventurers, Spaniards, Englishmen, and one American, who are involved with a barbaric and powerful Spanish woman with the reputation of being a wrecker. The men are in quest of certain treasures, and their conflicts, perils, and escapes are as curdling and marvelous as the most melodramatic taste could desire. — Harper & Brothers. 50c.

MINOR NOTICES.

From Blomidon to Smoky.

The essays in this book, like those in the two previous volumes by Frank Bolles, are notable for their style and their facts. The latter, gathered by slow, careful observation, are presented with an exactness the very detail of which arouses enthusiasm. With his head in the fireplace, pillowed on the andirons, Mr. Bolles watched the swifts in their chimney nest, and with a quill fed his captive sapsuckers. All that he did he loved to do, hence the charm of his work. One does not read him for his style, and yet his treatment of adjectives is a lesson in proportion. He uses them lavishly, but they are never synonymous, each term striking the ear and sense as the only appropriate phrase. He is eloquent by virtue of sincerity. He looks upon nature as a lover, not as a moralist. For him the Bay of Fundy "thunders," and the gloom of Nova Scotia melts into a sad and gentle radiance. Though not a scientist, he notices facts which have escaped ornithologists. He watches the woodpeckers in their orchards, capturing and then nursing some of them for three months, till convinced that the woodpecker "consumes the sap of certain trees in large quantities for its own sake and not for insect matter which such sap may chance occasionally to contain; . . . the sap attracting many insects of various species, a few of which form a considerable part of the food of the bird." His intimacy with his owls leads him to doubt their alleged night vision. All birds have to him their proper individuality. The modesty of the man is apparent in these papers, some of which appeared in magazines during his life. His rare grace of speech and his insight into the powers of the tree-dwellers and the mysteries of the landscape will be sadly missed. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

Studies of Nature on the Coast of Arran.

A few years ago a book which had great charm for a certain class of readers, Country Pleasures, appeared from the pen of an English writer, Mr. George Milner. That was the chronicle of a year chiefly in a garden. The present volume is in some degree "a sequel or pendant," being an elaboration of notes and journals when impressions were fresh and vivid. Mr. Milner is fond of Arran, and during his sojourns there studied its scenery, aspects, and local characteristics with the eye of a naturalist and the earnestness of one who was in sympathy with out-of-door life. Interspersed with his minute and picturesque descriptions are the little incidents, excursions, and fishing trips which made a part of the summer's outing, with portraitures of fishermen, shepherds, and others among the primitive and kindly natives of the coast. These are reproductions of life in a comparatively small and remote part of the world, but they have the fidelity of such books as White's Selbourne, and are a pleasing addition to that class of literature. The volume is made in elegant taste, and is illustrated by ten fine full-page copperplate engravings and twelve vignettes in the text by W. Noel Johnson. — Longmans, Green & Co. $2.00.

Rambles Through Japan Without a Guide.

Now that Japan is winning that respect from the nations by the might of her arms which ought long ago to have been given to her because of her true progress along nobler paths, good books about the country and people are properly in demand. Mr. Albert Leffingwell has gone the whole length of the empire without either interpreter or guide, and his pictures of the people and country are very vivid and unconventional. He is a man of sympathy and with æsthetic perceptions. Although his style is unstudied, it is easy to read. The book was published two years ago in England, but is now reissued in this country. Both the would-be traveler and the stay-at-home tourist will find here actual pictures of Japanese life that are very pleasing. His discussions of the foreign relations of Japan show that he, in common with the less selfish portion of his countrymen, sees clearly the injustice under which this progressive and earnest nation has suffered through the treaties made in her political infancy with foreign powers. Fortunately the new treaty between England and Japan, if ratified, will do away with most of the crying injustice of which Japan has been the victim for thirty-five years. — Baker & Taylor Co. $1.50.

The Mountains of California.

Whatever the geologists may think of Mr. John Muir's theories of glacial action, the general reader will thank him for his delightful descriptions of the mountain and lake scenery of California. Mr. Muir's enthusiasm is infectious. His love is born of knowledge. He has dwelt so long on the "delectable mountains" that their solemn beauty has passed into his soul and is reflected in his lucid and vigorous style. Whether valleys like the Yosemite are "glacier movements," as Mr. Muir contends, "wrought by agents so fragile and small as the snow flowers of the mountain clouds," is, to say the least, an open question. But it is fortunate for all lovers of nature that this zealous geologist has been led by his devotion to a theory to explore some of the grandest sections of California's "snowy range" of hills. He has summered and wintered on the heights and in the valleys. No feature of the ever-varying but always noble landscape has escaped his notice. The lakes and meadows, the forests, the river floods, storms of wind and storms of thunder, the sounding cataracts, and the modest flowers that skirt the eternal frost are all pictured with the pen of a word artist who writes of what he has long known and deeply loved. In some respects this book is a worthy companion of the writings of Thoreau and Burroughs. We wish the author had added a further claim to our regard by describing the mountain scenery of Southern California. If he is purposing to make this the subject of another volume, we suggest that he add thereto an index, a feature noticeably lacking in the present work. — The Century Co. $1.50.

The Story of the Pilgrims.

Rev. Morton Dexter has well told, concisely and comprehensively, in a scholarly manner, yet suited for popular reading, the story of the Pilgrims from the beginnings in England to the establishment of the Plymouth and Bay colonies. The chapters originally appeared in the Congregationalist, having been prepared more especially for the organizations of young people engaged in studying the principles of Congregationalism, known as "Scrooby Clubs." In their present form, equipped with abundant notes and references, they will prove of great service to a large class of students and general readers who have not time and opportunity for personal research or for more elaborate history. Those who do not sympathize with Mr. Dexter's denominational views will doubtless be ready to give him credit for fairness in his statements and a candid spirit as praiseworthy as is his loyalty to the faith of his fathers. The closing chapters emphasize the polity and principles of the Pilgrims and the development of Congregationalism in the broad sense. The volume is well illustrated. — Congregational S. S. and Pub. Society. $1.25.

The Empress Eugénie.

For egotism in preface and introduction Pierre de Lano takes the lead. Not only does he tell us that M. Zola's novels "are in no sense a reflection of the period of the empire," but he refers seriatim to various attacks of the Gaulois upon his articles in Figaro. He gives strong testimony from original letters on behalf of his contention that the empress instigated the War of 1870 and that "le petit prince" left for Zululand because he could no longer endure "the petty caviling" of his mother. Of the empress, M. de Lano seems to be an impartial judge. He brings out the contrasts in her character — frivolity and courage, capriciousness and generosity, unstained honor and love of excitement, disregard of etiquette and desire for power, political astuteness in foreign affairs and love for her husband. Her craving for novelty led to her friendship with Home, the charlatan spiritualist. She was never popular with the people because she was a stranger of non-royal birth and surrounded herself with foreigners. She never conciliated the salons, else the War of 1870 might not have occurred. Always anti-liberal, she strove to maintain the temporal power of the pope and exerted a fatal influence against St. Fleury and Ollivier. Her love of romance, matchmaking, and Catholicism led to the Mexican War, the marriage of Maximilian and Charlotte and their tragic fate. She favored war with Russia that, Poland being freed, the papacy might be further strengthened. She was confidential with Mme. de Metternich contrary to all political sense.

The book is full of personal anecdotes and letters from responsible sources which throw much light upon the emperor's aversion to war. He entreated Gramont not to resign his portfolio and tore up the decree for the War of 1870, but then Eugénie went to him with a fresh document and insisted upon his signing it, which he did, "as it were in a dream." She was the soul of the campaign, for the emperor could not "disapprove of her actions without creating a scandal," and he loved her too much for that. On the whole, the volume gives an unpleasant picture of a woman who might have been great if she had not been narrow, thoughtless, and obstinate. History has begun to judge her impartially while still living. M. de Lano has furnished authentic material for a fuller life to be written, we hope, by one with equal brilliancy of style with himself, but less personal rancor towards his opponents. The work is well translated by Ethelred Taylor. — Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25.

PERIODICALS.

McClure's Magazine for November closes the third half year of this successful, low-priced magazine. In it is begun a "Life of Napoleon," of which the portraits — a series of seventy-five — from Mr. G. G. Hubbard's unique collection, will be the more important part. "A Real Conversation" between Dr. Conan Doyle and Robert Barr, with a story by the former, "De Profundis," will be especially welcome now Dr. Doyle is in this country. A series of Pinkerton detective stories from real life begins with an account of the first plot to assassinate Lincoln. "The Search for the Absolute Zero" is an attractive popular science paper. McClure's has evidently come to stay.

Volume III of the Yellow Book for October has twenty-four contributions, about equally divided between prose and verse, and fifteen pictures, of which the finest is Mr. Philip Broughton's head of Mantegna. Mr. Aubrey Beardsley's "Portrait of Himself" goes to the extreme of affectation and absurdity. Mr. Max Beerbohm's paper on "George the Fourth," in which the first personal pronoun occupies a very prominent place, and a pleasant essay, "Tobacco Clouds," by Mr. Lionel Johnson, are the two prose contributions not fiction. The stories are by Kenneth Grahame, Ella D'Arcy, Harry Harland, Ernest Dowson, Arthur Moore, Hubert Crackanthorpe, and others. Without going into details one gets the impression that more care has been spent upon the elaboration of these tales than their substance warrants, but their literary level is high. Hérédia's sonnet, "Fleurs de Feu," is finely translated by Ellen M. Clerke.

The severe review of the "Political Career and Character of David B. Hill" by "Independent," in the November Forum, was probably one of the factors in the election of November 6, which reviewed that personage much more severely still. Hon. George F. Edmunds answers in the negative the question, "Should Senators be Elected by the People?" Rev. J. W. Chadwick's paper on "Oliver Wendell Holmes" is one of the best that have appeared since the death of the Autocrat. Rev. W. B. Hale paints a melancholy picture of the "Impotence of Churches in a Manufacturing Town" — Fall River, Mass. Montgomery Schuyler is greatly encouraged for art and artists in America by his review of "George Inness: the Man and His Work." Col. T. A. Dodge writes a forcible military study of "The Eastern War and After." Dr. E. R. L. Gould's essay on "The Temperance Problem: Past and Future," could hardly be improved upon as a candid, comprehensive, and helpful discussion of this much be-written subject. The Washington correspondent, Henry L. Nelson, contributes an appreciative sketch of "William L. Wilson as a Tariff Reform Leader." The New York philanthropist, Nathan Straus, shows "How the New York Death-Rate Was Reduced" by the use of sterilized milk last summer. Rev. S. W. Dike finds that "The Wage-Earner's Loss During the Depression" has been much less than is commonly stated, and an unknown writer gives six sensible pages of "Facts Touching a Revival of Business."

The second part of Bibliographica, the superb quarterly which Charles Scribner's Sons import at $8.00 per annum, and which is to run but three years, opens with a fine article on "English Illuminated Manuscripts, A.D. 700–1066," by Mr. E. Maunde Thompson, illustrated with seven reproductions executed in the most delicate and effective manner. "The Two English Bookmen" sketched by Mr. H. B. Wheatley and Austin Dobson are Samuel Pepys and Henry Fielding. The second part of Mr. E. Gordon Duff's paper on "The Booksellers at the Sign of the Trinity" is devoted to Henry Pepwell. Mr. R. C. Christie seeks to determine the troublesome question of "The Chronology of the Early Aldines;" he believes that Aldus used the common reckoning which made the year begin with the first of January and not, as his biographers have supposed, the legal method, which started with the first of March. An extremely interesting paper, fully illustrated, is that on "Early Representations of the Printing Press," by Mr. Falconer Madan. "Woodcuts as Bindings," by Dr. Paul Kristelles, and "Two References to the English Book Trade circa 1525," are two minor papers. This unique publication is one to delight every bibliophile.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— Messrs. A. & C. Black have for some time been making arrangements, which are now completed, for the production of a new Survey of London. The last edition of Stowe and Strype's famous work was issued in 1754; Maitland's survey appeared in 1756; Entick's survey in 1766; Lambert's survey in 1806; since that time, though there have been many books written on London, on parts of London, and on institutions of London, there has been no actual survey of London. In this long interval London has extended far beyond the modest limits of its walls and suburbs of 1806. Then, the city, reckoning from Westminster to Wapping, stretched for little more than three miles along the north bank of the river. In its widest part it was no more than three quarters of a mile. At the present moment the jurisdiction of the London County Council covers an area, including the old city, which is roughly estimated at seventeen miles long by twelve miles broad. The whole of this area is to be included in the new survey. The editor, director, and the principal writer of the work is Mr. Walter Besant, F.S.A., who has made a study of London, not only in books, but in exploration of the streets—the occupation of his leisure hours for more than twenty-five years. His recent works on London and Westminster and his eighteenth century novels sufficiently prove his qualification for the post of director. The work will not be a reproduction brought up to date of Stowe and Strype, but an entirely new work on a different plan. It will, however, include a perambulation such as is found in the former work, but of the whole "county" instead of the city only. This perambulation will take account of every important building, institution, and company; every church, chapel, college, school, hospital, orphanage, almshouse, museum, library, etc., in the whole of Greater London. It will include things past as well as the things present; it will contain a history of London — its liberties, charters, trade, political power, religion, manners and customs; and it will present a picture of the great city as it is from every point of view. In short, it is the aim of the publishers and of the editor to erect a monument worthy of this great and venerable city which shall record its state and condition at the end of the nineteenth century. It is at present designed to complete the work in eight quarto volumes, and the first will, if possible, be published in the autumn of 1895, to be followed at short and regular intervals by successive volumes. It is needless to add that the work will be fully illustrated by maps and engravings. It will be issued in America by Macmillan & Co.

— The English Spenser Society has made its final bow to the public. It can look back on its past with satisfaction. During the twenty-seven years of its existence it has published fifty-three volumes of the literature of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Nineteen of them have been devoted to Wither, eight to Taylor the water poet, seven to Drayton, two to Alexander Barclay, and two to Heywood. The society commenced with Heywood, and has ended with him. It has counted in its ranks several noted bibliophiles, and it has done its work modestly and efficiently. Mr. Oliver Elton of Owens College will furnish a biographical and critical introduction to Drayton's Poemes Lyrick and Pastorall, which appeared in 1891. It will extend to fifty or sixty pages, and is expected to be ready before the end of the year.

— The volume on the Lex Mosaica, which Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode are going to publish, contains, besides an introduction by the late Bishop of Bath and Wells, an essay on "The Archæological Witness to the Literary Activity of the Mosaic Age," by Professor Sayce; one on "The Levitical Code," by Canon Rawlinson; another on "The Deuteronomical Code," by Prof. G. C. M. Douglas; and a fourth on "The Joshua Period," by Canon Girdlestone. Among the other contributors are Mr. Lias; Dr. Watson of St. John's College, Cambridge; Prebendary Leathes; Dr. Sinker, librarian of Trinity College; and Dr. Wace of King's College.

— Messrs. Richard Bentley & Son have in the press what may be called an édition définitif of The Ingoldsby Legends, of which their firm were the original publishers. It has been prepared by Mrs. Edward W. Bond, the daughter of the author, who contributes a brief memoir, a bibliography, and occasional notes. It will contain the illustrations on steel of Cruikshank and Leech, and those on wood of Tenniel, Du Maurier, Doyle, and others, together with a reproduction of a water color by Cruikshank, hitherto unpublished, and a portrait of the author. It will form three volumes, demy octavo.

— Harper & Brothers will publish this month an illustrated volume on Four American Universities, viz.: Harvard, Yale, Princeton and Columbia, by Profs. Charles Eliot Norton, A. T. Hadley, W. M. Sloane, and Brander Matthews, all graduates of as well as instructors in the institutions about which they write — all except Professor Sloane of Princeton, who is an alumnus of Columbia. About the same time the Macmillans will publish Prof. E. D. Perry's translation of Professor Paulsen's account of the German universities, for which Prof. Nicholas Murray Butler has written an introduction, contrasting the German and the American universities.

— Messrs. Rivington, Percival & Co. are preparing a volume containing a series of articles on the work of the University Settlements in the East End of London, by various writers who are actual workers, including the heads of the Oxford House, Toynbee Hall, and Mansfield House. The book will have an introduction by Sir John Gorst.

— The édition de luxe of The Faerie Queen, to be published by Mr. George Allen and illustrated by Mr. Walter Crane, will be issued in eighteen monthly parts, each containing four full-page illustrations, besides specially designed headpieces, tailpieces, and initial letters. The work will be printed upon handmade paper, expressly manufactured of a tint selected to exhibit Mr. Crane's designs to the best advantage. The size will be large post quarto, and the price 10*s.* 6*d.* per part net. One thousand copies only will be issued.

— The title fixed for Mr. S. R. Crockett's new story, to appear in Good Words next year, is "The Men of the Moss-Hags." It deals with the adventures of the Covenanters in the Killing Time, and the hero rides at Cameron's back at the last charge at Aird's Moss, and holds up the banner of blue at the Sanquhar Declaration.

— Rev. S. Humphreys Gurteen, Conanicut Island, Rhode Island, has in preparation a volume entitled King Arthur, which will be a comparative study of the Arthurian epic as chiefly contained in the romances of the Anglo-Norman Trouvères and in Tennyson's Idylls of the King. The basis of the work is a series of lectures, but the subject-matter has been wholly recast and greatly enlarged by important additions. King Arthur will be the first of a series of four books, the main object of which will be to show what a large share the Church has had in the formation of the literature of the imagination, especially in England, and to show the large part the clergy have played in the incipiency of romance, the sacred epic, the religious allegory, and the drama. Every volume will be entirely independent of the others. The next volume will be Cædmon, a comparative study of the Anglo-Saxon poem of "The Fall of Man" and of Milton's Paradise Lost.

— "In the Days of Jeanne d'Arc" is the name of Mrs. Catherwood's new novel, now nearly completed for the Century Magazine. Mrs. Catherwood has just returned from France, where she has spent months studying the literature of the subject, visiting the scenes of the heroine's life, and working upon the manuscript of her book. The novel is to be brilliantly illustrated, the Franco-American Castaigne having undertaken the work. Castaigne is a profound admirer of the great Jeanne, and familiar with the theater of her deeds.

— Garibaldi's daughter, Signora Teresa Comzio, is said by Continental papers to be engaged on a life of her father, which is to bear the title of La Vita intima di Garibaldi. The book is expected to be issued by Christmas.

— Messrs. William Andrews & Co. of Hull are about to make three additions to Burns literature, under the titles of Bonnie Jean, Clarinda, and Tam o' Shanter. The first consists of tributes in poetry and prose to the wife of Robert Burns, the second papers concern the renowned correspondent of the poet, and the third volume deals with Tam o' Shanter and his memorable ride, including some papers on Alloway Kirk, Souter Johnny, and Captain Grose. The works, which will be illustrated, are compiled by Mr. John Ross, author of Round the Grave of Burns.

— Mr. Elkin Mathews' announcements include English Episodes, by Frederick Wedmore; three volumes in the Diversi Colores series, Carols and Poems, by Selwyn Image; Essays upon Matthew Arnold, by Arthur Galton; and Poems, by Ernest Dowson; Out of Egypt: Stories from the Threshold of the East, by Percy Hemingway; The Happy Wanderer, by Percy Hemingway; Preferences Old and New, by Harry Quilter; The Shadowy Waters, by W. B. Yeats; Some Account of the Old Church at Chelsea, and of its Monuments, by R. R. Davies; Occasional Portraits by Will Rothenstein; a volume of Irish stories by Mrs. H. A. Hinkson (Katherine Tynan); Songs, by Dollie Radford; a volume of imaginative prose pieces by Ernest Dowson; and Revolted Woman: Past, Present, and to Come, by Charles G. Harper, illustrated.

— Lord De Tabley, whose new volume of poems Mr. John Lane is about to issue, is a tall, elderly man, with a fine gray beard and the gentlest manners a gentleman could have. He suffers, unfortunately, from very infirm health. His first volume showed that he was one of the most poetical of all our unrecognized poets. — Literary World, London.

— The novels of Miss Ferrier, which appear in Dent's series of old novelists (New York: Macmillan & Co.), will contain some new biographical material obtained by Brimley Johnson, the editor of the edition, from Miss Ferrier's family. The edition, which is to be in six volumes, will also contain the illustrations by Miss Nelly Erichsen which were recently on view at Messrs. Dent's exhibition of black and white, and two portraits of the author never before reproduced.

— About two years ago an informal association was organized by a few interested persons to establish in this country a lectureship on the lines of the Hibbert lectureship in England, to be wholly devoted to the historic study and philosophic comparison of the religions of the world. The first course of these lectures is now commenced. It will comprise six lectures on the history, development, and teachings of Buddhism, by Prof. T. W. Rhys-Davids, LL.D., Ph.D., was delivered at Cornell University early in November, and is to be repeated later, in whole or in part, in Boston, Providence, Baltimore, New York, and Brooklyn. Prof. Rhys-Davids is an attractive lecturer and has made a life study of Buddhism in its different aspects. The lecturer for the next year is not yet announced, but substantially the same plan will be adopted. The association supporting the lectureship — if it may so be called — includes President Schurman of Cornell, Professor Toy of Harvard, Professor Haupt of Johns Hopkins, Professor Hooper of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, and other well-known men.

— The new volume of poems by Edmund Gosse, In Russet and Silver, contains selections from the poetry which he has written during the last nine years. The book is dedicated to Robert Louis Stevenson, under a name by which he is known to the Samoa natives, "Tusitala," which is "The Story-teller." Mr. Heinemann is the publisher.

— Harper & Brothers have in press Chapters from Some Unwritten Memoirs, a series of delightful papers by Mrs. A. T. Ritchie.

— The valuable library of the late George Gebbie of Philadelphia, for many years one of the leading publishers of art works in this country, is to be sold by auction on November 20 and following days, under the management of Mr. Stan. V. Henkels, at the book auction rooms of Thomas Birch's Sons. This concern will also dispose of the valuable collection of autograph letters and historical papers belonging to Hon. Jas. T. Mitchell on December 5 and 6.

— Mr. Thomas Hardy's new novel, which has been announced for serial publication in Harper's Magazine, beginning with the December number and continuing through the year 1895, is to be entitled "Hearts Insurgent." The caption at first announced, "The Simpletons," will be retained in the first installment only. Harper & Brothers will publish some time this winter a novel by David Christie Murray, who is now making a lecture tour in this country. Mr. Murray's novel is entitled A Martyred Fool, and it is a study of anarchism.

— Messrs. Copeland & Day announce for immediate publication a Versified Narrative of the Wooing of Martha Pitkin, written by Charles Knowles Bolton.

— D. C. Heath & Co. will soon issue a somewhat abridged edition of Jules Verne's most popular tale, Le tour du monde en quatre vingts jours, with notes by Professor Edgren of the University of Nebraska.

— Messrs. Harper & Brothers published November 9 Barclay's Correspondence, selections from the correspondence of Thomas Barclay, formerly British consul-general at New York, edited by George Lockhart Rives; Who Was Lost and Is Found, a novel, by Mrs. Oliphant; Hypatia; or, New Foes with an Old Face, by Charles Kingsley, with three hundred illustrations from drawings by William Martin Johnson, and a portrait of the author; and Josiah Wedgwood, F.R.S., his personal history, by Samuel Smiles, LL.D.

— The centennial of Bryant's birthday was commemorated by a banquet at Great Barrington, given by the Bryant Club. Letters of regret were received from President Cleveland, Senator Dawes, and Seth Low. A poem was read by Wallace Bruce, who was a personal friend of Bryant.

— M. Zola, being a Catholic by birth, baptism, and communion, is said to be greatly annoyed that Lourdes has been put on the index of prohibited books by the Roman ecclesiastical authorities. He protests against having been classed with Voltaire as an enemy of the faith, and avers that he has never caricatured a priest.

— Ginn & Co. have ready Herrick: Selections from the Hesperides and the Noble Numbers, edited, with introduction, notes, and glossary, by Prof. Edward E. Hale, Jr., Ph.D. (Halle), of the State University of Iowa.

— The dainty and unique catalogue of his Bibelot series, published by Mr. Thomas B. Mosher of Portland, Me., deserves the attention, at this season especially, of lovers of beautiful books.

— Frederick A. Stokes Co. will shortly publish a novel by John Mackie, entitled The Devil's Playground, and two novels by Robert Barr, the editor of the Idler. The rage for paper dolls does not seem to abate in the least. This company have a series of these for the holidays, and they have been so successful with them that they have a new set in process of manufacture. These will be devoted to historical subjects, and are intended to be instructive as well as amusing.

— Few of the many admirers of the great classic, Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, are aware how greatly that work as published today differs from the original edition. Mr. Henry Altemus, Philadelphia, has arranged in connection with Mr. Elliot Stock of London to publish at once an exact reproduction of the Pilgrim's Progress as originally issued in 1678. The type, printing, and binding will be a facsimile of the copy of the first edition, which is one of the prized objects in the British Museum. Dr. John Brown, author of Bunyan and His Times, supplies a valuable preface, in which some controverted questions are carefully examined and probably finally settled.

— The latest publications of D. Appleton & Co. include The Three Musketeers, by Alexandre Dumas, an édition de luxe, with 250 illustrations by Maurice Leloir; The Life of Dean Buckland, by his daughter, Mrs. Gordon; The Education of the Greek People, and its Influence on Civilization, by Thomas Davidson, Vol. 28, International Education series; At the Gate of Samaria, by William John Locke, in the Town and Country Library; The Golden Fairy Book, with one hundred illustrations by H. R. Millar; Maelcho, by the Hon. Emily Lawless; China: Travels and Investigations in the "Middle Kingdom," by Gen. James Harrison Wilson, second edition; Evolution and Ethics, and Other Essays, by Thomas H. Huxley; Popular Astronomy: a General Description of the Heavens, by Camille Flammarion; and Children of Circumstance, by Iota, author of A Yellow Aster. They have in press for immediate publication Towards Utopia, by A Free Lance; The Dawn of Civilization (Egypt and Chaldæa), by Professor Maspero, edited by Rev. Prof. Sayce; General Hancock, by Gen. Francis A. Walker, a new volume in the Great Commanders series; and The Justification of Andrew Lebrun, in the Town and Country Library.

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. published November 10 the Life and Letters of John Greenleaf Whittier, by Samuel T. Pickard; George William Curtis, by Edward Cary, in the series of American Men of Letters; Evangeline, by H. W. Longfellow, decorated with leaves from the Acadia forests; The Story of Lawrence Garthe, by Ellen Olney Kirk; A Century of Charades, by William Bellamy; When Molly Was Six, by Eliza Orne White; Side Glimpses from the Colonial Meeting-House, by William Root Bliss; Fagots for the Fireside, by Lucretia P. Hale, new and enlarged edition; and The Lady of Fort St. John, by Mary Hartwell Catherwood, in the Riverside Paper series.

— Messrs. Roberts Brothers published November 15 Emily Dickinson's Letters, edited by Mrs. Mabel Loomis Todd, who has so arranged the letters that the growth in style and individuality forms an interesting study; A Child of the Age, a novel, by Francis Adams; The World Beautiful, by Lilian Whiting; The Thought of God in Hymns and Poems, second series, by F. L. Hosmer and W. C. Gannett; The Power of the Will; or, Success, by Risborough H. Sharman; and Father Gander's Melodies, for Mother Goose's grandchildren, by Adelaide F. Samuels, illustrated by Lillian Trask Harlow.

— Harper & Brothers' announcements for November and December include Harper's Young People for 1894, Volume XV; The Golden House, by Charles Dudley Warner; A Sporting Pilgrimage — riding to hounds, golf, rowing, football, cricket, club and university athletics — by Caspar W. Whitney; Twilight Land, written and illustrated by Howard Pyle; The Story of Babette: a Little Creole Girl, by Ruth McEnery Stuart; Wayside Poems, by Wallace Bruce; Literary and Social Essays, by George William Curtis, edited by Charles Eliot Norton; An Agitator, by Clementina Black; and in Harper's Short Story series The Royal Marine, by Brander Matthews; A Kentucky Cardinal, by James Lane Allen; Ministers of Grace, by Eva Wilder McGlasson; and St. John's Wooing, by M. G. McClelland.

— Philip Gilbert Hamerton, the well-known English art critic and littérateur, died at Boulogne-sur-Seine, France, on November 5. His death was most unexpected, as he was believed to be in excellent health. Mr. Hamerton was one of the best known of modern writers on art topics. He was born at Laneside, in Lancashire, on September 10, 1834, and prepared for Oxford, but never matriculated, plunging instead into literary and artistic work. He studied painting, and though in the view of artists his pictures were commonplace they were popular and had many good qualities. His first literary work was a series of articles on "Rome in 1849," contributed to the London Science, and in 1885 he published a volume of poems, The Isles of Loch Awe, illustrated by himself. In this year he migrated to Paisley, where he studied painting and literature. In 1857 he settled at Loch Awe, where he obtained material for his most successful work, A Painter's Camp; and in 1861 he returned to France, where he resided until his death. He contributed for several years to the Fine Arts Quarterly Review and the Fortnightly. From 1866 to 1868 he was art critic for the Saturday Review; he was the originator of the excellent art review, The Portfolio, and he was always a frequent contributor to French and American magazines. Among his most notable works are Etching and Etchers, 1868; Contemporary French Painters, 1868; The Intellectual Life, 1873; Round My House, personal observations of French rural life, 1876; The Graphic Arts, 1882; a sumptuous work on Landscape, in 1884; Imagination in Landscape Painting, 1887; Portfolio Papers, 1889; and Man in Art, which was one of the handsome art books of last year. He has edited various art collections or compilations and published several novels, the best known being Marmorne, issued in 1878. A collected edition of his works in ten volumes was published at Boston, Mass., in 1882, by Roberts Brothers.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the Literary World are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biography.

Life and Art of Joseph Jefferson. By William Winter. Macmillan & Co. $2.25

Memoirs of the Reign of King George the Third. By Horace Walpole. First published by Sir Denis le Marchant, Bart., and now reëdited by G. F. Russell Barker. With sixteen portraits. In four volumes. London: Lawrence & Bullen; New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $18.00

Lucy Larcom. Life, Letters, and Diary. By Daniel Dulany Addison. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

Napoleon at Home. The Daily Life of the Emperor at the Tuileries. By Frederick Masson. Trans. by James E. Matthew. In two vols. J. B. Lippincott Co. $7.50

Books for Young People.

What a Boy Saw in the Army. By Jesse Bowman Young. With one hundred illustrations by Frank Beard. Hunt & Eaton.

Three Boys on an Electrical Boat. By John Trowbridge. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

Gypsy Breynton. By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. New edition. Illustrated. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50

Wee Lucy. Little Prudy's "Wee Croodlin' Doo." By Sophie May. Lee & Shepard. 75c.

Asiatic Breezes; or, Students on the Wing. By Oliver Optic. Lee & Shepard. $1.25

Gala Day Books. By Frances Isabel Currie. Four vols. in box. Illustrated. Hunt & Eaton. $1.50

Corn Flower Stories. Six vols. in box. Illustrated. Hunt & Eaton. $1.75

The Dotty Series. By Kate W. and Erskine M. Hamilton. Six vols. in box. Cong. S. S. and Pub. Society. $2.00

Snowed In. By Willis Boyd Allen. Illustrated. Cong. S. S. and Pub. Society. $1 00

In the Wilds of the West Coast. By J. Macdonald Oxley. Illustrated. Thomas Nelson & Sons. $1.50

Chris, the Model Maker. A Story of New York. By William O. Stoddard. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

Madeleine's Rescue. A Story for Girls and Boys. By Jeanne Schultz. D. Appleton & Co. $1.00

The Patriot Schoolmaster. By Hezekiah Butterworth. Illustrated. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

Two Girls. By Amy E. Blanchard. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25

Olivia. By Mrs. Molesworth. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25

Fairy Tales from Hans Christian Andersen. Illustrated by E. A. Lemann. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.50

Essays and Sketches.

Four Months in New Hampshire. A Story of Love and Dumb Animals. American Humane Educational Society.

Early London Theatres. (In the Fields.) By T. Fairman Ordish, F.S.A. With illustrations and maps. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

William B. Hayden. Selected Essays and Discourses. Massachusetts New Church Union. $1.25

Essays and Addresses: Religious, Literary, and Social. By Phillips Brooks. E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.00

Musicians and Music-Lovers, and Other Essays. By Wm. Foster Apthorp. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

About Girls. Spicy Sketches Revealing the Choicest Feminine Fads and Fancies. By Helen Follett. Laird & Lee. 25c.

Riverby. By John Burroughs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

Fiction.

The Bell-Ringer of Angels, and Other Stories. By Bret Harte. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1 25

The Double Emperor. By W. Laird Clowes. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25

Sibylla. By Sir H. S. Cunningham, K.C.I.E. Macmillan & Co. $1 25

Elder Conklin, and Other Stories. By Frank Harris. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

Round the Red Lamp. Being Facts and Fancies of Medical Life. By A. Conan Doyle. Second edition. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

The Burial of the Guns. By Thomas Nelson Page. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25

Centuries Apart. By Edward T. Bouvé. Little, Brown & Co. $1.50

Hope Benham. By Nora Perry. Illustrated by Frank T. Merrill. Little, Brown & Co. $1.50

A House in Bloomsbury. By Mrs. Oliphant. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25

Olaf the Glorious. A Historical Study of the Viking Age. By Robert Leighton. Illustrated. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

Austin Elliot. By Henry Kingsley. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00

To Greenland and the Pole. A Story of Adventure in the Arctic Regions. By Gordon Stables. Illustrated. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

Tartarin on the Alps. By Alphonse Daudet. With illustrations. Revised translation. T. Y. Crowell & Co. 75c.

St. Rockwells' Little Brother. By Mrs. Harriet A. Cheever. Cong. S. S. and Pub. Society. $1.50

"Sirs, Only Seventeen!" By Virginia F. Townsend. Lee & Shepard. $1.50

Holiday Books.

Three Heroines of New England Romance. Priscilla, by Harriet Prescott Spofford; Agnes Surriage, by Alice Brown; Martha Hilton, by Louise Imogen Guiney. Little, Brown & Co. $2.00

The Story of the Pilgrims. By Morton Dexter. Cong. S. S. and Pub. Society. $1.25

Pen and Pencil Sketches. By Henry Stacy Marks. In two volumes. J. B. Lippincott Co. $8.00

The Story of Alexander. Told by Robert Steele, and drawn by Fred. Mason. Macmillan & Co. $2.50

Margaret Arnold's Christmas, and Other Stories. By Mary D. Brine. E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.00

Wandering Words. By Sir Edwin Arnold, M.A. With illustrations. Longmans, Green & Co. $5.00

The Last Leaf. Poem. By Oliver Wendell Holmes. Illustrated. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50

The Farmer's Boy. Written and illustrated by Clifton Johnson. In a box. D. Appleton & Co. $2.50

Schools and Masters of Sculpture. By A. G. Radcliffe. Illustrated. D. Appleton & Co. $3.00

The Castle of the Carpathians. By Jules Verne. The Merriam Co. $1.50

The Sketch-Book of Geoffrey Crayon, Gent. By Washington Irving In two volumes. Van Tassel edition. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $6.00

Portraits in Plaster. From the collection of Laurence Hutton. With seventy-two illustrations. Harper & Brothers. $6.00

Wimples and Crisping-Pins. Being studies in the Coiffure and Ornaments of Women. By Theodore Child. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $2.00

Paul and Virginia. By Bernardin de Saint-Pierre. With a Biographical Sketch. Illustrated by Maurice Leloir. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

Their Wedding Journey. By William Dean Howells. With illustrations by Clifford Carleton. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $3.00

Goethe's Faust. From the German, by John Anster, LL.D. Illustrated by Frank M. Gregory. Dodd, Mead & Co. $3.50

A Tale of Two Cities. By Charles Dickens. With illustrations by Edmund H. Garrett. Two vols. Dodd, Mead & Co. $3.50

Pen Drawing and Pen Draughtsmen: their Work and their Methods A Study of the Art of Today, with Technical Suggestions By Joseph Pennell. Macmillan & Co. $15.00

The Life of Christ as Represented in Art. By Frederic W. Farrar, D.D., F.R.S. With numerous illustrations. Macmillan & Co. $6.00

Raphael's Madonnas and Other Great Pictures. Reproduced from the original paintings. With a Life of Raphael and an Account of His Chief works. By Karl Karóly. Macmillan & Co. $8.00

The Victorian Age of English Literature. By Mrs. Oliphant. Two vols. in a box. Lovell, Coryell & Co.

Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam. Rendered into English Verse by Edward Fitzgerald. With an accompaniment of Drawing by Elihu Vedder. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $5.00

Hoofs, Claws, and Antlers of the Rocky Mountains. By the Camera. With an introduction by Theodore Roosevelt. Denver: Frank S. Thayer. $5.00

Sketch Book of Geoffrey Crayon, Gent. Illustrated. Two vols. J. B. Lippincott Co. $4.00

Timothy's Quest. By Kate Douglas Wiggin. Illustrated. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50

The Rest Banner, The Every Day Banner, The Joy Banner, and What Will the Violets Be? By Irene E. Jerome. Lee & Shepard. Each, 50c.

Poetry, Music, and the Drama.

Madonna, and Other Poems. By Harrison S. Morris. J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.00

The Temple Shakespeare. As You Like It. — The Taming of the Shrew. Macmillan & Co. Each, 45c.

Cupid and Cupidity. A Comedy in Three Acts. By Sylvan Drey. T. H. French. 15c.

Back Country Poems. By Sam Walter Foss. Illustrated by Bridgman. Lee & Shepard. $1.50

Because I Love You. Poems of Love. Selected and arranged by Anna E. Mack. Lee & Shepard. $1.50

Windfall and Waterdrift. By Auberon Herbert. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.

Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyám. Rendered into English Verse by Edward Fitzgerald. Portland, Me.: Thomas B. Mosher. $1.00 net.

Félise. A Book of Lyrics chosen from the Earlier Poetical Works of Algernon Charles Swinburne. Thomas B. Mosher. $1.00 net.

Péllèas and Mélisande. A Drama in Five Acts. By Maurice Mesterlinck. Trans. by Erving Winslow. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.00

Hannele. A Dream Poem. By Gerhart Hauptman. Trans. by William Archer. London: Wm. Heinemann. 5s.

The Poetical Works of Robert Browning. Vol. XVII. Asolando and Notes. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

The Complete Poetical Works of John Greenleaf Whittier. Cambridge edition. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.00

Songs of the Soil. By Frank L. Stanton. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

Childe Harold's Pilgrimage. A Romaunt. By Lord Byron. T. Y. Crowell & Co. 75c.

The Christian Year. Thoughts in Verse for the Sundays and Holydays. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

The Odes of Horace. Translated into English by W. E. Gladstone. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

Songs from the Woods of Maine. By Julia H. May. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1 50

Standard Literature.

The Works of Laurence Sterne. Edited by George Saintsbury, in six volumes. J. B. Lippincott Co. $6.00

Corinne; or, Italy. By Mme. de Staël. With introduction by George Saintsbury. Two vols. J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.00

Miscellaneous.

Curb, Snaffle, and Spur. A Method of Training Young Horses. By Edward L. Anderson. Little, Brown & Co.

The Century Cyclopedia of Names. Edited by Benjamin E. Smith, A.M. The Century Co. $15.00

The Humour of Ireland. Selected by D. J. O'Donoghue. Illustrated. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25

Samanthy Among the Colored Folks. By Josiah Allen's Wife. Illustrated. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50

A NEW CONCORDANCE. THE PERFECT TEXT FINDER!

Walker's Comprehensive Concordance.

BASED ON THE AUTHORIZED VERSION.

It is a concordance pure and simple.

Rigidly alphabetical in arrangement. Its references are in strict Biblical order.

One alphabet for all words, including proper names. All proper names are accented.

By an ingenious variation of type great clearness and facility in examination are secured.

50,000 more references than Cruden's, besides substituting important words for unessential ones.

Compact and of a size handy for use. Well printed, on good paper; strongly bound. Sold at a low price.

980 pp., Price, Cloth, $2.00; Half Leather, $3.00.

PUBLISHED BY THE

Congregational S. S. and Publishing Society, Boston and Chicago.

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

The People of the Mist.

A Tale of African Adventure. By H. RIDER HAGGARD, author of "Nada, The Lilly," "Montezuma's Daughter," "She," etc. With 16 full-page illustrations. Crown 8vo, $1.25.

From Edinburgh to the Antarctic.

An Artist's Notes and Sketches During the Dundee Antarctic Expedition of 1892–93. By W. G. BURN-MURDOCH. With a chapter by W. S. Bruce, Naturalist of the Barque "Balæna." With many illustrations. 8vo, $5.00.

A History of Painting.

By Prof. JOHN C. VAN DYKE, of Rutgers College. With frontispiece and 109 illustrations in the text. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

The History of Marriage, Jewish and Christian,

In Relation to Divorce and Certain Forbidden Degrees. By the Rev. HERBERT MORTIMER LUCKOCK, D. D , Dean of Litchfield. Crown 8vo, $1.75.

Clerical Life and Work.

A Collection of Sermons with an Essay. By HENRY PARRY LIDDON, D.D., D.C.L., etc., late Canon and Chancellor of St. Paul's. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

English History in Shakespeare's Plays.

By BEVERLEY E. WARNER, M.A. With bibliography, chronological tables and index. Crown 8vo, $1.75.

The Old Church in the New Land.

Lectures on Church History. By the Rev. C. ERNEST SMITH, M. A., Rector of the Church of St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore, Md., Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Maryland. With a Preface by the BISHOP OF MARYLAND. Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.25.

Saint Paul and His Missions.

By the ABBE CONSTANT FOUARD. Translated with the author's sanction and co-operation by the Rev. George F. X. Griffith. With maps. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

The Making of the Body:

A CHILDREN'S BOOK ON ANATOMY AND PHYSIOLOGY, FOR SCHOOL AND HOME USE. By Mrs. S. A. BARNETT, author of "The Making of the Home." With 113 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 60 cents.

Sold by all booksellers; sent, postpaid, by

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.,
15 East 16th Street, New York.

SENT FREE A catalogue of VALUABLE ENGLISH BOOKS—new and fresh—at half price, and a catalogue of CHOICE OLD BOOKS at greatly reduced prices. Send your address on a postal card.

ESTES & LAURIAT, 301 Washington Street, Opp. Old South Church,
BOSTON.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.

Send your lists of wants to

.J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston

Large Stock of Old English and American Books.

istory, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

PUBLISHED BY
The Century Co.

NOW READY.

Edwin Booth.

Recollections by his daughter, Edwina Booth Grossman, with Mr. Booth's Letters to Her and to His Friends.

300 pages, octavo, with 10 artotypes and other illustrations. Cloth, rough edges, gilt top, $3.00.

FIRST EDITION EXHAUSTED BEFORE ISSUE. SECOND EDITION READY ON DAY OF ISSUE.

A LIMITED EDITION, octavo, on Holland paper, with extra illustrations, 100 copies only, price, $12.50, numbered and in a box.

EDITION DE LUXE, quarto, large paper (Whatman), with extra illustrations, 50 copies only, price, $25.00, numbered and in a box.

Nearly all of both limited editions subscribed for before issue. Only a few still on hand.

The letters and personal recollections contained in this beautiful volume give a charming glimpse of the great actor as a husband and father. The letters printed in the October Century, taken from this book, excited universal interest. The Outlook said: "These letters demonstrate that an actor may be not only a person of high moral ideas, but also of the deepest spiritual experiences. . . . Such a life is inspiring even when we find it in the ministry." The Literary World referred to them as "the most important addition to literature which the October Century brings us."

"The character and personality of Booth is most charmingly portrayed in these letters."—Beacon, Boston.

A Bachelor Maid.

A Novel of New York Society by Mrs. Burton Harrison.

Author of "Sweet Bells Out of Tune," "The Anglomaniacs," "Crow's Nest and Belhaven Tales," etc.

ILLUSTRATED BY IRVING WILES.

224 pages, 12*mo,* 7 full-page illustrations, cloth, gilt top, price, $1.25.

This novel strikes a deeper chord than any of Mrs. Harrison's previous works. It is the story of a pure and noble woman, animated by a desire to benefit her sex, and dazzled by the prospect of a higher womanhood, yet hardly understanding the things to be accomplished or the means of their accomplishment. The plot moves rapidly from first to last, introducing the reader to fashionable New York drawing-rooms, the "swell" clubs, and to the fads of metropolitan society, yet at no time losing sight of the great truth that animates the book, and which, expressed in these lines of Tennyson, forms a fitting conclusion to the story:

> "The woman's cause is man's; they rise or sink > Together, dwarfed or god-like, bond or free."

RECENTLY ISSUED.

THE SUPERB TWO-VOLUME EDITION, NOW SOLD BY ALL BOOKSELLERS.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF Abraham Lincoln.

Comprising His Speeches, Letters, State Papers, and Miscellaneous Writings.

Authorized by the Hon. Robert T. Lincoln, and edited by the President's Private Secretaries,

JOHN G. NICOLAY AND JOHN HAY,

Authors of "Abraham Lincoln: a History," also published by THE CENTURY CO.

The Story of Lincoln's Life.

WRITTEN BY HIMSELF.

In two royal octavo volumes, uniform in style with the volumes of "Abraham Lincoln: a History," by Messrs. Nicolay and Hay, but set in smaller type. Prices: in cloth binding, $10.00; in sheep binding, $12.00; in half morocco binding, $15.00; in half levant binding, $15.00.

Sold by all dealers, or copies sent, postpaid, by

THE CENTURY CO.,
Union Square, New York.

INEBRIETY,

OR NARCOMANIA: ITS ETIOLOGY, Treatment, and Jurisprudence. By Dr. NORMAN KERR, M.D., F.L.S. Third edition, which has been largely rewritten, and embraces upwards of 300 additional pages. 8vo, 650 pages, $3 50.

This volume is enormously valuable.—New York Herald. The best arranged and the most valuable work on this subject.—Medical Bulletin.

SANDOW'S SYSTEM OF PHYSICAL TRAINING, for men, women, and children. 4to, cloth. 80 half-tone illustrations chiefly from life. Fourth edition, unabridged, $2.00. Authoritatively declared to be the best book ever published on this subject.

N. B.—The publishers will supply, on request, copy of letter from assistant director of the Gymnasium of the British Army, illustrating the marvelous effect of the use of the Sandow System on a delicate Eton boy.

ATHLETICS FOR PHYSICAL CULTURE. By THEO. C. KNAUFF. 422 pages. 114 illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $2 00. A clear and exhaustive compendium of all games and pastimes.

THE GIST OF WHIST. By C. E. COFFIN. Fourth edition, carefully revised and brought up to date. Cloth, 75 cents; leather, $1.25. The most concise and intelligent as well as the latest manual on the American game.

THE WHITE TZAR AND OTHER POEMS. By HENRY BEDLOW. Edition de Luxe. Superbly illustrated. 4to, cloth, $2 50.

ON INDIA'S FRONTIER; OR NEPAL, THE GURKHAS' MYSTERIOUS LAND. By HENRY BALLANTINE, M. A. (Late American Consul to Bombay). A magnificently illustrated and timely volume. 12mo, cloth, $2.50.

For sale by all booksellers; or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by the publishers.

J. SELWIN TAIT & SONS,
65 Fifth Avenue, New York.

DAINTY DEVOTIONAL BOOKS

⁂ Mailed prepaid on receipt of price.

JESUS ONLY. Daily Texts. 12 illustrations. Cloth gilt, 75 cents; calf, $1.00.

DAILY FOOD. 12 illustrations. Cloth gilt, 75 cents; calf, $1.00.

CLARKE'S SCRIPTURE PROMISES. Cloth, 60 cents; calf, $1.00.

DAILY LIGHT. Morning Hour. Calf, $1.00.
DAILY LIGHT. Evening Hour. Calf, $1.00.
Choice Scriptural readings.

ILLUSTRATED BOOKS.

By LOUISE SEYMOUR HOUGHTON.

THE BIBLE IN PICTURE AND STORY. 269 illustrations. Quarto. Cloth, $1.25; gilt, $1.75.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST IN PICTURE AND STORY. 190 illustrations. $1 50; gilt, $2.00.

FROM OLIVET TO PATMOS IN PICTURE AND STORY. 108 illustrations. $1.50; gilt, $2.00.

BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS. 127 illustrations. Quarto. $1.50; gilt, $2.00.
Do. 12mo, with Chapman's illustrations, large type, $1.
Do. 16mo, with illustrations, 50 cents.

NEW BOOKS.

THE TRIAL AND DEATH OF JESUS CHRIST. By Rev. JAS. STALKER, D. D. 12mo, $1.50.

PATHS AND BY-PATHS. By Mrs. M. A. PICKFORD. 352 pp. 12mo, 5 illustrations, $1.25.

WON BY LOVE. By Mrs. S. S. WOOD. 12mo, 252 pp. 4 illustrations. $1.00.

RACHEL'S FARM. By Miss A. L. NOBLE. 223 pp. 12mo, 4 illustrations, $1.00.

THE STARRY SKIES. By AGNES GIBERNE. Profusely illustrated. 234 pp. 12mo, $1.00.

COSEY CORNER STORIES. By A. L. NOBLE and E. A. HUNTER. 4to. Colored covers. 12 full-page cuts in each. 4 vols. in a box, $1.00; separately, 25 cents.

Fido and His Friends. Favorite Pets.
Between-Times Stories. Fireside Stories.

With a large variety of attractive and beautifully illustrated books suitable for gifts at Christmas festivals.

Send for our Holiday Catalogue.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY,
10 EAST 23d STREET, NEW YORK.

Boston, 54 Bromfield St.
Rochester, 93 State St.
Cincinnati, 176 Elm St.
Philadelphia, 1512 Chestnut St.
Chicago, 211, 213 Wabash Ave.
San Francisco, 735 Market St.

LANGUAGES MASTERED IN 10 WEEKS.

Part I. (8 Lessons), either language, sent for 25c.
MEISTERSCHAFT BUREAU, Boston, Mass.

FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH, ITALIAN.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Valuable Library
OF THE LATE
GEORGE GEBBIE,
of Philadelphia,

will be sold at Public Sale under the management of STAN. V. HENKELS, at the Book Auction Rooms of THOS. BIRCH'S SONS, 1110 Chestnut St., Philadelphia,

NOVEMBER 20, 21, and 22, 1894.

The late Mr. Gebbie enjoyed for many years the distinction of being one of the leading publishers of the United States-devoting his energy and capital entirely to the publication of the most elaborate art works of his time, consequently his business brought him in contact with foreign publishers of a like character, and as a natural sequence he became possessed of the grandest art publications of modern times, all of which will be found in this magnificent display of books now placed before the public, which includes all the famous galleries of Europe, as well as an enormous accumulation of minor art works of the greatest importance, in the very best bindings.

The miscellaneous portion of the library includes the best English editions of the most popular authors, in special bindings, embracing a full set of the works of Jesse and Mrs. Pardoe, Grote's Greece, Duruy's Rome, Edition de Luxe Dickens, Gibbon's Rome, Macaulay's England, Froude's England, Green's English People, McCarthy's Own Times, Rawlinson's Works, a large Collection of Burnsiana, the Works of Molière, Scott, Byron, Bancroft, Arnold, Carlyle, Howitt, Sidney Smith, Walpole, Fielding, Smollett, Sterne, Robertson, Guizot, Longfellow, Victor Hugo (special French Edition, large 4to), and Robertson, Nichols' Literary History and Anecdotes; a Choice Collection of Works on the Drama, Popular Dictionaries and Encyclopædias; in fact, the whole library is one vast accumulation of works that are bound to please and are not often found in the book-stalls.

☞ A handsome descriptive catalogue will be mailed on receipt of 15 cents to cover postage, by addressing the auctioneer, STAN. V. HENKELS, 1110 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

SALE EXTRAORDINARY.

Valuable Collection of Autograph Letters and Historical Papers belonging to the Hon. Jas. T. Mitchell, of the Supreme Court, Pa.,

will be sold under the management of STAN. V. HENKELS, at the Auction Rooms of THOS. BIRCH'S SONS, 1110 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia,

DECEMBER 5 and 6, 1894.

Judge Mitchell having decided to devote his spare time entirely to the collection of rare engraved portraits, he has decided to part with his autographic treasures, and has placed the same in my hands for preparation and sale at auction. The opportunity is of the most importance to collectors, as the Judge secured many important items from the Cist, Teft, and other sales, as well as purchasing at private sale all the legal department of the noted Sprague Collection, which enables me to place before the guild a full set of the Justices of the S. C. of the U. S., a long list of the M. O. C., many Rare Letters of Generals and Officers of the Revolutionary War, an important line of Colonial Governors, an unique collection of Early Papers Relating to the Trials of the Witches in New England, as well as Rare Letters of Authors, Actors, Presidents, Governors, Cabinet Officers, Bishops, Officers of the War of 1812 and 1861, College Presidents, and other noted characters; in the same sale will be included

The Lincoln Memorial Collection,

Embracing Furniture from Abraham Lincoln's House, when occupied by him, at Springfield, Illinois, Pages from his Spelling-Book, his Law Library, Bookcase, Desk, and Inkstand, Autograph Letters and Documents, Deeds in his Handwriting, the Chair that he Sat in when he Received his Notification of his Nomination for the Presidency, as well as many other interesting items connected with his life and family, all properly authenticated with affidavits of members of his family, his law partner, etc.

☞ A handsome descriptive catalogue will be mailed on the receipt of 25 cents, by addressing STAN. V. HENKELS, at 1110 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

☞ Those desirous of obtaining all my catalogues, which are prepared with the utmost care, can insure the receipt of the same by subscribing $2.50 yearly. Address as above only.

The dinner eaten, and that with zest,
Then comes the time for toast and jest,
With them let light resplendent shine
"Across the walnuts and the wine."

Banquet Lamps
FOR Thanksgiving.

Infinite in Variety. Moderate in Cost.

R. Hollings & Co.,
MANUFACTURERS & IMPORTERS,
523-525 Washington Street.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS
OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - - $16,014,000.00
Liabilities, - $13,808,000.00
Surplus, - - $2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT,
OR BUSINESS
All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

F
Before you think of
U
buying furs this fall
R
send for Lamson & Hubbard's new catalogue.
S

Lamson & Hubbard,
90 and 92 Bedford St.,
BOSTON.
Leading Furriers.

The finest line of Furs
in Boston to select from.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address
Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

Noah Farnham Morrison,
SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,
877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.
Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

IF YOU ARE GOING
WEST
TAKE THE RELIABLE
Hoosac Tunnel Route.
ELEGANT SLEEPING CARS
Boston to Chicago and Boston to St. Louis
WITHOUT CHANGE.

For time tables, rates of fare, etc., apply at 250 Washington St., Boston.
J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

The Literary World.
E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.
OFFICE:
Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

ADVERTISING RATES:
First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

Harper's Magazine

DECEMBER.

172 Pages. Ready November 22.

THE SIMPLETONS. A Novel. By Thomas Hardy. Part I. With Illustrations by W. Hatherell. The title of this story has been changed by Mr. Hardy, and, beginning with the second installment, it will be called HEARTS INSURGENT.

THE TIME OF THE LOTUS. Summer in Japan. By Alfred Parsons. With twenty-three Illustrations by the Author.

SHOW-PLACES OF PARIS. NIGHT. By Richard Harding Davis. With seven Illustrations by C. D. Gibson.

AN ARABIAN DAY AND NIGHT. A Little Journey in French Africa. By Poultney Bigelow. With eight Illustrations by Frederic Remington.

EVOLUTION OF THE COUNTRY CLUB. By Caspar W. Whitney. With ten Illustrations.

PAOLA IN ITALY. A Story. By Gertrude Hall. With two Illustrations by Albert E. Sterner.

THE DIVIDING FENCE. A Simpkinsville Episode. By Ruth McEnery Stuart.

TAMING OF THE SHREW. Nine Illustrations by Edwin A. Abbey. Comment by Andrew Lang.

THE COLONEL'S CHRISTMAS. A Story. By Harriet Prescott Spofford. With four Illustrations by W. H. Hyde.

THE PEDDLER'S PERIL. A Story. By L. B. Miller.

RICHARD AND ROBIN. A Story. By Robert Grant. With two Illustrations by C. Carleton.

PEOPLE WE PASS. III. THE MOTHER SONG. By Julian Ralph. With three Illustrations by C. Carleton.

POEMS by W. D. Howells and others.

FULL PAGE ILLUSTRATION. By George Du Maurier.

EDITOR'S STUDY. By Charles Dudley Warner.

EDITOR'S DRAWER. With Introductory Story by John Kendrick Bangs.

LITERARY NOTES. By Laurence Hutton.

Subscription, $4.00 a Year.

Booksellers and Postmasters usually receive Subscriptions. Subscriptions sent direct to the publishers should be accompanied by Post-Office Money Order or Draft. When no time is specified, Subscriptions will begin with the current number. Postage free to all subscribers in the United States, Canada, and Mexico.

Recent Notable Books

HYPATIA; or, New Foes with an Old Face. By Charles Kingsley. With 300 Illustrations from Drawings by William Martin Johnson, and a Portrait of the Author. Two volumes. 8vo, Ornamental Silk Binding, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $7.00 (In a box.)

THOMAS BARCLAY. Selections from the Correspondence Thomas Barclay, formerly British Consul-General at New York. Edited by George Lockhart Rives. With Portrait and Maps. 8vo, Cloth, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $4.00.

JOSIAH WEDGWOOD, F. R. S. His Personal History. By Samuel Smiles, LL. D., Author of "Self-Help," "Character," "Thrift," etc. With Portrait. 12mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

WEALTH AGAINST COMMONWEALTH. By Henry Demarest Lloyd. 8vo, Cloth, $2.50.

WIMPLES AND CRISPING-PINS. Studies in the Coiffure and Ornaments of Women. By Theodore Child. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $2.00.

PORTRAITS IN PLASTER. From the Collection of Laurence Hutton. With 72 Illustrations. Large Paper, 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $6.00.

A LITTLE ENGLISH GALLERY. By Louise Imogen Guiney. With Portrait. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00. (In "Harper's American Essayists.")

SIR ROBERT'S FORTUNE. A Novel. By Mrs. Oliphant. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

THE BOY TRAVELLERS IN THE LEVANT. Adventures of Two Youths in a Journey through Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, Greece, and Turkey, with Visits to the Islands of Rhodes and Cyprus, and the Site of Ancient Troy. By Thomas W. Knox. Profusely Illustrated. Square 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $3.00.

TRILBY. A Novel. By George du Maurier, Author of "Peter Ibbetson." With 120 Illustrations by the Author. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75; Three-quarter Calf, $3.50; Three-quarter Crushed Levant, $4.50. (Edition de Luxe, One Volume, Full Vellum, $10.00. Will be ready early in December.)

A SPORTING PILGRIMAGE. Riding to Hounds, Golf, Rowing, Football, Cricket, Club and University Athletics. Studies in English Sport, Past and Present. By Caspar W. Whitney. Copiously Illustrated. 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $3.50. (Just Ready.)

FOOTBALL FACTS AND FIGURES. A Symposium of Expert Opinions on the Game's Place in American Athletics. Compiled by Walter Camp, Author of "American Football." Post 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

AMERICAN FOOTBALL. By Walter Camp. With 32 Portraits. 16mo, Cloth, $1.25. (New and Enlarged Edition, with Supplementary Chapter on the New Rules.)

The above works are for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by Harper & Brothers, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States Canada, or Mexico, on receipt of price. Harper's Catalogue will be sent to any address on receipt of Ten Cents.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 Somerset Street
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 1 DECEMBER 1894 Vol. XXV No. 24 Whole No. 520

THE MERRIAM COMPANY'S BOOKS FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Napoleon: Lover and Husband.
By FREDERIC MASSON. Translated from the 14th French edition by J. M. Howell. Five photogravure Plates. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $2.00.

The Old Post Road.
A Delightful Story of Early Days in Maryland. By M. G. MCCLELLAND. 16mo, oblong, cloth, gilt top, with photogravure frontispiece, 75 cents.
"Nothing that this author has produced has pleased us more than this little story." —Boston Times.

The Land of the Changing Sun.
A Delightful Story of Adventure. By WILL N. HARBEN. With frontispiece. 16mo, oblong, cloth, gilt top, 75 cents.

Belle-Plante and Cornelius.
A Study of the Ideal and Real. By CLAUDE TILLIER. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.
"As a study of two characters it is most interesting."—Literary World.

Broadoaks.
A Romance of Virginia. By M. G. MCCLELLAND. Illustrated by Charles Edward Boutwood. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.
"The theme is wholly original and the story ranks among the best of this author." —Boston Transcript.

Lingua Gemmae.
A Language of Gems, with the Popular Superstitions and Significations. By ADA L. SUTTON. Profusely illustrated by Mary F. Clark. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

Theatrical Sketches: Here and There with Prominent Actors.
Episodes in the Professional and Private Life of Distinguished Actors and Actresses. By MARGARET. With photographs. 16mo, oblong, cloth, gilt top, 75 cents.

My Uncle Benjamin.
A Humorous and Philosophical Novel. By CLAUDE TILLIER. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

A Common Mistake.
A Society Novel of Extreme Interest and Merit. By JEANNE M. HOWELL. 12mo, cloth, 50 cents.
"One of the best novels of the season."—Boston Traveller.

Two Bad Brown Eyes.
A Powerful Delineation of Character. By MARIE ST. FELIX, author of "A Little Game with Destiny." 12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.
"It is a daring romance."—Detroit News-Tribune.

NEW BOOKS FOR YOUNG READERS.

The Lost Army.
Adventures of Two Boys in the War of the Rebellion. By THOMAS W. KNOX. Illustrated. Large, square 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

The Captain's Boat.
An Interesting Story for Boys. By WILLIAM O. STODDARD. Illustrated. Large, square 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

Richard Dare's Venture.
A Story of a Boy's Struggle for Existence. By EDWARD STRATEMEYER. Illustrated. Large, square 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

The Brave and Honest Series.
"Brave Tom," "Honest Ned," and "Righting the Wrong." By EDWARD S. ELLIS. Illustrated. Large, square 12mo, cloth, per vol., $1.25; per set, in box, $3.75.

The Castle of the Carpathians.
A Story of Strange Adventures. By JULES VERNE. Thirty-eight full-page illustrations. Large, square 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

The Last Cruise of the Spitfire.
An Interesting Sea Story. By EDWARD STRATEMEYER. Illustrated. Large, square 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

In the Pecos Country.
(War Whoop Series No. 3.) An Interesting Story of Adventure Among the Indians. By Lieut. R. H. JAYNE. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

The Cave in the Mountain.
(War Whoop Series No. 4.) A sequel to "In the Pecos Country." By Lieut. R. H. JAYNE. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

BOYS' ILLUSTRATED ANNUAL. Contains Serial Stories by G. A. Henty, George Manville Fenn, S. Baring-Gould, Henry M. Stanley, etc. Thirteen full-page colored Plates and many Wood Engravings. Large 4to, cloth, $3.50.

For sale at all Bookstores, or sent, postpaid, upon receipt of price by

THE MERRIAM COMPANY, Publishers and Booksellers, 67 Fifth Ave., New York.

LEADING BOOKS OF THE SEASON.

HYPATIA;

Or, New Foes with an Old Face. By Charles Kingsley. Illustrated from Drawings by William Martin Johnson, and with Portrait of the Author. 2 vols., 8vo, Ornamental, Silk Binding, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $7.00. (In a Box.)

TWILIGHT LAND.

Written and Illustrated by Howard Pyle, Author of "The Wonder Clock," "Pepper and Salt," "Men of Iron," etc. 8vo, Half-Leather, Ornamental, $2.50.

THE STORY OF BABETTE.

By Ruth McEnery Stuart, Author of "A Golden Wedding," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

PORTRAITS IN PLASTER.

From the Collection of Laurence Hutton. With 72 Illustrations. Large Paper, 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $6.00.

LITERARY AND SOCIAL ESSAYS.

By George William Curtis. One Volume. Crown 8vo, Cloth. Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $2.50.

THE GOLDEN HOUSE.

A Story. By Charles Dudley Warner, Author of "A Little Journey in the World," etc. Illustrated by W. T. Smedley. Post 8vo, Half-Leather, Ornamental, $2.00.

JOSIAH WEDGWOOD, F. R. S.

His Personal History. By Samuel Smiles, LL. D., Author of "Self Help," "Character," "Jasmin: Barber, Poet, Philanthropist," etc. With Portrait. 12mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

WEALTH AGAINST COMMONWEALTH.

By Henry Demarest Lloyd. 8vo, Cloth, $2.50.

WIMPLES AND CRISPING-PINS.

Studies in the Coiffure and Ornaments of Women. By Theodore Child, Author of "Art and Criticism," etc. Crown 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $2.00.

WAYSIDE POEMS.

By Wallace Bruce. Illustrated. Square 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $2.00.

A SPORTING PILGRIMAGE.

Riding to Hounds, Golf, Rowing, Football, Cricket, Club and University Athletics. Studies in English Sport, Past and Present. By Caspar W. Whitney. Copiously Illustrated 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $3.50. (This book contains an illustrated chapter giving instructions as to how the game of Golf should be played.)

FOOTBALL FACTS AND FIGURES.

A Symposium of Expert Opinions on the Game's Place in American Athletics. Compiled by Walter Camp, Author of "American Football." Post 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

FOUR AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES.

(Harvard, Yale, Princeton and Columbia.) With many Illustrations. 4to, Cloth, Ornamental. (Nearly Ready.)

AMERICAN FOOTBALL.

By Walter Camp. With 32 Portraits. 16mo, Cloth, $1.25. (New and Enlarged Edition, with Supplementary Chapter on the New Rules.)

HIPPOLYTE AND GOLDEN-BEAK.

Two Stories. By George Bassett. Illustrated. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental. "Harper's American Story-Tellers." $1.25. (Nearly Ready.)

TRILBY.

A Novel. By George du Maurier, Author of "Peter Ibbetson." With 120 Illustrations by the Author. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75; Three-quarter Calf, $3.50; Three-quarter Crushed Levant, $4.50. (Edition de Luxe. One Volume, Full Vellum, $10.00. Will be ready early in December.)

"HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE" FOR 1894.

Volume XV. With about 800 Illustrations and 888 pages. 4to, Cloth, Ornamental, $3.50.

CHAPTERS FROM SOME UNWRITTEN MEMOIRS.

By Anne Thackeray Ritchie, Author of "Records of Tennyson, Ruskin, Browning," etc. Crown 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental. Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $2.00.

A LITTLE ENGLISH GALLERY.

By Louise Imogen Guiney. With Portrait. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00. (In the Series "Harper's American Essayists.")

BIBLE STORIES FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

By the Right Rev. Henry C. Potter, D. D., the Rev. Bishop John F. Hurst, D. D, the Rev. John Hall, D. D., and others. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00.

THE BOY TRAVELLERS IN THE LEVANT.

Adventures of Two Youths in a Journey Through Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, Greece and Turkey, with Visits to the Islands of Rhodes and Cyprus and the Site of Ancient Troy. By Thomas W. Knox. Profusely Illustrated. Square 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $3.00.

WHO WAS LOST AND IS FOUND.

A Novel. By Mrs. Oliphant, Author of "Sir Robert's Fortune," "Chronicles of Carlingford," "Harry Joscelyn," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

THE WHITE COMPANY.

By A. Conan Doyle. New Illustrated Edition. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental. (Nearly Ready.)

THE CHRISTMAS HIRELINGS.

A Novel. By M. E. Braddon, Author of "The Venetians," "John Marchmont's Legacy," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

A BREAD AND BUTTER MISS.

A Novel. By George Paston. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00.

HARPER'S LITTLE NOVELS.

THE ROYAL MARINE.

An Idyl of Narragansett Pier. By Brander Matthews. Illustrated by W. T. Smedley.

A KENTUCKY CARDINAL.

By James Lane Allen. Illustrated.

MINISTERS OF GRACE.

By Eva Wilder McGlasson. Illustrated.

ST. JOHN'S WOOING.

By M. G. McClelland. Illustrated.

AN AGITATOR.

By Clementina Black.

Square 32mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00 per volume.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

☞ The above works are for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by the publishers, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, Canada, or Mexico, on receipt of the price.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.'S HOLIDAY BOOKS.

THE LAST LEAF. By Oliver Wendell Holmes. New Holiday Edition. Illustrated from designs by F. Hopkinson Smith and George Wharton Edwards. Crown 8vo, tastefully bound, $1.50.

This pretty book derives a pathetic interest from Dr. Holmes's death, and from the touching prefatory note he wrote for this edition, here reproduced in facsimile of his handwriting.

THE OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES YEAR BOOK. Containing passages from the prose and poetry of Dr. Holmes for each day of the year. A very bright and delightful book. With a fine new portrait. Attractively bound, $1.00.

THEIR WEDDING JOURNEY. By W. D. Howells. Holiday Edition. With over 80 Illustrations, many of them full-page, by Clifford Carleton. Artistically bound. Crown 8vo, $3.00.

THE RUBAIYAT OF OMAR KHAYYAM. In the remarkable Translation of Edward Fitzgerald. With a Biography of Omar Khayyam, and a Biographical Sketch of Mr. Fitzgerald. Illustrated with 56 superb designs by Elihu Vedder. Popular Edition. Beautifully bound. Crown 8vo, $5.00.

TIMOTHY'S QUEST. A fine Holiday edition of one of Mrs. Wiggin's most popular stories. Very fully and artistically illustrated by Oliver Herford, and attractively bound. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

THE STORY OF A BAD BOY. By Thomas Bailey Aldrich. Holiday Edition. With numerous admirable illustrations by A. B. Frost. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

The remarkably engaging story, clear print, capital illustrations and unique binding, after a design by Mrs. Whitman, cannot fail to give this book great popularity.

LITTLE MR. THIMBLEFINGER AND HIS QUEER COUNTRY. A delightful book for children from eight to eighty. By Joel Chandler Harris, author of the "Uncle Remus" books. With 32 artistic and exceedingly entertaining Illustrations. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

IN SUNSHINE LAND. Poems for Young Folks. By Edith M. Thomas. Illustrated by Katharine Pyle. Crown 8vo, handsomely bound, $1.50.

WHEN MOLLY WAS SIX. A delightful story for children. By Eliza Orne White, author of "Winterborough." With a colored cover design and other pictures by Miss Pyle. $1.00.

THE FAVORITE SERIES. Four beautiful books, including Mr. Aldrich's "Majorie Daw and Other Stories," Mr. Harte's "Luck of Roaring Camp," Mr. Warner's "Backlog Studies," and Miss Jewett's "Tales of New England." Each has an etched title-page and a portrait frontispiece. Tastefully bound in Holiday style, $1.25 each; the set, in a box, $5.00.

UNGUARDED GATES, and Other Poems. By T. B. Aldrich. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1.25. A beautiful book containing the poems written by Mr. Aldrich in the last six years.

WHITTIER'S COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS. New Cambridge Edition. With a Biographical Sketch, Notes, Index to Titles and First Lines, a Portrait, and an Engraving of Whittier's Amesbury home. Uniform with the Cambridge Longfellow. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $2.00; half calf, gilt top, $3.50; tree calf or full levant, $5.50.

WHITTIER'S POETICAL WORKS. New Handy-volume Edition. Four beautiful volumes, large type, opaque paper, tasteful binding. With four Portraits and a View of Whittier's Oak Knoll home. Uniform with the Handy-volume Longfellow. 4 vols., 16mo, $5.00; half calf, extra, gilt top, $9.75; full morocco, flexible, in fine leather box, $9.75; full calf, flexible, $12.75.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER. A work of great interest, by Samuel T. Pickard. With 7 etched Portraits and Views. 2 vols., crown 8vo, gilt top, $4.00.

THE LIFE OF FRANCES POWER COBBE. Written by Herself. With a Portrait. 2 vols., 8vo, gilt top, $4.00.

Miss Cobbe is one of the most famous of living English women, and the story of her life is a book of extraordinary interest.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS. An excellent book on this knightly man and great citizen, by Edward Cary. In American Men of Letters Series. With a Portrait. 16mo, $1.25.

FAMILIAR LETTERS OF HENRY DAVID THOREAU. Edited with an Introduction and Notes, by Frank B. Sanborn. Uniform with Riverside Edition of Thoreau's Works. With a full Index. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1.50.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF MARIA EDGEWORTH. Edited by Augustus J. C. Hare, author of "Memorials of a Quiet Life," etc. With a Portrait and a View of Her Home. 2 vols., crown 8vo, $4.00.

PUSHING TO THE FRONT; or, Success Under Difficulties. By O. S. Marden. With 24 excellent Portraits of famous persons. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

A very stimulating book, full of anecdotes illustrating the victories won over obstacles by energy, pluck and persistency. A notable gift-book.

OCCULT JAPAN: The Way of the Gods. A book of great interest on the Shinto faith of Japan, from careful study and personal observation, by Percival Lowell, author of "Noto," "The Soul of the Far East," etc. Crown 8vo, $1.75.

CHILDHOOD IN LITERATURE AND ART.
A book of high critical character and interest. By Horace E. Scudder, author of "Men and Letters," etc. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1.25.

IN THE DOZY HOURS, AND OTHER PAPERS.
A book of nearly twenty bright essays, on a large variety of subjects, ranging from kittens to parents' rights, written with delightful humor and charm. By Agnes Repplier, author of "Books and Men," "Points of View," "Essays in Idleness," etc. Each of the four books, 16mo, $1.25.

TALK AT A COUNTRY HOUSE.
Interesting imaginary conversations, at an English country house, on famous Englishmen, English society, politics and literature, Assyrian inscriptions, etc. By Sir Edward Strachey. With a portrait and engraved title-page. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

STUDIES IN FOLK-SONG AND POPULAR POETRY.
A book of essays and popular poems, which will strongly appeal to those who are interested in the fresh literature of primitive thought and feeling. By Alfred M. Williams, author of "Sam Houston," etc. 12mo, gilt top, $1.50.

ESSAYS AND SERMONS BY SAMUEL LONGFELLOW.
Edited by Joseph May. With a Portrait. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1.50.

MASTER AND MEN:
The Sermon on the Mountain practiced on the Plain. A thoughtful book, contrasting current Christianity with that of Christ, and illustrating the Beatitudes by the lives of Moses, Paul, George Fox, General Gordon and George MacDonald. By Rev. Dr. W. B. Wright, author of "Ancient Cities" and "The World to Come." 16mo, $1.25.

RELIGIOUS PROGRESS.
A small book on a large subject treated with admirable learning, rare breadth of view, and a finely tolerant spirit. By A. V. G. Allen, author of "The Continuity of Christian Thought." 16mo, $1.00.

GLIMPSES OF UNFAMILIAR JAPAN.
A work of great interest on the less known portions and customs of Japan. By Lafcadio Hearn. 2 vols., 8vo, gilt top, $4.00.
"A very great book."—New York Times.

THE PEARL OF INDIA.
An informing and very readable book about Ceylon. By M. M. Ballou, author of "Due East," "Due West," "Due North," "Due South," "Under the Southern Cross," "Equatorial America," "The New Eldorado," "Aztec Land," "The Story of Malta," etc. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

RIVERBY.
A volume of eighteen charming outdoor papers on flowers, eggs, birds, mountains, prairies and other appetizing subjects, treated with great freshness and insight. By John Burroughs, author of "Wake Robin," "Signs and Seasons," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

FROM BLOMIDON TO SMOKY, AND OTHER PAPERS.
A book of observation in the Provinces and elsewhere. By the late Frank Bolles, author of "Land of the Lingering Snow" and "At the North of Bearcamp Water." 16mo, $1.25.

A FLORIDA SKETCH-BOOK.
A charming outdoor book on things observed in Florida. By Bradford Torrey, author of "Birds in the Bush," "A Rambler's Lease," and "The Foot-path Way." 16mo, $1.25.

TUSCAN CITIES.
By W. D. Howells. New Edition, from new plates, uniform with his novels. 12mo, $1.50.

⁂ Sold by all Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & COMPANY, BOSTON, MASS.

NEW BOOKS

Published by LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO., New York.

ANDREW LANG'S NEW FAIRY BOOK.

The Yellow Fairy Book.

Edited by ANDREW LANG. With 22 plates and 82 illustrations in the text by H. J. Ford. Cloth, gilt edges, $2.00.

⁂ Uniform with "The Blue Fairy Book," "The Green Fairy Book," etc.

"The Yellow Fairy Book" immediately takes place among the leading juvenile publications of the fall, and a large share of holiday favoritism may be pledged to it in advance, for its predecessors have hewn a path for it.

Mr. Lang's graceful and prepossessing style presents these old and yet ever new tales in charming text, and the numerous full-page and smaller illustrations by H. J. Ford are spirited and in complete harmony with the stories. Without it is one of the handsomest and within one of the most entertaining books the season can produce."—Boston Times.

H. RIDER HAGGARD'S NEW NOVEL.

The People of the Mist.

A Tale of African Adventure. By H. RIDER HAGGARD, author of "Nada, the Lily," "Montezuma's Daughter," "She," etc. With 16 full-page Illustrations. Crown 8vo, $1.25.

"The thread of romance running through the book is very picturesque and includes the rescue of a beautiful English girl from a pack of blood-thirsty slave dealers. If for nothing else the author is to be admired for a wonderful imagination, which calls up visions hitherto undreamed of by the more prosaic reader and leads him into the strange land of the impossible."—Detroit Press.

NEW VOLUME OF STORIES BY MRS. WALFORD.

"Ploughed," and Other Stories.

By L. B. WALFORD, author of "Mr. Smith," "One Good Guest," etc. Crown 8vo, $1.00.

"Notable examples of the author's ability to depict character with a fine and subtle touch. . . . Mrs. Walford's stories are attractive in every way. The literary quality is excellent, the style graceful and fascinating, and the humor animated without being forced."—Boston Beacon.

MRS. WALFORD'S NEW NOVEL.

The Matchmaker.

By L. B. WALFORD, author of "Mr. Smith," "One Good Guest," etc. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

"We have here a novel that is the equal of the author's well-known and popular 'Mr. Smith,' which means that it is very well worth reading."—Observer.

BY EDNA LYALL.

Doreen. The Story of a Singer.

By EDNA LYALL, author of "We Two," "Donovan," etc. Crown 8vo, buckram cloth, ornamental, 512 pages, $1.50.

"Edna Lyall's . . . new story . . . is one of her best. It has, naturally, enough of tragedy to make it intensely interesting without being sensational in any offensive sense. The heroine, Doreen, is a delightful character, sturdy, strong, lovable, womanly, and genuinely Irish."—Boston Daily Advertiser.

NEW VOLUME OF CANON LIDDON'S LIFE OF DR. PUSEY.

Life of Edward Bouverie Pusey, D. D.

By HENRY PARRY LIDDON, D. D., D. C. L., LL. D. Edited and prepared for publication by the Rev. J. O. Johnston, M. A., Vicar of All Saints', Oxford, and the Rev. Robert J. Wilson, D. D., Warden of Keble College. 4 vols., 8vo. With Portraits and Illustrations. Vols. I. and II., $9.00 net (ready).

Vol. III. $4.50 net (just published.)

"This volume deals with what may be considered, on the whole, the most important period of all in the history of the Oxford revival."—Standard.

THE FUR AND FEATHER SERIES. (New Volume.)

THE GROUSE. NATURAL HISTORY. By the Rev. H. A. MACPHERSON. SHOOTING. By A. J. STUART-WORTLEY. COOKERY. By GEORGE SAINTSBURY. With 13 Illustrations by A. J. Stuart-Wortley and A. Thoburn and various Diagrams in the Text. Crown 8vo, $1.75.

"It is difficult to know which to admire most—the excellent letterpress or the admirable illustrations."—Observer.

Studies of Nature on the Coast of Arran.

By GEORGE MILNER, author of "Country Pleasures." With 10 full-page Copper Plates and 12 Illustrations in the Text by W. Noel Johnson. 12mo, colored top, $2.00.

"A singularly readable and artistic little book. . . . Mr. Milner knows Arran thoroughly, and his volume is one which Arran visitors will be delighted with, so refreshingly unaffected and suggestive are his notes of rambles round the island. . . . The copper-plate engravings are perfect little artistic gems."—North British Daily Mail.

Stanley J. Weyman's Books.

"Few writers of fiction who have appeared in England in the last decade have given their readers more satisfaction than Mr. Stanley J. Weyman, and no single writer of this number can be said to have approached him, much less to have equaled him, in the romantic world of the historical novel. . . . His literature is good, so good that we accept it as a matter of course, as we do that of Thackeray and Scott. . . ."—Mail and Express, New York.

A Gentleman of France. Illustrated. $1.25.
My Lady Rotha. Illustrated. $1.25.
Under the Red Robe. Illustrated. $1.25.
The House of the Wolf. Illustrated. $1.25.

NEW NOVEL BY MR. HORNUNG.

The Unbidden Guest.

By E. W. HORNUNG, author of "A Bride from the Bush," etc. Crown 8vo, cloth, ornamental, $1.00.

"A very vivid and impressive book, which abounds in strong passages, and is well sustained throughout . . . harrowing and tragic in parts, but undeniably forcible and touching. It is, indeed, the best story we have yet read of Mr. Hornung's."—Westminster Gazette.

SIR EDWIN ARNOLD'S NEW BOOK.

Wandering Words.

Reprinted Papers from Various Sources.

By Sir EDWIN ARNOLD, M. A., K. C. I. E., C. S. I., author of "Seas and Lands," "The Light of Asia," etc. With 23 plates and 22 Illustrations in the Text from Drawings by Ben Boothby and from Photographs. 8vo, $5.00.

"It would be difficult to name a book more suited for the general reader, interested in many men and things. There is something in it to please most kinds of appetites. And everything, happily, is at first hand, and calculated to instruct as well as to entertain and charm."—Globe.

The Playground of Europe.

By LESLIE STEPHEN, formerly President of the Alpine Club. New Edition with Additions and 4 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

From Edinburgh to the Antarctic.

An Artist's Notes and Sketches during the Dundee Antarctic Expedition of 1892–93. By W. G. BURN MURDOCH. With a chapter by W. S. Bruce, Naturalist of the Barque "Balæna." With 2 Maps. 8vo, $5.00.

"A racy chronicle of a remarkable voyage. . . . With its cheery good humor, its graphic narrative, and its abundant illustrations it is sure to be a successful book of the season."—North British Daily Mail.

A History of Painting.

By J. C. VAN DYKE, L. H. D., Professor of the History of Art in Rutgers College, and author of "Principles of Art," "Art for Art's Sake," etc. With Frontispiece and 109 illustrations in the Text. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

English History in Shakespeare's Plays.

By BEVERLEY E. WARNER, M. A. With Bibliography, Chronological Tables and Index. Crown 8vo, $1.75.

History of the Commonwealth and Protectorate, 1649-1660.

By SAMUEL RAWSON GARDINER, M. A., Hon. LL. D. Edinburgh, Fellow of Merton College, Honorary Student of Christ Church, etc. Vol. I. 1649–1651. $7.00.

The History of Marriage, Jewish and Christian.

In Relation to Divorce and Certain Forbidden Degrees. By the Rev. HERBERT MORTIMER LUCKOCK, D. D., Dean of Litchfield. Crown 8vo, $1.75.

Recollections of Old Country Life, Social, Political, Sporting, and Agricultural.

By J. K. FOWLER ("Rusticus") formerly of Aylesbury, author of "Echoes of Old Country Life." With Portraits, etc. 8vo, $3.00.

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO., Publishers, 15 East 16th Street, New York.

T. Y. Crowell & Company's New Books and New Editions.

Abbe Daniel (The).

By André Theuriet. Translated by Helen B. Dole. Photogravure frontispiece, rubricated title-page, and 25 exquisite half-tone illustrations. Daintily bound in parti-cloth with printed wrapper. 16mo, gilt top, $1.00.

"The Abbé Daniel" is a charming idyl of French country home life. The characters are most vividly portrayed, the scenery is painted with a masterly hand and the style is simply exquisite. It is a gem in every way, and the illustrations are in dainty accord with the crystalline style.

Alhambra (The) and Sketch Book.

By Washington Irving. Printed on fine paper and illustrated with 42 reproductions of photographs and original illustrations by eminent artists. Photogravure frontispieces. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $3.00; white back, gilt top, $3.00; half calf, gilt top, $6.00.

Irving's ever fresh and delightful word-pictures of the scenery and history of "The Alhambra" are undoubtedly destined to live as long as the language in which they are composed. Similar praise may be given to "The Sketch Book." These, illustrated with appropriate photogravures, make sumptuous and fascinating companion volumes.

Boswell's Life of Johnson.

Edited by Mowbray Morris. Printed from new plates on fine paper, with 34 portraits. Photogravure frontispieces. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $3.00; white back, gilt top, $3.00; half calf, gilt top, $6.00.

Boswell, who had remarkably good opportunities of studying the great Dr. Johnson in every mood and phase of his character, produced a biography which has, by unanimous consent, taken its place in the very front rank. The present edition is carefully edited by Mowbray Morris and contains many elucidatory notes in addition. It is admirably printed, and illustrated with portraits of the principal persons mentioned in the text.

Building of Character (The).

By the Rev. J. R. Miller, D. D., author of "Making the Most of Life," etc. 16mo, white back, gilt top, boxed, $1.00; white and gold, gilt edges, $1.25; levant morocco, flexible, gilt edges, $2.50.

"Nothing else we can do or make in this world is so important as that which we build along the years in ourselves. What we are at the end is a great deal truer test of living than what we have, or what we have done."—Extract from the Introduction.

Count of Monte Cristo (The).

By Alexandre Dumas. Complete and accurate translation. Printed from new plates on fine paper. With 18 new illustrations by Frank T. Merrill. Photogravure frontispieces. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $3.00; white back, gilt top, $3.00; half calf, gilt top, $6.00.

Dumas is the king of story-tellers. "Monte Cristo" is perhaps the most popular, as it is the most romantic, of all the great Frenchman's stories; and the present edition, which represents the original in good English, free from the multitudinous blunders that have disfigured every previous translation without exception, is offered with all confidence to the public as the best and completest to be had.

Faber's Hymns.

With 50 illustrations, by L. J. Bridgman. 16mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25; white binding, gilt top, $1.25.

Many of Faber's Hymns have taken their place among the lyric treasures of every denomination. They are so spontaneous, genuine and beautiful that all who love religious poetry find in them something satisfactory, and the little book, exquisitely illustrated and bound, will undoubtedly find friends wherever it goes.

Famous Leaders Among Men.

By Sarah K. Bolton, author of "Poor Boys who Became Famous," etc. With portraits of Napoleon, Wendell Phillips, Thomas Arnold, Charles Kingsley and others. 12mo, cloth, uniform with previous volumes, $1.50.

Mrs. Bolton adds to her gallery of pen-portraits another series including Napoleon, Lord Nelson, General Sherman, Bunyan, Beecher, Spurgeon, Kingsley, Phillips Brooks, Thomas Arnold, Wendell Phillips. Having great contrast in her choice of subjects, she succeeds with even more than her usual skill in presenting to the young inspiring and encouraging sketches of character.

Golden Words for Daily Council.

By Anna H. and Huntington Smith. New Edition. Illustrated with 16 portraits of eminent divines and authors. 16mo, white and colors, gilt edges, $1.25.

Mrs. Huntington Smith's admirable little compilation of comforting and helpful extracts has met with remarkable popularity, which will surely be increased by the new edition. It is a most suitable and admirable gift-book for birthdays or friendly memorials.

Scott's Complete Poetical Works.

With introduction by Prof. Charles Eliot Norton. Carefully edited with explanatory notes. Printed from new plates on fine paper. With 34 illustrations by eminent artists. Photogravure frontispieces. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $3.00; white back, gilt top, $3.00; half calf, gilt top, $6.00.

Handy Volume Classics.

Convenient in size, printed on fine paper. Photogravure frontispieces and titles, and illustrations by the best artists. Six styles of binding, as follows:

Vellum cloth, gilt top, $0.75. Parti-cloth, gilt top, $0.75. Silk, gilt edge, $1.00. Half leather, gilt top, $1.25. Half calf, gilt top, $2.00. Half levant, gilt top, $2.25.

This wonderfully popular series now comprises 44 volumes of choice works in Prose and Poetry, representing a variety that appeals to almost every cultured taste. The additions this season are as follows:

Childe Harold's Pilgrimage. By Lord Byron. With 21 exquisite illustrations.

Favorite Poems. Selected from English and American authors. With illustrations by the best artists.

Light of Asia (The). By Sir Edwin Arnold. With portrait and illustrations by W. St. John Harper.

Nature. Addresses and Lectures. By Ralph Waldo Emerson. With portrait.

Representative Men. By Ralph Waldo Emerson. With portrait.

Tartarin on the Alps. By Alphonse Daudet. With portrait and 50 pen-and-ink illustrations.

History of the Christian Church.

By H. C. Sheldon, Professor in Boston University. 5 vols., 8vo, per set, $10.00.

The Early Church. $2.00. The Mediæval Church. $2.00. Modern Church. Part I. $2.00. Modern Church. Part II. $2.00. Modern Church. Part III. $2.00.

This work is the fruit of Professor Sheldon's labors and study for upwards of twenty years. He has applied ripe scholarship, excellent taste, broad views, to a subject which must appeal to a very large class of readers.

Life and Inventions of Thomas A. Edison.

By W. K. L. Dickson and Antonia Dickson. With numerous drawings and photographs. 4to, cloth, boxed, $4.50.

The authors of this biography have been permitted to write the first complete and authentic story of this great American inventor. They have been from the first in close touch with the man himself, and have had the benefit of his aid in describing the making and use of his inventions. It is brought down to the immediate present, even including a description of the Kinetograph, and makes one of the handsomest gift-books of the year.

Milton's Complete Poetical Works.

With introduction by David Masson, and biographical sketch by N. H. Dole. Printed on fine paper, with 34 illustrations. Photogravure frontispieces. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth, $3.00; white back, $3.00; half calf, $6.00.

Pelleas and Melisande.

A drama by Maurice Maeterlinck, "the Flemish Shakespeare." Translated by Erving Winslow. 16mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.00.

Socialism. An Examination of its Nature, its Strength and

Its Weakness, with Suggestions for Social Reform. By Richard T. Ely, Ph. D., LL. D., Professor of Political Economy and Director of the School of Economics, Political Science, and History in the University of Wisconsin. Vol. III. in Crowell's Library of Economics. One vol., xiii + 449 pp. 11 appendices; bibliography; index. Cloth, $1.50. Fourth edition.

Three Musketeers (The).

By Alexandre Dumas. With new introduction by his son, and 250 illustrations by Maurice Leloir. Photogravure frontispieces. Complete and accurate translation. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $3.00; white back, gilt top, $3.00; half calf, gilt top, $6.00.

The freshness and vivacity of Dumas's style, the contagious enthusiasm which never flags from the first page to the last make his romances of perennial interest. "The Three Musketeers" shows him at his best. The French publishers have signalized its popularity by issuing a superb edition in two volumes, with 250 illustrations by Maurice Leloir, the greatest of French designers. The text of that edition has been followed in the present translation, which, it is hoped, will be found more accurate and more in accordance with English idiom than any other. The illustrations have been carefully reproduced, and the two volumes are confidently offered to the American public as the best and cheapest edition published.

Twenty-five Years of Scientific Progress.

A series of lectures by Wm. North Rice, Professor of Geology in Wesleyan University. 16mo, 75 cents.

The titles of Professor Rice's lectures are "Twenty-five Years," "Evolution," "The Degree of Probability of Scientific Belief," "Genesis and Geology." There is a certain unity in these lectures, and they will interest a large circle of readers for their scientific and philosophical bearing on timely topics.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, by the publishers, upon receipt of price. New illustrated catalogue and announcement sent upon receipt of ten cents in stamps.

THOMAS Y. CROWELL & COMPANY,

46 East Fourteenth St., NEW YORK. 100 Purchase St., BOSTON.

Books for the Holidays and for All Seasons.

THE FAIRIES' FESTIVAL.

A Poem, by JOHN WITT RANDALL. Edited by FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOTT. With forty illustrations in photogravure from original drawings by Francis Gilbert Attwood. 1 vol., small quarto, size 7 x 9, fancy cloth binding, full gilt, gilt top, $3.00.

The author of this charming poem, who died in 1892 at the age of seventy-eight, was a great-grandson of the illustrious patriot of the Revolution, Samuel Adams, and spent his long life of leisure in a retirement dedicated to literary study and the fine arts. The subject of this poem is the annual festival of the fairies, and exhibits a fascinating union of beautiful, pathetic, and grotesque elements. Like the ever-recurring theme or motif of one of Wagner's operas, the little people's anxiety to know "whether they have souls or not" strikes a somber shadow through their merriment, and touches a chord to which the human heart is by no means unresponsive. But the poem itself, with its great descriptive power and its weird Rembrandtesque contrasts of light and shade, must be read to be appreciated. As the work of one too proud and too indifferent to fame to let himself be known in his lifetime, the publication of this altogether unique poem may yet prove to be an event of no small importance in the history of American literature.

THE INNOCENTS ABROAD; or, The New Pilgrim's Progress. By MARK TWAIN. New edition. Fully illustrated with thirty photogravure illustrations of scenery, cities and architecture visited by the author and his fellow-pilgrims on their famous excursion to Europe and the Holy Land in 1867. 2 vols., crown octavo, cloth, gilt tops, $5.00; or, half-levant morocco, gilt tops, $9.00.

HYPATIA; or, New Foes with an Old Face. By CHARLES KINGSLEY. New edition. With two photogravure frontispieces and twenty-eight full-page half-tone illustrations and many illustrations in the text. 2 vols., crown octavo, cloth, gilt tops, $4.00; or, half-levant morocco, gilt tops, $7.50.

LORNA DOONE. By R. D. BLACKMORE. The only complete illustrated edition. With a wealth of illustrations comprising over 200 beautiful text illustrations and thirty photogravures from original photographs of Devon and Somerset scenery. 2 vols., crown octavo, in green silk or white cloth and cloth jacket, gilt tops, $6.00; or, in half-levant morocco, gilt tops, $10.00.

SOME OLD-TIME BEAUTIES. By THOMSON WILLING. Ten sketches, biographic and literary, of distinguished beauties and ladies of rank of the Georgian Era. Illustrated in photogravure from the original portraits by Sir Joshua Reynolds, Sir Thomas Lawrence, Romney and Gainsborough, with cover, decorative borders, title-page, half-titles and tail pieces by the author. 1 vol., small quarto, size 7 x 9, bound in cloth, gilt tops, with photogravure design on side, $3.00.

RIP VAN WINKLE. By WASHINGTON IRVING. New edition. With twenty-four photogravure illustrations from original photographs of Kaatskill Mountain scenery by Ernest Edwards, and many text illustrations by Frank T. Merrill. 1 vol., small quarto, size 7 x 9, fancy cloth binding, gilt top, $3.00.

LITTLE JOURNEYS ABROAD. By MARY BOWERS WARREN. A volume of travel sketches, with sixty illustrations from original drawings by George H. Boughton, E. K. Johnson, Will H. Drake, Irving R. Wiles and J. A. Holzer. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth, full gilt and gilt edges, $2.00.

CHILD LIFE IN ART. By ESTELLE M. HURLL, M. A. Six chapters comprising childhood in Ideal Types, Children Born to the Purple, the Children of Field and Village, the Child Life of the Streets, Child Angels and the Christ Child. Illustrated with twenty-five beautiful half-tone illustrations from celebrated paintings by Raphael, Titian, Van Dyck, Velasquez, Reynolds and other artists. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, $2.00.

THROUGH EVANGELINE'S COUNTRY. By JEANNETTE A. GRANT. With color frontispiece of Evangeline, a map of the Acadian country and thirty half-tone illustrations from original photographs. 1 vol., square 12mo, gilt top, $2.00.

"This book combines history, romance and description in about equal proportions. It will be a delightful souvenir to all who have visited the Annapolis valley, and to those who have not it ought to supply the necessary incentive for a voyage thither."—Boston Beacon.

TALES FROM SHAKESPEARE. By CHARLES and MARY LAMB. A pretty edition of this well-known classic. Illustrated with 20 drawings by the celebrated French artist, H. Pillé. Etched by L. Monzies. 2 vols., 16mo, half white vellum cloth and silk side, gilt top, $3.00.

ROMANCE SWITZERLAND. }
TEUTONIC SWITZERLAND. } By WILLIAM D. MCCRACKAN, A. M., author of "The Rise of the Swiss Republic." 2 vols., 32mo, cloth, gilt top, per set, $1.50.

The Same. Illustrated Edition. With twelve photogravure illustrations of Swiss scenery in each volume. 2 vols., 32mo, white cloth and china silk, gilt tops, or green cloth, handsome gilt sides and gilt tops, per set, $3.00.

A new work on Switzerland in two volumes, the first volume covering French and Italian Switzerland and the second the German-speaking cantons. It has been the aim of the author, who by long residence in the country is well fitted to write about it, to picture the real Switzerland and its people as they are, divested of the glamour of romance. His book will neither be a guide-book nor the old-fashioned routine book of travel made up of transcripts from diaries or hastily written letters to indulgent friends.

PIPE AND POUCH. The Smoker's Own Book of Poetry. Compiled by JOSEPH KNIGHT. With frontispiece illustration in half-tone. 1 vol., square 16mo, ornamental cloth binding, gilt top, $1.25; or, full havana colored leather, flexible round corners, gilt edges, $2.50.

The Same. Large paper edition, limited to 250 signed copies. Printed on Van Gelder hand-made paper, with photogravure frontispiece from Meissonier's "The Smoker." 1 vol., 12mo, uncut edges, net $3.00.

This somewhat unique volume of collected verse is the result of many years' gleaning from a great variety of sources of all the best verse devoted to praise of the weed. It will be a matter of surprise to most readers to find how much has been written that is clever and bright on the theme of smoking.

WILD FLOWER SONNETS. By EMILY SHAW FORMAN. With twelve illustrations from original drawings by Abbott Graves. 1 vol., 16mo, fancy cloth and satine, gilt top, $1.00.

A series of graceful and exquisite verses in praise of our familiar wild flowers. A well-known writer says of them: "I would to all the nine muses that our songsters and rhymsters could give us always something as pure as these sonnets. No one could have written them who did not comprehend nature. There is no mistake about the author's being a botanist, a lover of nature's accuracies; she has the skill of a collector, as well as the music of a singer, and the eye of a poet."

A GIRL I KNOW. Twelve photogravures from original studies by MRS. N. GRAY BARTLETT, with verses by Marian L. Wyatt. 1 vol., quarto, size 8 x 10, fancy cloth binding, $2.00.

A new series of charming studies from life by Mrs. Bartlett, whose work in "Old Friends with New Faces" and "Mother Goose of '93" is so well known.

A PRINCESS OF THULE. By WILLIAM BLACK. A new edition of this delightful story, with eighty new text illustrations, and a colored frontispiece of Sheila, the heroine, by Ethel Isadore Brown. 1 vol., small quarto, with an original and artistic binding, $2.00.

CRANFORD. By MRS. GASKELL. With an introduction by Rev. Brooke Herford. An entirely new edition of this charming volume, with 100 illustrations, including a colored frontispiece from an original drawing by Frank T. Merrill. 1 vol., small quarto, fancy cloth, gilt top, $2.00.

JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN. By Miss MULOCK. A new edition of a story of which readers, young and old, never tire. With 40 new half-tone illustrations, and a colored frontispiece from an original drawing by Miss Laura C. Hills. 1 vol., small quarto, fancy cloth, gilt top, $2.00.

A complete illustrated catalogue of our publications mailed FREE to any address. Our books are for sale by booksellers, or will be sent, post or express paid, on receipt of the price.

JOSEPH KNIGHT COMPANY, 196 SUMMER STREET, BOSTON.

Books for the Holidays & for all Seasons

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

THE SKETCH-BOOK.

By WASHINGTON IRVING. The Van Tassel Edition, uniform in general style with the Holiday edition of "The Alhambra." 2 volumes, octavo, with artistic borders and 32 illustrations, cloth extra, $6.00; three-quarter levant, $12.00.

MEMOIRS OF THE REIGN OF GEORGE III.

By HORACE WALPOLE. Edited by G. F. Russell Barker. Four volumes, 8vo, with 16 portraits in photogravure. Letterpress edition. Per set, in cloth extra, $18.00; 25 copies have illustrations printed on India paper, and for these sets the price is $25.00.

THE ARIEL SHAKESPEARE.

(Now Complete.) Each play is in a separate volume, 3¼ x 5 inches, printed from new type. The text is complete and unabridged, with 500 illustrations by FRANK HOWARD. Now complete in 40 volumes, and issued in four styles:

A.—Garnet cloth, each, 40 cents; per set, 40 volumes, in box, $16.00.

B.—Full leather. gilt top, each (in a box), 75 cents; per set. 40 volumes, in a box, $30.00.

C.—40 volumes bound in 20, cloth, in box, per set (sold in sets only), $15.00.

D.—40 volumes bound in 20, half calf extra, gilt tops, in box, per set (sold in sets only), $35.00.

THE STORY OF THE CIVIL WAR.

A Concise Account of the War in the United States of America between 1861 and 1865. By JOHN C. ROPES, author of "The First Napoleon," etc. To be complete in three parts. Part I., Narrative of Events to the Opening of the Campaign of 1862. With 5 maps, 8vo, $1.50.

THE WINNING OF THE WEST.

By THEODORE ROOSEVELT, author of "Hunting Trips of a Ranchman," "The Wilderness Hunter," etc. Volume III. The Founding of the Trans-Alleghany Commonwealths, 1784–1790. 8vo, with map, $2.50.

HOLLAND AND ITS PEOPLE.

By EDMONDO DE AMICIS. Van Dyke Edition. With 84 illustrations. 8vo, $2.25.

SPAIN AND THE SPANIARDS.

By EDMONDO DE AMICIS. Saragossa Edition. 8vo, with illustrations, $2 25.

⁂ The Van Dyke Edition of "Holland and Its People" and the Saragossa Edition of "Spain and the Spaniards" are put up together (with jackets) in a box. 2 volumes, 8vo, $4.50; half calf extra, $9.00.

SIX MONTHS IN THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

By ISABELLA BIRD BISHOP. First American edition, reprinted (under arrangement) from the eighth English edition. With 16 full-page illustrations, headpieces, initials and map. 8vo, cloth, $2.25.

HEROES OF THE NATIONS.

Biographical studies of the lives and work of certain leaders of men about whom have gathered the great traditions of the Nations to which they belonged, and who have been accepted as types of the several national ideals. Edited by EVELYN ABBOTT, M. A., Balliol College, Oxford.

Large 12mo, fully illustrated; each, cloth, extra, $1.50; half leather, $1.75.

"The fascinating series of 'Heroes of the Nations.'"—Literary World.

Now Ready:

XIII.—Julian, the Philosopher, and the Last Struggle of Paganism against Christianity. By ALICE GARDNER, Lecturer in Newnham College, Cambridge.

XII.—Prince Henry (the Navigator) of Portugal, and the Age of Discovery in Europe. By C. R. BEAZLEY, M. A., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford.

XI.—Abraham Lincoln, and the Downfall of American Slavery. By NOAH BROOKS.

X.—Cicero, and the Fall of the Roman Republic. By J. L. STRACHAN DAVIDSON, M. A., Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. With many illustrations.

IX.—Henry of Navarre, and the Huguenots in France. By P. F. WILLERT, M. A., Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford.

VIII.—Napoleon, Warrior and Ruler, and the Military Supremacy of Revolutionary France. By W. O'CONNOR MORRIS.

VII.—John Wyclif, Last of the Schoolmen and First of the English Reformers. By LEWIS SERGEANT.

VI.—Julius Cæsar, and the Organization of the Roman Empire. By W. WARDE FOWLER, M. A.

"It gives an account of a critical period in the world's history which is at once vivid and trustworthy, and the greater the reader's familiarity with the times of which it treats the more he will admire the competence and the sagacity of his guide."—London Academy.

V.—Sir Philip Sidney, Type of English Chivalry. By H. R. FOX BOURNE.

"Of the men already commemorated in the fascinating series of 'Heroes of the Nations,' no one is more worthy of a place in the honorable category than Philip Sidney, the most heroic heart of an heroic age."—Literary World.

IV.—Theodoric, the Goth, the Barbarian Champion of Civilization. By THOMAS HODGKIN, D. C. L.

"A highly important and valuable contribution to historical literature, more especially such of this literature as concerns this obscure period in Europe."—Chicago Standard.

III.—Pericles, and the Golden Age of Athens. By EVELYN ABBOTT, M. A.

"A book of the utmost importance to thoughtful readers who would have a just comprehension of what Athens really was, and of a personality which well deserves to be classed with the world's heroes."—The Beacon, Boston.

II.—Gustavus Adolphus, and the Struggle of Protestantism for Existence. By C. R. L. FLETCHER, M. A.

"We know of no book which so clearly and satisfactorily covers this confused but deeply significant period of European history."—Christian Union.

I.—Nelson, and the Naval Supremacy of England. By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

"The spirit and tone of the book are alike good. Mr. Russell writes with admirable good sense, discretion and taste."—London World.

FAIRY TALES AND FOLK-LORE.

The Light Princess, and Other Fairy Tales. By GEORGE MACDONALD. Illustrated by Maud Humphrey. Cloth, $1.75.

The Little Mermaid, and Other Fairy Tales. By HANS ANDERSEN. Fully illustrated by J. R. Weguelin. 4to, $3 00.

Fairy Tales from the Arabian Nights. Pictured by JOHN D. BATTEN. 8vo, $2.00.

Chinese Nights' Entertainments. By ADELE M. FIELDE. Illustrated by Chinese Artists. 8vo, $1.75.

English Fairy Tales. Collected by JOSEPH JACOBS, President of the English Folk-Lore Society. Pictured by John D. Batten. 12mo, $1.75.

More English Fairy Tales. Compiled by JACOBS. Illustrated by Batten. 12mo, $1.75.

Celtic Fairy Tales. Collected by JACOBS. Illustrated by Batten. 8vo, $1.75.

Indian Fairy Tales. Collected by JACOBS. Illustrated by Batten. 12mo, $1.75.

More Celtic Fairy Tales. Collected by JACOBS. Illustrated by Batten. $1.75.

STORY OF THE NATIONS.

A series of Graphic Historical Studies. Each narrative is complete in one volume, small 8vo, profusely illustrated and containing maps and plans. Per volume, cloth, extra, $1.50; half leather, gilt top, $1.75.

"This is the very plan on which Herodotus and Livy wrote their immortal histories, or rather stories . . . historians who were also superb story-tellers, and story-tellers who were capital historians, with a sprinkle and twinkle of poetry thrown in for full measure."—N. Y. Critic.

Now Ready:

43. Crusades, by ARCHER and KINGSFORD.
42. Venice, by WIEL.
41. South Africa, by SHEAL.
40. Australasia, by TREGARTHEN.
39. Recovery of Spain, by WATTS.
38. Japan, by MURRAY.
37. Parthia, by RAWLINSON.
36. Poland, by MORFILL.
35. Tuscan Republics, by DUFFY.
34. Sicily, by FREEMAN.
33. Byzantine Empire, by OMAN.
32. Portugal, by STEPHEN.
31. Switzerland, by STEAD and HUG.
30. Scotland, by MACKINTOSH.
29. The Jews under Rome, by MORRISON.
28. Russia, by MORFILL.
27. The Barbary Corsairs, by LANE POOLE.
26. Early Britain, by CHURCH.
25. The Hansa Towns, by ZIMMERN.
24. Phœnicia, by RAWLINSON.
23. Mexico, by HALE.
22. Holland, by ROGERS.
21. Mediæval France, by MASSON.
20. Media and Babylon, by RAGOZIN.
19. Turkey, by LANE POOLE.
18. The Goths, by BRADLEY.
17. Ireland, by LAWLESS.
16. Assyria, by RAGOZIN.
15. Alexander's Empire, by MAHAFFY.
14. Ancient Egypt, by RAWLINSON.
13. Persia, by BENJAMIN.
12. The Normans, by JEWETT.
11. The Moors in Spain, by LANE POOLE.
10. The Saracens, by GILMAN.
9. Carthage, by CHURCH.
8. Hungary, by VAMBERY.
7. Spain, by HALE.
6. Norway, by BOYESEN.
5. Germany, by BARING-GOULD.
4. Chaldea, by RAGOZIN.
3. The Jews, by HOSMER.
2. Rome, by GILMAN.
1. Greece, by HARRISON.

Holiday Number of "Notes on New Books," a quarterly bulletin, illustrated catalogue of books for young people, prospectuses of the Story and Heroes of the Nations Series, sent on application.

NEW YORK:
27 and 29 West 23d St.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

LONDON:
24 Bedford St., Strand.

F. Warne & Co.'s Holiday Suggestions.

 Our Holiday Display Catalogue is now ready and free on application.

SHAKESPEARE (WILLIAM), THE COMPLETE WORKS OF.

THE LANSDOWNE INDIA PAPER EDITION,

(Containing the plays, poems, sonnets, life, and glossary) whereby the bulk is reduced to half that of the ordinary "Handy Volume" Edition. Beautifully printed in black ink, with title-pages and borders in carmine. In six pocket volumes. Size 4¾ x 3½ inches. Cloth binding, boxed, per set, $8.00; Spanish morocco, round corners, in morocco case, with clasp, $15.00; real Turkey morocco, limp, round corners, red under gold edges, morocco case, $22.50; or finest smooth calf, ditto, ditto, $22 50.

"The print easily readable. . . . The six little books make a pretty set in their chaste binding."—N. Y. Times.

CHARLES KNIGHT'S POPULAR HISTORY OF ENGLAND,

Brought down to the year of the Queen's Jubilee. With upwards of 1,000 most interesting engravings of manners, customs, costumes, coins, insignia, remains, etc., and a series of full-page steel portraits. Nine handsome 8vo volumes, cloth, gilt tops, in a box, $20.00; ditto, three-quarter morocco, extra, $45.00.

JUST READY, A NEW AND INEXPENSIVE EDITION OF

SCOTT'S WAVERLEY NOVELS.

The "Edinburgh" Edition. In small crown 8vo size, bound in 12 volumes, cloth, gilt tops, boxed, $15.00. Also in 25 volumes, smooth cloth, gilt tops, boxed, $20.00 per set. Also on thicker paper, with frontispieces to each volume, 25 volumes, $25.00.

 Each novel is complete and unabridged, averaging about 450 pages, containing all the prefaces and notes, and with a glossary of Scottish words at the foot of each page.

ABBEYS, CASTLES, AND ANCIENT HALLS OF ENGLAND AND WALES,

Their Legendary Lore and Popular History. By JOHN TIMBS and ALEXANDER GUNN. Embellished with twelve full-page, most interesting photogravures from the newest and best views of the subject procurable. Choicely printed on laid paper. Three volumes, large crown 8vo, gilt top, $7.50.

FOR THE REFERENCE LIBRARY.

WOOD'S DICTIONARY OF QUOTATIONS.

From Ancient and Modern English and Foreign Sources. Alphabetically arranged. 30,000 references, with an exhaustive Subject-Index. Now ready. In 1 volume. Demy 8vo, cloth, $2.50; half calf, gilt top, $4.50.

A NEW COLLECTION OF SHORT STORIES.

QUIET STORIES FROM AN OLD WOMAN'S GARDEN.

Silhouettes of English country life and character. By ALLISON M'LEAN, author of "A Holiday in the Austrian Tyrol." With photogravure frontispiece. Just ready. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

"Just such a class of people as Miss Wilkins loves to depict. . . . You close the book with a warmth in your hearts and a feeling of gratitude to the woman who has given you such pleasant thoughts of the narrow lives of the poor."—Home Journal, New York.

"Graceful and clear in diction, and simple, cheerful, or pathetic in tone, but all possessed of a pervasive charm."—Argonaut, San Francisco.

PUZZLES—OLD AND NEW.

Containing over four hundred puzzles, Mechanical, Arithmetical, and Curious, of every conceivable variety. Puzzles with cubes, wire, matches, and ingenious ideas, and "thinking puzzles" of all kinds, fully explained. Illustrated by over five hundred diagrams, etc., a Key and Index. By Professor HOFFMAN, the Conjurer (Angelo K. Lewis). In square 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

CHILDHOOD'S "OLD, OLD" FAVORITES.

Old, Old Fairy Tales. Swiss Family Robinson.
Robinson Crusoe. Arabian Nights.
Hans Andersen. Grimm's Fairy Tales.

Well printed and handsomely bound. Full of engravings, and with 16 full-page colored illustrations in each. 8vo size, $3.00 per volume.

TWO NEW BOOKS FOR BOYS.

STIRRING TALES OF COLONIAL ADVENTURE.

By SKIPP BORLASE, author of "Daring Deeds," etc., with page illustrations. Tales of Queensland, Australian Bushranging, exciting adventures in India, New Guinea, etc. In crown 8vo, cloth, gilt, $1.50.

IVANDA; OR, THE PILGRIM'S QUEST.

A Tale of Thibet. By Captain CLAUDE BRAY. With illustrations. Square 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

THE MAGIC HALF-CROWN.

By M. A. WRIGLEY. A story for children of from 10 to 14. With illustrations. 12mo, cloth, novel binding, 75 cents.

May be obtained of any bookseller, or will be sent free by mail, on receipt of price, by the publishers.

F. WARNE & CO., - - - 3 Cooper Union, New York.

A. S. BARNES & CO., Publishers,

56 East 10th Street, New York.

HISTORY OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK.

By Mrs. Martha J. Lamb.

A work that increases in value and importance, and is not for yesterday, today, and tomorrow only, but for all time.

READ THE TESTIMONIALS.

The late historian, GEORGE BANCROFT, wrote: "Mrs. Lamb's is in my view by far the best history of the city of New York."

The late distinguished Hon. GEORGE W. CURTIS wrote: "It is rich with information, and the interesting story was never so thoroughly and satisfactorily told."

The late Hon. THURLOW WEED wrote: "Such a book to an old New Yorker is cheap at any price. No library is complete without it."

The poet, EDMUND C. STEDMAN, writes: "It must be a standard; it always will be referred to; it has specific value and purpose; it is absolutely sure of a reading and a reputation in the distant future."

The Rev. RICHARD S. STORRS, D. D., writes: "Mrs. Lamb's enthusiasm for her theme has matched its greatness, and her treatment of it has been on the whole both ample and brilliant, just and engaging."

"A piece of historical painting which for brightness of color, distinctness of outline, and general truthfulness of detail deserves the highest commendation."—Harper's Magazine.

"Mrs. Lamb's work is built on a solid foundation which guarantees to it a secure place in the historical collections of the age."—Tribune, N. Y.

"Mrs. Lamb's 'History of New York City' should be in the library of every old New Yorker."—Sun, N. Y.

"As to all that belongs to the past this record offers a mine of varied, interesting, and authentic information indispensable to the student."—The Nation.

"It will be a desirable addition to private and public libraries in all parts of the country."—Chicago Tribune.

"It was full time that a faithful picture of New York should be written. Mrs. Lamb's style is pleasant and remarkably concise."—London Academy

TWO VOLS., ROYAL 8vo, CLOTH, $20.00.

"In mechanical execution the volumes are superb."—Rev. Dr. RICHARD S. STORRS.

Attention is also invited to the following new and standard books:

Barnes' Popular History of the United States.

New Edition. By the author of "Barnes' Brief History of the United States for Schools." 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, $3.50.

Fay's Three Germanys.

A History of Germany brought down to the Present Time. By THEODORE S. FAY, late U. S. Minister to Switzerland. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, $7.00.

"Minister Fay was an eye-witness of the important events of 1848, 1866, and 1870."—PHILIP SCHAFF.

Two New Novels:

The New Minister.

A Novel. (Just Published.) By KENNET PAUL. Cloth, $1.00.

A strong, clean story of pastoral life in a modern church.

"An unusually good book and merits a wide circulation."—Public Opinion.

Looking Within.

OR, A. D. 2027. (Just Published.) By J. W. ROBERTS. Cloth, $1 00.

A vivid picture of social phenomena as found in the twenty-first century.

"A remarkable book. . . . A sharp, logical, and conclusive reply to Bellamy's 'Looking Backward.'"—The Traveller, Boston.

"The product of a close observer and a vigorous, practical thinker."—Religious Telescope.

A Commentary on the New Testament.

Illustrated. By Rev. LYMAN ABBOTT, D. D., Editor of Outlook, and Pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, L. I. 5 volumes now ready. 8vo, cloth, per set, $7.50; per vol., $1.50.

1. Matthew. 2. Mark and Luke. 3. John. 4. The Acts. 5. Romans.

"We are strongly convinced that this is one of the ablest commentaries that this century has produced."—Bishop J. H. VINCENT.

 For Sale by all Booksellers, or mailed postpaid on receipt of price by the Publishers.

A. S. BARNES & CO., 56 East 10th Street, New York.

ROBERTS' HOLIDAY HINTS.

THE LITTLE LADY OF THE HORSE.

By EVELYN RAYMOND. With 21 Illustrations by MERRILL. Small 4to, Cloth, $1.50.

MOLIERE'S DRAMATIC WORKS.

A New Edition. Translated by KATHARINE PRESCOTT WORMELEY. With a Preface by BALZAC, Criticisms by SAINTE-BEUVE, and Portraits by COYPEL and MIGNARD. 6 vols., 12mo, half Russia, $1.50 per vol. (Vols. I. and II. ready.)

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL.

By LILIAN WHITING. 16mo, Cloth, $1.00; White and Gold, $1.25.

"After all, it rests with ourselves as to whether we shall live in a World Beautiful."—Page 10.

THE HOUSE OF THE WOLFINGS.

A Tale of the House of the Wolfings and all the Kindreds of the Mark, written in Prose and in Verse, by WILLIAM MORRIS, author of "The Earthly Paradise." 12mo, Oxford, $2.00.

BALLADS IN PROSE.

By NORA HOPPER. Square 12mo, Cloth. With a title-page and cover by WALTER WEST. American Copyright Edition. $1.50.

They strike one as most beautiful versions of Irish legends.

EMILY DICKINSON'S LETTERS.

From 1847 to 1886. Edited by MABEL LOOMIS TODD. With Portrait, view of Miss Dickinson's Home in Amherst, and facsimiles of her handwriting. 2 vols., 16mo, Cloth, $2.00.

IN HIS NAME.

A Story of the Waldenses, seven hundred years ago. By EDWARD E. HALE. Illustrated by JACOMB-HOOD. 16mo, Cloth, $1.25.

THE AIM OF LIFE.

Plain talks to young men and women. By Rev. PHILIP S. MOXOM. 16mo, Cloth, $1.00.

"Terse, graphic and impressive. Sensible, cheerful and dignified."—Congregationalist.

A CHILD OF THE AGE.

A Novel. By FRANCIS ADAMS. With title-page by AUBREY BEARDSLEY. 16mo, Cloth, $1.00.

THE POWER OF THE WILL; or, SUCCESS.

By H. RISBOROUGH SHARMAN. 16mo, Limp Cloth, 50 cents.

THE MINOR TACTICS OF CHESS.

A Treatise on the Deployment of the Forces in Obedience to Strategic Principle. By F. K. YOUNG and E. C. HOWELL. 16mo, Cloth, $1.00.

AS A MATTER OF COURSE.

By ANNIE PAYSON CALL. 16mo, Cloth, $1.00.

A continuation of "Power through Repose."

DISCORDS.

By GEORGE EGERTON. American Copyright Edition. 16mo, Cloth, $1.00.

VOYAGE OF THE LIBERDADE.

By Captain JOSHUA SLOCUM. Small 4to, Cloth. Illustrated. $1.00.

"She was 35 feet in length, 7.6 feet beam, and 3 feet hold." The central figure of a true though wonderful tale of the sea.

THE DAY'S MESSAGE.

A Brief Selection of Prose and Verse for each Day in the Year. Chosen by SUSAN COOLIDGE.

DAILY STRENGTH FOR DAILY NEEDS.

Selections for Every Day in the Year. Selected by the Editor of "Quiet Hours."

Each 16mo, Cloth, $1.00; White Cloth, gilt, $1.25; Morocco, padded, $3.00; Calf, padded, $3.50.

ROSES OF ROMANCE. (Keats)..$1.00
FLOWERS OF FANCY. (Shelley)..1.00
BALZAC'S NOVELS. 29 vols. Each..1.50
AUSTEN'S NOVELS. 12 vols. Each..1.25
FAR FROM TO-DAY. (Hall)..$1.00
CHARLES SUMNER. (Pierce). 4 vols..12.00
LIFE OF L. M. ALCOTT..1.50
THE THOUGHT OF GOD. 2 vols. Each..1.00

FATHER GANDER'S MELODIES.

For Mother Goose's Grandchildren. By ADELAIDE F. SAMUELS. Illustrated by LILLIAN TRASK HARLOW. Small 4to, Cloth, $1.25.

NOT QUITE EIGHTEEN.

By SUSAN COOLIDGE. A volume of stories. Illustrated by JESSIE MCDERMOTT. 16mo, Cloth, $1.25.

POMONA.

By the author of "Miss Toosey's Mission." 16mo, Cloth, $1.00.

THE CHILDREN'S YEAR-BOOK.

Selections for Every Day in the Year. Chosen and arranged by EDITH EMERSON FORBES. Square 16mo, Cloth, Gilt, $1.50.

RHYMES AND BALLADS FOR GIRLS AND BOYS.

By SUSAN COOLIDGE. Illustrated by Richards, Garrett and others. 8vo, Cloth, $1.50.

PENELOPE PRIG,

And Other Stories. By A. G. PLYMPTON. Illustrated by the author. Small 4to, Cloth, $1.00.

RAGS AND VELVET GOWNS.

By A. G. PLYMPTON. Illustrated by the author. Square 12mo, Cloth Back, Paper Sides, 50 cents.

ANOTHER GIRL'S EXPERIENCE.

A Story for Girls. By LEIGH WEBSTER. Illustrated by JESSIE MCDERMOTT. 16mo, Cloth, $1.25.

JOCK O' DREAMS.

A Child's Story-Book. By JULIE M. LIPPMANN. Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, $1.25.

JOLLY GOOD TIMES TO-DAY.

By MARY P. WELLS SMITH. Illustrated by JESSIE MCDERMOTT. 16mo, Cloth, $1.25.

THE KINGDOM OF COINS.

A Tale for Children of All Ages. By JOHN BRADLEY GILMAN. Illustrated by MERRILL. A new and improved edition. Small 4to, 60 cents.

COMIC TRAGEDIES.

Written by "Jo" and "Meg" and acted by the "Little Women." With a "Foreword" by "Meg," and Portraits of "Jo" and "Meg." 16mo, cloth, uniform with "Little Women," $1.50.

"Jolly Good Times" Stories. 17 vols. $1.25 each.
The "What Katy Did" Books 10 vols. $1.25 each.
Aunt Jo's Scrap Bag. 6 vols. $1.00 each.
Flora L. Shaw's Stories. 4 vols. $1.00 each.
Edward E. Hale's Stories. For Boys. 5 vols. $1.00 each.
Jean Ingelow's Stories. 5 vols. $1.25 each.
Mrs. Moulton's Stories. 5 vols. $1.25 each.
The Wesselhoeft Books. 4 vols. $1.25 each.
The Everett Books. 3 vols. $1 25 each.
The Little Women Series. 8 vols. $1.50 each.
The Spinning-Wheel Stories. 4 vols. $1.25 each.
Mrs. Ewing's Stories. 10 vols. 50 cents each.

THE HAPPY PRINCE AND OTHER TALES.

By OSCAR WILDE. With full-page Illustrations by WALTER CRANE and vignettes and tail-pieces by JACOMB-HOOD. Square 16mo, Cloth, $1.00.

IN MY NURSERY.

Rhymes, Chimes and Jingles for Children. By LAURA E. RICHARDS, author of "The Toto Books." Profusely Illustrated. Small 4to, Cloth, $1.25.

☞ At all the bookstores. Mailed, postage paid, on receipt of price.

ROBERTS BROTHERS, BOSTON.

Three Heroines of New England Romance.

I. PRISCILLA.

By Harriet Prescott Spofford.

II. AGNES SURRIAGE.

By Alice Brown.

III. MARTHA HILTON.

By Louise Imogen Guiney.

THEIR TRUE STORIES, with Notes on the Towns in which they lived—Plymouth, Marblehead and Portsmouth, and 87 illustrations from drawings by Edmund H. Garrett. 12mo, cloth, extra, $2.00.

A charming volume, dealing with the courtship and marriage of three famous beauties of old colonial times, illustrated with pictures of New England landscape, colonial houses, costumes of old time, Puritan men, and pretty Puritan women.

Nora Perry's New Book, Hope Benham.

A STORY FOR GIRLS. By Nora Perry, author of "Another Flock of Girls," "A Rosebud Garden of Girls," etc. With 8 full-page illustrations by Frank T. Merrill. 12mo, cloth, extra, $1.50.

"A healthy, hearty story, and one that young readers—and older ones, too—will find of fascinating interest. Boys as well as girls figure pleasantly in the book."—Boston Transcript.

"Miss Perry knows girls as Hughes knows boys, and her books are as wholesome as 'School Days at Rugby.'"—Boston Herald.

"It will be a girl's favorite."—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Centuries Apart.

"A novel that will be widely read for many years to come."—N. Y. World.

"This novel is a remarkable one."—Boston Daily Advertiser.

"Graphically reminiscent of mediæval times. A delightful picture painted in rich color artistically blended."—Boston Transcript.

CENTURIES APART. By Edward T. Bouve. With illustrations by W. St. John Harper. 12mo, cloth, extra, $1.50.

A New Volume of Stories by the Author of "With Fire and Sword."

LILLIAN MORRIS and Other Stories, by Henryk Sienkiewicz. Translated from the Polish by Jeremiah Curtin. With illustrations by Edmund H. Garrett. 16mo, white and gold, $1.25. (Uniform with "Yanko the Musician, and Other Stories," by the same author.)

"Full of Power and Genius."—Christian Register.

"Strong and Masterful Tales."—Philadelphia Times.

"A Quartette of Short Stories that is Rarely Equaled."—Boston Times.

Little, Brown & Co., Publishers,

254 Washington Street, Boston.

Capt. Mahan's Works on Sea Power and History.

THE INFLUENCE OF SEA POWER UPON HISTORY. (1660-1783.) By Capt. A. T. Mahan, United States Navy, late President of the War College, Newport. With 25 charts illustrative of great naval battles. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $4.00.

THE INFLUENCE OF SEA POWER UPON THE FRENCH REVOLUTION AND EMPIRE. By Capt. A. T. Mahan. With 13 maps and battle plans. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $6.00. The two works together, in box, 3 vols., 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $10.00; half calf, extra, gilt top, $17.50.

Capt. A. T. Mahan's great historical works on the "Influence of Sea Power," the importance of which was conceded at the time of their publication, are now in constant demand, and several editions for America and England have been printed within a few months. He is now universally admitted to be one of the great modern historians; and his books are recognized everywhere for their originality, power, and lucidity of style, and as historical contributions of the highest importance.

Curb, Snaffle and Spur.

A method of Training Young Horses for the Cavalry Service and for General Use under the Saddle. By Edward L. Anderson, author of "Modern Horsemanship." With 31 half-tone illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

An edition of this work has been taken by the United States government for use in the cavalry service, and it is the opinion of officers of great experience in the service that it will be of the utmost use in breaking young horses.

"A book that already seems destined to have an international reputation."—Cincinnati Tribune.

The Napoleon Romances by Alexandre Dumas.

NEW Volumes in Little, Brown & Co.'s Library Edition of the romances of Alexandre Dumas. Excellent and unabridged translations. With 12 etchings and photogravures, and 12 half-tone plates, including historical portraits and original illustrations by E. Van Muyden, Edmund H. Garrett, Felix Oudart, and Frank T. Merrill. 6 vols., 12mo. In box. Decorated cloth, gilt top, $9.00; plain cloth, gilt top, $7.50.

The new volumes embrace:

I. The Companions of Jehu. 2 vols.

II. The Whites and the Blues. 2 vols.
Forming "The Napoleon Romances."

III. The She-Wolves of Machecoul and the Corsican Brothers. 2 vols.

Bartlett's Familiar Quotations. Ninth Edition, Greatly Enlarged.

At all times a favorite work; it is also one of the most popular books at the Christmas season. It is an indispensable work to every scholar, to every writer and to every reader. A book for every library and for every household. Of priceless worth to all who love literature.

FAMILIAR QUOTATIONS. A collection of Passages, Phrases and Proverbs traced to their Sources in Ancient and Modern Literature. By John Bartlett, author of "The Complete Shakespeare Concordance." Ninth Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, $3.00.

Little, Brown & Co., Publishers,

254 Washington Street, Boston.

A. C. Armstrong & Son's HOLIDAY BOOKS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

HISTORY OF ART IN PRIMITIVE GREECE.

MYCENIAN ART.

By GEORGES PERROT and CHARLES CHIPIEZ. With 564 Illustrations. Two vols., imperial 8vo, uniform with "History of Art in Ancient Egypt," "History of Art in Chaldea and Assyria," "History of Art in Phœnicia," "History of Art in Sardinia, Judæa, Syria, and Asia Minor," "History of Art in Phrygia, Lydia and Caria, Lycia, Persia." Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt top, $15.50; three-quarter crushed levant morocco, $22.50.

This New Work is the sixth in the Series by these distinguished writers on the "History of Ancient Art," the five previous works having achieved remarkable success and being accepted by the Highest Authorities as the Standard Works on the Subjects.

This great history is, in many respects, the most important contribution of modern times to the literature of art and archæology. As it progresses its value becomes more and more apparent. The illustrations are admirable as illustrative art, and abundant to bring the descriptive text within the comprehension of the ordinary reader, as well as the student. The value of these works to every reader of history, whether of mankind or of what man has produced, consists in the fact that we have here from a scholar of the first rank (and none holds higher rank than Perrot) the results, in digested form, of the extensive contributions of knowledge made by Layard, Rawlinson, Loftus, George Smith, Lenormant, Maspero, Oppert, and a host of other distinguished laborers in the field.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF

Edgar Allan Poe.

With a Memoir and an Introduction on the Genius of Poe

BY RICHARD H. STODDARD.

Messrs. Armstrong & Son have the pleasure of announcing that they have now ready A NEW EDITION of Poe's Works, in six tastefully printed volumes, to be known as

THE FORDHAM EDITION.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—The Fordham Edition contains etchings from Gifford, Church, Platt, Pennell, and other artists, also a portrait on steel of Poe, and a Japan-proof illustration of the Cottage at Fordham, made especially for this edition, while there are added facsimiles of the first draft of "The Bells," and a number of facsimile letters. The Etchings are printed upon India paper in the best possible manner.

BINDING.—The set is bound in an attractive and durable cloth binding, uncut edges, gilt top. Price for the set, in a neat box, $7.50. Also bound in half calf, extra, at $3 per vol.

It has been the aim of the publishers to offer volumes that shall possess all the advantages of éditions de luxe, at a reasonable price and of such size as to be conveniently handled and read.

Copies mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price, by

A. C. ARMSTRONG & SON,

51 East 10th St. (Near Broadway), N. Y.

VALUABLE GIFT BOOKS.

The Three Musketeers.

By ALEXANDRE DUMAS. An édition de luxe (limited to 750 copies), with 250 Illustrations by Maurice Leloir. In two volumes, royal 8vo. Buckram, with specially designed cover, in box, $12.00.

Climbing in the Himalayas.

By WILLIAM MARTIN CONWAY, M.A., F.R.G.S., Vice-President of the Alpine Club; formerly Professor of Art in University College, Liverpool. With 300 Illustrations by A. D. MCCORMICK, and a Map. 8vo. Cloth, $10.00

The United States of America.

A Study of the American Commonwealth, its Natural Resources, People, Industries, Manufactures, Commerce, and its Work in Literature, Science, Education, and Self-Government. Edited by NATHANIEL S. SHALER, S. D., Professor of Geology in Harvard University. In two volumes, royal 8vo. With Maps, and 150 full-page Illustrations. Cloth, $10.00. (Sold only by subscription.)

A History of the United States Navy,

From 1775 to 1894. By EDGAR STANTON MACLAY, A. M. With Technical Revision by Lieut. ROY C. SMITH, U. S. N. In two volumes. With numerous Maps, Diagrams, and Illustrations. 8vo. Cloth, $7.00.

In the Track of the Sun.

READINGS FROM THE DIARY OF A GLOBE TROTTER. By FREDERICK DIODATI THOMPSON. Profusely illustrated with Engravings from Photographs and from Drawings by HARRY FENN. Large 8vo. Cloth, gilt top, $6.00.

Memoirs Illustrating the History of Napoleon I,

From 1802 to 1815. By Baron CLAUDE FRANÇOIS DE MÉNEVAL, Private Secretary to NAPOLEON. Edited by his Grandson, Baron NAPOLEON JOSEPH DE MÉNEVAL. With Portraits and Autograph Letters. In three volumes. 8vo. Cloth, $6.00.

The Dawn of Civilization.

(EGYPT AND CHALDÆA.) By Prof. MASPERO. Edited by the Rev. Prof. SAYCE. Translated by M. L. MCCLURE. With Map and over 470 Illustrations. Quarto. Cloth.

Popular Astronomy:

A GENERAL DESCRIPTION OF THE HEAVENS. By CAMILLE FLAMMARION. Translated from the French by J. ELLARD GORE, F. R. A. S. With 3 Plates and 288 Illustrations. 8vo. Cloth, $4.50.

Schools and Masters of Sculpture.

By A. G. RADCLIFFE, author of "Schools and Masters of Painting." With 35 full-page Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, $3.00.

The Farmer's Boy.

By CLIFTON JOHNSON, author of "The Country School in New England," etc. With 64 Illustrations by the author. 8vo. Cloth, $2.50

Collected Essays.

By THOMAS H. HUXLEY. New complete edition, with revisions, the Essays being grouped according to general subject. In nine volumes, a new Introduction accompanying each volume. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25 per volume.

Great Commanders Series.

Brief biographies, of the highest order of excellence, of distinguished American military and naval men, from Washington to Sheridan. Edited by General JAMES GRANT WILSON. Each, 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

The volumes of this series thus far issued, all of which have received the highest commendation from authoritative journals, are: Admiral Farragut, by Captain A. T. MAHAN, U. S. N; General Taylor, by General O. O. HOWARD, U. S. A.; General Jackson, by JAMES PARTON; General Greene, by Captain FRANCIS V. GREENE, U.S.A.; General J. E. Johnston, by ROBERT M. HUGHES; General Thomas, by HENRY COPPÉE, LL.D.; General Scott, by General MARCUS J. WRIGHT; General Washington, by General BRADLEY T. JOHNSON; General Lee, by General FITZHUGH LEE; General Hancock, by General FRANCIS A. WALKER.

The Presidents of the United States,

1789–1894. By JOHN FISKE, CARL SCHURZ, WILLIAM E. RUSSELL, DANIEL C. GILMAN, WILLIAM WALTER PHELPS, ROBERT C. WINTHROP, GEORGE BANCROFT, JOHN HAY, and Others. Edited by JAMES GRANT WILSON. With 23 Steel Portraits, facsimile Letters, and other Illustrations. 8vo. Cloth.

Paul and Virginia.

By BERNARDIN DE SAINT-PIERRE. With a Biographical Sketch and numerous Illustrations by Maurice Leloir. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

The Land of the Sun.

VISTAS MEXICANAS. By CHRISTIAN REID, author of "The Land of the Sky," "A Comedy of Elopement," etc. Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth.

Songs of the Soil.

By FRANK L. STANTON. With a Preface by JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS. 16mo. Cloth, gilt top, uncut, $1.50.

Woman's Share in Primitive Culture.

By OTIS TUFTON MASON, A. M., Curator of the Department of Ethnology in the United States National Museum. With numerous Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, $1.75.

Treatise on American Football.

By A. A. STAGG and H. L. WILLIAMS. With Diagrams illustrating over 100 plays. 16mo. Cloth, $1.25.

IMPORTANT FICTION.

Vernon's Aunt.

By Mrs. EVERARD COTES (Sara Jeannette Duncan), author of "A Social Departure," "An American Girl in London," "The Simple Adventures of a Memsahib," and "A Daughter of To-day." With many Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth.

The Manxman.

By HALL CAINE, author of "The Deemster," "Capt'n Davy's Honeymoon," "The Scapegoat," etc. Fourth edition. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

The Deemster.

By HALL CAINE. New edition. Uniform with "The Manxman." 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

The Lilac Sunbonnet.

A Love Story. By S. R. CROCKETT, author of "The Stickit Minister," "The Raiders," etc. Second edition. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

A Flash of Summer.

By Mrs. W. K. CLIFFORD, author of "Love Letters of a Worldly Woman," "Aunt Anne," etc. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

Round the Red Lamp.

By A. CONAN DOYLE. Second edition. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

Maelcho.

By the Hon. EMILY LAWLESS, author of "Grania," "Hurrish," etc. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

The God in the Car.

By ANTHONY HOPE, author of "The Prisoner of Zenda," etc. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

Cleopatra.

A Romance. By GEORG EBERS, author of "Uarda," "An Egyptian Princess," etc. In two volumes. 16mo. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 80 cents.

New Juvenile Books.

Chris, the Model-Maker. A story of New York. By WILLIAM O. STODDARD, author of "Little Smoke," "On the Old Frontier," etc. With 6 full-page Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

The Patriot Schoolmaster. By HEZEKIAH BUTTERWORTH, author of "The Boys of Greenway Court," "In the Boyhood of Lincoln," etc. With 6 full-page Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

Decatur and Somers. By MOLLY ELLIOT SEAWELL, author of "Paul Jones," "Little Jarvis," etc. With 6 full-page Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, $1.00.

Madeleine's Rescue. A Story for Girls and Boys. By JEANNE SCHULTZ, author of "The Story of Colette," "Straight On," etc. With many Illustrations. 8vo. Cloth, $1.00.

The Golden Fairy Book. With 110 Illustrations by H. R. MILLAR. Square 12mo. Cloth, $2.00.

☞ Send for a copy (free) of the holiday number of Appletons' Monthly Bulletin, containing detailed descriptions of the above and numerous other books suitable for holiday gifts, with specimen illustrations.

D. APPLETON & CO., 72 Fifth Avenue, New York.

E. P. DUTTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS.

Essays and Addresses.

Religious, Literary and Social.

By the Rt. Rev. PHILLIPS BROOKS, D.D. Edited by the Rev. JOHN COTTON BROOKS. Large 12mo, 538 pages, gilt top, $2.00; large 12mo, 538 pages, white cloth, gilt edges, $2.50.

"The volume will at once attract general attention, and deservedly so . . . . Open-minded Christians of every name will see in this collection of noteworthy utterances the truest picture of what Phillips Brooks was to his day and generation, as a mouthpiece of its noblest thoughts and loftiest aspirations."—N. Y. Tribune.

"We hardly need add that it is full of good things and richer in nothing than the noble inspiration which formed a part of everything that came from Phillips Brooks, and makes a combination of secular with spiritual which gives a just impression of the bishop's general all-around culture and power."—Independent.

THIRTY-FIRST THOUSAND.

Phillips Brooks Year Book.

Selections from the writings of the Rt. Rev. PHILLIPS BROOKS, D.D. By H. L. S. and L. H. S. 16mo, 372 pages, gilt top, $1.25.

"The thoughts are so deep and grand and uplifting, the beauty of the language so great, the selections so varied and so wonderfully chosen, and the poetry as if written for its place in the book! Your country owes you a debt of gratitude for stringing the pearls and arranging the gems so as to bring out their greatest beauty and make apparent their intrinsic value."—From an English Letter.

MARGARET ARNOLD'S CHRISTMAS,

AND OTHER STORIES.

By MARY D. BRINE, author of "Grandma's Attic Treasures," etc. Illustrated by F. C. GORDON, and others Large 12mo, 322 pages, cloth, gilt, $2.00.

"Seven interesting stories by this excellent author are here collected in beautiful form, elegantly illustrated and handsomely bound."—New York Observer.

"Cannot fail to be an attractive holiday book. Mrs. Brine writes of common things in a way to make them beautiful, and conveys at the same time helpful lessons. There is a poetry in the simple, homely life of the country. Mrs. Brine sees it and has embodied it in these prose poems of hers." Boston Advertiser.

HERALD SERMONS.

By Rev. GEORGE H. HEPWORTH. Short sermons reprinted from the New York Herald. 12mo, cloth, with portrait, $1.00.

The New York Herald in its issue for Sunday mornings has for some time printed a short sermon, by Mr. Hepworth, on its editorial page. The earnest requests from many readers that they might be put in a more permanent form have induced his publishers to issue this volume.

New Volumes of the Series of Favorite Poems from the Best Authors.

HUMOROUS POEMS.

POEMS FOR CHILDREN.

32mo, with photogravure illustrations, half white, each, $1.00; full crushed levant, each, $2.50.

GOETHE YEAR BOOK.

Selections for every day in the year from the writings of JOHANN WOLFGANG GOETHE. 16mo, 167 pages, cloth, gilt top, $1.00.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

Children's Delight.
A storehouse of pictures and stories for children, large 4to (11 x 13), 66 pages, $2.00.

Country Playmates and Town Acquaintances.
Animal stories for little folks, containing 16 color plates and 64 type pages, large 4to (11¼ x 9¼), $1.50.

God Is Love.
Bible pictures and stories for the young 24 large color plates and 60 type pages (12½ x 10½), $1.50.

Dutton's Holiday Annual for 1895.
A volume of pictures and stories for little folks, 6 full-page colored illustrations and 128 illustrated pages with text. 4to, illuminated board covers (10½ x 8½), $1.25.

The Novelty of the Season in Color Books.

Nister's Panorama Pictures.
A large 4to of thirty-two leaves; contains five two-page colored illustrations with Panorama effect; and they will prove an endless source of entertainment for children. Price, $2.00.

Peepshow Pictures.
Same style, but smaller, $1.25.

Movable Toy Books.
These successful books have charmed many children, and as successors to the last year's list we have:

Touch and Go	$2.00
Here and There	1.25
Pleasure Pastime Pictures	.75
Ups and Downs	.75

They have colored illustrations, and by a mechanical contrivance the pictures change, making a most amusing as well as, to a child, surprising effect, which will help to while away many an hour.

Lizette.
A story. By EMMA MARSHALL. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

Friend or Foe.
By Mrs. GREENE. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Child Life and Girlhood of Remarkable Women.
A series of chapters from Female Biography. By W. H. DAVENPORT ADAMS. $2.50.

The Lady of the Forest.
By L. T. MEADE. Illustrated. $1.25.

Without a Thought;
OR, DORA'S DISCIPLINE. By JENNIE CHAPPELL. Illustrated. $1.25.

Sable and White.
THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A SHOW DOG. By GORDON STABLES, M. D. Illustrated by HARRISON WEIR. $1.25.

That Bother of a Boy.
By GRACE STEBBING. Illustrated by PAUL HARDY. $1.25.

Lord Lynton's Ward.
By HELENA BROOKS. With 39 illustrations by PAUL HARDY. $1.25.

Sayings and Doings in Fairyland.
OR, OLD FRIENDS WITH NEW FACES. By DOROTHY SINCLAIR. Illustrated by PAUL HARDY. $1.25.

Miss Mackerell Skye.
A fairy tale for young and old. By HERBERT S. SQUANCE. 16mo, illustrated, 162 pages, cloth. $1.25.

Hollyberry Janet;
OR, THE GIRLS OF BALLYOWEN. By MAGGIE SYMINGTON, author of "Working to Win," etc. $1.25.

Now for a Story.
A volume of stories by G. A. HENTY, Mrs. MOLESWORTH, A. R. HOPE, L. T. MEADE, and others. Illustrated by PALMER COX. 12mo, cloth. $1.50.

Pax and Carlino.
A story. By ERNST BECKMAN. 16mo, 196 pages, illustrated, cloth. 75 cents.

Everybody's Fairy God-Mother.
By DOROTHY Q. 16mo, cloth. 50 cents.

"The God-Mother in question is Love, a sure enough fairy, as the author says."

CALENDARS FOR 1895.

Golden Treasury Calendar.
Twelve leaves (10 x 13), with selections from the leading poets and illustrations in tints, in box. $2.00.

Children of the Year Calendar.
Twelve leaves (9 x 11), with illustrations of children, in colors, in box. $1.50.

"Scarcely will a prettier wall calendar be sent forth this holiday season than 'Children of the Year.' For each month there is a very sweet child picture, printed exquisitely in colors."—Golden Rule.

He Careth for You.
A devotional calendar, twelve leaves (7½ x 9½), in box. $1.00

The Circling Months.
An expanding fan novelty, in box. 60 cents.

The Gem Calendar.
Four wall-pockets, strung together on ribbon (2½ x 6½). 50 cents.

Our Darling's Calendar.
Six leaves (7½ x 9½), with pictures of children, in colors, 50 cents.

God with Us.
A devotional calendar, six leaves (4¾ x 9), with Scripture texts and illustrations, in colors. 50 cents.

With many others.

BOOKLETS.

The Home Beyond.
Daily texts and hymns for a month, 4to, 32 pages (12 pages in colors), white cloth. $2 00.

The Joyful Way.
Scripture texts and hymns for a month. Six color and six monotint illustrations. 4to, 16 pages, embossed cover. $1.00.

The Voice of Jesus.
Scripture texts and hymns for a month. Six color and six monotint illustrations. 4to, 16 pages, embossed cover. $1.00.

My Friends at Home.
An Autograph Album. Illustrations in color and monotint. Oblong board cover, 24 pages. $1.25.

Thy Light and Thy Truth.
A daily text-book for a month With illustrations in color and monotint. Oblong 16mo, 32 pages. 50 cents.

With Heartiest Wishes.
Square 16mo, illustrations in lavender tints. 50 cents.

Friendship's Greeting.
Square 16mo, illustrations in colors. 50 cents.

Heart's-ease. Good Fortune to You.
To Wish You Well. To Greet You.
Four square 16mo books, embossed covers in color, each 16 pages, with illustrations by an entirely new process. Each, 50 cents.

With many others down to 15 cents.

TOY BOOKS.

Nister's Magic Lantern.
Large 4to (10 x 12), 14 pages. 50 cents.

Hey-Diddle-Diddle.
A book of Nursery Rhymes. Large 4to (10 x 12), 14 pages. 50 cents.

The Doll's Villa.
Cut out in the shape of a doll's house and doll's figures. Large 4to (10½ x 12), 14 pages. 50 cents.

Our Pet's Alphabet.
Cut out in the shape of a house containing pictures of animals, fowls and birds. Large 4to (10 x 12), 14 pages. 50 cents.

Kiss in the Ring.
A book of children's games, 4to, four colored plates (9½ x 11½), 14 pages. 25 cents.

A Day at the Seaside.
4to, four colored plates (9½ x 11½), 14 pages. 25 cents.

With many others.

Our Catalogue of Children's Books, Booklets, Calendars, and Toy Books, sent free on application.

For sale at the bookstores, or sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of prices.

E. P. DUTTON & CO., Publishers, 31 West 23d Street, New York.

BOOKS FOR THE HOLIDAY SEASON.

Colonial Days and Dames.

By Anne Hollingsworth Wharton, author of "Through Colonial Doorways." Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth extra, $1.25. Edition de Luxe, limited to the number of subscribers.

The extraordinary success of "Through Colonial Doorways" has caused the authoress to prepare another book on the same lines, which, like it, deals with colonial personages and incidents. The Edition de Luxe will be profusely illustrated by portraits and sketches, while the small paper edition has the necessary number of illustrations to make a delightful Christmas gift.

The Colonial Library.

COLONIAL DAYS AND DAMES.
THROUGH COLONIAL DOORWAYS.
Two volumes. 12mo. In box, $2.50.

Napoleon at Home.

The Daily Life of the Emperor at the Tuileries. By Frederick Masson. With twelve full-page Illustrations by F. de Myrbach. 2 volumes. 8vo. $7.50; half calf, $12.50.

"These two handsome volumes form an addition to Napoleonic literature which perfectly accords with the fashion of the present day and the taste which delights in domestic revelations concerning great personalities."—London Daily Telegraph.

Napoleon and the Fair Sex.

By Frederick Masson. With Numerous Illustrations in the best style of the French Art. 1 volume. 8vo. $5.00; half calf, $7.50.

A large proportion of the chapters of the above work appeared in the Figaro, the idea of writing them being suggested to the author by the following questions: "With what women is Napoleon known to have had temporary relations as a young man, as Consul, and finally as Emperor? Had he an absorbing passion for any one woman? and, if so, for whom?" In his task the author has found many powerful allies, and has distilled the essence of documents that have been accumulating for years. The result is a narrative of the facts as they appear from these various evidences.

Memoirs of Count Lavalette.

Adjutant and Private Secretary to Napoleon, and Postmaster-General under the Empire. With portraits. A limited edition of 150 copies for America. 12mo. Cloth, $3.00. A limited edition of 25 large-paper copies for America, $6.00.

Few persons knew Napoleon as did Lavalette; and historians gathering materials may place full confidence in his recital. No other facts are mentioned than those in which he was an eye-witness, and the author's character will prove a sufficient voucher for the truth.

Around a Throne.

Catherine II., of Russia, her Collaborators, her Friends, and her Favorites. By K. Waliszewski, author of "Romance of an Empress." 2 volumes. 8vo. Cloth, $7.50; half calf, $12.50.

The Works of Laurence Sterne.

Edited by George Saintsbury, with Illustrations by E. J. Wheeler. 6 volumes. 16mo. Cloth, $6.00; half calf and half morocco, $13.50. Large-paper Edition. 150 copies printed. 50 for America. 6 volumes. 8vo. Buckram, $18.00.

Published in connection with Dent & Co., of London.

Corinne, or Italy.

By Madame de Stael. Translated. With an Introduction by George Saintsbury. Illustrated by H. S. Greig. 2 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $2.00; half calf or half morocco, $4.50. Large-paper Edition. 100 copies printed. 50 for America. 2 volumes. 8vo. Buckram, $6.00.

Published in connection with Dent & Co., of London.

History of the French Revolution.

By Louis Adolphe Thiers, ex-Prime Minister of France. Translated, with Notes and Illustrations from the most authentic sources, by Frederic Shoberl. New Edition, printed from new type, with forty-one Illustrations on Steel engraved by William Greatbatch. 5 volumes. 8vo. Cloth, $3.00 per volume; half morocco, $5.00 per volume.

This Edition will be uniform with the New Edition of Thiers's "History of the Consulate and the Empire of France," and will be published in monthly volumes, commencing September, 1894. Subscriptions will be received for complete sets only by all booksellers and the publishers.

History of the Consulate and the Empire of France.

By Louis Adolphe Thiers, ex-Prime Minister of France. Translated from the French, with the sanction of the author, by D. Forbes Campbell. An entirely New Edition, printed from new type and Illustrated with thirty-six Steel Plates printed from the French originals. Now complete in 12 octavo volumes, with thirty-six Steel Plates. Cloth, $36.00; half morocco, gilt top, $60.00.

The only good edition of the English translation has long been out of print, and the present publishers, in connection with an English house, have brought out a limited edition to meet the demand of the libraries and book-buyer. The last volume of this sumptuous edition has just been issued.

J. B. Lippincott Company, Publishers,

PHILADELPHIA.

BOOKS FOR THE HOLIDAY SEASON—Continued.

The Sketch-Book.

By Washington Irving. New Edition. Illustrated with Engravings on Wood, from Original Designs. 2 volumes. 8vo. Cloth extra, gilt top, $4.00; half calf or half morocco, $7.00.

The illustrations of this edition were made for the Artist Edition, the type is new, and the size is suitable for the library and the table, making the most desirable edition of this popular classic now published.

Early English Ballads.

Chosen by R. Brimley Johnson. Illustrated by W. Cubitt Cooke. Illustrated with about two hundred Illustrations. 4 volumes. 16mo. Cloth, $5.00; half calf or half morocco, $10.00.

My First Book.

The First Literary Experiences of Walter Besant, James Payn, W. Clark Russell, Grant Allen, Hall Caine, George R. Sims, Rudyard Kipling, A. Conan Doyle, M. E. Braddon, F. W. Robinson, H. Rider Haggard, R. M. Ballantyne, I. Zangwill, Morley Roberts, David Christie Murray, Marie Corelli, Jerome K. Jerome, John Strange Winter, Bret Harte, "Q," Robert Louis Stevenson, and Robert Buchanan. With an introduction by Jerome K. Jerome. Profusely Illustrated. 8vo. Cloth, $2.50.

Tom Cringle's Log.

By Michael Scott. 2 volumes. 16mo. Cloth, $2.00; half calf or half morocco, $4.50.

Cruise of the "Midge."

By Michael Scott. 2 volumes. 16mo. Cloth, $2.00; half calf or half morocco, $4.50.

"Two books which we never fail to peruse every year are 'Tom Cringle's Log' and the 'Cruise of the Midge,' in which humor and pathos, the most gorgeous descriptions, and the most thrilling narratives so marvelously intermingle."—London City Journal.

Pen and Pencil Sketches.

By Henry Stacy Marks, R. A. With four Photogravure Plates and one hundred and twenty-four facsimile Illustrations. 2 volumes. 8vo, Irish linen, gilt, $8.00.

There will be included in the volume many unpublished drawings left by Fred. Walker, the remarkable young English artist, who is drawn by Du Maurier in the character of "Little Billee" in Trilby.

The Birds About Us.

By Charles Conrad Abbott, M. D., author of "Recent Rambles," "Travels in a Tree-Top," etc. Illustrated with upward of seventy-five Bird Portraits. 1 volume. 12mo. Cloth, $2.00.

For every lover of birds. It is written in a familiar and genial style, and is not burdened with technicalities, while being accurate in every particular.

Liber Amoris.

By William Hazlitt. Edition Limited to 400 for England and 100 for America. $6.00 net.

Madonna and Other Poems.

By Harrison S. Morris. Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth extra, $2.00.

This is the first collected edition of the author's poems, many of which have never previously appeared in print. The edition is printed from type, and limited to 750 copies for America and England.

Two Girls.

A Book for Young Girls. By Amy E. Blanchard, author of "Twenty Little Maidens." Illustrated by Ida Waugh. 12mo. Cloth extra, $1.25.

Olivia.

A Book for Girls. By Mary Louise Molesworth. Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth extra, $1.25.

Hans Andersen's Fairy Tales.

New Edition. Profusely Illustrated by E. A. Leman. 4to. Cloth, $1.50.

Chambers's Concise Gazetteer of the World.

Topographical, Statistical, Historical. 1 volume. Crown 8vo. Uniform with Reader's Reference Library. Half morocco, $2.50.

This book does not claim to be exhaustive. Its aim has been to tell everything that may be reasonably wanted about every place likely to be looked for.

Thomas A'Kempis's Imitation of Christ.

Edited by Canon Farrar. Illustrated by New and Quaint Illustrations. Illuminated with Initial Letters, making the most desirable Edition published. 16mo. Cloth, $1.50; limp morocco, $4.00.

J. B. Lippincott Company, Publishers,

PHILADELPHIA.

The Literary World

Vol. XXV BOSTON : DECEMBER 1894 No. 24

CONTENTS

Hypatia . . . 415
The Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam . . . 415
Raphael's Madonnas . . . 416
A Shelf of Old Books . . . 416
The Farmer's Boy . . . 416
Pen Drawing and Pen Draughtsmen . . . 416
The Reign of Queen Anne . . . 417
Madonna and Other Poems . . . 417
The Sketch Book . . . 417
Wandering Words . . . 418
Domestic Manners of the Americans . . . 418
Round the Red Lamp . . . 419
The Life of Christ as Represented in Art . 419
Three Heroines of New England Romance . 419
The Three Musketeers . . . 420
Mycenian Art . . . 420
Napoleon and the French Revolution . . 420
Phillips Brooks' Essays and Addresses . . 421

Poetry:

Invocation. William Roscoe Thayer . . 422
The Yellow Book . . . 422

Holiday Books:

The Last Leaf . . . 422
Naples, the City of Parthenope . . . 422
Becket . . . 422
Wild-Flower Sonnets . . . 422
The Ariel Shakespeare . . . 422
Their Wedding Journey . . . 422
Sterne's Works . . . 422
Pride and Prejudice . . . 422
Wimples and Crisping-Pins . . . 422
De Amicis' Holland . . . 423
Goethe's Faust . . . 423
The Victorian Age of English Literature . . 423
The Book of the Fair . . . 423

Books for Young People:

The Man Who Married the Moon . . . 423
The Land of Pluck . . . 423
When Life Was Young . . . 423
In Sunshine Land . . . 424
Sirs, Only Seventeen! . . . 424
The Patriot Schoolmaster . . . 424
Toinette's Philip . . . 424
The Century Book for Young Americans . . 424

Books for Girls:

Hope Benham . . . 424
Witch Winnie at Shinnecock . . . 424
Not Quite Eighteen . . . 424
Margaret Arnold's Christmas . . . 425
Penelope Prig . . . 425
My New Home . . . 425
Mollie Miller . . . 425
Another Girl's Experience . . . 425
Olivia . . . 425

Books for Boys:

The Butterfly Hunters in the Caribbees . . 425
When London Burned . . . 425
Czar and Sultan . . . 425
First in the Field . . . 425
Wulf the Saxon . . . 426
The Great Cattle Trail . . . 426
Olaf the Glorious . . . 426
Three Boys on an Electrical Boat . . . 426
Chris, the Model-Maker . . . 426
London Letter . . . 426
New York Letter . . . 427

Minor Notices:

Riverby . . . 428
The Flute-Player . . . 428
The Days of Prince Maurice . . . 428
Intimations of the Beautiful . . . 428
Studies in Folk-Song and Popular Poetry . . 428
Armazindy . . . 429
Narragansett Ballads . . . 429
The World Beautiful . . . 429
Old European Jewries . . . 429
Chinese Characteristics . . . 429
Periodicals . . . 430
News and Notes . . . 431
Publications Received . . . 431

HYPATIA.*

MR. WILLIAM MARTIN JOHNSON has scored another triumph in this superb edition of Charles Kingsley's historical romance of the beautiful philosopher of Alexandria who fell a martyr to the hate of a mob of fanatics calling themselves Christian, but as far as possible alien to the spirit of Jesus. In general style these two volumes remind one of the illustrated editions of Ben-Hur and The Cloister and the Hearth which Mr. Johnson has given us before this. They are bound in green silk, ornamented with the scarab and the lotus in simple designs; the page is of the large-paper edition form, allowing ample room in the margin, usually with some insertion into the text, for the hundreds of designs with which the artist has actually illustrated the story; the type and presswork in general are models of clearness and finish; and the drawings themselves stand out with a delicacy and precision which are worthy of the highest praise.

Mr. Johnson's conception of Hypatia is admirable, whether she is pictured sacrificing her philosophic career to become the bride of Orestes or lecturing with inspiration and enthusiasm on the glories of philosophy and the weaknesses of the Christian creed. He has been very successful, too, with Raphael Ben-Ezra, Philammon, Pelagia, and Cyril. The occasional full-page drawings of the leading characters are a welcome sign of the artist's increasing confidence in himself. The marginal illustrations show the same desire on his part as was seen in the other two novels — to illuminate the text with unobtrusive presentments of the minor objects of nature and art therein mentioned, and to sketch the landscape occasionally but not so insistently as to subordinate the human element to it, as some mistakenly do. The same quick eye appears for the dramatic situations which call for vigorous or pleasing representation. One is grateful that the supreme tragedy of the fate of Hypatia is left unpictured.

We trust that Mr. Johnson will not fail to continue his fine work of illustrating great novels, for there is no achievement of this kind which we can commend so unreservedly as his. His range is so wide and his taste so enlightened that we can only look for higher and higher marks to be attained by him.

THE RUBAIYAT OF OMAR KHAYYAM.*

ONE of Mr. Mosher's two new volumes in the unique Bibelot series is a very convenient edition of the Epicurean quatrains of Omar who knew the stars and sang of love and wine. To this limited edition the editor has prefixed Andrew Lang's poem on the poet and added Mr. J. H. McCarthy's "L'Envoi." After Fitzgerald's sketch come the parallel texts of the first edition of 1859 and the fourth of 1879, on opposite pages. Two pages of quatrains found only in the second edition of 1868 follow the notes, and four pages more give a bibliography of English and American editions of Fitzgerald's and other versions of the poem. The old-fashioned italic type and the elongated form of the volume give this Bibelot edition a distinction quite in keeping with the unusual standing of the Rubáiyát.

After reproducing Mr. Vedder's wonderful illustrations of Omar in folio and then in a large quarto, the Riverside Press has gratified the popular liking and the popular purse by issuing a small quarto edition at one fifth the price of the folio. This size is so much more convenient for continuous reading or for occasional reference that the only question which will rise in the buyer's mind is concerning the clearness and general finish of the reduced drawings. A minute inspection will suffice to show that the process has been accomplished very satisfactorily. One cannot, of course, get that impression of almost overpowering vigor and sensuous life which only large plates will give; but Mr. Vedder's designs are so little crowded with figures or slight detail work, they are so centered round one figure and animated by one thought, that they bear diminution in size remarkably well, and the phototype process is also well adapted to the same change. There is nothing here, therefore, to hinder the full enjoyment of one who would have Mr. Vedder's designs and the text by itself in one small and convenient book. The whole volume — drawings and letterpress — is printed on one side only of the neat leaf. After the designs come the artist's notes, the full text in ordinary type, Fitzgerald's notes and life of Omar, and a biographical sketch of the translator signed M. K. In this inexpensive but beautiful form the poet, the artist, and the translator will doubtless gain a new host of readers and confirm their hold on the many who have communed with "the Singer of the Red Wine and the Rose:"

---

* Hypatia; or, New Foes with an Old Face. By Charles Kingsley. Illustrated from Drawings by William Martin Johnson. 2 vols. Harper & Brothers. $7.00.

* Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám, the Astronomer-Poet of Persia. Rendered into English Verse by Edward Fitzgerald. Portland: Thomas B. Mosher. $1.00 net.

The Same, with an Accompaniment of Drawings by Elihu Vedder. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $5.00.

> Serene he dwelt in fragrant Naishápúr,
> But we must wander while the Stars endure.
> He knew the Secret; we have none that knows,
> No Man so sure as Omar once was sure!

RAPHAEL'S MADONNAS.*

THE well-known critic who brings before the public once more the inexhaustible charm of Raphael's Madonnas claims uniqueness for this very attractive volume in two respects — that it is "the first attempt to give reproductions of the whole series of Madonnas by Raphael, those only being omitted which are universally acknowledged to be unauthentic," and that "the fifty-four reproductions here given have, in all cases, been made from the pictures themselves, and not from engravings." The superiority of photography, in its present advanced state, over the most noted engravings of these masterpieces is evident at once in the softness and delicacy of these admirable illustrations.

Beside those Madonnas which every one knows and loves, such as the Gran' Duca, the Del Cardellino, the Del Pesce, and the incomparable Sistine, we find here the exquisite oval picture known as the Madonna Connestabile and the very beautiful Madonna di Casa Alba, remarkable for the unusual attitudes of the Mother and the Child and the deep affectionate expression of all three figures; both of these are now in the Hermitage, St. Petersburg. Herr Károly's list of forty Madonnas arranges them in what he considers their chronological order, and it is the most satisfactory exhibit known to us of these glorifications of tender, loving motherhood. Each reproduction has a descriptive page of text opposite it, and the compiler has prefixed a memoir of fifty pages, into which he condenses a large amount of information concerning the divine painter and his work. The book is one that will give much pure and lasting delight to its owner.

A SHELF OF OLD BOOKS.†

MRS. FIELDS' two hundred pages of literary gossip and reminiscence concerning Leigh Hunt, Shelley, De Quincey, John Wilson, Thackeray, and other authors whom Mr. Fields knew in the flesh or through books from their libraries which he had accumulated, make a very agreeable and entertaining book for the season. (One observes here, by the way, the latest novelty in title-pages, which makes the lines begin at the same point.)

The opening paper about Leigh Hunt has a unity which the other two, "Edinburgh" and "From Milton to Thackeray," lack. It has two attractive portraits of Hunt and a reproduction of the pathetic drawing of Keats by Severn made for Mr. Fields. It is an amiable weakness that Mrs. Fields, having known Hunt personally and felt all the charm of his winning personality, should exalt him to a place in letters which his actual achievement will not justify.

The paper on Edinburgh has admirable portraits of Dr. John Brown and Scott (after Lawrence and from a charming miniature taken at five or six), but one would have welcomed a portrait of De Quincey instead of the bust given. Milton, Johnson, and Thackeray are the three chief adornments of the third paper. Much of the pleasure of all the papers comes from the entire freedom of the full-minded author in drawing at will upon her large store of reminiscence and personal detail, connected often with the volumes which stand on her bookshelves. The book is one to please every lover of the best books.

THE FARMER'S BOY.*

MR. JOHNSON has the felicity of being his own artist, and most, if not all, of his numerous illustrations are from his photographs. We observe that these have probably, to judge from the fashion of the clothes the boys wear, been taken from boys of this present year of grace rather than from those of the time depicted, which we suppose to be that of Mr. Johnson's own boyhood. It would have been well to mark the years in view, for such a life as is here faithfully represented is all the time changing in its details as city comforts and habits invade the country. (Decoration Day is named as one of the three notable days of spring for the boy, and this is the most precise indication we have found that the period is since the war.)

It is the boy's life on the farm, indoors and outdoors, which Mr. Johnson treats here, school life being omitted, as this was treated in his agreeable volume, The Country School in New England, of last year's date. The various works and sports that fill up the innocent and healthy days of the Connecticut River Valley boy are related in a plain and unpretending style which leaves room yet for the writer who shall give final expression in happy prose to the story of the boy on the New England farm. Mr. Johnson warns us that much is omitted here, but we find that all the main points of the boy's career are covered, from skating in winter to swimming in summer, and from sugaring in the spring to husking and apple picking in the fall. The text and the illustrations will appeal forcibly to the many men who now "in cities pent," where they have lived for years away from the soil, may here delightedly renew their boyhood days on the old farm.

PEN DRAWING AND PEN DRAUGHTSMEN.*

THIS second edition of Mr. Pennell's elaborate book, the first edition of which we noticed in full five years ago, is "really a new work," he says. Without having the earlier book at hand, and depending upon memory, we should say that for some purposes the first edition is undoubtedly the better of the two. Mr. Pennell does not belong with the number of those whose discernment increases fast with years; certainly his style has not improved since 1889, and most of his vigorous prejudices are still in full flower. He speaks in the preface to this new edition, for example, of "long-winded promises of support" from France, "which have amounted to nothing; gushing letters which have been nothing but gush; and vows of all sorts which I am sure those who made them had not the slightest intention to carry out. But what would you? It is thus they order these matters in France." Two pages before, he writes of "the envy, spite, and malice of those who railed against" his first edition, "whose chief cause of complaint was that they never thought of writing the book themselves." Such expressions seem to indicate a disordered stomach or an unregenerate mind — perhaps both. Mr. Pennell should try to bear in mind the fact that one may express himself in private letters with a freedom which is out of place in a book.

In its new form Pen Drawing contains five hundred pages and 366 illustrations. Looking through the book carefully, one gets much more the impression than before that Mr. Pennell has wished to make an encyclopedia of the art. There is not such a careful selection as in the first book of the undeniably great, or at least very capable, artists. Many artists are here, with an allowance of one to five pages, whose names were not even mentioned before; the increase is not due chiefly to the rapid growth of the art in the last five years or to the new section on Dutch, Danish, and other work, but to the inclusion of a much larger number of French, German, American, and English draughtsmen. This comprehensiveness is an advantage if one desires specimens of all the styles now appearing in books, magazines, and papers; but the effect is distinctly to lower the general level of the illustrations as a whole.

Mr. Pennell has not lost any of his faith in the great worth of pen drawing; he holds the same opinion as to the inferiority of the work of the "old men," and he has high hopes of the future in journalism. "I know that very elaborate drawings cannot yet be printed on a rapid newspaper machine, but that this will be possible before long I do not doubt." He has many fears, on the other hand, but is cheered, for one thing, by the good work in the Century and Harper's, which continue to improve. "The debt which all artists who have thought and worked and striven in their art owe to the Japanese" he cordially acknowledges. With all its defects Mr. Pennell's work is indispensable to the pen artist who would think and work and strive.

---

* Raphael's Madonnas and Other Great Pictures Reproduced from the Original Paintings, with a Life of Raphael and an Account of His Chief Works. By Karl Károly. Macmillan & Co. $8.00.

† A Shelf of Old Books. By Mrs. James T. Fields. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50.

* The Farmer's Boy. Text and Illustrations by Clifton Johnson. D. Appleton & Co. $2.50.

* Pen Drawings and Pen Draughtsmen. Their Work and Their Methods. A Study of the Art Today with Technical Suggestions. By Joseph Pennell. Macmillan & Co. $15.00.

THE REIGN OF QUEEN ANNE.*

MRS. OLIPHANT does not pretend to write here the full history of Queen Anne's reign. Of her five chapters two only are devoted to the princess, the queen, and the duchess, and the great political and military events of the time. The larger part of the book concerns Swift, De Foe, and Addison. These pages, though written in Mrs. Oliphant's most pleasing style, have not, however, the interest which attaches to the delineation of Anne, as princess and as queen, and of the great Sarah, by a woman of insight and charity. Mrs. Oliphant remarks upon the "certain heat of personal feeling" which comes into history usually when women must be chronicled:

> Whether it is that the historian is impatient at finding himself arrested by the troublesome personalities of a woman, and that a certain resentment of her intrusion colors his appreciation of her, or that her appearance naturally possesses an individuality which breaks the line, it is difficult to tell; but the calmest chronicler becomes a partisan when he treats of Mary and Elizabeth, and no man can name Sarah of Marlborough without a heat of indignation or scorn almost ridiculous as being so long after date.

Queen Anne is presented to us here in a far more favorable light than by Macaulay in his very partial history:

> She was the best of wives, the most sadly disappointed of childless mothers. She made pecuniary sacrifices to the weal of her kingdom such as few kings or queens have thought of making. . . . Yet there is a mixture of the amusing and the tragic in the appearance of this passive figure seated on high, presiding over all the great events of the epoch with her humble feminine history, her long anguish of motherhood, her hopes so often raised and so often shattered, her stifled family feeling, her profound and helpless sense of misfortune. There is one high light in the picture, however, and it comes from one of the rarest and highest sentiments of humanity — the passion of friendship, of which women are popularly supposed to be incapable, but which never existed in more complete and disinterested exhibition than in the bosom of this poor queen. . . . Her friend was as like to call forth such devotion as ever woman was. Seldom has there been a more brilliant figure in history than that of the great duchess.

Mrs. Oliphant strikes one masculine reader, at least, as having got much nearer the truth of the characters of Anne and her friend than Macaulay did. She writes with womanly tenderness of the little Duke of Gloucester, with his military sports and his touching loyalty to King William. She sets forth the true greatness of the duchess' policy, and shows what excuse, on the other hand, is due to the commonplace queen. The same charity she extends to Dean Swift, all whose brutalities she thinks should be forgiven by one who reads the Journal to Stella. She excuses him from any encouragement of Vanessa's passion, and disbelieves in the secret marriage to Stella. Of Addison's marriage she declares: "There seems no evidence that the marriage was unhappy beyond a malicious note of Pope's, which all the commentators have enlarged. The poor women who have the misfortune to be married to men of genius fare badly at the hands of critics."

Her publishers have set forth Mrs. Oliphant's very readable history in admirable form. It is bound in wine-colored cloth, with the title on gilt panels and a pleasing gilt tracery on both covers. The large octavo page is printed in the best style of the De Vinne Press, and the illustrations form a noble portrait gallery of the great men and women of the reign of Anne. Beside these illustrations there are a number of views of noted houses, such as Moor Park and Stella's cottage. One of two or three typographical errors we have observed makes the marriage of the queen take place in 1863 (page 13).

MADONNA AND OTHER POEMS.*

ALWAYS graceful and often very delicate in fancy and form are the poems of Mr. Harrison S. Morris, while seldom strong or compelling. One admires and compares, but the heart is for the most part untouched, although there is genuine tenderness in such a poem as "To a Comrade," as well as true poetic imagination. One wonders if it were not written under the stress of a personal emotion, to which Mr. Morris rarely yields. Broadly speaking, therefore, he is not yet to be counted among those poets whom we forget as we read their lines, seeing therein reflected "not the poet's face, but our own." He says of his friend:

> He was learnèd in all leafy books,
> And knew the winding regions of romance;
> His fingers fitted to the olden reeds.

The last words might be said of himself as well. The olden reeds allure him with their whispering music, and it would be unfair not to say at once that he has written some charming poems under their influence. Yet if he should write from his heart and speak out real nineteenth century thought and passion, instead of longing for the pipes of Arcady and dallying with nymphs and mystic ladies, he might gain in strength more than he would lose in picturesque backgrounds and romantic possibilities. We express this thought less in criticism than for purposes of differentiation; it would be hardly worth while to say it at all were there not some poems in the collection which show that Mr. Morris needs neither dryads nor fluting satyrs to give them value. "After the Rain," for instance, makes one feel that it was a real rain and a real sunset and that we have known just such a moment ourselves.

The poem which gives its name to this book, and which we may therefore conclude is one of Mr. Morris' own favorites — a hopeful conclusion — is not the Madonna of another century, but a mother of today, "interpreting the golden masters, hand to hand and heart to heart," even amid the sound of steaming mills and rattling engines and in the smoke of a busy town. Many of the songs and catches suggest a musical accompaniment. As an example of Mr. Morris' skill and sentiment we take a sonnet entitled "Daphnis:"

> Pipe on, brown boy, pipe on! thy panic notes
>   Died not away on warm Sicilian airs;
> Nor fell acold like wingèd music throats
>   That pipe among what green the winter spares.
> Who listen hear the time-tap of thy foot
>   And hear the melody ripple from the reeds
> This day, as when thou sat at oaken root
>   And shepherds heard, flock-tending in the meads.
>
> Some early step along a forest edge
>   Shall often meet thee merry unawares,
> Or find thee nested in a fountain sedge
>   Unto the cattle fluting; these, thy lairs,
> Still haunted are, if any listen well,
> With rustic ditties piped in Enna's dell.

The paper, binding, and general appearance of this volume are very handsome. There is a frontispiece by F. V. Du Mond, and cover design, title-page, and thirty headpieces by E. S. Holloway.

THE SKETCH BOOK.*

THE work which gave Washington Irving his transatlantic reputation has always and naturally been a favorite with artists and publishers for a holiday book. Its wide range, embracing such attractive subjects as Christmas in Old England, Shakespeare's home, Westminster Abbey, Rip Van Winkle, and the Legend of Sleepy Hollow, affords opportunity for many diverse talents in the illustrator, while it would be irrational to expect any one artist to picture every page with equal skill. An ideal edition would, therefore, be a choice collection of the most successful illustrations that have yet been made by any hand. This aim is visible in the two excellent couples of volumes named below.

The Lippincott edition is in two convenient volumes, each some two hundred and fifty pages in length, neatly bound in olive green silk covers, well printed, and illustrated with seventy-five or so wood engravings selected from Darley, Hoppin, Parsons, W. Hart, Bellows, J. M. Will, Huntingdon, Kensett, and numerous others. They are mostly of small size, few occupying a half page, but they are good examples of the older school of engraving, and, taken altogether, they furnish an appropriate unpretentious picturing for an edition otherwise characterized by simple elegance.

---

* Historical Characters of the Reign of Queen Anne. By Mrs. M. O. W. Oliphant. Century Co. $6.00.

* Madonna and Other Poems. By Harrison S. Morris. J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.00.

* Sketch Book of Geoffrey Crayon, Gent. Illustrated. In two volumes. J. B. Lippincott Co. $4.00.

The Same. Van Tassel Edition. Illustrated. In two volumes. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $6.00.

The Van Tassel edition belongs with the elaborate illustrated reproductions of Irving's more popular works, on which the Putnams began three years ago. The two weighty volumes are provided with all the paraphernalia of a well-equipped holiday book of the latest style — two boxes and slip covers; binding in white and gold and blue in a pleasing design; wide margins, colored borders, the best of typography, and illustrations in outline, in photogravure, and in "process." The duly repeated borders are four — holly, ivy, and two vines, also in green and red — and they inclose the charming text with a very pleasing effect, which is, in fact, quite unique among the holiday books of this season. Among the thirty-two full-page illustrations the series of photographs of Jefferson as Rip Van Winkle — in his familiar poses — and Darley's designs for "Rip" and the "Legend of Sleepy Hollow" are the most prominent. (It is a little strange that Darley should have actually contradicted his text — "Ichabod Crane's scholars certainly were not spoiled;" i.e., by sparing the rod — in picturing them as having their own way!) Other illustrations of decided merit are drawn by Arthur Rackham, Julian Rix, and Allan Barraud, and there are several photographs of English scenes and churches. For a gift book of lasting value this Van Tassel edition of the Sketch Book ranks high, and cannot fail to give much pleasure to any one who receives it.

WANDERING WORDS.*

IN this generous octavo Sir Edwin Arnold appears not as a poet or as a statesman, but as a world's journalist of the nineteenth century, and collects twenty disconnected papers originally printed in the London Telegraph and sundry foreign, that is to say, non-British, periodicals. The alliterative title under which they are bound together suggests their wide scope and desultory purpose, but does not do justice to their excellence as descriptive sketches of scenes and experiences all over the globe. East, west, north, and south the author has wandered, and his words are those of a painter as well as a poet, relating to both the romance and the reality of our planet, and the life that proceeds upon it. We have found the book — parts of it, at least — extremely readable, and have enjoyed its pictures of travel and reminiscences of adventures with hearty zest.

We will enumerate its leading chapters, and characterize them with a brief running comment. "An Earthly Paradise" gives an account of a visit to the Sandwich Islands in terms which make the New England reader wish he were there in these November days of premature winter. In "Watching the Stars" we spend a night in the Lick Observatory on Mount Hamilton in California. "An Adventure on the Nile" tells of the capsizing of Sir Edwin's dahabeah and the narrow escape of himself and his party. "In the Holy Land" is a capital short statement of what it means to go to Jerusalem. "Indian Princes at Home" and "At an Indian Christmas-Time" are full of Hindoo landscape and character, the latter pretty strongly colored. Japan is handsomely treated in three papers — "Love and Marriage in Japan," "Japanese Wrestlers," and "Some Japanese Pictures." "Days at Sea" is a sort of composite photograph of all sorts of marine views taken on the author's many and various voyages. "Tent Life" depicts a camping out experience on English soil overlooking Southampton Water. "The Tigers' Village" and "Wild Boars" are tales of sport in the East. "How the Dead Saved the Living" is one of several short stories which wind up the book.

Probably some of these papers have been put in to fill out the book, and several of them are slight; but the collection as a whole is entertaining in a light way, and the woodcuts add to the attractions of the text. The work is not one to add to the author's reputation, but it is not unworthy of it; it shows his versatility and power to interest and please.

DOMESTIC MANNERS OF THE AMERICANS.*

THIS reprint of a famous book is very entertaining and profitable reading. It is entertaining because it describes with spirit and accuracy a state of things which has largely passed into history, and which we can, therefore, read of with unconcern; it is profitable, beyond its mere information concerning manners and customs seventy years ago, since it teaches forcibly the folly of our former irritability as a nation over foreign criticism. Americans can now ask themselves the simple question concerning any of Mrs. Trollope's unflattering descriptions, "Was it probably true to facts?" They will easily answer in most cases that she shows every sign of desiring to tell the truth, and that her report seems to exaggerate little. What Cincinnati, a town of twenty thousand people, was in 1827, a mining city on the slopes of the Rocky Mountains might be in 1887, and Cincinnatians of cultivation would now say very much the same thing of the Colorado or Montana town as Mrs. Trollope did of the Cincinnati of 1827. The great difference would be that the American would calmly say that everything would "come out right" in time, when the town was older and the inhabitants had more leisure to bestow on the refinements of life. Mrs. Trollope was not so philosophical. As Anthony Trollope said of her:

> No observer was certainly ever less qualified to judge of the prospects, or even of the happiness, of a young people. No one could have been worse adapted by nature for the task of learning whether a nation was in a way to thrive. Whatever she saw she judged, as most women do, from her own standing point. If a thing was ugly in her eyes it ought to be ugly to all eyes — and, if ugly, it must be bad. What though people have plenty to eat and clothes to wear, if they put their feet upon the table and do not reverence their betters? The Americans were to her rough, uncouth, and vulgar — and she told them so.

Mrs. Trollope came first to New Orleans, went up the Mississippi to Memphis, then up the Ohio to Cincinnati, and remained there some three years. Six months more she spent in travel Eastward, but not at all in New England. Consequently she saw, for the most part, what was then the outskirts of our civilization, and what she saw she reported. As a cultivated woman, accustomed to the best of society in London, she was repelled by the rudeness and lack of refinement she saw nearly everywhere. "The incessant, remorseless spitting of Americans" was the most annoying thing to her, because it could not be escaped. But this is what she saw on the Mississippi steamboat:

> The total want of all the usual courtesies of the table; the voracious rapidity with which the viands were seized and devoured; the strange, uncouth phrases and pronunciation; the loathsome spitting, from the contamination of which it was absolutely impossible to protect our dresses; the frightful manner of feeding with their knives, till the whole blade seemed to enter into the mouth; and the still more frightful manner of cleaning the teeth afterwards with a pocketknife, soon forced us to feel that we were not surrounded by the generals, colonels, and majors of the old world, and that the dinner hour was to be anything rather than an hour of enjoyment.

The sanitary condition of Cincinnati may be inferred from her landlord's reply to Mrs. Trollope's inquiry where she should deposit rubbish from her house:

> Your Help will just have to fix them all into the middle of the street, but you must mind, old woman, that it is the middle. I expect you don't know as we have got a law what forbids throwing such things at the sides of the streets; they must just all be cast right into the middle, and the pigs soon takes them off.

It is not strange that Mrs. Trollope, being a bright and fastidious woman, not a far-seeing student of social evolution, should soon say:

> Were I an English legislator, instead of sending Sedition to the Tower, I would send her to make a tour of the United States. I had a

---

* Wandering Words. By Sir Edwin Arnold. Illustrated. Longmans, Green & Co. $5.00.

* Domestic Manners of the Americans. By Mrs. Trollope. Two vols. Dodd, Mead & Co.

> little leaning toward sedition myself when I set out, but before I had half completed my tour I was quite cured.

In the older parts of the country Mrs. Trollope found more to praise, and she showed no little penetration in the manner and objects of her praise. The anger excited by her free comment on the raw America of 1827 was, we can now see, largely due to the truth of her assertions. What she says about the strange separation of the two sexes in society as the cause of the lack of refinement, we should consider today very just; that state of things has gone by entirely. Her description of revivals, her account of slavery, and her comments on the literature of the time are vigorous and sensible. The whole work has a peculiar value to the America of today, that has so largely outgrown the rude youth here described, and is able to receive with calmness any criticism of its present attainment.

ROUND THE RED LAMP.*

WE all knew that Dr. Doyle could write remarkable novels and remarkable detective stories, but his "facts and fancies of medical life" present him in a wholly new light. It will be news to some American readers to learn that the "red lamp" is the usual sign of the medical practitioner in England. It is out of his medical experiences that the writer speaks to us, and a more boldly realistic and yet artistic set of stories has not been published for many a day. At first we are likely to think that they are simple narratives of facts and nothing more, but as we turn the final page of "His First Operation" — the most realistic perhaps of all the stories — we recognize the novelist's hand as well as the physician's, and we realize that in all the tales facts are presented very differently from the manner of a medical journal. They are treated with rare artistic skill; otherwise we should not listen to them.

"Behind the Times" is as pleasing as any of the stories; the old practitioner in it is delightfully human. "The Third Generation," with its tragic conclusion, will startle the thoughtless reader by its revelation of the results of sin. A rare dramatic power is displayed in tales which, as the author says, are "bitter to the taste," but it is the bitterness of life. We wait in the doctor's office with the patient who finds himself the victim of an incurable hereditary disease, and we are made to follow him through his story as he turns in his agony and wrath on his Maker, and curses God and dies.

"The Case of Lady Sannox" is less artistic. It seems overdrawn and untrue to nature. "A Question of Diplomacy" and "Sweethearts" do something to relieve the somberness of the more medical stories, and have grace as well as power.

The chief interest of the collection centers around its distinctly medical features. Is it right to give the public so many details from the operating room? This question will be raised by the publication of these stories. For our own part we hold that any fact in life which a clever novel-writer can make a story out of he has a right to use, be it ever so grewsome. The reader who wants only the agreeable facts of life has an equal right to leave such stories unread.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST AS REPRESENTED IN ART.*

ARCHDEACON FARRAR does not claim in these five hundred pages "to write either a history of art or an exhaustive treatise on one branch of it." He only desires to show how great works of art "express and illustrate the thoughts of generations on the greatest and holiest subject which can occupy the mind of man." He aims, among other things, "to indicate the influences upon Christian art of the faithful or unfaithful, the pure or superstitious, the deeply devout or the wholly undevout feelings of the epochs and the artists by whom it was produced." In this more especially moral or spiritual treatment of painting (to which this book is confined) Archdeacon Farrar seems to us to win the main success of this volume. Under each of the numerous subdivisions of his theme he usually attends carefully to the theological or religious aspects and bearings of the art and the artists he is considering. We find ourselves in such general accord with his spirit, if not with his letter, that these discussions have more value for us than the rest of the matter. The author in writing of "The Suffering Christ," for instance, speaks of the reserve of the early Christians in depicting their Master, and asks if it is desirable to paint Christ as suffering:

> From personal feeling and theological conviction I should certainly answer that, in the abstract, the holy reserve of the early Christians was safer and more wise. . . . The mistaken application of two texts, which, taken in their true meaning, give no sanction to the all but exclusive contemplation of Christ's brief temporal sufferings, has led Christians to regard Him exclusively as the agonized sufferer, and to substitute what He once did for all that He was, and all that He now does, and all that He eternally requires. . . . The late unscriptural, unprimitive, irreverent introduction of the crucifix into the ordinary emblems of Christianity involved a failure in all true apprehension of the aspect in which we should habitually regard our Risen, Glorified, Ascended Lord.

A second merit of Archdeacon Farrar's work is the scholarly comprehensiveness with which he treats his subdivisions, such as the symbols of the early Church, the personal aspect of the Saviour, and the life of Christ considered seriatim. He writes lucidly, as ever, and is personally acquainted with much of the art that he describes; for the rest he depends upon the best authorities. But he attempts too much in trying to cover the whole life of Christ in one volume, and he is so little aware of this fact that he introduces much matter, about the Virgin, for instance, which could properly be omitted. The chief defect of the book is the almost incredible poorness of the illustrations. When one thinks of Dr. Van Dyke's Christ Child in Art or Karl Károly's Raphael's Madonnas, he is inclined to disbelieve his eyes when they show him the names of Macmillan and Farrar on a book profusely illustrated with pictures of such a low grade as nearly all those here given. It is difficult to imagine any justification for such wretched work as at least nine tenths of these reproductions. The choice of subjects to be presented is generally good, but the execution is astonishingly bad. Archdeacon Farrar ought to revise his text carefully, and his publishers should provide a wholly new set of plates for the illustrations for another edition.

THREE HEROINES OF NEW ENGLAND ROMANCE.*

THIS joint volume by four authors (for Mr. E. H. Garrett's "Notes" added to the sketches of the three heroines make him one of the writers as well as the artist of the "many little picturings, authentic and fanciful," of which the title-page speaks) is gracefully written and felicitously illustrated. Indeed, we recall no recent book work by Mr. Garrett which is so uniformly good. Many of his picturings are sketches of scenes in Marblehead, Plymouth, and Portsmouth — places which need no glorifying touch to make them picturesque. His "fanciful" pictures of old times and manners in New England have much of the ease and happiness of delineation which distinguish the best work of foreign pen draughtsmen. In only one instance do we find fault with Mr. Garrett, where he has represented Miles Standish as "grizzled," in contradiction of the fact stated here that he was only thirty-five or six when he proposed by proxy.

There is a surprising unity of touch and execution among the four writers — whether Mrs. Spofford relates the few and slender facts known about Priscilla Mullins and John Alden, or Miss Brown (who has been fortunate in having a subject at once the most romantic and fullest of historic detail) tells the story of Agnes Surriage, or Miss Guiney makes the most out of the little known career of Martha Hilton, who married two of the Wentworths of Portsmouth, or Mr. Garrett lightly recounts the impressions of his bicycle tour in search of points of view in the localities associated with the three beauties. Miss Guiney is, perhaps, a little too condescending to early New England, toward which her studies have probably not led her often; but all have the same desire to see in these three episodes a salutary touch of true romance in the midst of life that was largely either austere or careworn. The least known of the three lady authors has certainly not written with the least charm. With the best known we find ourselves unable to agree when she exalts the "pink perfection" of the mayflower as found only in the Plymouth woods.

---

*Round the Red Lamp. By A. Conan Doyle. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

*The Life of Christ as Represented in Art. By Frederic W. Farrar, D.D., F.R.S. Macmillan & Co. $6.00.

*Three Heroines of New England Romance. Three True Stories Herein Set Forth by Mrs. Harriet Prescot Spofford, Miss Louise Imogen Guiney, and Miss Alic Brown. Little, Brown & Co. $2.00.

THE THREE MUSKETEERS.*

THE elder Dumas' fascinating narrative of D'Artagnan, Porthos, Aramis, and Athos has never been illustrated before with such fire and spirit as M. Leloir displays in the two hundred and fifty photographic "process" reductions in these two volumes. The book is a late issue in Crowell's new Illustrated Library, and its price is very moderate considering the good quality of the paper, the fineness of the typography, and the general excellence of the whole make-up. But the illustrators of previous volumes in this library are left far behind by the work of this talented Frenchman. The younger Dumas, in the letter which prefaces this "complete and accurate translation," quotes M. Leloir as writing after his last sketch was finished: "For two years I have been living with D'Artagnan, Athos, Porthos, Aramis, and all the actors in that great epic. You cannot believe my grief at leaving them." One can see the force of these words in examining these animated and stirring designs. To the artist all these characters were living beings, and he has pictured them as such; it is not strange that he sighed at leaving them for other work less pleasing. The two frontispieces of these volumes are portraits of Dumas and Cardinal Richelieu.

MYCENIAN ART.†

THESE two volumes form the sixth installment of the scholarly and readable history of ancient art due to MM. Perrot and Chipiez. Greece has been their goal from the beginning, and, now that they have reached it, they intend to devote to it three works, of which the present is the first. By Mycenian art they mean that art which Schliemann and Dörpfeld have made so well known in recent years from the remains at Tiryns, Mycenæ, and the Hill of Hissarlik. They date this period centuries before those epic songs which developed into the Iliad. But first of all the two authors consider the country and the people at length, and then, as in duty bound, they tell what little is known about the stone age in Greece:

> Ere the burden was laid upon the Hellenic tribes to correct and master, by sheer ingenuity, patience, and skill, the defects of materials, here untractable, there too soft and brittle, the examples and imports of the Stranger had opened up to them novel and easier paths, of which they eagerly availed themselves. The stone age was here much shorter than in Central Europe and, in consequence of it, far less productive. In this direction its labors fall immeasurably below the jade axes and sticks of command, as they are called, of the inhabitants of our cave and lake dwellings, polished with marvelous care and ornamented with designs both spirited, correct, and of rare elegance.

Troy, which M. Perrot finds in the Hill of Hissarlik, as one of the four strata, detains him for a hundred pages. Where Scamander and Simoïs met it stood:

> But it does by no means follow its [sic] having been a large place, capable of harboring thousands of auxiliaries within its walls, or that the sustained efforts of united Greece were required to subdue it.

After surveying Tiryns and Mycenæ at greater length, the two authors pass to consider the general characteristics of Mycenian architecture:

> The distinctive peculiarities of the architecture we are considering are, above all, (1) the use of clay mortar as sole binding material, (2) stone bases with superimposed walls of crude brick, and (3) timber ties to keep in place the courses of masonry.

In the second volume we come to the domed tombs, two of which are described in detail with that soundness of judgment on disputed points which distinguishes M. Perrot and that abundance of plates and drawings for which M. Chipiez is to be thanked. They do not find in Mycenian days any trace of temples, for "primitive religion takes its being and inspiration from the mystery that surrounds death. Its temple is the tomb, within and above which are performed the rites which the family and clan render to their dead." With the treatment of sculpture these pages take on a more human interest. Painting needs to be only briefly discussed, but the industrial arts are expounded fully and pictured profusely.

These volumes most worthily fulfill the promise of their predecessors. They supply a firm groundwork for the presentation of the developed and commanding art which is to form the subject of the next two works on the almost inexhaustible art of Greece. As before, the ample pictorial apparatus (544 engravings and 20 colored plates) matches the well-proportioned and judicious text; the combination makes a history destined to be standard and authoritative for a long time.

NAPOLEON AND THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.*

IF the present strange revival of the "Napoleonic legend" continues much longer, literary journals will have to issue regular Bonaparte supplements in charge of a special editor. Why it is and to what it tends are two questions which one may not easily answer, but that one result will be the most thorough possible illumination of the majestic figure of the Corsican from every point of view seems very plain. Another Napoleon does not appear probable; certainly the cause of democracy would suffer immeasurably were there even reason to dread such an advent. The more we know of the emperor the less does one need to fear another such triumph of colossal egotism.

The literary fascination of Thiers' histories of the Revolution, the consulate, and the empire is well known. He may be said to be more responsible for the Napoleonic legend than any other writer. His volumes have gone through many editions in French and have been translated into nearly all modern languages. Written from the French standpoint, they exalt France to the highest rank among the nations and Napoleon becomes a demigod. How pernicious such flattery and eulogy may become is obvious when a sober historian declares that "the events of 1870 can hardly be explained without reference to the 'chauvinism' encouraged and in great part created by the History of the Consulate and the Empire." Thiers is not to be depended upon for accuracy or impartiality, but his volumes have the attraction which hero worship always exercises, and it is well that all degrees of the Napoleonic cult, even the utmost, should be preserved and exhibited. One is glad to see, then, the Lippincott Co., in conjunction with English publishers, issuing Thiers' numerous volumes in a fine library edition. Of the French Revolution, translated, with notes and illustrations, by F. Shoberl, two volumes of the five are ready; the set is to have forty steel engravings after various designers, engraved by

---

* The Three Musketeers. By Alexandre Dumas. Illustrated by Maurice Leloir. Two vols. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $3.00.

† History of Art in Primitive Greece. Mycenian Art. From the French of Georges Perrot and Charles Chipiez. Two vols. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $15.50.

* The History of the French Revolution, 1789–1800. By Louis Adolphe Thiers. In five vols. Vols. I and II. J. B. Lippincott Co. Each, $3.00.

History of the Consulate and the Empire of France under Napoleon. By the Same. In twelve vols. J. B. Lippincott Co. Each, $3.00.

Napoleon. By Alexandre Dumas. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

Napoleon at Home. By Frédéric Masson. Two vols. J. B. Lippincott Co. $7.50.

Napoleon, Lover and Husband. By Frédéric Masson. The Merriam Co. $2.00.

The Revolutionary and Napoleonic Era, 1789–1815. By J. H. Rose. Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

W. Greatbatch. The type is large and the page easy to read, though unleaded; the paper is good, and the binding a neat blue cloth. The Consulate and the Empire is the translation of D. F. Campbell and J. Sterling, and it is provided with thirty-six steel plates. The two sets are uniform in their mechanical make-up, and they are to be commended to libraries and other buyers as excellent editions of this standard plea for Bonaparte.

Dumas' sketch of the emperor, which Mr. John B. Larner has translated, may be described as a Thiers in miniature; for those who think life too short to read thousands upon thousands of octavo pages it may do as well; of course it has value only for its picturesqueness.

M. Masson considers Napoleon "him who among men was the nearest approach to that which is called a god." From such a point of view no detail of his "daily life at the Tuileries" can be held insignificant or valueless. Accordingly two handsome volumes, containing between them the matter of an ordinary octavo, give one fourth of their space to lists of the emperor's wardrobe, while the remainder is occupied with the most scrupulous account of the etiquette, the apartments, the toilet, the morning levée, the déjeuner, the study, the working hours, the dinner, the evening, and the Sunday. If there is any particular concerning Napoleon's habits or dress which cannot be found here, it certainly is not the fault of the obsequious M. Masson. How greatly this biographer's ideas of sexual morality and marriage differ from those commonly held in English-speaking countries his other volume, entitled Napoleon, Lover and Husband, shows emphatically. The perpetual amours in which the emperor indulged himself seem to this writer entirely proper in a great man. He represents him as only too fond a husband, cruelly deceived by Josephine and by Marie Louise as well. It is, indeed, a sensual atmosphere in which this approach to a god moved, as a devout admirer pictures him.

Mr. J. H. Rose's volume in the new Cambridge Historical series is quite a model in its way. His subject is the European Revolution caused by the French Revolution or coincident with it, and his treatment is at once interesting in its narrative of events and helpful in its generalizations from the comparatively unfamiliar point of view. It is a profound relief, after Thiers, Dumas, and Masson, to take up a book which speaks of Napoleon as "a nature profoundly able, far-seeing, and determined, endowed with a subtlety in intrigue more than Italian and with the elemental strength of a race unexhausted by sentimentalism and anarchy." He was the greatest enemy political liberty has had in modern times, but "the social and agrarian systems" of the Continent were founded by him, and "this is his true glory."

PHILLIPS BROOKS' ESSAYS AND ADDRESSES.*

THIS is probably the last volume which we shall have from the remains of the great Episcopal Bishop of Massachusetts, unless other collections of sermons shall be made from his manuscripts beside those which have already gone so far and wide on their inspiring mission. This collection, the editor tells us, comprises all Bishop Brooks' "public utterances outside of the pulpit . . . of which any record at all satisfactory has been preserved." The volume is divided, about halfway, between religious topics and those more literary and social; one should thus speak because Brooks suffused every subject he treated with the glow of an ardent and humane faith, and in a very true and broad sense all these papers are religious. It is a type of religion which will always win the respect of men of affairs, of letters, and of society for the everlasting gospel which is reinterpreted to their own age by a heart so tender, a mind so true, and a conscience so strong.

In the first division of the book the essays given before the congresses of the Protestant Episcopal Church and the Clericus Club of Boston and addresses at religious anniversaries predominate. Breadth of view and catholicity of statement appear on every page. The conclusion of the essay on Orthodoxy is a specimen of them all:

> Is not the sum of the whole matter this — that orthodoxy as a principle of action or a standard of belief is obsolete and dead? It is not that the substance of orthodoxy has been altered, but that the very principle of orthodoxy has been essentially disowned. It is not conceivable now that any council, however ecumenically constituted, should so pronounce on truth that its decrees should have any weight with thinking men save what might seem legitimately to belong to the character and wisdom of the persons who composed the council. Personal judgment is on the throne and will remain there — personal judgment enlightened by all the wisdom past or present which it can summon to its aid, but forming finally its own conclusions and standing by them in the sight of God, whether it stands in a great company or stands alone.

Phillips Brooks was too conscious of the supremacy of character in human life to hold out socialistic ideals based on legislation as the hope of the workingman. So he said, very truly, at the Wells Institute:

> The battle that is to be fought out in this building your president made plain to us when he bade us think of those things that are to be cultivated here; when he bade us remember that in sobriety, in intelligence, in industry, in skill, in thrift, there lay the great salvation of the workingmen; when he told us that the enemies of the workingman were intemperance, the yielding to his lusts, the giving up of those things which are of infinite value for those which are of immediate value; unskillfulness, the willingness to do things in a poor, meager, and shambling way instead of doing them in the best and finest way in which they can be done; unthriftiness, the lavish hand which flings far and wide that which it were best to keep — these are the things that are the real enemies of the workingmen of today, and the enemy of the workingman in America is the enemy of America.

One would like to quote freely from the fine and profound address on "Literature and Life;" but it should be read as a whole, like the other papers in this rich volume.

— Ex-President Dr. McCosh of Princeton College died in Princeton, N. J., November 16. He was born in Ayrshire, Scotland, April 1, 1811. His natural aptitude for metaphysics and kindred studies received great encouragement at the universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh, where he received his education. He became a minister of the Church of Scotland in Arbrath in 1835. At the disruption of the church in 1843 he gave up his living and became a member of the Free Church. In 1851 he was appointed professor of logic and metaphysics in Queen's College, Belfast, Ireland. His work, The Method of Divine Government, Physical and Moral (1850), brought him into prominence among the scholars of the day. In 1866 he made a tour of the United States, and was urged to accept the presidency of Princeton College, which he did, and in 1868 he removed to that city. November 10, 1887, Dr. McCosh resigned his position at Princeton College after nearly a score of years' service, and devoted himself to literature. He was the author of a large number of philosophical works.

— Acting upon a suggestion made by Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Royal Historical Society decided to commemorate the centenary of the death of Gibbon. A committee was formed under the presidency of the Earl of Sheffield. Addresses were delivered at a meeting of the society on November 15 by Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff and Mr Frederic Harrison. There was an exhibition at the British Museum of portraits, manuscripts, and relics of Gibbon. Contributions to the exhibition were promised by the Earl of Sheffield, Mr. Alfred Morrison, Mr. Hallam Murray, General Meredith Reed, M. W. de Sévery, and others; and the Swiss Government requested any persons in Switzerland who might be in possession of relics of Gibbon to lend them.

— We may draw the attention of our readers to a Bibliography of Japan, by F. von Wenckstern, which will appear shortly. The work is comprehensive and systematically arranged, and will consist of about 250 pages of large octavo. It will supply, in addition to a facsimile reprint of M. Léon Pagès' Bibliographie Japonaise, a list of books, essays, and maps published from 1859 to 1893. In accuracy of detail and in completeness the book will leave little to be desired. — The Athenæum.

— The present Lord Tennyson's biography of his father will probably not appear for several years to come. The preparations of the material for use in the volume have already occupied a year and a half. Nearly 50,000 letters have been examined.

— T. Y. Crowell & Co. will publish for the holidays a small volume of poems by Sarah K. Bolton, with a portrait of the author.

---

* Essays and Addresses: Religious, Literary, and Social. By Phillips Brooks. Edited by the Rev. John Cotton Brooks. E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.00.

The Literary World

BOSTON 1 DECEMBER 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

Invocation.

Ye solemn prophets, who on Sinai's height
 Hear God's command the thunder-volley drown,
Who on imperishable tablets write
 The precedents of conscience, and bring down
 The heavenly code, which levels king and clown:

Dear Poets, whoe'er keep the eyes of youth,
 Whose souls are as a perfect violin
Melodious, when Beauty plays, or Truth,
 Whose genial hearts are hostelries wherein
 Courtesy greets all travelers, save Sin;

Redeemers of humanity, who feel
 Vicarious passion, hallowing the scope
Of homely duties; wizards who reveal
 The preciousness of common things, and ope
 With wand benign the hidden gates of hope;

Rapt dreamers of the transcendental dreams
 Which are reality; foretellers of Perfection, which across the future gleams
 To dim the present good wherein we move;
 Spokesmen of Freedom, oracles of Love:

Be my companions, ye that are my kin!
 Impeach my doubting heart, my sluggish will!
I hear your call above the cheerless din
 Of court and pulpit, senate house and mill:
 O guide my footsteps to your sacred hill.

— From Poems New and Old, by William Roscoe Thayer.

The Yellow Book.

'Twas Lane and Mathews who arose
And raked the green young studios
 To give the world a start.
They filled a flaring "Yellow Book,"
Then clamored to the public, "Look!
 Here's Literature — and Art!"

And there were harpies, lank and lean,
With snouts mysteriously obscene;
 And squeaking youths cried "Damn!"
And bragged of callow sins, with "Oh!
If my mamma could only know
 How bold, how bad I am!"

Some said "How clever!" some, "How vile!"
The man of sense, 'twixt yawn and smile,
 Just voted it a bore.
That "Yellow Book," of meanings dim,
A yellow nuisance was to him,
 And it was nothing more.

— Westminster Budget.

HOLIDAY BOOKS.

The Last Leaf.

This exquisite edition of Dr. Holmes' early poem was in preparation last summer. As he wrote to his publishers: "It was with a smile on my lips that I wrote it; I cannot read it without a sigh of tender remembrance." Now that the poet who called himself an illustration of his own verses is gone, there is an added sigh of remembrance for him as we think how many a Christmastide he has rendered more joyful. Messrs. George Wharton Edwards and F. Hopkinson Smith have furnished the illustrations — the latter making the landscapes and Mr. Edwards the remaining pictures and decorations. Each passage of the poem to be illustrated is given on a decorated page followed by the design on the next leaf. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.

Naples, the City of Parthenope.

Mrs. Clara Erskine Clement-Waters in this taking volume treats Naples as she has heretofore treated Venice — historically, descriptively, and picturesquely. Two thirds of the space relating to Naples itself is given to a sketch of the history which might well have been condensed in order to leave more than forty pages to "Neapolitan Life" as it is today. Art and letters and the fascinating environs of this city so beautiful for situation occupy the remainder of the volume. Twenty full-page photogravures present the prominent places of interest and join with Mrs. Clement-Waters' animated text in fastening the attention to a story and a scene of rare attraction. — Estes & Lauriat. $3.00.

Becket.

Tennyson's noble drama receives a comely holiday garb in this volume in olive green and gilt covers and full gilt edges. Its two hundred pages of excellent typography on heavy paper, from the Caxton Press of New York, are illustrated, but not over-illustrated, by F. C. Gordon. He has, naturally, been indebted to Mr. Henry Irving somewhat for suggestions of scenes and costume, but the artist is fortunate who has Mr. Irving for a guide in such a field. Mr. Gordon has been especially happy in his consistent and beautiful picturing of Rosamond, while Becket has ample justice done his loftier self. — Dodd, Mead & Co. $2.00.

Wild-Flower Sonnets.

Mrs. Emily Shaw Forman's booklet of twenty-five sonnets observes a chronological order in its progress from "Broom-Cornberry" in March to "Tokens" in February. On the way the hepatica, the kalmia, the twin-flower, the sabbatia, the goldenrod, the beach grass, and fifteen other flowering plants of the fields, the woods, and the shore are the subjects of refined and thoughtful verse, which will quicken the reader's perception of beauty and deepen trust in the unity of the world without and the world within. We quote one of the sonnets which Mr. Abbott Graves has left without such appropriate illustration as he has given to other flowers than the white-fringed orchis:

One golden day I wandered far and wide
Down sheltered dells spicy with rose and bay,
Through marshy meads with scarlet lilies gay,
And sought and searched for thee, O fairest bride
Of summer fields, Fringed Orchis, snowy pure!
Bright Arethusa smiled to see me pass,
And many a modest wilding from the grass
Glanced shyly upward; nothing could allure
My heart from its fond quest; the yearning grew
At every step to find thy hiding place,
As grows the longing to behold the face
Of one long loved, long absent. Well I knew
Such love as mine must win. Some subtle power
Led me to thee; was it thy soul, my flower?

— Joseph Knight Co. $1.00.

The Ariel Shakespeare.

With the issue of twelve more volumes the dainty Ariel Shakespeare is complete. Beside the thirty-seven volumes given to the plays bound separately, one volume contains the Sonnets, another the miscellaneous Poems, and a third an index of characters, a glossary, and other helpful matters. This little pocket edition with Frank Howard's outlines (five hundred in all) is very fetching; it can be procured not only in full leather binding but also in cloth covers with narrow margins, making the volume still smaller. Two volumes are also bound in one, so that the set can be had in forty or in twenty volumes, as the purchaser may desire. Any volume, too, or selection of volumes may be purchased in either style, so that the buyer's pocket is eased in every way. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. Each volume, cloth, 40c; leather, 75c.

Their Wedding Journey.

Mr. Howells' delightful combination of sentiment and travel has lost none of its charm in the baker's dozen of years that have elapsed since its first appearance. It has, we believe, had one set of illustrations already, but whether the plates are worn out, or for some better reason, Mr. Clifford Carleton has furnished a large number of entirely new process pictures, which add much to the pleasure of the reader by their animation and gracefulness. He has been especially successful with Isabel March; one scarcely knows what to expect in a portrait of Basil, and cannot criticise an artist for deficiency in a method which does not lend itself easily to fineness of expression. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $3.00.

Sterne's Works.

The Messrs. Dent & Co. of London continue their good work of reprinting English classics in the most convenient of volumes with an edition of Sterne. It includes the Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy in three volumes, the Sentimental Journey in another, and Letters, Sermons (eight only), and miscellaneous matters in two more. Mr. E. J. Wheeler's illustrations are extremely good, and Mr. Saintsbury's introductions to the various works are capital. For the lover of Sterne this set of books will make a very acceptable Christmas gift. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $6.00.

Pride and Prejudice.

Mr. Hugh Thomson, according to all rules of probability based on his past successes in illustrating eighteenth century and early nineteenth century literature, is the man of men to furnish the picturing for Miss Austen's inimitable novels. This charming edition of that story of hers which to Mr. George Saintsbury in his introduction seems "the most perfect, the most characteristic, the most eminently quintessential of its author's works," fully bears out this expectation. The Bennets, the Bingleys, Mr. Darcy, Mr. Collins, Lady Catherine Brough, and all the other personages who figure here in Miss Austen's words display themselves not otherwise in Mr. Thomson's faithful and spirited drawings. The full gilt, the large type, and the peacock-bedecked covers irresistibly invite the lovers of this immortal tale to another reading of a book that will bear re-reading indefinitely. — Macmillan & Co. $2.25.

Wimples and Crisping-Pins.

The late Theodore Child's eleven "studies in the coiffure and ornaments of women" are various in their treatment. Some, like those on Egypt, Athens, and Rome, are sketches in the form of dialogues at a party or in a studio, where the theme is largely dress and ornament. In the last mentioned he cleverly introduces Tertullian gathering material for his denunciations of the extravagance of women. Mr. Child did not aim at a treatise or a complete history of coiffure, but desired mainly to call attention "to the wealth of example and suggestion contained in the paintings and sculpture of past ages," and thus to set forth "indirectly the principles and conditions upon which beautiful coiffure and ornament depend." He travels through the East and classical antiquity, the Middle Ages, Florence, and Venice, to come to the Spanish toque, the eighteenth century, and the romantic period of our own century. The chapter on jewelry and ornaments frankly reveals Mr. Child's Oriental taste: "With the exception of the Arab women of the Ouled Naïl tribe and the Nautch girls of India, no modern woman wears enough jewelry and ornaments of gold." Without agreeing here, one can easily enjoy Mr. Child's vivacious sketches of a theme which engages him, and the many apt illustrations that ornament the book. — Harper & Brothers. $2.00.

De Amicis' Holland.

Miss Helen Zimmern's translation from the thirteenth Italian edition of Edmondo de Amicis' fascinating travels in the Netherlands appears this year in brave holiday attire. The typography is not so fine as we have known in similar editions of other masterpieces — with the scarlet bindings, slip covers, and box — but it is good, and the forty-four photogravures from photographs taken in Holland by Dr. C. L. Mitchell are happily selected as to their subjects and skillfully executed. The many travelers who have been affecting the land of the Dutch of recent years will welcome this fair couplet of volumes. — Porter & Coates. $5.00.

Goethe's Faust.

Mr. Frank M. Gregory's illustrations to the beautifully printed edition of Anster's translation of Faust seem to indicate that he is off his ground in taking up so difficult a subject for the artist. The frontispiece, which represents the unhappy Margaret at the shrine, is effective and very touching; but the remaining illustrations are only so many variations on ineffectiveness and inappropriateness. Dr. Anster's version is good enough to deserve the admirable typographical setting it gets here, however; and as illustrated editions of Faust go, this one, on the whole, ranks well up. — Dodd, Mead & Co. $3.50.

The Victorian Age of English Literature.

Mrs. Oliphant's very readable, if not profound, summary of English literature since Victoria began to reign we have not happened to notice before; but we can now commend it to those who prefer to be introduced to modern English literature by one of its most agreeable writers rather than by the ordinary schoolbook maker. This edition in a series of Masterpieces gives the work in two volumes, paged consecutively up to 647, and there are sixteen fairly good photogravures of the queen and fifteen authors. — Lovell, Coryell & Co. $3.00.

The Book of the Fair.

The magnificent folio volume of a thousand pages which the Bancroft Co. is publishing in parts of forty pages each is not a work gotten up for this holiday season, but it is one that may well be borne in mind by any one desiring to make a present of an illustrated volume of the first order. Parts VII and VIII are devoted to the Woman's and the Mechanic Arts' Buildings, and both are profusely adorned with views of the buildings and objects on exhibition and portraits of prominent persons connected with the exhibits. The complete Book of the Fair will be a treasury of art which the teacher or the clergyman would especially rejoice at seeing among his Christmas presents. — The Bancroft Co. Per part, $1.00.

Madame de Staël's Corinne is a recent issue by the London firm of J. M. Dent & Co. in the familiar form of other classic novels published by them. The translation is the first English version corrected for this edition. Mr. Saintsbury in his introduction speaks of Corinne as "a love story doubled with a guidebook, an eighteenth century romance of 'sensibility' blended with a transition or even nineteenth century diatribe of æsthetics and 'culture;'" but "it has an immense historical value as showing the temper, the aspirations, the ideas, and in a way the manners of a certain time and society." — J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.00.

Two new volumes just issued by Little, Brown & Co. complete their convenient library edition of Victor Hugo's romances. Both contain his early work. Hans of Iceland was written in 1821, and in the second of the two volumes Bug Jargal was first composed in a fortnight when Hugo was sixteen. Claude Gueux and The Last Day of a Condemned are somewhat more mature. This translation is unabridged, and the volumes are easy to read because of the large type and easy to hold because of their convenient size. — Each, $1.50.

Buyers of standard literature for presents should not overlook the fascinating and scholarly little Temple Shakespeare, of which four more volumes of the comedies are before us. It would be as difficult, indeed, to improve upon Mr. Gollancz' editing — which gives us the best available text, and in each volume introductory matter, a glossary, select notes, and an appropriate frontispiece — as it would be to criticise the admirable typography in black and red and the excellent paper. — Macmillan & Co. Each, 45c.

Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin's touching story of Timothy's Quest has been brought out by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. in a pleasing holiday edition. Mr. Oliver Herford's illustrations are simple sketches inserted in the text and fanciful headings to the different "scenes," as they are called, instead of chapters. Both classes of drawings are for the most part very successful and prove the growing skill of Mr. Herford as a book illustrator. — $1.50.

Mrs. Anna Harris Smith's excellent and helpful compilation, Golden Words for Daily Counsel, which has stood the test of six years' use, comes out this season in a white and gold edition, illustrated with portraits of sixteen of the authors quoted, Phillips Brooks fronting the title-page. — T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25.

BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Man Who Married the Moon.

Mr. Charles F. Lummis has already gathered his audience, and will have no hard work in filling the house again as he sits down as interpreter of the Pueblo story-tellers. Down in the sunshiny regions of New Mexico and within walls of adobe the Pueblo Indians have lived for centuries, uncounted either by notched sticks, knotted threads, or printed calendars. Industrious, sober, and endowed with mental and physical acuteness as they are, these brown story-tellers are in some things only overgrown children, and this makes them enjoy and hand down intact their fairy tales. Let the adult call these stories "myths;" they are none the less delightful fairy tales. The coyote plays the part of the usual goose, ass, or foolish fellow generally, that is made the victim of one joke or another, while the bear is a sort of four-legged Solomon. Most of the animals that fly, run, or crawl have shown their traits to the Zuñi folk. The moon is the "water maiden." The points of the compass have their mystic signification. The rattlesnake is the punisher of untruth and the guardian of accuracy. Thunder is the sacred dance-rattle of the gods. The pine trees sob. There is a Pueblo Bluebeard. The field mouse is a doctor, and there are cures for toothache not known to white dentists. Mr. Lummis tells these stories in a delightful way and in just the way, too, for children to enjoy them, especially when they are read by some grown person who can pronounce impressively (whether correctly or not) the strange names which are not altogether eliminated from the page. Two or three myths are especially delightful, like those of the "Brave Bobtails," the "Revenge of the Fawn," and the "Ants that Pushed on to the Sky." It is a thoroughly delightful thing to find native fairy tales, as beautiful as the many-tinted wild flowers of the prairie or the stars of the sky in loveliness, homegrown and right at hand. — Century Co. $1.50.

The Land of Pluck.

This volume comes out appropriately in a yellow linen cover all glorious with gold and dressed in "holland." In lively style Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge shows us the Dutch people and things inside the Land of Pluck and why it is called so. She gives history only in essence and extract, with no hint of "authorities." She pictures the hollow land in summer and winter, and reveals both sides of the dykes. The funny little things which attract the tourist's attention are gayly described (but the description of Broek has a curious echo of Washington Irving about it). The glories and splendors of the well-dyked country are set forth also in a style to please the young folks, while the pictures are perfectly delightful, both informing and amusing. The "Stories and Sketches" which compose the latter part of the book are tidbits selected from St. Nicholas. They are bright, and full of the kind of talk and incident which children love to read. The pictures are by good artists and some are of the best. Happy the child that finds this book in its Christmas stocking! It is sure to prove the parent of dreams of travel which sometime many of the readers will turn into reality. — Century Co. $1.50.

When Life Was Young.

We have always held Rhymes, Chimes, and Jingles, the collection of juvenile verses made years since by Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, one of the most delightful books of its kind ever printed. When Life Was Young is no less good. It has the same flavor with its predecessor, the same cheery sweetness of tone and fun — "morals set to music" — and the pretty poems are enriched with the same wealth of dainty illustration. As specimens of delicate humor mixed with pathos we cite "What Happened to Nelly," "Far Away," and "A Brown Study," and here is a merry little jingle which the book has ten delightful woodcuts to explain:

THE WINDMILL.

Said a hazy little, mazy little, lazy little boy:
"To see the windmill working so must any one annoy;
It can be stopped, I'm sure it can, and I should like to know
What in the world can ever make a windmill want to go?"

Said a quizzy little, frizzy little, busy little girl:
"What can be more delightful than to see a windmill whirl?
It loves to go, I'm sure it does, and hates to hang kerflop.
Now what on earth can ever make a windmill want to stop?

— The Century Co. $1.25.

In Sunshine Land.

Perhaps the prettiest among these dainty rhymes by Edith Thomas is that of "Sylvia and the Birds," but all are pretty. They are for children, but the grace of a practiced touch, which is in them all, makes them attractive to grown up readers as well. Here is a droll little conceit:

THE WORRIED VIOLET.

By woodside ways, in moist green nooks,
A small, pale violet holds its place.
Three lines are in its tender face.
How careworn and how sad it looks!

While every other violet
Blooms thoughtless in the shade or sun,
What secret has this little one,
What trouble it cannot forget?

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.

"Sirs, Only Seventeen!"

In Dorothy Draycott and her brother Tom Miss Virginia F. Townsend has drawn two high-spirited and lovable young people who seem very real in spite of a tendency on Tom's part to use rather more bookish language than even sophomores usually lavish upon their sisters when trying their powers of satire. His college slang seems to have been studied from life, and in his friendship for Dake Cramley, whom he saves from the slums, he is so natural and vigorous that one wonders why such deeds may not often be done by the young knights of modern time. The book is instinct with altruism and hope. — Lee & Shepard. $1.50.

The Patriot Schoolmaster.

Never has the story of Sam Adams — the man whose fearless vision made him grasp the idea of his country's independence when others struggled only for her charter rights — been told in more attractive guise for children than by Hezekiah Butterworth. The action of the tale centers round the hiding of the two guns, Adams and Hancock, by a schoolmaster and his boys, who played tag round the gunhouse where they were stored that no one should suspect they were being removed to a place of safety when a game was going on. How the guns were again concealed and what the boys did and how Sam Adams demanded that both regiments should leave Boston and how the little drummer boy Americanized "Yankee Doodle" — all this and more is presented in a stirring manner and with strong loyalty for the "father of America." Our national air is the old English air of "Nancy Dawson" or "Lucy Locket," which may have been sung in derision of Cromwell's soldiers and then of Washington's troops. The whole poem is given in this book — a reason in itself for buying the volume. The verses of Phillis Wheatley, the colored poet, are also given incidentally. The illustrations, by H. Winthrop Pierce, are remarkably good. — D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

Toinette's Philip.

This is the best story for children published in America since Little Lord Fauntleroy. Philip is a little white boy who is brought up by an old colored "mammy" in New Orleans and makes his living by selling flowers. He is adopted by a New York artist and his wife and taken away from New Orleans, and his adventures in New York form the chief part of the book. Nothing could be more charming than Mrs. C. V. Jamison's descriptions of Philip's life in the riotously luxuriant New Orleans garden, and all the descriptions of the city are full of delightful picturesqueness. Dea, a little girl who goes about with Philip in New Orleans, is very well described; but Philip, with his generous, sunny disposition, is one of the nicest children ever born into the book world. The book is extremely well illustrated. Any one in search of a delightful Christmas book for children between eight and twelve should look at this, for nothing better could be chosen. — Century Co. $1.50.

The Century Book for Young Americans.

In this very attractive book Mr. Elbridge S. Brooks takes a party of bright boys and girls to Washington, where they see all that is to be seen by the tourist bent on gaining a knowledge. The two Messrs. Dunlap supply the pertinent information from history and politics concerning the origin and working of all the departments of our national government, and there are supplementary chapters about the flag, the relations of the State, the city, and the town, the citizen, and American marvels of natural scenery. The extensive resources of the Century Co. have been freely drawn upon to illustrate the valuable matter with portraits of great Americans (a choice gallery it is) and views of Washington in every aspect. The Sons of the American Revolution did well to suggest this book, and every younger or older person who reads it will be the better citizen. — Century Co. $1.50.

The story of Zuleika, the beautiful Arabian mare, though not of Norwegian origin is the most interesting in the ten Norseland Tales, by Hjorth Boyesen, in the Norwegian series. "The Feud of the Wildhaymen" is thoroughly Northern in its conception of feats of strength and of the battle with the wild eagle. Very pathetic are "Life for Life" and "The Little Chap" whose "Dad" was swindled by an American bogus investment company. The other stories are almost equally good for either boys or girls, and the illustrations are quite spirited. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

Four pleasant stories for children by Barbara Yechton comprise the contents of a prettily gotten up volume called A Matter of Honor. The tales are marked by religious sentiment and tenderness for childhood. It is rather a new theme, the treatment of boys and girls as sponsors at a baptism, but certainly such sponsorship might ennoble them. — Thomas Whittaker. 60c.

Mr. Palmer Cox has personally conducted The Brownies Around the World this year in an entertaining volume uniform with its predecessors. These remarkable little persons, being exempt from ordinary conditions, go safely through a great number of exciting adventures with entire safety. Most of these perils are unknown to the common traveler, it is needless to say. — Century Co. $1.50.

The four little stories by Barbara Yechton which make up the volume called Two Knights Errant have the merit of being distinctly on the childish plane, with no admixture of either philosophy or romance. They are prettily written, and inculcate good lessons in a sweet and simple way. The illustrations are by Miss Harriet R. Richards. — Thomas Whittaker. 60c.

BOOKS FOR GIRLS.

Hope Benham.

Nora Perry has written here a real girl's book, bright, wholesome, and natural, save that Hope herself is almost too sweet and bright for an average girl. The daughter of a poor engineer, she sells flowers to gain the money with which to buy a violin. While doing this she is interviewed and snubbed by rich Dorothea. Years after, when Hope's father has become famous and wealthy, the two girls meet in the same boarding school. What they there do, say, and think is delightfully told. Would that all schools were like Miss Marr's and all girls like Hope! This is Miss Perry's first long story, and by it she will deservedly increase the reputation she has already established as a writer of short tales. Her work is painstaking and spirited, though her girls are rather ideal. The illustrations by Frank T. Merrill are good. — Little Brown & Co. $1.50.

Witch Winnie at Shinnecock.

Those who have followed Witch Winnie's career in Elizabeth W. Champney's series will be glad to meet her again at Shinnecock, L. I., where Mr. William M. Chase, the well-known artist, conducts his summer art classes. The account of the doings of the art colony is interesting, and the book as a whole is suitable and entertaining for a young girl to read. It is rather a dangerous experiment to introduce a living person into an imaginary circle, but Mrs. Champney has brought in Mr. Chase very successfully and very unobjectionably. The story itself is not artistic and the ending is unsatisfactory, but the author of a series of stories must leave curiosity unslaked. — Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.

Not Quite Eighteen.

As Christmas draws near the counters of the bookshops are flooded with a motley collection of juvenile literature of doubtful morals and undoubtedly bad literary style. Highly spiced stories of good little girls who lead erring parents into the straight and narrow path are unfortunately still too common. Boys' books of improbable adventure have at least one redeeming trait — they celebrate pluck, even if it is rather a superhuman kind of pluck; but the trash often provided for the girls inculcates nothing, not even a taste for reading. Susan Coolidge's latest volume is a happy exception in books for girls, and we can heartily recommend it as an enjoyable book. It is composed of sixteen short stories, all of which are pleasantly written and unexceptionable in style and tone. Susan Coolidge's heroines are healthy, well-bred, intelligent girls, who do not have any hairbreadth adventures from which they are miraculously preserved owing to their own unparalleled presence of mind and foresight, nor are they afflicted with a mania for converting their elders and betters by wholesale. — Roberts Brothers. $1.25.

Margaret Arnold's Christmas.

Seven stories of a mild interest make up Mrs. Mary D. Brine's contribution to holiday literature for young people. The best tale is called "My One Little Talent" — the story of three sisters whose father had lost his money, so that they were obliged to try to support themselves. The three girls are very charming, and the conversation bright and natural. Another story describes the visit of a "Country Week" child to an old farmer and his wife whose children have long been dead. There is too much sentimentality in Mrs. Brine's volume, but on the whole it is a fairly good collection. She uses some phrases which we cannot recommend as models of English; for instance, "Well, if you're saucy enough to stand there laughing in that way, I'll soon 'bounce' you for an intruder." To this elegant sentence the classic reply given is, "Ah, now that's not one bit fair." The illustrations are charming, although the anatomy of the figures will not always endure scrutiny. — E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.00.

Penelope Prig.

These are four bright, wholesome sketches of little girl life, by A. G. Plympton, the author of Dear Daughter Dorothy. The engaging young heroines outgrow their faults in most encouraging fashion, except "Little Olive, the Heiress," who apparently has no faults to speak of, and who certainly is a naïve and delightful type, making Merry Christmas for a motley group of friends, and learning thereby what it is to have "good times" one's self. The illustrations, by the author, are thoroughly in keeping with the grace of the stories. — Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

My New Home.

It is hardly needful to say that Mrs. Molesworth's latest story, although professing to be written by a girl of fourteen, easily interests readers who long ago passed that age, for most of us know that this teller of many tales understands childhood and can reproduce its states of feeling with rare felicity of touch. So, whether we are young or old, we feel the charm of the simple history that Helena unrolls — a history of all the chief happenings in her life since, as an orphaned baby, she was taken home by her wise and gentle grandmother. Through the little girl's eyes we see the people about her; with her we look back upon the delusion from which she happily escaped; and must it not be that, whether we know it or not, we are a little more kind and reasonable when we finish the book than when we began it? The illustrations are by L. Leslie Brooke. — Macmillan & Co. $1.00.

Mollie Miller.

Mrs. Merriman has already carried the Miller family through many adventures and now lets us meet them again. How May and Mollie worked with unselfish zeal to care for their invalid friend Johnny and how, finally, through Mollie's bravery Johnny came out strong and well is told without much literary skill, but with vivacity and knowledge of children's tastes. The book ends with a chapter called "Matrimonial Intentions." Love and marriage should not enter into children's stories. There is enough of incident and action to interest young people without introducing these great facts of older life. Boys and girls ought not to have these matters forced on their attention at a youthful age. Many parents wisely refuse to allow their children to read juvenile literature which leads up to and ends in cheap love-making. — Lee & Shepard. $1.25.

Another Girl's Experience.

Leigh Webster is a new writer, but this story for girls will compare with anything which Miss Alcott or Susan Coolidge has written. A poor minister's daughter had a longing to go away from home, with its monotonous duties, and see the world; so she accepted the position of companion to a New York woman of wealth, and she had a series of wholesome if not always agreeable experiences. The story is rich in incident and absorbingly interesting. The characters, too, are exceptionally well drawn, and there is only one sensational episode. To write a girl's story which shall not be a novel and shall not be sentimental or mawkishly religious is not a simple matter. It is because our books for girls are so poor that our American girls, for one reason, begin so early to feed on books like The Yellow Aster and The Heavenly Twins. Another Girl's Experience is so readable that no girl is likely to leave it unfinished who begins it. An excellent lesson is conveyed very felicitously. — Roberts Brothers. $1.25.

Olivia.

Mrs. Molesworth's name on a volume is usually sufficient to secure its selection by that busy class of Christmas present-senders who have no time to turn over the pages of the books they buy for their young relatives. Olivia is not quite up to her usual high moral standard. We cannot think the moral of a story good where a young girl, who has just been visiting at her aunt's house, returns under an assumed name and a disguise for the purpose of snubbing a rather uppish cousin. Otherwise Olivia is a pleasantly written book, which will amuse its young readers. Mrs. Molesworth's stories are always written in excellent English, and have invariably a well-bred quality which is often unfortunately lacking in our American literature for young people. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25.

Two Girls is a natural, healthy-minded story, by Amy E. Blanchard; it relates the fortunes of a group of boys and girls, one of whom passes through small tribulations, winning final success. "Auntie's" good advice is given in a charming manner. Incidentally the story is helpful as showing what one might do if one would, and there is so much truth in it that the high tone of the book is inspiring. The vignettes at the close of each chapter are very pretty. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25.

BOOKS FOR BOYS.

The Butterfly Hunters in the Caribbees.

Boys will like this story, by Dr. Eugene Murray Aaron, curator of the Entomological Department of the Academy of Natural Sciences in Philadelphia. It tells in a lifelike and interesting way the tale of two boys who spend an enforced vacation, during which on account of an outbreak of scarlet fever their school is closed, in collecting butterflies in the Bahamas, under escort of a trained naturalist who knows the science and the islands thoroughly. There are no startling adventures, but there is enough risk and movement to make the narrative "snappy," as the boys say, and to set other young folk to wondering why they, too, should not take up entomology as a pursuit and pastime and have as good a time and win as substantial a reward as did the young explorers in the story. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00.

When London Burned.

The title of this book shows at once that Mr. G. A. Henty has taken for his background the reign of Charles the Second. He presents as his hero the son of a destitute cavalier who failed to recover his estates at the time of the Restoration. Cyril therefore takes a place as assistant to a London merchant, but later he has the opportunity to see something of naval warfare under Prince Rupert. Mr. Henty improves his chance of showing how the reign of the Second Charles, despite the profligacy and extravagance of the court, was one of great advance for the people at large. The increase of wealth and the victories of the Dukes of York and Albemarle, Prince Rupert and the Earl of Sandwich, resulted in transferring to England the commercial and naval supremacy hitherto held by Holland. The story of the London plague and the great fire are told, of course; perhaps it is because this period is more familiar that the book as a whole seems less distinctive than some of its predecessors. Mr. Henty makes but slight attempt to reproduce any peculiarities of speech characteristic of the time he describes. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

Czar and Sultan.

In his sedentary days, when Herculean strength is a memory, Mr. Archibald Forbes, the noted correspondent in the last Russian war, rewrites the story for the youths of today. He now sees the campaign from all points of view, and perhaps his story is more accurate than of yore. It has the charm of personal experience, and shows a participant and a master of English style. Under the thin disguise of a story told by one John Carnegie, who is the sixteen-year-old son of a Scotch merchant doing business in the Danubian valley, we learn in detail the events of the great Russo-Turkish War of 1877–78. The narrative is brisk and lively, and the book is handsomely illustrated with over a dozen full-page pictures that give one a fine idea of the Russian commanders and of the awful slaughter, as well as of the impressive religious ceremonies after peace had been declared. We are glad that Mr. Forbes has put into one volume this animating episode of modern history, which is, quite possibly, only the prelude to another great outburst of Russian ambition for the extension of the empire of the Czar. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00.

First in the Field.

This stirring tale, by George Manville Fenn, depicts life in New South Wales during early days of the century. Dominie, a lad of fifteen, is taken from the boarding school in England, where he has spent several years, and joins his family who have emigrated for the sake of restoring the father's health. Dominie is a fine fellow, and in the unsettled life of the times there are abundant opportunities for developing his nerve, keenness of perception, and power of judgment. He shows much manliness in standing by a "'signed servant" who has been unjustly treated, and has thrilling experiences in communicating with him after his escape. The unfamiliar scenery of Australia is vividly painted, and detail of various kinds is so managed that interest is sustained throughout the 416 pages of the well-printed, well-illustrated book. — Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.

Wulf the Saxon.

The spirit and dash of Mr. G. A. Henty's books commend them unfailingly to their boy readers, and to minds more critical they have a real value, as they brighten dusty pages of history and give a flavor of reality to names and dates and occurrences that otherwise might have been a part of history, not a part of life itself. It is a good thing to feel that the boy heart in the times of Beric the Briton or of Wulf the Saxon can be understood by the boy heart today despite the difference of conditions and surroundings. Thus the historic sense will be developed and the successive periods of civilization become something more than a record of wars and conquests. We have here a picture of England fretted by powerful earls, progressing slowly in the arts of civilization, and feeling the opposing influences of Norman and Saxon; we are shown, too, the possibilities of the later harmony and assimilation of races. The historical details of the story are based on Freeman's History of the Norman Conquest in England, and Mr. Henty encourages his readers not to rest satisfied until they have read that great work. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

The Great Cattle Trail.

This story, by Edward S. Ellis, of life among the cowboys and Comanches of Western Texas is full of hairbreadth escapes. The nerve of the eighteen-year-old hero inspires admiration; but while it is true that his fighting is done in defense of himself or his friends, the thoughtful reader will question the wisdom of devoting a whole book to the warfare between whites and Indians in these days when we are learning the possibility of training the latter to be law-abiding citizens. In the last chapter it appears that even a Comanche can feel gratitude strong enough to make him imperil his life for the white man who has befriended him. This being true, cannot the Forest and Prairie series, of which this is the first number, give fuller illustrations of the Indian's response to justice and generosity? Would not the true proportions of affairs in our changing era be better observed by such storytelling? And would not the influence on boy nature be more wholesome? — Porter & Coates. $1.25.

Olaf the Glorious.

There are few more picturesque figures in history than Olaf, the first Christian king of Norway, the last of the splendid race of Harold of the Fair Hair and the invader of England. His hunted and persecuted boyhood, his magnificent strength and courage, his almost incredible adventures before and after he won his kingdom, and his final disappearance like that of King Arthur, with the legends which still survive as to his after life, make him a fit hero of skald and saga. Mr. Robert Leighton says in his preface, "My hero is not an imaginary one; he was a real flesh and blood man, who reigned as king of Norway just nine centuries ago," and he makes him very real to the boys for whom he writes, as well as very interesting. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

Three Boys on an Electrical Boat.

John Trowbridge, the writer of this book, is not to be confused with the veteran story-teller who has written for so many years. Professor Trowbridge is the Rumford professor at Harvard and director of the Jefferson Coolidge physical laboratory. His earlier book, The Electrical Boy, will be remembered as one that combined wonderful hints of the possibilities of electricity with the most startling adventures. The present book is no less full of interest. A main feature is the invention and trial of a submarine electrical boat for the placing of torpedoes; curiously enough, the announcement has just appeared in a London paper of a similar invention, for the same purpose, lately built and successfully operated in Australia. It is said that a boat and crew can remain under water for three days; if true, this would be more than is claimed by Professor Trowbridge here. Incidentally this book shows the difference between true bravery and cowardice, both physical and moral. We could wish that some of the Harvard students who are so busy these days in torturing and being tortured for the Greek Letter Society initiations might learn some lessons of this sort from their professor. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.

Chris, the Model-Maker.

In Mr. William O. Stoddard's story of New York life the hero is a poor crippled lad who earns his living by mechanical drawings. He is extremely clever at this work, and wonderfully happy in being able to do it. The description of the quaint old street and workshop and the pathetic little scenes drawn from cosmopolitan New York life are done with great skill. A thoroughly pleasant story with a happy ending, it is good for the poor boy to read, as it shows him that patient work will always be rewarded in time; and it is a good book for his more fortunate friend, as it will feelingly teach him how "the other half lives" and suffers. — D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

Richard Dare's Venture; or, Striking Out for Himself, is No. 1 of the Bound to Succeed series, by Edward Stratemeyer. The hero is a boy of sixteen who, with five dollars in his pocket, goes to New York to earn his living and soon becomes established as partner in a small book business. This rapid progress is due not only to his honesty, pluck, and good sense, but to some fortunate coincidences such as happen, perhaps, more frequently in story books than in real life. But there is nothing impossible in this account, and its every-day, not to say American, English gives it a strong flavor of reality. — The Merriam Co. $1.25.

LONDON LETTER.

SOME remarks of mine in my last letter about The Ebb Tide go to prove the folly of taking one's opinion of a book from the reviews. At the time, as I think I acknowledged, I had not myself read the new Stevenson. I have done so now with the keenest delight, and I beg to retract my remarks about the collaboration of Mr. Lloyd Osbourne. Collaboration did, indeed, spoil The Wrecker; but in The Ebb Tide the collaboration is so slight and so unobtrusive that there is only one thing — Huish's dialect — which one can surely put one's finger on as Mr. Osbourne's. The Ebb Tide is, in my opinion, the finest Stevenson book since The Master of Ballantrae. It has the big simplicity, the robust manliness, the joyous open-air life of Stevenson at his best. In the three adventurers he has devised great characters, and one is only sorry that Huish, a very appalling little blackguard, cannot again appear in a Stevenson landscape. We shall hear again, I trust, of the mysterious Attwater, and of Herrick, who awaits a further Stevensonian development. The book is sweet with the sea air and the sea wind, and is written in the unequaled English of the finest master of style now living.

The books are tumbling in with such rapidity that one has to read at a steady hand gallop, which does not always permit of tasting a book's full flavor. However, I have read every line of Maelcho, the new Irish historical romance by Miss Emily Lawless, whose Hurrish was one of the first signs of the Irish literary revival. Miss Lawless is the sister of Lord Cloncarry, a militant Irish landlord, but in the broad sense she can scarcely be anything but an Irish nationalist. Maelcho is a story of the Desmond Rebellion in Ireland in Elizabethan days, the failure of which was such an appalling disaster as even Ireland has scarcely known. You may read of the condition of Munster in Spenser's View of the Present State of Ireland; and Spenser, one of the spoliators of Desmond acres, was an eyewitness of the horror he tells. Against this lurid background Miss Lawless places the great, lovely, pathetic figure of Maelcho, Sir James Fitzmaurice's senachie (i.e., story-teller), as she set Grania's single figure against the gray waste of sea and rock, and Hurrish's against the days of the Land League. I count Maelcho the finest historical romance we have yet had, and I believe that if Miss Lawless but willed she could be the Walter Scott of Ireland.

A delightful book for seniors or juniors is Hector Malot's exquisite En Famille, of which Mr. Heinemann has just published an agreeable translation by Lady Mary Lloyd. The French sprightliness, ease, and distinction of style are not lost in the translation, and the adventures of little Perrine in search of her grandfather may be read over and over again with delight. Perrine on her island is a dainty, French, feminine Robinson Crusoe.

Mr. Anthony Hope is a many-sided man. The Prisoner of Zenda, the Dolly Dialogues, and Half a Hero bear witness to his diversity of achievement. I have just been reading a new edition of the latter book, which shows Mr. Hope in his most serious mood. Half a Hero is not a book which he who runs may read. In style it rather reminds one of Anthony Trollope. You are halfway through the book and have been giving your attention very closely to it before you are rewarded; then your interest is held. Medland is a powerful and pathetic figure, who interests you so much that you deeply resent the poverty of blood of the woman who refuses him. Mr. Hope's most minor characters are drawn with skill and judgment. I believe this writer is come to stay. Mr. Hope is Mr. Anthony

Hope Hawkins, a young Oxford man of Oriel, where he was a contemporary of his friend and publisher, Mr. Arthur D. Innes. Mr. Innes, by the way, has just published a volume of verse translations from the Greek and Latin, which are very scholarly and as a rule singularly felicitous.

I have the first issue of Methuen's English Classics, which is Tristram Shandy, edited by Mr. Charles Whibley. It is amazingly cheap and the very reverse of nasty. Bound in fig-green buckram, printed on laid paper with a frontispiece portrait, the volumes look three times their price, which is only seven shillings.

Mrs. Mannington Caffyn's new novel, Children of Circumstance, is an advance on that inchoate book, The Yellow Aster. The personages of the new book are indeed Yellow Asterian enough, but in Beatrice Hyde Mrs. Caffyn has shown us she can draw a woman real and pathetic instead of abnormal and unconvincing. The story centers round the work of rescue undertaken by the heroine, and is, like its predecessor, a "tendency" novel.

You will have heard of Miss Rossetti's serious illness. She seems to be passing away quietly, for her brother has written to me that she is hopelessly ill but quite conscious and serene. That is the passing of a saint, and one cannot help feeling that she herself is glad to go. How often in her poems she has yearned for the death that to her faith is the passage to paradise. Thinking of her, one echoes herself:

> Praise God for all dear souls that have enough!

The religious teaching of her wonderful poetry will live after her. The latter half of our century has not seen a truer poet, and since Tennyson died she has been to my mind the first of living poets. Since her mother's death she has been staying on quietly at 30 Torrington Square. For years she has devoted nearly all her income to charity. Last Christmas the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge published a book of her religious poetry, the most precious book since Crashaw. This burning heart of Italy and England is strangely, sadly, out of date among the pagan poets of this half of the nineteenth century, but wherever poetry is loved her poetry lives and teaches.

Mr. Mathews is about to issue two notable books by two friends — the poems of Mr. Lionel Johnson and the stories of Mr. Ernest Dowson. Both are Catholics, the almost necessary alternative to being pagans in literary London. Mr. Johnson's contributions to the Book of the Rhymers' Club, which was a fair compendium of the poetry of the younger English school, were sane, pure-minded and stately. Mr. Dowson's stories are very remarkable in quality. One in the current Yellow Book is strangely in contrast with the exotic context of that remarkable quarterly. It is low in tone, subdued and harmonious, a dreamy little idyl of an elderly man's love for a young French girl with a vocation. Another remarkable item of the Yellow Book's contents is Mr. John Davidson's "Ballad of a Hun," a wonderfully beautiful rendering of a tender legend versified by Adelaide Procter long ago; yet, beautiful as it is, a little reticence would have made it still more beautiful. The Yellow Book's stories are good. I like especially "Jeanne Marie," by Leila Macdonald, an unfamiliar name. Miss Nora Hopper tells a story in poetical prose, prefixed by a fairy's lament for the fairies, weirdly like Mr. W. B. Yeats. Mr. John Lane now publishes the Yellow Book. Miss Nora Hopper is, by the way, one of Mr. Lane's trump cards for the autumn publishing season. He announces her first book, which has delighted competent judges when read in MS. She is a young Irishwoman. He also announces a new book of stories, Discords, by that other Irishwoman, George Egerton, the author of Keynotes.

A Drama in Dutch is a story by a new writer which Mr. Heinemann has just published. The writer is evidently Dutch, and the story is exactly like an interior by a Dutch painter. There is none of the romance, the higher air, and wider atmosphere of his distinguished countryman, Maartens, in "Z. Z.'s" work. It is all low, quiet, and somewhat narrow, but within its limits it is an extremely effective and harmonious story.

We are to have two new papers shortly — the Liberal, a weekly review of radical opinions, and the Realm, a social and literary weekly under the joint editorship of Lady Colin Campbell and Mr. W. Earl Hodgson. Mr. Frank Harris, late of the Fortnightly, has acquired the Saturday Review, and will himself edit it.

I have before me When Life Is Young, an exquisite book of illustrated child verses by Mary Mapes Dodge. Most of the poems and pictures have appeared in St. Nicholas, and happy will be the child who is given this for a Christmas gift book. Santa Claus will no doubt drop it in many a stocking.

Mr. Mathews announces a book of poems by May Probyn in his autumn publishing list. Miss Probyn made an assured success with her two small volumes of verse published early in the eighties; since then we have not heard from her, except occasionally in the magazines. For some reason she recalled all of the earlier volumes she could reach, so that they are now extremely scarce. Miss Probyn is a convert to Catholicism, and her new book will contain some fervent religious poetry, often tinged with an exquisite mediæval mannerism. Her carols might have been written by some very devout and simple monk of the Middle Ages.

Mr. Clement Shorter is editing for Messrs. Ward, Lock & Bowden an edition of the works of Henry Kingsley. He prefixes to the first, Geoffrey Hamlyn, a very sympathetic and illuminative biography of his author. Henry Kingsley had a far stronger and more original mind than his famous brother, but he was a vaurien — an unlucky man in every relation of life. This edition is really the first chance given to the public to estimate his work. It is rather remarkable that Mr. Shorter should find time for this editing, seeing that he is already the man at the wheel of the Sketch, the English Illustrated, and the Illustrated London News.

KATHARINE TYNAN HINKSON.

NEW YORK LETTER.

THE Christmas books have come forth from groaning presses like an avalanche. They are on sale everywhere, and the few daily newspapers which are recognized as literary mediums, so far as the commercial side of literature is concerned, are alive with advertisements calling attention to works of travel and adventure, stories long and short, poems, and dainty booklets almost innumerable. So far as one can ascertain there is no question as to the statement that this is a very busy year for booksellers. Almost without exception publishers say that they have entered upon a highly prosperous season, which will be glad news to those who hold copyrights. Handsomer than ever before are the éditions de luxe prepared especially for the holiday trade. One house, the Scribner's, has excited unusual interest by its display of fine bindings done in this country and in France, Great Britain, and Germany. Many of the volumes, of which all are for sale, bear imprints showing them to be more than a century old, but modern instances abound of artistic design and finish. It is a pleasure to see that America is now in the front rank so far as bindings are concerned. The volumes for sale by the Messrs. Scribner range in price as high as six hundred dollars each.

Of the books now underway one attracting considerable speculation among publishers is that which the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst is engaged upon. Nothing definite is known as to this, but it is supposed to deal with municipal government in America and the part that he thinks should be played therein by churches and clergymen. Needless to say, Dr. Parkhurst knows the practical side of such work as well as any one living, and the natural supposition that his book will give a full account of his personal experiences in the terrific campaign from which he has just emerged in glorious victory is enough to command attention. His present intention is to publish the volume himself, it is said, but the reason is not stated. If the reformer gives his pen full swing, however, the book is likely to be in great demand, no matter how it is brought out.

Mention was made in this correspondence recently of the scarcity of certain early numbers of the Chap-Book and the fact that they were at a premium. The brief note called forth responses, and now several sources can supply the desired copies. I understand that a publisher here wants the first, fourth, and eighth numbers, for which he will pay, respectively, sixty-five, fifty, and forty cents. It is possible that the Chap-Book's publishers in Chicago may do as well or better, but of this I know nothing definite. There seem to be several of the scarce copies in the possession of New England readers of the LITERARY WORLD, who are willing to sell them.

Word has reached me of the prospective establishment of a magazine to be entitled Research, the initial number of which will be issued in St. Louis on Tuesday, January 1. The new venture will appear monthly, and will be devoted "to the study of the past of the Western Continent, the diffusion of archæological knowledge, and the work of restoration of some of the lost history of pre-Spanish America." The programme is plainly somewhat extensive. The editor's name is not known to me. Doubtless there is room for Research, if it carries out only a small portion of its task, but it will not have the field to itself. Columbus, Ohio, has a small magazine called the Archæologist, edited by Warren K. Moorehead, which is now several years old and is full of interest and vitality. It is not widely known except among those especially given to archæological research, but it fills well a peculiar department.

The latest story about Dr. Conan Doyle is that at a recent reception a "literary" matron approached him, and in enthusiastic tones said, "O Dr. Doyle, I don't know when I've enjoyed a play as I enjoyed The White Squadron!" "Indeed? I'm glad to hear it. Did you ever read a book of somewhat similar title, The White Company?" "No," replied the matron; "who wrote it?"

The creator of "Sherlock Holmes" lectured twice a day during his engagement here and in suburban towns. Between times he visited friends, one of whom is Mr. John Kendrick Bangs, at Yonkers, where such sports as golf were enjoyed. Whether Mr. Bangs will turn the visit into printed fun is not known, but he would like to do so doubtless. Some months ago he ran for mayor of Yonkers and was defeated. Of course his campaign cost him considerable, but he set to work like a philosopher and produced Three Weeks in Politics, which has not merely paid for the time and expenses of the unsuccessful race, but, I understand, has made a good profit in addition. There are several characters in the book in whom certain eminent citizens of Yonkers profess to see themselves made ridiculous. One of them, the editor of a German newspaper, I believe, tried to sue Mr. Bangs for libel, but failed.

Those in charge of the Authors' Club's affairs have succeeded in engaging permanent quarters in the new extension to Carnegie Music Hall, where a suite of rooms has been constructed especially for the members, who will finish and furnish them appropriately. The rooms will be ready for occupancy in January unless plans miscarry.

Among the large number of men who have been engaged by the New York Board of Education to deliver free lectures to the people this season are Professor Boyesen and Messrs. G. P. Serviss, E. J. Edwards, Charles Sprague Smith, and Jacob A. Riis.

HENRY EDWARD ROOD.

MINOR NOTICES.

Riverby.

In his preface, Mr. John Burroughs says that this is probably his last collection of out-of-door papers. The reason for the statement he does not give; consequently we allow ourselves the benefit of a doubt and take the liberty of believing that such an ardent lover of nature, such a keen observer, and such a ready writer will not be able to keep himself from putting new experiences into books. Riverby, named from the writer's place on the Hudson, by the river, is made up of eighteen papers on the characteristic subjects beloved by the author. A charming one, "Among the Wild Flowers," leads off, and instructive "Talks with Young Observers" concludes the list. Mr. Burroughs writes in his accustomed delightful manner of birds, chipmunks, weasels, and other inhabitants of the outer world, relating incidents of courtships, nest building, quarrels, and the various interesting habits and doings of the winged and four-footed creatures on a lower plane than ours. Two of the sketches are the result of a visit to the blue grass region and the Mammoth Cave; a third, written in happy vein, is a record of what the author saw and enjoyed in a tramping and camping out trip in the heart of the Southern Catskills. But the paper of deepest insight and subtlest quality is that in which he treats of "Lovers of Nature." Admirers of Thoreau will be surprised at the estimate of Mr. Burroughs on his "so few real observations." The same may apply to those who have regarded Richard Jefferies as interpretative. Mr. Burroughs makes a sharp distinction between those who merely enjoy nature themselves and those who make us share the enjoyment. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

The Flute-Player.

We have read the poems of Francis Howard Williams with much pleasure, glad to see another name added to the number of promising poets who have begun to make themselves felt in the last few years, more by the quality of a few poems, thus far, than by the quantity of good ones. There is in these verses both truth and beauty — the truth of genuine feeling, and the beauty of harmonious, often lofty, expression. The leading poem of the volume follows the movement of a symphony as it is reflected in the thoughts and visions of an old flute-player. It is accompanied with a running commentary in the margin — a rather effective device here, by which one may follow the twofold strain, but it is a device which would hardly bear repeating. There is dignity and strength in the ode, "Ave America," and it is surely a good thing when poets find inspiration in the passion of patriotism. This ode, at once more definite and less poetic than Mr. Woodberry's "My Country," contains lines that remind one of the earlier ode. The thoughtful emphasis of Mr. Woodberry's lines beginning,

> For thou art founded in the eternal fact
> That every man doth greaten with the act
> Of freedom, and doth strengthen with the weight of duty, is not paralleled, but there are such vigorous lines as:

> Wherever men have felt the gall of chains,
> And through the dark have whispered liberty,
> Or women, widowed of divinest dowers,
> Have smiled between their sobs to dream of thee,
> There hast thou given the shelter of thy plains;

and

> The spirit lives
> Which makes immortal all great labor done,
> All noble thought translated into act,
> And ever gives,
> Finer than fable, the undying fact
> Which lies behind each radiant victory won.

Some thirty sonnets are included in the collection, some of them marking the high-water line of Mr. Williams' power. It is surprising, however, that in a collection containing so many good things he should have allowed himself to include a trifle so commonplace and even silly as "A Rondeau of Vassar," which deserves no place outside the pages of Puck or kindred papers. One or two other poems take away from the value of the book instead of adding anything by the variety. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.

The Days of Prince Maurice.

Now that clubs have been formed for the study of Dutch history this book ought to be welcome, because it is both carefully and interestingly written; furthermore, the volume was needed. Motley, in his somewhat one-sided biography of John of Barneveldt has rather thrown in the shade the great son of William the Silent. Miss Mary O. Nutting uses Motley as a basis of her interesting work, though she has also studied Davies, Grattan, Markham, and some original authorities in French. She does not seem to be at home among the Dutch authors, though some old black-letter portraits from Bor and Orler find places here, and there are spirited illustrations drawn especially for the work and a capital map of the little Protestant republic. Miss Nutting has already written well of William the Silent, and her style is free and sprightly. Maurice is shown to be a great soldier and a noble patriot; but we doubt whether the author has done justice to the judges who tried Barneveldt or to Maurice as stadtholder, or whether she clearly sees the real meaning of the great political struggle which, under the clouds of theological disputation, came to a happy issue in the triumph of the union over incipient treason and threatened secession. This, however, does not militate against the interesting character of the main part of the work, which tells the story of the great war, or at least one part of it, in the first half of the seventeenth century. The book is finely fitted for study, with its preface, table of contents, maps, plans, portraits, and first-rate index. It is neatly bound in linen, and is stamped in chocolate and silver. — Congregational S. S. and Pub. Society. $1.50.

Intimations of the Beautiful.

Mr. Madison Cawein is certainly one of the most prolific poets we know anything about. It is as easy for him to write poetry as for lovers to write letters. One comes often on felicitous expressions, and wishes that the writer's sense of the value of self-restraint kept pace with his fertility of imagination and resources of language. Such a ballad as "Dead Man's Run" shows that on occasion Mr. Cawein can hold fast to a single conception without swamping it in weakening verbiage, as he is generally tempted to do. Such a poem as "The Salamander" recalls all the faults of his earlier verse, with words piled upon words until the result is absurdity. Often we come across a poem like "Circe," where only one or two unlucky expressions keep it from being really good. If Mr. Cawein would write one poem where he now writes a dozen, and put into that one the labor, or more than the labor, that the dozen cost him, neither he nor his readers would have reason to regret the time thus spent. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

Studies in Folk-Song and Popular Poetry.

Mr. Alfred M. Williams has put together eleven essays (several of which are republished from magazines) analyzing and illustrating various phases of folksong. The subjects are well worth the time and care they have demanded. Mr. Williams' style is clear and direct, and the result is a delightful volume which makes no claim to exhaustive treatment, but manages to say a great deal in a short space and inclines the reader to wish for more. The chapter on American sea songs is probably the best known of these essays. In considering the ballads and popular rhymes of our Civil War, Mr. Williams notes the fact that they are not to be compared in quality with those which have been produced by much lighter struggles, for instance by the Jacobite Rebellion in Scotland. No great song embodies and interprets the spirit of the nation as does Die Wacht am Rhein or the Marseillaise, despite the success of such poems as Mrs. Howe's "Battle Hymn" and General Pike's lines to Dixie. Mr. Williams accounts for this by saying that the Americans are not a singing people in the bent of their genius nor are the conditions of civilization favorable to this form of expression. "The newspaper had taken the place of the ballad as a means of influencing the popular mind, and poetry had passed from the people to the literary artists." Nevertheless the essayist has succeeded in finding plenty of material for an interesting and instructive paper. Essays on Sir Samuel Ferguson, Lady Nairne, and William Thom are wisely included here. They do not come within the strict limits of folksong and popular poetry, but "have a cognate interest as illustrating the development of folksong in cultivated literature." The many readers — we trust there are many — who have been fascinated by the revelations of Roumanian poetry given by The Bard of the Dimbovitza will read with pleasure Mr. Williams' comments thereon. Here, as in discussing the folksongs of lower Brittany, Poitou, and Hungary, he gives more examples than when writing of the Scotch or English ballads, with which we are more familiar.— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.

Armazindy.

Probably no living poet of America has the hold on the affections of the many that Mr. James Whitcomb Riley has, and the critical few do themselves wrong if they do not take a sincere pleasure in the whole-heartedness, natural melody, and magical penetration of his verse. He has a singularly wide range from plain dialect to poetry of a high degree of artistic finish. The story of the capable Armazindy is told by a lover:

Jes' a child, one minute — nex'
Woman-grown, in all repec's
And intents and purposuz —
'At's what Armazindy wuz!

After her father's death the child of fourteen ran a farm and took care of the twins and the paralyzed aunt. Her experience in love was tragical, but the narrator concludes:

Years now, I've ben coaxin' her —
Armazindy Ballenger —
To inlarge her fambily
Jes' one more by takin' me —
Which I'm feared she never will,
Though I'm lectioneerin' still.

The imitations of various noted poets in the second part of the collection, "Make-Believe and Child-Play," are very clever, and it is not strange that Mr. Stedman thought "Leonainie" a genuine production of Poe; it closes thus:

Then God smiled and it was morning.
Matchless and supreme,
Heaven's glory seemed adorning
Earth with its esteem;
Every heart but mine seemed gifted
With the voice of prayer, and lifted
Where my Leonainie drifted
From me like a dream.

— The Bowen-Merrill Co. $1.25.

Narragansett Ballads.

Surely no one has a better right to sing the legends of Rhode Island than Miss Caroline Hazard of Peace Dale, who lives on land bought by her ancestor from the Indians in the year 1671, and whose family has been prominent in the State, generation after generation, for facing the problems of the times and attempting righteous solutions. It is no wonder that she sings in her dedication:

My thoughts like birds come flying,
From east and west they come,
And song to song replying,
They flutter round their home.

Dear home, where dwelt my fathers;
Dear heart, who art its sun,
Round thee the song all gathers
And ends where it begun.

The main occurrences round which the ballads cluster are the great swamp fight of 1675, the chase of the Wampoa by the Orpheus, and the tragedy of the Crying Bog of Narragansett. The poems are all animated, and one or two of them have striven, not unsuccessfully, to reproduce the old-time ballad form of Scotland and England. One more modern is perhaps more effective, however — "Dorothy's Hollow," with its lyrical ending:

And here in the early springtime they found her,
With the sheep that she sought still lying around her,
Among the sparrows that come here to preen.
O come, birds of springtime, bluebird and swallow,
Come little lambkins, follow, come follow,
To mourn and lament in Dorothy's Hollow.

The ballads are followed by numerous songs and short poems. Most of them are nature verses, though touched, also, with thoughts that come from reflection and experience as well as observation. The flower verses, celebrating the sabbatia, the tasseled corn, the daffodil, the primrose, and others, show genuine regard for these "children of the fields." The collection closes with the short ode read at the celebration of Rhode Island Day at the Columbian Exhibition, which claimed as the gift of Rhode Island "the liberty to worship God:"

These many years to us there have not failed
Some lofty spirits with whom truth prevailed,
Who stood for right, the high, the ideal things,
Until this freedom with its healing wings
Spread over all the land, and now the whole
From east to west has the Rhode Island soul.

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.

The World Beautiful.

Miss Lilian Whiting's comely little volume treats of such topics as the duty of happiness, belief in wings for life, the discovery (not the making) of friends, the potency of charm, success as a fine art, through struggle to achievement, and newness of life. She is an optimist, who believes that nectar and ambrosia are none too good for "human nature's daily food;" that this divine nourishment is free to all who will earnestly strive to live the self-denying life of the spirit, finding "the one supreme luxury" of an existence in "sympathetic companionship;" that we overcome all hardness by obedience and love, and that the heavenly vision is near to comfort every faithful soul. These helpful truths of the inner being Miss Whiting expresses attractively in language free from striving after rhetorical effect and strong with the accent of personal conviction. Such winning words of deep belief in the best, which is accessible to all of us, make friends of the reader at once, and he must be a rare person who does not lay down this unassuming volume with a feeling that he has been helped to live his life more generously and kindly than before. Miss Whiting's book deserves a second edition, in which she may see reason to abate somewhat her too confident expectations of a new "psychic force." — Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

Old European Jewries.

A good purpose is served in this unpretending little book, by David Philipson, D.D., which contains an amount and kind of information that it would be difficult to find elsewhere without great labor. The author's subject is the Ghetto, or Jewish quarter in European cities, as illustrative of the policy of isolation which Christian nations have habitually pursued toward the Jews, and the tendency toward voluntary segregation which this policy has naturally encouraged. After a chapter on early settlements of the Jews in Europe and a glance at the institution of the Ghetto and the legislation of the Church upon it, we have in succession accounts of the Judengasse of Frankfurt on the Main, the Judenstadt of Prague, the famous and typical Roman Ghetto, and the Russian Ghetto; then a survey of the effects and results of this systematic treatment, and finally a capital chapter on the Ghetto in literature. Notes and an index complete a handy and useful little book. — Philadelphia: The Jewish Publication Society.

Chinese Characteristics.

These three hundred octavo pages, by Rev. A. H. Smith, for twenty-two years a missionary of the American Board in China, are among the most enlightening as well as the most readable on the people of China that we have ever met. Mr. Smith states the difficulties of Chinese psychology at the beginning and then enters upon the generalizations which he thinks it safe to make. Some of his chapter headings are industry, politeness, disregard of time, talent for indirection, intellectual turbidity, absence of nerves, patience and perseverance, content and cheerfulness, filial piety, benevolence, and the absence of sincerity. Under these and other rubrics Mr. Smith discusses in a very concrete and fair way the characteristics of this great people, now prominently before the whole world. "The Real Condition of China and Her Present Needs" is the title of the final informing chapter. The volume is well illustrated with photogravures. — F. H. Revell Co. $2.00.

The Rev. Augustus R. Buckland, a British clergyman, has written a little book entitled The Heroic in Missions, in which, in six detached chapters, he sketches briefly, simply, and impressively as many chapters of foreign missionary life. The first, "The Heroism of Patience,' shows how slow and toilsome were the first steps in China. The second follows the corresponding path in Japan. The third tells the story of Bishop Hannington and his associate martyrs on the Victoria Nyanza in Central Africa. The fourth is spent with a worker in the Hudson's Bay territory. The fifth relates to George Max well Gordon in the Punjab. The subject of the sixth is the fatal expedition of Messrs. Robinson and Brooke into the Niger Soudan. The chapters are short and easy reading; they are also stirring. They would be good to read aloud at missionary meetings.— Thomas Whittaker. 50c

The library edition of Boswell's Johnson, which T. Y. Crowell & Co. have recently issued, is in two volumes of manageable size, on good paper and in clear typography, and well illustrated with some thirty portraits of the great men of Johnson's time. The same publishers' similar edition of Scott's Poetical Works has two fine portraits of Sir Walter; the other illustrations, drawn from the imagination of the artist, we would willingly have spared for a smaller number of views of the scenes of the poems. This is the one method of illustration that never loses its value. An appreciative introduction by Professor Norton and a good biographical sketch by Mr. N. H. Dole add much to the value of this taking edition. — $1.50 per volume.

Canon Talbot's book on Our Bible is made up of papers originally contributed to the Sunday Magazine, and traces what may be called the descent of the English Bible in a series of five chapters, which deal respectively with the Bible before the days of printing, with the several English translations up to Wyclif's time, and thence up to the seventeenth century, with the King James and Revised Versions, and with the collection of books of the Bible as a whole. Without professing to be critical or scientific, the author, who belongs to Durham Cathedral, England, has thorough critical knowledge, and puts what he knows before the reader in plain English. Young readers and unprofessional students will find this book instructive and interesting. — Thomas Whittaker. 50c.

The Age of Pope, by Mr. John Dennis, is the initial number of a series of handbooks of English Literature, edited by Prof. J. W. Hales and published by George Bell & Sons of London, for whom Macmillan & Co. are the American agents. It is intended that each epoch shall be treated by a scholar who has made it a special study and is thus qualified to state its characteristics at once concisely and accurately. As in this volume, a prominent author will be selected as the representative of his period, such as Chaucer, Shakespeare, Milton, Dryden, or Wordsworth. The books are meant not only for students but for the general reader, or such readers at least as have an interest in our literature, whether they are disposed to study it methodically or not. The Age of Pope well carries out the plan of the series, and ought to be welcome to teachers, students, and intelligent readers generally. If the succeeding volumes are up to the standard set by it, they can hardly fail to be popular on both sides of the Atlantic. They are neatly printed and remarkably cheap withal. The price is stated to be 3*s.* 6*d.* in London, while here it is only 50 cents, or about half of what we should expect from the foreign price.

The "chapters from female biography," as Childhood and Girlhood of Remarkable Women is called in its rather old-fashioned sub-title, have been selected with a special intention of showing how the girl makes the woman, as the influences which affected the early lives of the twenty-nine women here portrayed shaped and colored all their future years. The author is W. H. Davenport Adams, and he has chosen his heroines mainly from the ranks of English women of letters, though half a dozen or more represent France at its noblest. He has not attempted to supply any new information concerning them or to study their lives otherwise than as they have already been studied by those who have written at greater length, but he has produced readable narratives, plentifully supplied with anecdote and not overladen with reflective moralizing. — E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.50.

Mr. Samuel Adams Drake, having previously narrated the Making of New England, of the Great West, and of Virginia and the Middle Colonies, gives us now a handsome book on The Making of the Ohio Valley States — Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, and Iowa. The intent evidently is to provide a text-book for use in schools. The size of the book, its method, its excellent typography, and its maps and illustrations fit it well for this purpose. Mr. Drake is an expert and an authority, and his antiquarian tastes impart a flavor to his pages which is fresh and pleasant. It is a capital book to be introduced in the public schools of Pittsburg, Cincinnati, and Chicago, and indeed in the schools of the whole Ohio Valley. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

The monumental Dictionary of National Biography, edited by Mr. Sidney Lee, has reached its fortieth volume, which extends from Myllar to Nicholls. The Napiers are the first noted family, its members occupying more than fifty pages. The Neales, Neills, and Neilsons bring us to the great name of Nelson, whose biography Prof. J. K. Laughton writes. Nevilles and Newcombs follow, and then Mr. W. S. Lilly depicts Cardinal Newman. R. T. Glazebrook, F.R.S., furnishes the long sketch of the greatest man in the volume, Sir Isaac Newton. — Macmillan & Co. $3.75.

The third volume of Mr. J. N. Larned's excellent work, History for Ready Reference (which we noticed fully a few weeks ago) extends from Greece to the Nibelungen Lied. Between these two entries its alphabetical course takes one through long articles on History, India, Ireland, Italy, Law (common and criminal), Money and Banking, and Netherlands. The good impression made by the first two volumes is deepened by this new installment of the work. — Springfield: C. A. Nichols Co. $5.00.

The neat library edition of Mr. Justin McCarthy's History of Our Own Time, which Lovell, Coryell & Co. issue, has been edited by Mr. G. Mercer Adam, who has added an introduction, some eighty pages of text, continuing the story to March of this year, and other matters, not the least of which is a new index. There are some thirty portraits, principally of statesmen and authors, in the two volumes. — $2.00.

The Age of Fable, by Thomas Bulfinch, is a classic almost itself. In its special field of connecting English literature with that of Greece and Rome, by quoting and explaining all the mythological allusions in the former, it is still unsurpassed. A new edition contains a hundred additional pages, half of which are occupied with a history of Greek sculpture, well illustrated. A new index and dictionary fills forty pages. — Lee & Shepard. $2.50.

Mr. Charles K. Bolton's booklet On the Wooing of Martha Pitkin, which is "a versified narrative of the time of the regicides in colonial New England," got up in imitation of the books of that day, will have interest to the many descendants of Simon Wolcott, but the traces of poetry in it are exceedingly few. — Copeland & Day. 75c.

PERIODICALS.

The complete novel for the December issue of Lippincott's is "Mrs. Hallam's Companion," by the well-known writer, Mrs. Mary J. Holmes. A short story by the author of Dodo is "A Creed of Manners." Miss Ellen Mackubin tells of "A Live Ghost." "A Western Daisy Miller," by Claude M. Girardeau, has the flavor of the prairies, if not of the newer regions beyond. Dr. Charles C. Abbott's account of "An Odd Neighbor" reads like truth rather than fiction. True, too, and historical are Charles Howard Shinn's recollections of "Don Jaime, of Mission San José." Calvin Dill Wilson has an interesting paper on "Shooting Bob White," and Alvan F. Sanborn another on "Living Pictures at the Louvre." Under the caption "Shall I Study Medicine?" Dr. A. L. Benedict gives some valuable figures and facts concerning doctors and their various experiences. Esmè Stuart writes of "Some Notable Women of the Past." The closing installment of "Talks with the Trade" discusses "The Personal Element" in literary business.

At first we hardly knew the December number of Harper's Magazine, for it came, not only with the unusual fatness of Christmas treasures, but in a cover of a new color — a sort of olive, with an entirely different design from that to which we are accustomed. We miss the old familiar dress of our friend of these many years, and trust that with the January number he will throw off his holiday novelty and return to the apparel of the past. The one hundred and forty-four pages of illustrated advertisements in this number make a magazine by themselves nearly of the same bulk with the magazine itself, whose one hundred and sixty-eight pages are filled with a choice variety of letterpress and pictures. With Thulstrup's and Remington's pencils Harper's is particularly strong these days in its pictures of horseflesh at rest and in action; the two articles in the present number by Poultney Bigelow, on "An Arabian Day and Night," and by Caspar W. Whitney, on the "Evolution of the Country Club," afford a fine field for the delineation of this subject. Japan appears again in a finely illustrated article, "The Time of the Lotus," by Alfred Parsons. Mr. Richard Harding Davis' account of "The Show-Places of Paris," with its plainly drawn pictures of the Château Rouge, Bruant's, "At the Black Cat," a Café Chantant, the Moulin Rouge, and scenes on Montmartre, is rather strongly colored with the night hues of the gay French capital. Mr. E. A. Abbey illustrates Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew." Mr. Howells furnishes a string of poetical beads, which Mr. Howard Pyle has decorated profusely. There is an illustrated poem on the "Madonna and Child," by Alice Archer Sewall, and a Christmas story by Mrs. Spofford. Mr. Thomas Hardy begins his new novel, "The Simpletons," and a good beginning it is. "People We Pass" is one of Mr. Julian Ralph's character sketches, and there are fillings in of prose or poem by Mrs. Fields, Ruth McEnery Stuart, L. B. Miller, Robert Grant, Laurence Alma Tadema, Gertrude Hall, and others. Altogether this is a strong, rich number, though the Christmas flavor is not all pervading.

A wide variety of topics are treated from the scientific point of view in the Popular Science Monthly for December. The number opens with an article on "Athletics for City Girls," by Dr. Mary Taylor Bissell. President Jordan of Stanford University sets forth "The Need of Educated Men" in a way to encourage and stimulate all who are fearful about the future of government and society. The probable appearance of the celebrated "missing link" and his family is shown in an engraving of the painting by Gabriel Max which was presented to Professor Haeckel on his sixtieth birthday. Prof. E. P. Evans discusses the picture under the title "Pithecoid Man." Prof. James Sully continues his "Studies of Childhood" with a chapter on "The Child's Thoughts about Nature." "The Economic Theory of Woman's Dress" receives a searching examination by Dr. Thorstein Veblen. An instructive insight into Japanese thought and character is afforded in "Shintō, the Old Religion of Japan," contributed by N. Kishimoto. An illustrated paper on "Responsibility in Crime from the Medical Standpoint" is furnished by Dr. Sanger Brown of Rush Medical College. Dr. Friedrich Paulsen discusses "The University as a Scientific Workshop." The amateur in geology will welcome Prof. W. M. Davis' account of "The Ancient Outlet of Lake Michigan," also "The Geology of Natural Scenery," by F. J. H. Merrill, and the British Association popular lecture on "Geologies and Deluges," by Prof. W. T. Sollas, F.R.S. "The Chemistry of Sleep" is treated by Henry Wurtz, Ph.D., and there are a biographical sketch and portrait of Professor Zadoc Thompson, the Green Mountain naturalist.

Scribner's for December is thick with advertising pages and a special supplement, "The History of a Publishing House." This presents the very honorable record of the firm of Charles Scribner's Sons for forty-eight years, apropos of their removal to their new and magnificent house on Fifth Avenue. The number is one of the very best from the literary and the art points of view. Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse's article on "George Frederick Watts, R.A." is illustrated by twenty reproductions of the artist's finest works, made with great delicacy. Mr. Oliver Herford's illustrations to Mr. Brander Matthews' "Primer of Imaginary Geography" are a fresh proof of his originality. There are three frontispieces by A. B. Frost, A. Lynch, and E. Friant. Mr. Kipling's poem, "McAndrews' Hymn"—the reflections of a Scotch engineer on an ocean steamer—is enough to make the fortune of a number. The fiction is strikingly good—the close of Mr. Cable's "John March, Southerner," Robert Grant's "Matrimonial Tontine Benefit Association," and other stories by Francis Lynde, Miss McGlasson, and W. L. Palmer. Mr. Bunner's sketch, "The Story of a Path," is in his usual delightful vein.

The Christmas number of the Century is again a distinctively art number. Its Christmas pictures are much superior to its fiction, which has little of the Christmas flavor. These pictures are exquisite and extremely various in subject and treatment. The wonderful "Madonna of the Donors," by Van Dyck, opens the number, and then we have Mrs. Lamb's essentially modern and decorative Christ-Child and Scheurenberg's landscape with the well-drawn sheep and the Mother and Child in the foreground. A capital horse story, "A Walking Delegate," by Mr. Kipling, new serials by Mr. Crawford and Mrs. Harrison, a thoughtful article on the time-worn subject of science and religion, the Napoleon memoirs with their wonderful illustrations, and a bit of old Maryland history make a rich number.

The Holiday Bulletin and the Classified List of the Park Street firm fill out the December Atlantic to unusual bulk. Like the magazine itself this matter has a literary distinction which no other American house has yet equalled for the mass of its publications, and it is a pleasure for the lover of American literature at its highest to turn over the pages. Miss Repplier's essay, "Ghosts," the second part of Miss Preston and Miss Dodge's "Reginald Pole," Mr. William Sharp's "Personal Reminiscences of Walter Pater," Mr. Robert W. Herrick's striking collection of "Literary Love-Letters: a Modern Account," and Mr. Scudder's brief paper on "Dr. Holmes" are all papers in the Atlantic's own field, in which it is unsurpassed. Other matter which fill out a varied and attractive number are Mrs. Foote's "The Trumpeter," Part I; Sir E. Strachey's talk on "Christmas;" "An Old-Time Sorosis," by H. Baldwin; "In Jackson's Administration," by Lucy L. Pleasants; "The Christmas Angel," by Harriet L. Bradley; "To an English Friend," a pithy letter signed "Franklin Eastman;" "The New Criticism of Genius," by Aline Gorren; "Suggestions on the Architecture of School-Houses," by C. H. Walker; and excellent reviews of recent books of travel and studies of the Sicilian people.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—A collection of Dublin Verses, by members of Trinity College, selected and edited by H. A. Hinkson, late scholar of Trinity College, Dublin, will be published by Mr. Elkin Mathews of Vigo Street, London, about the middle of February. Of the contributors perhaps the best known are Aubrey de Vere, Sir Stephen de Vere, Oscar Wilde, W. E. H. Lecky, Edward Dowden, R. Y. Tyrrell, A. P. Graves, and Douglas Hyde. The volume will contain many hitherto unpublished verses.

—Ginn & Co. will be the publishers of a series of Handbooks on the History of Religions, edited by Morris Jastrow, Jr., Ph.D., professor of Semitic languages at the University of Pennsylvania, intended to serve the purpose at once of practical text and reference books. The distinguishing features of this series will be: (1) Each volume dealing with the history of a special religion is to be intrusted to the hands of a competent specialist; (2) with a view of securing the unity of the series, the treatment of the subject in the various volumes will follow so far as possible a uniform order. Each volume will accordingly begin with an introductory chapter, setting forth the sources for the study. This will be followed by a section on the land and people under consideration. The third division, forming, as it were, the kernel of the book, will embody a full exposition of the beliefs and rites, the religious art and literature, set forth in each case in the manner best adapted to the religion in question. A fourth division will give the history of the religion, and set forth its relation to others; and, lastly, each volume will be supplied with a substantial bibliography, with indexes and maps, and, so far as necessary, illustrations. (3) Polemical discussion will be rigidly excluded, the subject being viewed from the historical side exclusively; (4) for the present the series will be confined to the ancient and non-Christian religions. Arrangements have already been made for the following seven volumes, and negotiations for others are pending: I, The Religions of India, by Prof. E. W. Hopkins, Bryn Mawr College, with an introduction by the editor (in press); II, The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, by Prof. Morris Jastrow, Jr., University of Pennsylvania (ready in 1895); III, The Religion of the Ancient Teutons, by Prof. P. D. Chantepie de la Saussaye, Amsterdam, Holland (ready in 1895); IV, The Religion of Persia, by Prof. A. V. Williams Jackson, Columbia College (ready in 1896); V, Introduction to the History of Religions, by Prof. C. H. Toy, Harvard University (ready in 1896); VI, The Religion of Egypt, by Mrs. Cornelius Stevenson, Philadelphia, Penn., (ready in 1897); VII, The Religion of Israel, by Rev. Prof. John P. Peters, New York (ready in 1897).

—Houghton, Mifflin & Co. published November 28 Occult Japan: the Way of the Gods, by Percival Lowell; Little Mr. Thimblefinger and His Queer Country, by Joel Chandler Harris; Pushing to the Front; or, Success under Difficulties, by O. S. Marden; Notes on the Forest Flora of Japan, by Charles Sprague Sargent; Life and Letters of Maria Edgeworth, edited by Augustus J. C. Hare; and Tuscan Cities, by W. D. Howells, a new edition.

—A novel of Irish life, by Mrs. Katharine (Tynan) Hinkson, will be published in London this coming spring.

—The "Chapters from Some Unwritten Memoirs," which Mrs. Ritchie (Miss Thackeray) has been contributing to Macmillan's Magazine, have just been published in volume form.

—It is said that Ian Maclaren is only a pseudonym, and that this writer's real name is John Watson, the pastor of the Sefton Park Presbyterian Church, Liverpool. The author's first book of collected stories, Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush, is just issued by Dodd, Mead & Co.

—A new volume of Trübner's English and Foreign Philosophical Library will be a translation, by Dr. Arthur Fairbanks of Yale University, of Professor Riehl's Theory of Science and Metaphysics. The author has contributed a preface to the English translation. The third volume of Miss Haldane's translation of Hegel's History of Philosophy is nearly ready for publication in this series.

—After being out of print for many years, the Introduction to the Study of English History, written by Mr. Samuel R. Gardiner and Mr. Bass Mullinger, is to be reissued. Mr. Gardiner's work is substantially unaltered, but the bibliographical portion has received extensive additions by Mr. Bass Mullinger. It will be published by Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co.

—Houghton, Mifflin & Co. published November 21 The Oliver Wendell Holmes Year-Book, with a fine new portrait of Dr. Holmes; A Story of Courage: Annals of the Georgetown Convent of the Visitation, by George Parsons Lathrop and Rose Hawthorne Lathrop; Religious Progress, by A. V. G. Allen, D.D.; Talk at a Country House, by Sir Edward Strachey; Hymns and Verses, by Samuel Longfellow; and The Great Refusal; Letters of a Dreamer in Gotham, by Paul E. More.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the LITERARY WORLD are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biography.

SELECTIONS FROM THE CORRESPONDENCE OF THOMAS BARCLAY. Edited by George Lockhart Rives, M.A. Harper & Brothers. $4.00

JOSIAH WEDGWOOD, F.R S. His Personal History. By Samuel Smiles. Harper & Brothers. $1.50

EDWIN BOOTH. Recollections by his daughter, Edwina Booth Grossman. With ten autotype illustrations. The Century Co. $3.00

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. By Noah Brooks. [Heroes of the Nations.] G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

LIFE AND GENIUS OF JACOPO ROBUSTI, CALLED TINTORETTO. By Frank P. Stearns. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.25

THE LIFE OF DANIEL DEFOE. By Thomas Wright. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $3.75

The Life of Jonathan Swift. By Henry Craik. In two volumes. Macmillan & Co. $3.00

Napoleon. By Alexandre Dumas. Trans. by John B. Larner. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

Memoirs of the Duchess de Gontaut. Trans. by Mrs. J. W. Davis. Two vols. Dodd, Mead & Co. $5 00

George William Curtis. By Edward Cary. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1 25

The Life of Charles Loring Brace. Chiefly Told in His Own Letters Edited by his Daughter. With portraits. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50

Threescore and Ten Years. 1820 to 1890. Recollections. By W. J. Linton. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2 00

Books for Young People.

Midshipman Archie. By Annette Lyster. Illustrated. E. & J. B. Young & Co. $1.00

Afterthought House. By Evelyn Everett-Green. Illustrated. E. & J. B. Young & Co. 80c,

Was it in Vain? By G. E. M. Vaughan. Illustrated. E. & J. B. Young & Co. 60c.

The Vast Abyss: being the Story of Tom Blount, His Uncles, and His Cousin Sam. By George Manville Fenn. E. & J. B. Young & Co. $2.00

The Two Clippers. By F. Frankfort Moore. Illustrated. E. & J B. Young & Co. $1.50

Piccino, and Other Child Stories. By Frances Hodgson Burnett. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

More Celtic Fairy Tales. Selected by Joseph Jacobs. Illustrated. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75

The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe. Told for the Children's Library. Macmillan & Co. 75c.

When Molly Was Six. By Eliza Orne White. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

Father Gander's Melodies for Mother Goose's Grandchildren. By Adelaide F. Samuels. Roberts Brothers. $1.25

The Story of a Bad Boy. By Thomas Bailey Aldrich. Illustrated Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2 00

The Child Amy. By Julia Magruder. Illustrated by Helen M. Armstrong. Lothrop Publishing Co. $1.50

Economics and Politics.

The Southern States of the American Union Considered in their Relations to the Constitution of the United States and to the Resulting Union. By J. L. M. Curry. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25

The Rights of Labor. An Inquiry as to the Relation between Employer and Employed. By W. J. Charles H. Kerr & Co. 25c.

Historical Progress and Ideal Socialism. By J. Shield Nicholson, M.A. Macmillan & Co. 90c.

Educational.

First Latin Readings. By Robert Arrowsmith, Ph.D., and George M. Whicher, A.M. American Book Co. $1.25

A Geographical Reader; or, Pen Pictures in Geography. Compiled and arranged by William W. Rupert, C.E. Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. 65c.

The Writer: Being one of a Series of Handbooks upon Practical Expression. By George L. Raymond and George P. Wheeler. Silver, Burdett & Co. 90c.

The History of Education in Connecticut. By Bernard C. Steiner. — The History of Education in Delaware. By Lyman P. Powell. — Higher Education in Tennessee. By Lucius S. Merriam. — Higher Education in Iowa. By Leonard F. Parker. Washington: Government Printing Office.

Maynard's German Texts. Die Wandelnde Glocke. Maynard, Merrill & Co. 25c.

Maynard's French Texts. Ce Qu'on Voit. Maynard, Merrill & Co. 20c.

Shakespeare's Comedy of the Merchant of Venice. Edited by Katharine Lee Bates. Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. 35c.

The Education of the Greek People. By Thomas Davidson. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

An Introduction to the Study of English Fiction. By William Edward Simonds. D. C. Heath & Co. $1.00

Robinson's New Intellectual Arithmetic. American Book Co. 35c.

Elementary Lessons in Algebra. By Stewart B. Sabin and Charles D. Lowry. American Book Co. 50c.

A History of English Literature. For Secondary Schools. By J. Logie Robertson. Harper & Brothers. $1.25

Maynard's German Texts. No. 4. Weihnachten bei Leberecht Huhnchen. Maynard, Merrill & Co. 25c.

Maynard's French Texts. No. 4. Historiettes, Adapted from the English. Maynard, Merrill & Co. 20c.

Alternative English Exercises. To accompany Part I of the Joynes-Meissner German Grammar. By Orlando F. Lewis. D. C. Heath & Co. 15c.

The Teacher's Mentor. C. W. Bardeen. 50c.

Euripides' Alcestis. Edited by Mortimer Lamson Earle. Macmillan & Co. 90c. net.

Essays and Sketches.

English History in Shakespeare's Plays. By Beverley E. Warner, M.A. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.75

Things of the Mind. By J. L. Spalding, Bishop of Peoria. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00

More Memories. Being Thoughts about England Spoken in America. By Rev. S. R. Hole. Macmillan & Co. $2 25

Evolution and Ethics, and Other Essays. By Thomas H. Huxley. D. Appleton & Co. $1.25

Lectures on the Darwinian Theory. Delivered by the late Arthur Milnes Marshall. Illustrated. Macmillan & Co. $2.25

The Blue Ribbon. What Thomas Edward Murphy Has Done for the Promotion of Personal Temperance. By Arthur Reed Kimball. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25

An Imaged World. Poems in Prose. By Edward Garnett. Illustrated. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

The Natural History of Hell. By John Phillipson. Industrial Publication Co. 25c.

In the Dozy Hours, and Other Papers. By Agnes Repplier. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

Letters of Emily Dickinson. Edited by Mabel Loomis Todd. In two vols. Roberts Brothers. $2.00

The World Beautiful. By Lilian Whiting. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

The Power of the Will; or, Success. By H. Risborough Sharman. Roberts Brothers. 50c.

The Great Composers. By Hezekiah Butterworth. New and enlarged edition. Lothrop Publishing Co. $1.00

The Colonial Cavalier; or, Southern Life before the Revolution. By Maud Wilder Goodwin. Illustrated. Lovell, Coryell & Co.

London up to Date. By George Augustus Sala. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

A Hilltop Summer. By Alyn Yates Keith. Lee & Shepard $1.25

The Meeting-Place of Geology and History. By Sir J. William Dawson, F.R.S. Lowell Lectures, 1894. Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.25

The Use of Life. By the Right Hon. Sir John Lubbock, Bart., M.P. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

The World's Largest Libraries. A Commencement Address. By Gen. Jas. G. Wilson. E. & J. B. Young & Co. 50c.

Woman the Predominant Partner. By Sir Edward Sullivan, Bart. Longmans, Green & Co. 40c.

Twenty-Five Years of Scientific Progress, and Other Essays. By William North Rice. T. Y. Crowell & Co. 75c.

The Age of Pope. By John Dennis. Macmillan & Co. 50c.

The Art of Thomas Hardy. By Lionel Johnson. With portrait. Dodd, Mead & Co.

Walton, and Some Earlier Writers on Fish and Fishing. By R. B. Marston. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.25

My Generation. By Sarah Anna Emery. Newburyport: Moses H. Sargent. $1.50

In Bird Land. By Leander S. Keyser. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.25

Reminiscences of a Portrait Painter. By George P. A. Healy. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.50

Forty Witnesses to Success. Talks to Young Men. By Charles Townsend. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. 75c.

The Bird's Calendar. By H. E. Parkhurst. Illustrated. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

The Meaning of History, and Other Historic Pieces. By Frederic Harrison. Macmillan & Co. $2.25

My Study Fire. By Hamilton Wright Mabie. Second Series. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50

Fiction.

How Thankful Was Bewitched. By James K. Hosmer. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

Otto's Inspiration. By Mary H. Ford. S. C. Griggs & Co. $1.00

From Heaven to New York. By Isaac George Reed, Jr. Optimus Printing Co. 50c.

Helen. By Oswald Valentine. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

The Story of Lawrence Garthe. By Ellen Olney Kirk. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

Blanche of Burgundy. By Sylvanus Cobb, Jr. Robert Bonner's Sons. 50c.

Who Was Lost and Is Found. By Mrs. Oliphant. Harper & Brothers. $1.50

Kitty Alone. A Story of Three Fires. By S. Baring Gould. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1 25

The Crucifixion of Phillip Strong. By Charles M. Sheldon. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00

At the Ghost Hour. Heyse's Ghost Tales. Translated by Frances A. Van Santvord. Four vols. Dodd, Mead & Co. $2 00

Kensington Palace in the Days of Queen Mary II. A Story. By Emma Marshall. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

Ravenshoe. By Henry Kingsley. New edition. Ward, Lock & Bowden. $1.25

A Bachelor Maid. By Mrs. Burton Harrison. The Century Co. $1 25

A Child of the Age. By Francis Adams. London: John Lane. Boston: Roberts Brothers. $1.00

Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush. By Ian Maclaren. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50

A Bit of Finesse. By Harriet Newell Lodge. The Bowen-Merrill Co.

In the Midst of Alarms. By Robert Barr. Frederick A. Stokes Co. 75c.

In Fair Silesia. By Gustav Nieritz. Trans. by Mary E. Ireland. Richmond, Va.: Presbyterian Com. of Publication. 60c.

At the Gate of Samaria. By William John Locke. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

The Adventures of Ferdinand Tomasso. By Lehmos. New York: The Irving Co.

Poppæa. By Julien Gordon. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

Farmer Goldsworthy's Will. By Mrs. Isla Sitwell. E. & J. B. Young & Co. $1.25

Martin Hewitt: Investigator. By Arthur Morrison. Harper & Brothers. 50c.

Hidden Depths. A Tale for the Times. By F. M. F. Skene. Rand, McNally & Co. 75c.

My Lady. A Story of Long Ago. By Margaret Bouvet. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1 25

The Man from Oshkosh. By John Hicks, LL.D. Charles H. Sergel Co. $1.25

Stories from the Diary of a Doctor. By L. T. Meade and Clifford Halifax, M.D. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25

Mists. A Novel. By Fletcher Battershall. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25

The Highway of Sorrow. A Novel. By Hesba Stretton and * * * * * * * * Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25

Where Honour Leads. By Lynde Palmer. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25

First in the Field. A Story of New South Wales. By George Manville Fenn. Illustrated by W. Rainey. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50

The Land of the Changing Sun. By Will N. Harben. The Merriam Co. 75c.

The Daughter of the Nez Perces. By Arthur Paterson. George Gottsberger Peck. $1.00

A House of Gentlefolk. By Ivan Turgenev. Trans. by Constance Garnett. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

The Recollections of Geoffry Hamlyn. By Henry Kingsley. In two vols. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

Melting Snows. By Prince Schoenach-Carolath. Tr. by Margaret Symonds. London: John C. Nimmo. 5*s*.

Matteo Bandello. Twelve Stories Selected and Done into English, with a Memoir of the Author, by Percy Pinkerton. London: John C. Nimmo. 7*s*. 6*d*. net.

The Hero of Esthonia, and Other Studies in the Romantic Literature of That Country. Compiled by W. F. Kirby, F.L.S., F.E.S. In two volumes. London: John C. Nimmo. 21*s*. net.

Three Times and Out. By Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson. Hunt & Eaton. 75c.

Martha's Mistakes. By Mrs. M. E. Bradley. Hunt & Eaton. $1.25

Iola, the Senator's Daughter. A Story of Ancient Rome. By Mansfield Lovell Hillhouse. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25

Maelcho; a Sixteenth Century Narrative. By the Hon. Emily Lawless. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

The Honorable Peter Stirling, and What People Thought of Him. By Paul Leicester Ford. Henry Holt & Co. $1.50

The People of the Mist. By H. Rider Haggard. Longmans, Green & Co.

Mr. Jervis. By B. M. Croker. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

By Reef and Palm. By Louis Becke. With an Introduction by the Earl of Pembroke. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

The Indiscretion of the Duchess. By Anthony Hope. Henry Holt & Co. 75c.

The Royal Road; or, Taking Him at His Word. By Marion Harland. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.50

Hans of Iceland. By Victor Hugo. Library edition. Little, Brown & Co. $1.50

Bug Jargal. To which are added Claude Gueux, and The Last Days of a Condemned. By Victor Hugo. Library edition. Little, Brown & Co. $1.50

Sarah Dakota. By Mary E. Q. Brush. Hunt & Eaton. $1.00

The Novels of Susan Edmonstone Ferrier. In six vols. With introduction by R. Brimley Johnson, and illustrations by Nelly Erichsen. Macmillan & Co. $6.00

The Raid from Beauséjour, and How the Carter Boys Lifted the Mortgage. By Charles G. D. Roberts. Hunt & Eaton.

"Ploughed," and Other Stories. By L. B. Walford. Longmans, Green & Co.

The Dolly Dialogues. By Anthony Hope. Henry Holt & Co. 75c.

Tales from the Ægean. By Demetrios Bikelas. Tr. by Leonard Eckstein Opdycke. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00

Jewish Tales. By Leopold von Sacher Masoch. Tr. by Harriet L. Cohen. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00

Children of Circumstance. A Novel. By Iota. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

The Price of Peace. By A. W. Ackerman. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.25

A Sunless Heart. Ward, Lock & Bowden.

Philip and His Wife. By Margaret Deland. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

Doctor Zernowitz. Von Frau Sutro-Schucking. Laird & Lee. 25c.

Mollie Miller. By Effie W. Merriman. Illustrated. Lee & Shepard. $1.25

The Special Correspondent; or, The Adventures of Claudius Bombarnac. By Jules Verne. Lovell, Coryell & Co.

The Birth of a Soul. By Mrs. A. Phillips. Rand, McNally & Co. 75c.

Pioker and Her People. A Ranch and Tepee Story. By Theodora R. Jenness. Lothrop Publishing Co. $1.50

Love in Idleness. A Tale of Bar Harbor. By F. Marion Crawford. Illustrated. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

The Lilac Sunbonnet. A Love Story. By S. R. Crockett. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

The God in the Car. A Novel. By Anthony Hope. D. Appleton & Co 50c.

The Vagabonds. By Margaret L. Woods. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

Decatur and Somers. By M. Elliot Seawell Illustrated. D. Appleton & Co $1 00

Amygdala. A Tale of the Greek Revolution. By Mrs. Edmonds. Macmillan & Co $1.50

Lillian Morris, and Other Stories. By Henryk Sienkiewicz. Little, Brown & Co. $1.25

History.

The Story of the Civil War. By John Codman Ropes. With Maps and Plans. Part I. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

The Revolutionary and Napoleonic Era. 1789–1815. By J. H. Rose, M.A. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

A History of the United States Navy, from 1775 to 1894. By Edgar Stanton Maclay, A.M. Vol. II. Illustrated. D. Appleton & Co. $3.50

A History of Painting. By John C. Van Dyke, L.H D. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.50

A History of Greece. By Adolph Holm. In four volumes. Vol. I. Macmillan & Co. $2 50

The History of the French Revolution. 1789–1800. By Louis Adolphe Thiers. Translated, with notes and illustrations, from the most authentic sources, by Frederick Shoberl. Vols. I and II. J. B. Lippincott Co. Each, $3.00

History of the Consulate and the Empire of France under Napoleon. By Louis Adolphe Thiers. Translated, with the sanction and approval of the author, by D. Forbes Campbell and John Stebbing. Illustrated. Twelve volumes. J. B. Lippincott Co. $36.00

Holiday Books.

The Sistine Madonna. A Christmas Meditation. By Amory H. Bradford. Fords, Howard & Hulbert. 50c.

Pride and Prejudice. By Jane Austen. Illustrated by Hugh Thomson. Macmillan & Co. $2.25

Hypatia; or, New Foes with an Old Face. By Charles Kingsley. With three hundred illustrations. Two vols. in a box. Harper & Brothers. $7.00

Becket. By Alfred, Lord Tennyson. Illustrated by F. C. Gordon. Dodd, Mead & Co. $2.00

Eighteenth Century Vignettes. Second series. By Austin Dobson. Dodd, Mead & Co. $2.00

Holland. By Edmondo de Amicis. Trans. by Helen Zimmern. Two vols. Porter & Coates. $5.00

History of Art in Primitive Greece. Myncenia Art. By Georges Perrot and Charles Chipiez. Fully illustrated. In two vols. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $15.50

A Shelf of Old Books. By Mrs. James T. Fields. Illustrated. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50

Juvenile.

Chasing a Yacht; or, The Theft of the "Gem." By James Otis. Penn Publishing Co.

Among the Esquimaux; or, Adventures under the Arctic Circle. By Edward S. Ellis. Penn Publishing Co

Maurice; or, The Red Jar. By the Countess of Jersey. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

The Elksville Girls. By Mrs. Susan M. Griffith. Amer. Baptist Publication Society. $1.00

The Captain's Boat. By William O. Stoddard. The Merriam Co. $1.50

The Lost Army. By Thomas W. Knox. The Merriam Co. $1.50

Little Ike Templin, and Other Stories. By Richard Malcolm Johnston. Lothrop Publishing Co. $1.00

The Golden Fairy Book. With one hundred and ten illustrations by H. R Millar. D. Appleton & Co. $2.00

The Fables of Æsop. Selected, told anew, and their history traced, by Joseph Jacobs. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

Religion and Theology.

The Comprehensive Concordance to the Holy Scriptures. By Rev. B. J. R. Walker. Cong. S. S and Pub. Society. $2 00

St. Paul's Conception of Christianity. By Alexander Balmain Bruce, D D. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2 00

The Victory of Our Faith. By Anna Robertson Brown, Ph D. T. Y. Crowell & Co. 35c.

The Law of Service. A Study in Christian Altruism. By Jas. P. Kelley. G. P Putnam's Sons. $1 00

The Religion of Moses. By Adolph Moses. Louisville, Ky.: Flexner Brothers. $1.00

The Master's Guide for His Disciples. With a preface by Eugene Stock. Thomas Whittaker. $1.00

Master and Men; or, The Sermon on the Mountain Practiced on the Plain By William Burnet Wright Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

Hints on Preaching. By Rev. Joseph V. O'Connor. Porter & Coates. 50c. net.

Travel and Observation.

The Butterfly Hunters in the Caribbees. By Dr. Eugene Murray-Aaron. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00

Chinese Characteristics. By Arthur H. Smith Second edition, revised, with illustrations. Fleming H. Revell Co. $2 00

Among the Tibetans. By Isabella Bird Bishop. Illustrated. Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.00

Domestic Manners of the Americans. By Mrs. Trollope. Two vols. in a box. Dodd, Mead & Co. $3.50

Miscellaneous.

Wild Beasts. A Study of the Characters and Habits of the Elephant, Lion, Leopard, Panther, Jaguar, Tiger, Puma, Wolf, and Grizzly Bear. By J. Hampden Porter. Illustrated. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00

I Am Well! The Modern Practice of Natural Suggestion as Distinct from Hypnotic or Unnatural Influence. By C. W. Post. Second edition. Lee & Shepard. $1.25

Ninth Annual Report of the Commissioners of Labor, 1893. Building and Loan Association. Washington, D. C.: Government Printing Office.

FRENCH BOOKS. FRENCH CALENDARS.

WILLIAM R. JENKINS,

851 and 853 SIXTH AVENUE.

N. W. Corner of 48th St., NEW YORK.

French Calendars, 1895.

With Daily Quotations from French Authors.

40, 50, 60, 75 cents, $1.00, $1.50.

Victor Hugo's Works in French.

Les Miserables. 5 vols., 12mo, half morocco, $13.50.

Les Miserables. 5 vols., 12mo, cloth, $6.50.

Notre-Dame de Paris. 2 vols., 12mo, with 200 illustrations in photogravures, half morocco, $6 00.

Notre-Dame de Paris. 2 vols., 12mo, with 200 illustrations in photogravures, cloth, $3.00.

Quatrevingt-Treize. 1 vol., 12mo, half morocco, $3.00.

Quatrevingt-Treize. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

Les Travailleurs de la mer. 1 vol., 12mo, half morocco, $3.00.

Les Travailleurs de la mer. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

Complete Catalogue, embracing all French Literature, sent on application.

WILLIAM R. JENKINS,

Publisher, Bookseller, Stationer and Printer,

851 and 853 Sixth Ave. (N. W. Cor. 48th St.), New York.

Authorized "Brantwood" Edition

OF RUSKIN

WITH SPECIAL INTRODUCTIONS BY

Prof. Charles Eliot Norton.

The only edition published in this country with Mr. Ruskin's consent and from the sale of which he derives a profit. The illustrations have been prepared under his personal supervision, and the type, paper, and style of binding are in accordance with his suggestions. Each of the prose works contains a special introduction by Prof. Charles Eliot Norton, of Harvard College, explaining the purposes for and the conditions under which it was written. The two volumes of poetry written between the ages of seven and twenty-six, with an appendix of later poems, now first collected from original manuscript and printed sources, are edited in chronological order, with notes, biographical and critical, by Mr. Ruskin's secretary, William G. Collingwood, M. A.

All English editions of Ruskin now in print are kept in stock or will be imported at short notice.

A FULL DESCRIPTIVE CIRCULAR MAILED FREE.

A thirty-two page pamphlet containing specimen pages of the new hymn-book, "The Church Hymnary," will also be mailed free on request.

MAYNARD, MERRILL & CO.,

43, 45 and 47 East Tenth Street, New York.

A NOTABLE BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF 84 DRAWINGS.

By CHARLES DANA GIBSON.

This is the first collection of Mr. Gibson's drawings which has been made, and will undoubtedly prove a most popular holiday book, as the artist is so widely and favorably known through his illustrations in the magazines, and cartoons in Life. The book is a large folio, 12 x 18 inches, containing 84 of Mr. Gibson's best drawings, beautifully printed on heavy paper, and handsomely bound, with a breezy figure of the typical "American Girl" printed on Japan paper for the cover. Price $5.00 each.

New Stories for Children.

By JOHN KENDRICK BANGS.

TIDDLEDYWINK TALES.

Illustrated by Charles Howard Johnson. 12mo, 236 pp., full cloth, gilt, $1.25.

A charming book for children, as Mr. Bangs fully understands the art of story-telling for young people, and the artist is in sympathy with all the fun and humor of the book.

IN CAMP WITH A TIN SOLDIER

A Sequel to the "Tiddledywink Tales." Illustrated by E. M. Ashe. 12mo, 236 pp., full cloth, gilt, $1.25.

Jimmieboy has added two years to his age since his adventures with the Tiddledywinks. His adventures in the Camp of the Tin Soldiers are most amusing, and the new book promises to be even a greater favorite than the Tiddledywink Tales.

HALF-HOURS WITH JIMMIEBOY.

Illustrated by Frank Verbeck, Charles Howard Johnson, and others. 12mo, 112 pp., full cloth, $1 25.

Sixteen short stories record the interesting adventures of the hero with all sorts of folks, dwarfs, dude giants, bicyclopædia birds and snowmen, during which he visits many curious regions.

THE TIDDLEDYWINK'S POETRY BOOK.

Illustrated by Charles Howard Johnson. Large quarto, with illuminated covers, 30 full-page illustrations, and colored borders to text. Bound in boards, $1 00.

This book will be as popular with the children as the Brownie Books were.

R. H. RUSSELL & SON,

33 Rose Street, New York.

S. C. GRIGGS & COMPANY

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

FREYTAG'S TECHNIQUE OF THE DRAMA.

An authorized translation by Elias J. MacEwan, M. A. Cloth. Price $1.50.

Dr. Gustav Freytag's great work, "The Technique of the Drama," is an historical and philosophical exposition of dramatic composition and art, stating the general principles governing the structures of plays, the creation of characters and the rules of acting. The qualifications of actors are clearly set forth, and attention is given to stage arrangement. An important feature of the work is its critical examination of the plan, motive, color, characters, etc., of the principal dramas of Sophocles, Shakespeare, Lessing, Goethe and Schiller, thus making it of special value to dramatic authors, critics and students of literature.

Dr. Freytag ranks among the first of living playwrights and novelists, and playgoers will find in the work that which must be helpful to a better appreciation of the nature and value of the drama.

Prof. A. V. Williams Jackson, Columbia College, says: "I am very glad to hear of your translation of Freytag's 'Technique of the Drama.' Certainly such a work is a desideratum. In its English dress the work will certainly be welcome."

Prof. Katherine Lee Bates, Wellesley College, says: "It is with the greatest pleasure I hear that Dr. Freytag's invaluable work is about to appear in English dress. I await my copy with impatience."

OTTO'S INSPIRATION.

A Novel. By Mary H. Ford, author of "Which Wins." Cloth. Price $1.00.

The Chicago Inter-Ocean says: "Out of the art world comes an author, the well-known art critic, Mary H. Ford. Music is the theme of the book, and the spirit of music guided the hand that wrote 'Otto's Inspiration.' It is a very sweet story and a humane one. . . . The characters are all well drawn, and any one who wishes to read a beautiful story of a beautiful life will find it between the covers of this book. The tone throughout is pure, and no one can read it without feeling better for it."

The Chicago Standard says: "The story of a young musical genius, charmingly told. The reader is at once interested in the hero, sympathizes with him in his firm conviction that an angel inspires him, and closes the book with the feeling as if he had just read a veritable history. Such stories do not often come to one, even in these days when fiction, though not always an 'enemy,' comes in like a flood."

THE UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY

A Study in Railway Politics, History and Economics. By John P. Davis, Esq. 1 vol, 8vo, with Maps. Price $2.00.

The New York World says: "Has the fascination of a novel. The treatment is a full, clear and practical presentation of the origin, development and present status of the Pacific Railroads. The information contained in this volume has never before been gathered together in any form or shape. Should be in every public library."

The Review of Reviews, N. Y., says: "Is especially timely in view of the present exigencies of the Pacific system and the problem of adjusting its indebtedness to the national government. Offers a conservative plan for the solution of the present crisis."

THE SECRET OF CHARACTER-BUILDING.

By John B. DeMotte, A. M., Ph. D. Cloth. Finely illustrated. Price $1.00.

"In suggestiveness and high moral impulse this little monograph is worth a dozen volumes of ethical philosophy to most men. We trust it may be widely read and studiously pondered."—Church Standard, Philadelphia.

For sale by Thompson, Brown & Co., 23 Hawley St., Boston, and by booksellers generally, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by the publishers,

S. C. GRIGGS & CO.,

262 and 264 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

THE

Cassell Publishing Co.'s

New and Recent Publications.

New Light on the Bible and the Holy Land.

Being an account of Some Recent Discoveries in the East. By Basil T. A. Evetts, M. A., formerly of the Assyrian Department, British Museum. Illustrated. 8vo, cloth, $3.00.

"To Bible scholars as a class, and to that greatly larger constituency of Bible lovers who look up to them, this volume will come with the healing of the balm of Gilead in its leaves. Probably the Christian world has not realized until the moment of the present publication a tithe of the import of the most recent exhumations of the records of Assyria and Babylonia, and of the advance of human knowledge concerning those records. Their story reads like a fairy tale, yet it is the plain tale of severe and exact research, subtended by strictly logical and scientific deductions."—Evening Telegram, New York.

Old Ace and other Poems.

By Fred. Emerson Brooks. Handsomely bound in extra cloth, gilt top, $1.00.

"Your poem 'Yosemite' is grand indeed. You may well be proud of being its author."—Henry Irving.

"His poetry is of the kind that everybody likes."—Gen. Wager Swayne.

"Fred. Emerson Brooks is a choice spirit—gentle, sympathetic—besides an irresistible humor. In my judgment some of his poems cannot be excelled."—O. O. Howard, Maj.-Gen.

Two new books by Mrs. L. T. Meade, author of "A Sweet Girl Graduate," "Bashful Fifteen," "Ring of Rubies," etc.

Betty, a School-Girl.

Red Rose and Tiger Lily

Each 12mo, cloth gilt, with full page illustrations, $1.50.

"Mrs. Meade possesses the rare talent of making an interesting book for either young or adult readers."—Boston Beacon.

The Magazine of Art.

The yearly volume of The Magazine of Art for 1894, forming the first of the Enlarged Series, contains upwards of 500 illustrations, including 14 Photogravures and Etchings and a series of Special Plates of the highest artistic excellence.

Extra cloth, beveled, full gilt, $5.00.

The new volume of the Magazine of Art, beginning with the December issue, will be still further enlarged, and new and improved features introduced. Send for Prospectus, $3.50 per year; 35 cents per number. SUBSCRIBE NOW.

THE CASSELL PUBLISHING CO.,

31 East 17th Street (Union Square),

NEW YORK.

SOME NOTABLE BOOKS

I.

Records of the Domestic Life of the Early English Colonies of Virginia, the Carolinas, etc. Colonies of the same Mother Country as New England, but widely different from her in religious, social, and political character.

The Colonial Cavalier:

or, Southern Life before the Revolution.

By Maud Wilder Goodwin. Characteristically Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Contents.—The Colonial Cavalier; His Home; Sweethearts and Wives; His Dress; News, Trade, and Travel; His Friends and Foes; His Amusements; His Man-Servants and His Maid-Servants; His Church; His Education; Laws, Punishments, and Politics; Sickness and Death.

II.

A Burne-Jones Head.

By Clara Sherwood Rollins. 12mo, handsome cloth, with photogravure frontispiece, $1.00.

A captivating volume of stories in the modern vein, told with spirit and vivacity by a sincere artist.

"The book has distinction, it has art, it has humor, it has purpose."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

III.

Struthers; and the Comedy of the Masked Musicians.

By Anna Bowman Dodd, author of "Three Normandy Inns," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, illuminated cover, 50 cents.

"A story of Anglomania and of lord hunting, with a fresh and charming treatment."—N. Y. Sun.

"A clever satire on New York society."—Press.

IV.

McCARTHY MODERNIZED,

And Brought Down to Date.

A History of Our Own Times.

From the Accession of Queen Victoria to the General Election of 1880. By Justin McCarthy, M. P. With an Introduction and Supplementary Chapters Bringing the Work Down to Mr. Gladstone's Resignation of the Premiership (March, 1894). With a New Index and additions to the survey of the Literature of the Reign. By G. Mercer Adam, author of "A Précis of English History" etc.

Profusely illustrated with new half-tone portraits of statesmen and littérateurs, including among others:

Mr. Gladstone,
A. J. Balfour,
Lord Salisbury,
W. E. Forster,
Lord Beaconsfield,
Rudyard Kipling,
Joseph Chamberlain,
Mr. Goschen,
Earl Granville,
Justin McCarthy,
J. M. Barrie.

2 vols., 12mo, handsome cloth, $3.00; or, in three-quarter calf, $5.00. Popular edition, 2 vols., 12mo, without illustrations, $1.50.

V.

The Victorian Age of English Literature.

By Mrs. Oliphant. Handsome Library Edition, with 15 Photogravure Portraits of the Representative Writers of the Reign. 2 vols., 8vo., cloth $3.50; or, three-quarter calf, $7.00. Students Edition, without illustrations, 1 vol., 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

An admirable survey of the literature of the epoch.

If you do not find these books at your bookseller's, we will send them to you on receipt of price, or you can come to us and get them.

UNITED STATES BOOK CO.,

310-318 Sixth Avenue, New York.

THOMAS NELSON & SONS'

NEW HOLIDAY BOOKS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Dr. Robinson's New Volume on Simon Peter.

SIMON PETER.

His Later Life and Labors. By Rev. CHAS. S. ROBINSON, D. D. 12mo, cloth, illustrated, $1.25.

The Boys' Book of the Season.—J. MacDonald Oxley's New Book.

IN THE WILDS OF THE WEST COAST.

By J. MACDONALD OXLEY, author of "Diamond Rock," "Up Among the Ice Floes," etc. 12mo, cloth extra, handsomely bound and illustrated, $1.50.

A book that all boys will appreciate, and those in search of wholesome and entertaining reading for young people will find this in every way suitable.

A Notable New Book by Dr. Blaikie.

HEROES OF ISRAEL.

By WILLIAM G BLAIKIE, D. D., LL. D., author of "A Manual of Bible History in Connection with the General History of the World." With numerous illustrations. 8vo, cloth extra, $1.50.

As a delineator of Scripture biography, strong and picturesque, thoroughly evangelical and scholarly, Dr. W. G. Blaikie has already been widely read on this side of the sea. This new volume will find, as it certainly deserves, a cordial welcome in every pastor's study. It ought to be placed in every church library, for such vigorous portrayals of character suggest themes of meditation of the highest promise to one inclined to be imaginative. These books make excellent and helpful presents for superintendents and teachers during the holidays.—Rev. Charles S. Robinson, D. D., Pastor of N. Y. Presbyterian Church.

Three New Historical Tales by Evelyn Everett-Green.

SHUT IN.

A Tale of the Wonderful Siege of Antwerp in the year 1585. 8vo, cloth extra, $1.75.

THE SECRET CHAMBER AT CHAD.

A Tale. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.00.

EVIL MAY DAY.

A Story of 1517. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.00.

New Book by John Gunn.

SONS OF THE VIKINGS.

An Orkney Story. By JOHN GUNN. With illustrations by John Williamson. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.00.

The story of the adventures of two young Orcadians impressed into the naval service during the Napoleonic war.

New Books of Bible Stories.

STEP BY STEP THROUGH THE BIBLE.

A Scripture History for Little Children. By EDITH RALPH. With a preface by Cunningham Geikie, D. D, LL. D.

Part I. From the Creation to the Death of Joshua. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.00.

Part II. From the Death of Joshua to the End of the Old Testament. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.00.

Part III. The New Testament. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.00.

"Others have classified and simplified the Bible for the juvenile comprehension, but Miss Ralph excels the rest in the evidence she gives of love for her work and for her readers."—N. Y. Sun, Aug. 19, 1894.

"No sweeter, wiser or more Christian story of the Scriptures could be given to a little child or read to it."—Christian Commonwealth.

Dr. Gordon Stables's Latest Book.

AS WE SWEEP THROUGH THE DEEP.

A Story of the Stirring Times of Old. By GORDON STABLES, M. D., R. N. With illustrations. 12mo, cloth extra, 80 cents.

A good book for boys, giving glimpses of naval life during the stirring times of the Napoleonic war.

New Children's Stories.

UP THE CHIMNEY TO NINNY LAND.

A Fairy Story for Children. By A. S. M. CHESTER, author of "Short Doggerel Tales." With numerous illustrations. Small 4to, cloth extra, $1.00.

FAVORITE FABLES AND STORIES ABOUT ANIMALS.

Two volumes in one. Profusely illustrated. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.00.

New Series.

NOBLE LIVES (New Series of).

By Miss LUCY TAYLOR. Two volumes in one. Cloth extra, each, 50 cents.

Story of Sir Henry Lawrence and Sir Henry Havelock.
Story of William Carey and Captain Hedley Vicars.
Story of Sir Josiah Mason and James Nasmyth.

For Sale by all Booksellers. Illustrated Catalogue on Application.

THOMAS NELSON & SONS,
Publishers and Importers,
33 East 17th Street, Union Square, New York.

St. Nicholas

FOR YOUNG FOLKS.

Edited by Mary Mapes Dodge.

In 1895

ST. NICHOLAS will have five great serial stories, more of Rudyard Kipling's "Jungle Stories," more "Brownies," E. S. Brooks's story life of Napoleon, suggestive articles by Brander Matthews, Theodore Roosevelt, Prof. Hornaday, etc, practical papers, short stories, delightful verse. It is the greatest educator you can give a boy or girl.

A Subscription

makes the best possible Christmas gift. On and after the issue of December number we will give November number free to new subscribers. November begins the volume. A beautiful certificate sent to those who wish to use a subscription as their Christmas gift. Subscription price, $3.00.

The Christmas Number,

Sold everywhere, 25 cents, is a royal gift-book in itself, — the treat of the year. Don't fail to take home a copy.

The Bound Volume,

containing the numbers of the past year,—more than 1000 pages and nearly as many pictures, in two richly bound parts, costs $4.00.

Subscribe through dealers, or remit to

THE CENTURY CO.,
Union Square, New York.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

If it is your intention to employ a printing press at any time in the near future in the manufacture of book, pamphlet or catalogue, the subscriber would be pleased to offer you the resources of his office, including

- Critical examination of MSS.,
- Estimates of cost,
- Furnishing of designs, illustrations and their engravure,
- Composition and electrotyping,
- Press work,
- Binding,
- Distribution.

Limited editions and author's editions are gladly undertaken, and as a publisher, special facilities are offered for the sale of meritorious works in any department of literature.

Mr. Moulton has recently (1894) published forty-two volumes with retail prices ranging from twenty-five cents to twenty dollars per copy. Prices will be given on application. Address

CHARLES WELLS MOULTON,
37 & 39 COURT STREET, BUFFALO, N. Y.

When calling please ask for Mr. Grant.

Books at Liberal Discount.

Before buying books write for quotations. An assortment of catalogues and special slips of books at reduced prices sent for 10-cent stamp.

F. E. GRANT, Books,

7 West 42d Street, New York.

Having lately purchased the remainder of the editions of the following books, published by D. Appleton & Co., I offer them as follows:

THE JEWS OF BARNOW.

From the German of Karl Emil Franzos.

These delightful and most remarkable stories of actual life in Southeastern Europe have been translated in every modern language, and even in Hebrew. Three hundred and thirty-four pages. Neat cloth.

Published at One Dollar.

My Reduced Price, Fifty Cents,

Postage Eight Cents.

THE HISTORY OF THE COUP D'ETAT.

By De Maupas, former Minister under Napoleon.

From the French.

This is the best book on this great historical event. Cloth binding, nearly five hundred pages.

Published and Sold for Two Dollars and Fifty Cents a Copy.

My Reduced Price, Prepaid, Sixty Cents.

MAJOLICA, AND FAIENCE,

ITALIAN, SICILIAN, MAJORCAN, HISPANO-MORESQUE AND PERSIAN.

By ARTHUR BECKWITH. Most profusely illustrated, a most valuable handbook to the china collector, as it gives full information, marks, and the literature of the subject in detail.

Published at One Dollar.

My Reduced Price, only Fifty Cents, Prepaid.

Neat Cloth Binding.

The following novels in paper, published at FIFTY CENTS each, will be sent prepaid on receipt of TWENTY-FIVE CENTS:

FRANK BARRET.

A RECOILING VENGEANCE. A very exciting story.

CHRISTIAN RIED.

A COMEDY OF ELOPEMENT. A bright and entertaining story.

PAUL LINDAU.

HANGING MOSS. A splendid novel. From the German.

Cash must accompany orders, either by Check, Draft, P. O. Order, or P. O. Note.

All books are fresh, clean and in first-class condition.

Mention this advertisement and receive a discount.

Whenever you need a book of any description address

F. E. GRANT,

7 West 42d Street, New York.

LIBERAL DISCOUNT ON LIBERAL ORDERS

Copeland & Day's Selected List.

BOLTON (CHARLES KNOWLES). ON THE WOOING OF MARTHA PITKIN. Being a versified narration of the time of the Regicides in Colonial New England. Three hundred and fifty copies on hand-made paper, small octavo, eighteenth century binding, 75 cents; thirty-five copies on large paper, full, blind-tooled leather, $2.00.

CARMAN (BLISS) AND RICHARD HOVEY. Songs from Vagabondia, with designs by Tom B. Meteyard. Seven hundred and fifty copies on Dickinson's Deckel edge paper. Octavo, $1.00; fifty copies on large, hand-made paper, $3.00.

CRANE (STEPHEN). THE BLACK RIDERS AND OTHER LINES. Five hundred copies. Octavo, $1.00; fifty copies on hand-made paper, $3.00. In the press.

ROSSETTI (DANTE GABRIEL). THE HOUSE OF LIFE: BEING NOW FOR THE FIRST TIME GIVEN IN ITS FULL TEXT. With three ornamental borders and one hundred and fourteen initial letters designed by Bertram Grosvenor Goodhue. Issued in an edition of five hundred copies on hand-made P. L. B. paper, square octavo, bound in limp Japanese silk paper boards, square octavo, $2.50; and fifty copies on thick hand-made Michallet paper, with rubricated initials, $5 00.

TABB (JOHN B.). POEMS. With cover and title-page designed by George Edward Barton. Small square octavo, green cloth and gold, $1.00; fifty copies on English hand-made paper, $3.00; five copies on China paper, $10.00.

TENNYSON AND HIS PRE-RAPHAELITE ILLUSTRATORS. A BOOK ABOUT A BOOK, BY GEORGE SOMES LAYARD. Containing reproductions of designs by Dante Gabriel Rossetti, Holman Hunt, and Mrs. D. G. Rossetti, some of which are here published for the first time. Octavo, Roxburge, $1.75. A very few copies on large paper, quarto, $5.00.

THOMPSON (FRANCIS). POEMS. With frontispiece and title-page on Japanese paper, designed by Lawrence Housman. Small quarto, $1.50. Fourth edition.

WILDE (OSCAR). THE SPHYNX. A Poem. With decorations in line by Charles Ricketts. Printed in black, green, and red, with ornamental initials. Twenty-five copies, large paper in English vellum and gold with ribbons, $30.00.

YELLOW BOOK (THE). An illustrated Quarterly. Edited by Henry Harland and Aubrey Beardsley. Issued in April, July, October and January. Square octavo, yellow cloth, $6.00 annually, or $1.50 a volume.

IN PREPARATION.

GUINEY (LOUISE IMOGEN). LOVERS-SAINT-RUTH'S, AND THREE OTHER IDYLS. Octavo, $1.25. Twenty-five copies on hand-made paper, $3.00.

BROWN (ALICE). MEADOW-GRASS. A book of New England stories. Octavo, $1 25. Twenty-five copies on hand-made paper, $3.00.

ZOLA (EMILE). JAQUES DAMOUR. Translated by W. F. Apthrop. Octavo, $1.50. Twenty copies on hand-made paper, $3.00.

BLUNT (WILFRID SCAWEN). ESTHER, A YOUNG MAN'S TRAGEDY, TOGETHER WITH THE LOVE SONNETS OF PROTEUS. Five hundred copies printed on hand-made Dutch paper especially manufactured for the series. Square octavo, $3.50; fifty copies printed on English seventeenth century paper with rubricated initials, $6.00. In the press.

This will be the second volume of our series of Love Sonnets, in which Rossetti's House of Life was the first.

SAVAGE (PHILIP). FIRST POEMS AND FRAGMENTS. Five hundred copies. Octavo, $1.25. Fifty copies on hand-made paper, $3.00. Five copies on Japan paper, $10.00.

COPELAND & DAY, Boston.

PORTER & COATES,

PHILADELPHIA,

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

HOLLAND

By EDMONDO DE AMICIS.

Translated from the Italian by HELEN ZIMMERN.

This edition is made from new electrotype plates, and has been very carefully printed. It contains forty-four photogravure Illustrations and a Map. Bound in two volumes, small octavo, gilt tops. Cloth, ornamental, in cloth box (with slip covers), $5.00; half calf, gilt top, $10.00; large-paper edition, in 2 volumes, limited to 150 copies, $10.00.

No more beautiful book has this year been published than Porter & Coates' new edition of "Holland." It will be welcomed by all book-lovers who like to own good books in choice editions. As a descriptive writer De Amicis has no superior, and his "Holland" is recognized as the best work describing the life, manners and scenery of that unique country. The translation is an excellent one and the photogravures represent famous buildings and works of art and scenes in the cities and on the placid canals. They are examples of the best work ever done in America for purposes of illustration.

Standard New Juveniles by the Famous Authors of Books for Boys and Girls:

HARRY CASTLEMON,
HORATIO ALGER, Jr.,
EDWARD S. ELLIS,
Mrs. LUCY C. LILLIE.

SAILOR JACK THE TRADER. Being the 6th volume of The War Series.

OSCAR IN AFRICA. Being the 3d volume of The Hunter Series.

By HARRY CASTLEMON. Illustrated, 12mo, cloth, each, $1.25.

ONLY AN IRISH BOY, and

VICTOR VANE, Or the Young Secretary.

By HORATIO ALGER, Jr. Illustrated, 12mo, cloth, each, $1.25.

THE GREAT CATTLE TRAIL.

By EDWARD S. ELLIS. Illustrated, 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

THE FAMILY DILEMMA. A Story for Girls.

By Mrs. LUCY C. LILLIE, author of "The Squire's Daughter," "Helen Glenn," etc. Illustrated, 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

For sale by all booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by the publishers, on receipt of price.

PORTER & COATES, Philadelphia.

Silver, Burdett & Company's

HOLIDAY ANNOUNCEMENT.

AMERICAN WRITERS OF TODAY. By HENRY C. VEDDER. Cloth, gilt top, 16mo, 326 pp., $1.50. A critical and fascinating account of the literature and writers of our own day, including nineteen contemporary authors.

"The first effect of reading the book is to send one back to the authors analyzed, with fresh enthusiasm and appreciation . . . surely a desirable state of mind wherein to read and study understandingly."

BEACON LIGHTS OF PATRIOTISM; or, Historic Incentives to Virtue and Good Citizenship. In prose and verse, with notes. By HENRY B. CARRINGTON, U. S. A., LL.D. Cloth, gilt, 16mo, 443 pp., $1.25. (In school edition, 72 cents.)

"It was a very happy thought to bring together the inspiring utterances of so many patriotic men and women."—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

WAYMARKS FOR TEACHERS, showing aims, principles and plans of every-day teaching, with illustrative lessons. By SARAH L. ARNOLD, Supervisor Primary Schools, Minneapolis, Minn. Cloth, 16mo, 276 pp., $1.25.

"Nowhere else is it possible for a teacher in her every-day work to find so much that is helpful by way of lesson aids . . . as in these pages."—The American Teacher.

A HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS FOR HISTORICAL STUDY. An analytical synopsis of the Four Gospels in the English Version of 1881. By WM. ARNOLD STEVENS, D. D., Professor of New Testament Interpretation in the Rochester Theological Seminary, and ERNEST DEWITT BURTON, Professor of New Testament Interpretation in the University of Chicago. Cloth, small quarto, 249 pp., $1.50.

"I think it is much the best English Harmony we have." —Prof. Marcus Dods, D. D., New College, Edinburgh, Scotland.

BY THE SAME AUTHORS.

AN OUTLINE HANDBOOK OF THE LIFE OF CHRIST, from the Four Gospels. Second Edition. 12mo, 45 pp., cloth, 50 cents.

THE EVOLUTION OF SPIRITUAL MAN. By WILLIAM M. LISLE. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, 217 pp., $1.50.

"No one can read this brief volume without experiencing intellectual stimulus, social sympathy, and spiritual impulsion."—The Christian Inquirer.

CHOICE ENGLISH LYRICS. A new volume in the "Select English Classics" Series, edited with notes, historical, biographical and literary, by JAMES BALDWIN, Ph. D. Cloth, 368 pp., 72 cents. Includes the choicest selections in this department of literature.

HISTORICAL ATLAS AND GENERAL HISTORY. By ROBERT H. LABBERTON. 1 vol., royal octavo, 203 pp. of text, 198 progressive colored maps, 30 genealogical charts, cloth, $2.00; library edition, half morocco and gilt, $3.50. Presents the leading events in the history of the world.

THE REASONABLE CHRIST. By GEORGE E. MERRILL. 16mo, cloth and gilt, 215 pp., $1.25.

"Much thought and good sense."—Zion's Herald.

"A book whose trend is not in the ordinary rut."—Literary World.

"Free and liberal in tone . . . it is written in gentle, attractive, and effective style."—The Independent, N. Y.

PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF MORALITY, or Ethical Principles Discussed and Applied. By EZEKIEL GILMAN ROBINSON, D D., LL. D., late President of Brown University. 12mo, cloth, 264 pp., $1.50.

"Dr. Robinson's exposition of the facts and philosophy of ethics is not surpassed in clear thinking, exact definition and familiarity with historical ethics by any work which we have seen."—The Christian Inquirer, New York, N. Y.

INSTITUTES OF GENERAL HISTORY. By President E. BENJAMIN ANDREWS, D. D., LL. D., of Brown University. $2.00.

These and our other publications are for sale by the leading booksellers. Send for catalogues and circulars descriptive of our EDUCATIONAL PUBLICATIONS.

SILVER, BURDETT & COMPANY, Publishers,
110-112 Boylston Street, Boston.

New and Interesting.

Seven Little Australians.

By Ethel S. Turner. With 26 illustrations by A. J. Johnson. 12mo, cloth, gilt, $1 00.

"This brilliant and captivating book. . . ."—Literary World, Boston.

"Very bright and amusing."—Boston Transcript.

"Has in it all the freshness and wholesomeness of Louisa May Alcott's Works."—Detroit Free Press.

The Tale of Chloe;

The House on the Beach; and The Case of General Ople and Lady Camper. By George Meredith, author of "Diana of the Crossways," "Lord Ormont and His Aminta," etc. Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

Issue in Monthly Volumes of an entirely New Edition of

The Works of Henry Kingsley.

Edited by Clement K Shorter. Newly composed from type specially cast, and handsomely printed on good paper. Crown 8vo, cloth, per vol., $1.25.

The Early Volumes are:

1. GEOFFRY HAMLYN. [Ready.
2. RAVENSHOE. [Ready.
3. THE HILLYARS AND THE BURTONS. [Ready December 5th.

A Lost Ideal.

By Annie S. Swan, author of "Aldersyde," "Carlowrie," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

On the Cars and Off.

Being the Journal of a Pilgrimage along the Queen's Highway to the East, from Halifax, in Nova Scotia, to Victoria, in Vancouver's Island. By Douglas Sladen, author of "The Japs at Home," etc. Profusely and beautifully illustrated with collotype pictures of Canadian scenery, and about 80 cuts in the text. Medium 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

The Land of Idols;

Or, Talks with Young People About India. By Rev. John J. Pool. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

"A very useful and interesting volume. Capitally illustrated."—The Independent.

An entirely New Work by the Late G. T. Bettany, M.A., B.Sc.

A Popular History of the Reformation and Modern Protestantism.

By G. T. Bettany, M. A., B. Sc., author of "The World's Religions," "The World's Inhabitants," etc. With about 400 illustrations. Medium 8vo, cloth, gilt, $2.00.

New Novel by a New Novelist.

A Sunless Heart.

12mo, cloth, $1.25.

"Its intrinsic merit, its originality and its pathos, its distinctively woman's outlook on life, and the singular glow and genius of its author."—Mr. W. T. Stead, in The Review of Reviews.

Jewel Mysteries I Have Known.

By Max Pemberton, author of "The Iron Pirate," etc. With about 50 illustrations by R. Caton Woodville and Fred Barnard. Demy 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

An entirely New and Useful Cookery Book.

The Profession of Cookery,

From a French Point of View. With some Economical Practices peculiar to the Nation. By Lucy H. Yates, Lecturer to the International Horticultural Exhibition Committee. Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.00.

The Chairman's Guide and Secretary's Companion.

By Henry Frith, author of "Speeches and Toasts, and How to Make Them," etc. 12mo, cloth, 40 cents.

War in Korea.

A Brief Treatise upon the Campaign now in Progress, its Origin and Probable Results. By J. Morris (long resident in the East), author of "Kotaka, a Samarai's Daughter," etc. With map and illustrations. 12mo, paper, 40 cents.

WARD, LOCK & BOWDEN, Limited,

LONDON. { NEW YORK. 15 East 12th Street. } MELBOURNE.

NEW BOOKS

Issued by the

Presbyterian Board of Publication and Sabbath-School Work.

Ragweed

A West-World Story. By Julia MacNair Wright. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

This book tells, in the author's usually attractive style, how five children were reclaimed from the degrading influence of a family of "Wagon-Tramps" or "Movers."

Jacob's Heiress

By Annette L. Noble. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

An historical story, in which the career of the characters is followed through the stirring times of the persecutions of the Protestants in Holland and France during the sixteenth century.

Wedded Life

By J. R. Miller, D. D. New edition. Square 12mo, 112 pages, handsomely bound in white cloth, gilt edges, in neat box, $1.00.

Bunyan Characters

Lectures delivered in St. George's Free Church, Edinburgh. By Alexander Whyte, D. D.

First Series. 12mo, $1.00. Second Series. 12mo, $1.00.

The Westminster Question Book.

Price $12.00 a hundred, net. By mail, 15 cents a copy. A complete manual for the lessons of 1895.

While Shepherds Watched.

An Exercise for Christmas Days, arranged by J. R. Miller, D. D. 16 pages, 5 cents a copy; $4.00 per hundred.

Consisting of Music, Scripture Readings, Conversations, and Recitations.

The Creed, The Lord's Prayer, The Ten Commandments

A beautiful folded card, printed in colors. Price, 5 cents each; $4.00 per hundred.

STANDARD EDITIONS.

The Pilgrim's Progress

By John Bunyan. With the author's marginal notes. 12mo, cloth, 341 pages, 75 cents.

The Holy War.

By John Bunyan. With the author's marginal notes. 12mo, cloth, 312 pages, 75 cents.

The type is clear and beautiful. The form of the book is handy for reading.

THE BEST BOOKS ON KOREA

Korea, Within and Without

By Wm. Elliot Griffis, D. D. 16mo, cloth, $1.15.

There is no better authority on Korea than Dr. Griffis, who from intimate personal knowledge of the country has written a number of valuable books, of which this is one of the best.

Korea, From Its Capital

By Rev. W. G. W. Gilmore, A. M. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

This is one of the most recent works published on Korea The volume treats of the country, the government, the language, the people, dress, women, amenities, religion, resources, etc.

Address orders to

JOHN H. SCRIBNER, Business Supt.,
1334 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia,

Or any of the Depositories or Booksellers representing the Board.

SENT FREE Our 16th Annual Holiday Catalogue–1894-95–of Choice Books, suitable for presentation or for the library, at 25 to 50 per cent. reduction from publishers' prices. Send your address now and have a copy mailed to you free.

ESTES & LAURIAT, Boston.

W. F. DRAPER, ANDOVER, MASS.,

Offers during November and December Buttmann's and Winer's New Testament Greek Grammars at greatly reduced—about half—prices. Winer at $2.00, Buttmann at $1.50. Remit as above.

FRANK T. SABIN'S Catalogue of Fine and Rare Books, Engravings, Autographs, etc. (52 pp.), is NOW READY, and will be sent on application.

118 SHAFTESBURY AVE., LONDON, W.

THE

Atlantic Monthly

For 1895.

The Leading Serial for 1895

will be

A Singular Life,

by

Mrs. Elizabeth Stuart Phelps-Ward, who presents an ideal of character in her hero which will be sure to command attention.

SHORT STORIES.

Early issues in 1895 will contain a two-part story by Mrs. Wiggin, a single-number story of unusual charm by Miss Jewett, and another, Joint Owners in Spain, by Miss Alice Brown, a new author of promise.

Other contributors will be

Mrs. Catherwood, Eliza Orne White, Lafcadio Hearn, Gilbert Parker, Robert W. Herrick, Kate Chopin, G. Pitre, Joel Chandler Harris, Grace Howard Peirce.

During 1895 The Atlantic will follow in the main the lines laid down in previous years.

An effort will be made to direct attention to subjects which can be grouped as follows:

Studies in Great Literature.
New Figures in Literature and Art.
International Relations of the United States.
Political History.
Non-Partisan Politics.
Education, and Discussion of Public Affairs.

An Announcement of Importance.

DR. JOHN FISKE

will furnish a Series of Historical Papers entitled

Virginia and her Neighbors.

Mr. Fiske is too widely known to need any introduction to the readers of The Atlantic. His many admirers will be particularly interested in this announcement of another of his important contributions to the history of our country.

The Issue of January, 1895,

will contain

The Survival of the American Spirit.

An article of unusual interest touching upon the rise of the A. P. A.

The two closing issues of 1894 will be of unusual interest. They will contain a story complete in two parts, called

THE TRUMPETER,

By MARY HALLOCK FOOTE.

A Story of the Coxey Troubles in the Northwest.

On all paid-up subscriptions received before December 20, we will mail the November and December issues without charge.

TERMS: $4 00 a year in advance, postage free; 35 cents a number. With new life-size portrait of Whittier, Lowell, Hawthorne, Emerson, Longfellow, Bryant or Holmes, $5.00; each additional Portrait, $1.00.

Postal Notes and Money are at the risk of the sender, and, therefore, remittances should be made by money-order, draft, or registered letter, to

Houghton, Mifflin & Company,
4 Park Street, Boston, Mass.

ANSON D. F. RANDOLPH & CO. (INC.),

Publishers, Retail Booksellers, Stationers, Importers.

PICTURES OF SWEDISH LIFE; or, Svea and Her Children.

By Mrs. WOODS BAKER. With 24 full-page and numerous Text Illustrations. 410 pages. 8vo. Cloth ornamental, $3.75.

The author, an American woman, has lived for many years in Sweden, and has had unusual advantages in the preparation of this volume. Her object has been to portray the land and life of its people of today, on the background of an historic setting. The material is well arranged and graphically presented. We know of no other volume in which the general reader can find so comprehensive a view of Sweden, or one more brightly and fully shown. The illustrations are of a kind that "illustrate."

IN CAIRO AND JERUSALEM.

An Eastern Note-book. By MARY THORN CARPENTER, author of "A Girl's Winter in India." 12mo. Cloth, illustrated, $1.50.

Those who recall "A Girl's Winter in India" will welcome this new volume by the same author. In her wanderings in old Cairo and the regions roundabout, and thence to Joffa and Jerusalem, she saw with an observing woman's eye some things which many a traveler overlooks, and has given us a series of impressionist pictures every way pleasing and instructive.

Also a new edition of A Girl's Winter in India. 12mo, fully illustrated. Cloth ornamental, $1.50. The two volumes in a box, $2.50.

THE ROYAL ROAD; or, Taking Him at His Word.

By MARION HARLAND. 12mo, 400 pages, cloth, $1.50.

This volume may be considered as a companion to Mrs. Prentiss' "Stepping Heavenward," in singleness of purpose and in directness of treatment.

"An intensely interesting and profitable story. It has for its theme to take God at His word in living day by day and trust Him entirely for the morrow. That this is the only Royal Road to happiness is proven from Scripture and daily experience. The story, pathetic and humorous, and altogether helpful, is but the tale of the working out of this principle in the everyday experience of joy and sorrow, adversity and prosperity. It is a book to make Christians think and help them to grow."

GYPSYING BEYOND THE SEA.

From English Fields to Salerno Shores. By WILLIAM BEMENT LENT. Two volumes. 16mo. With 18 full-page photogravure Illustrations. Daintily bound in ornamental cloth, gilt sides, in a box, $4.00 per set. Also in cloth, plain stamping, $3.00.

The author traveled in a leisurely way through England, into Wales, Scotland, Germany and Switzerland, and thence passed on through Holland, France and Russia, to roam finally through Italy. In his record of these wanderings he shows himself a careful and thoughtful observer, who studies Nature and art and "things" more than people. He has a sympathetic method in his sight, and a rare faculty of transferring to the reader a picture of what he saw and what he did. The whole work is in sharp contrast to the common run of modern books of travel. The illustrations add to the charm of the book.

BETWEEN THE LIGHTS.

By FANNY B. BATES. Thoughts for the Quiet Hour. A new and cheaper edition. 16mo, ornamental cloth, $1.25; cloth, gilt edges, $1.75.

The large and continued success of this work has led the publishers to issue the present edition at a reduced price. It is a religious day-book of extraordinary quality. . . . The character of the utterances chosen is in a measure indicated by the title of the book. It is that of trust, courage, hope, in repose on the unshakable sustainment of God's love.

This is the cheapest and best of all the books of this character.

AT DAWN OF DAY.

Thoughts for the Morning Hour. By JEANIE A. BATES GREENOUGH. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.75; white cloth, full gilt, with jacket, $2.50.

A companion volume to "Between the Lights," having all the special features of that remarkable book.

THE LIFE OF DANIEL DE FOE.

By THOMAS WRIGHT, author of "The Life of William Cowper." With 4 Portraits and 23 other Illustrations. 8vo. Cloth, $3.75. An important edition. The book is published in England at one guinea.

"With the personality of no eminent man of letters of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries is the public less familiar than that of Daniel De Foe. . . . Biographers have been so occupied in gathering together facts concerning his writings, especially those of the obscurer kind, and trying to discover fresh writings, and have devoted so much space to the consideration of his position as a politician, that the man himself and his inner life have been almost lost sight of. . . . Another feature of this work is my venturing to submit what I believe to be the true key to 'Robinson Crusoe.'"—Extract from Preface.

"A noble biography."—Literary World, London.

JESUS THE MESSIAH.

By ALFRED EDERSHEIM, M. A. A new edition with 24 full-page Illustrations from the well-known designs by Hoffman. 12mo, $1.75. This is an abridgment of the author's larger work, designed for the general reader. There is no better work on the subject.

BEYOND THE VEIL.

"Now we see through a mirror darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I have been known." By G. B. WILLCOX. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

The eternal home, in the author's opinion, has been too much regarded as a sort of celestial monastery, in which two or three occupations, culled from the whole range of our earthly life, have been supposed to be those exclusively of the redeemed. . . . "Beyond the Veil" is an attempt to convey a view of the celestial life, in which occupations "secular" as well as "religious" are all alike pervaded and inspired by the love to God and His creatures which exalts the society above.

Send for a copy of Randolph & Co.'s complete catalogue.

ANSON D. F. RANDOLPH & CO. (Inc.), 182 Fifth Ave., New York.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by the publisher.

LANGUAGES MASTERED IN 10 WEEKS.

Part I. (3 Lessons), either language, sent for 25c.

MEISTERSCHAFT BUREAU, Boston, Mass.

FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH, ITALIAN.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.

Send your lists of wants to

N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston

Large Stock of Old English and American Books.

History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address

Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

Noah Farnham Morrison,

SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,

877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.

Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

Fragility sometimes blossoms in the strangest places! The daintiest of book-making has commonly come from centers like Paris, London or New York; but from the town of Portland, Me., there have recently been issued, under the title of "The Bibelot Series," some little paper-covered volumes of poetry which are as luxurious and artistic as anything that hails from France or England. Mr. T. B. Mosher is the publisher of these bits of clever workmanship.—New York Tribune, Dec. 31, 1893.

LIMITED EDITIONS

ISSUED BY

THOMAS B. MOSHER,

PORTLAND, MAINE.

THE BIBELOT SERIES.

The BIBELOT SERIES is modeled on an old style format, narrow 8vo, and beautifully printed in italic on Van Gelder's hand-made paper, uncut edges; done up in flexible Japan vellum, with outside wrappers and dainty gold seals. Each issue has besides an original cover design and is strictly limited to 725 copies.

PRICE PER VOLUME, $1.00 NET.

The Two New Volumes:

III. Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam

Rendered into English verse by EDWARD FITZGERALD, with a List of Editions and Versions in English.

IV. Felise.

A book of Lyrics chosen from the earlier poetical works of ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.

The Previous Issues are:

I. Songs of Adieu.

A little book of Finalé and Farewell, chosen from recent English lyrics not generally known.

II. Old World Lyrics.

A little book of Translations from VILLON, DU BELLAY, RONSARD and later French poets.

THE ENGLISH REPRINT SERIES.

THE EDITION IS AS FOLLOWS:

400 Small Paper copies on Van Gelder's Hand-made Paper done up in Japan vellum wrappers, uncut edges, numbered 1 to 400.

40 Large Paper copies (Post 4to), uncut edges, numbered 1 to 40.

10 Large Paper copies on Japan vellum, numbered 1 to 10, signed by publisher.

No more copies will be printed.

The New Volume:

III. Robert Bridges.

THE GROWTH OF LOVE, WITH A BRIEF AND GENERAL CONSIDERATION BY LIONEL JOHNSON.

Small Paper, $1.50 net; Large Paper, $5.00 net; Japan vellum, all sold.

Previous Issues:

I. George Meredith.

MODERN LOVE, WITH FOREWORD BY E. CAVAZZA.

Small Paper, $2.50 net; Large Paper, $7.50 net; Japan vellum, all sold.

II. James Thomson.

THE CITY OF DREADFUL NIGHT, WITH INTRODUCTION BY E. CAVAZZA.

Small Paper, $2.00 net; Large Paper, $7.50 net; Japan vellum, $12.50 net.

Bookbuyers are requested to send for my New List of Limited Editions, a choice little specimen of typework and paper.

THOMAS B. MOSHER, 37 Exchange St., Portland, Me.

G. P. Putnam's Sons,

27 and 29 West 23d St., New York.

(RETAIL DEPARTMENT.)

B O O K S

SEND FOR LIST OF

100

Standard Books

(Single volumes and small sets, in every department of literature),

In special leather bindings, suitable for dainty presents to cultivated people, at moderate cost.

ALSO

Catalogue (No. XI.) of Choice

English Books

(Including some rare sets and beautiful illustrated volumes), in rich bindings, for private libraries and for presents.

HUNT & EATON'S NEW BOOKS.

Travels in Three Continents.
By James M. Buckley, D.D. Fully illustrated. 8vo, cloth, gilt top. $3.50.

Up the Susquehanna.
By Hiles C. Pardoe. Fully illustrated. 12mo, cloth. $1.00.

Land of the Veda.
By William Butler, D.D. New Edition. Fully illustrated. 8vo, cloth. $2.00.

Nine Blessings.
By Mary Harriott Norris. 12mo, cloth. 75 cents.

Threescore Years and Beyond.
By W. H. De Puy, D.D. New Edition. Fully illustrated. 8vo, cloth. $1.75.

Wesley's Letters to Young Women.
Edited by Frank G. Porter. 16mo, cloth, 75 cents.

Thoughts on God and Man.
Selected from the works of Frederick W. Robertson of "Brighton." Edited by Joseph B. Burroughs, M.D. With Portrait. 16mo, cloth. $1.00.

The Kindergarten of the Church.
By Mrs. Mary J. Chisholm Foster. 12mo, cloth. $1.00.

Christianity and the Christ.
A study of Christian Evidences. By Bradford Paul Raymond. 12mo, cloth. 85 cents.

Exhaustive Concordance of the Bible.
Tracing Every Word of the Text of the Common English Version of the Canonical Books, and Every Occurrence of Each Word in Regular Order: together with a Comparative Concordance to the Authorized and Revised Versions, including the American Variations; also Brief Dictionaries of the Hebrew and Greek Words of the Original, with references to the English Words. By James Strong, S.T.D., LL.D. One volume, quarto, 1809 pages, cloth, red edges, $6.00, net; half russia, cloth sides, $8.00, net; half turkey morocco, extra strong, $10.00, net.

Thoughts for the Thoughtful.
Selected and edited by Adelaide S. Seaverns. 16mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.00; white and gold, boxed, $1.25; flexible morocco, solid red under gold edges, boxed, $3.00.

Home Talks About the Word.
For Mothers and Children. By Emily Huntington Miller. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.00.

Illustrative Notes, 1895.
A Guide to the Study of the Sunday-School Lessons. By Jesse Lyman Hurlbut and Robert Remington Doherty. Fully illustrated. 8vo, cloth, $1.25.

Sketches of Mexico in Prehistoric, Primitive, Colonial, and Modern Times.
By John W. Butler, D.D. 12mo, cloth. $1.00.

Three of Us: Cossack, Barney, Rex.
By Mrs. Izora C. Chandler. Fully illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top. $2.00.

Martha's Mistakes.
By Mrs. M. E. Bradley. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth. $1.25.

The Raid from Beauséjour, and How the Carter Boys Lifted the Mortgage.
By Charles G. D. Roberts. Illustrated. Cloth. $1.00.

Sarah Dakota.
By Mary E. Q. Brush. Illustrated. 12mo cloth. $1.00.

Three Times and Out.
By Mary Lowe Dickinson. Fully illustrated. 12mo, cloth. 75 cents.

For the Sake o' the Siller.
By Maggie Swan. Illustrated 12mo, cloth. 85 cents.

Oowikapun.
By Egerton R. Young. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth. $1.00.

Gala Day Books.
Four volumes. By Francis Isabel Currie. Fully illustrated. 12mo, cloth, in box. $1.50.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent prepaid in the United States on receipt of price by

HUNT & EATON,

New York. Boston. Pittsburg. Detroit. San Francisco.

DAINTY DEVOTIONAL BOOKS

⁂ Mailed prepaid on receipt of price.

JESUS ONLY. Daily Texts. 12 illustrations. Cloth gilt, 75 cents; calf, $1.00.

DAILY FOOD. 12 illustrations. Cloth gilt, 75 cents; calf, $1.00.

CLARKE'S SCRIPTURE PROMISES. Cloth, 60 cents; calf, $1.00.

DAILY LIGHT. Morning Hour. Calf, $1.00.
DAILY LIGHT. Evening Hour. Calf, $1.00.
Choice Scriptural readings.

ILLUSTRATED BOOKS.

By Louise Seymour Houghton.

THE BIBLE IN PICTURE AND STORY. 269 illustrations. Quarto. Cloth, $1.25; gilt. $1.75.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST IN PICTURE AND STORY. 190 illustrations. $1 50; gilt, $2.00.

FROM OLIVET TO PATMOS IN PICTURE AND STORY. 108 illustrations. $1.50; gilt, $2.00.

BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS. 127 illustrations. Quarto. $1.50; gilt, $2.00.
Do. 12mo, with Chapman's illustrations, large type, $1.
Do. 16mo, with illustrations, 50 cents.

NEW BOOKS.

THE TRIAL AND DEATH OF JESUS CHRIST. By Rev. Jas. Stalker, D.D. 12mo, $1.50.

PATHS AND BY-PATHS. By Mrs. M. A. Pickford. 352 pp. 12mo, 5 illustrations, $1.25.

WON BY LOVE. By Mrs. S. S. Wood. 12mo, 252 pp. 4 illustrations. $1.00.

RACHEL'S FARM. By Miss A. L. Noble. 223 pp. 12mo, 4 illustrations, $1.00.

THE STARRY SKIES. By Agnes Giberne. Profusely illustrated. 234 pp. 12mo, $1.00.

COSEY CORNER STORIES. By A. L. Noble and E. A. Hunter. 4to. Colored covers. 12 full-page cuts in each. 4 vols. in a box, $1.00; separately, 25 cents.
Fido and His Friends. Favorite Pets.
Between-Times Stories. Fireside Stories.

With a large variety of attractive and beautifully illustrated books suitable for gifts at Christmas festivals.

Send for our Holiday Catalogue.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY,

10 EAST 23d STREET, NEW YORK.

Boston, 54 Bromfield St.
Rochester, 93 State St.
Cincinnati, 176 Elm St.
Philadelphia, 1512 Chestnut St.
Chicago, 211, 213 Wabash Ave.
San Francisco, 735 Market St.

History for Ready Reference

AND

TOPICAL READING,

By J. N. LARNED,

Ex-President American Library Association.

"Instead of a dry and colorless encyclopedic abstract it gives us the freshness and animation of the best writers in their own words; the quintessence of an extensive literature."—George Parsons Lathrop.

"It supplies what no encyclopedia known to me can give."—Mellen Chamberlain.

"I believe it will prove one of the most valuable reference books in existence."—John Fiske.

"Every paragraph in this great work was prepared by a master hand."—Dr. William Rice, Librarian, Springfield, Mass.

PUBLISHED BY THE

C. A. NICHOLS CO., Springfield, Mass.,

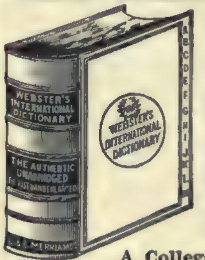
Sold only by Subscription. Agents Wanted.

CHARLES JACOBUS, Gen'l Agent,

36 Bromfield Street.

The Best Christmas Gift

or the best addition to one's own library is
WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY



WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY
THE AUTHENTIC UNABRIDGED
MERRIAM
WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY
A B C D E F G H I J K L

Successor of the "Unabridged."

Standard of the U. S. Gov't Printing Office, the U.S. Supreme Court and of nearly all the School books.

Warmly commended by every State Superintendent of Schools, and thousands of other Educators.

A College President says: "For ease with which the eye finds the word "sought, for accuracy of definition, for "effective methods in indicating pronun-"ciation, for terse yet comprehensive state-"ments of facts, and for practical use as a "working dictionary, 'Webster's Interna-"tional' excels any other single volume."

G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Publishers, Springfield, Mass., U. S. A.

Send for free pamphlet containing specimen pages.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:
Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

ADVERTISING RATES:
First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

A NEW BOOK OF POEMS BY RILEY

ARMAZINDY

(Hoosier Airs and Others.)

By JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY

UNIFORM WITH HIS OTHER VOLUMES
12mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

In Holiday Edition
Square 12mo, Buckram, with Photogravures, net, $2.00.

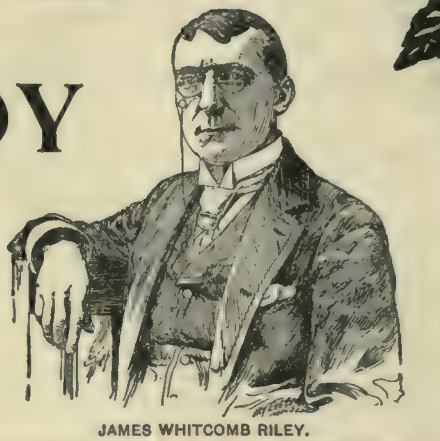
MR. RILEY'S OTHER BOOKS

Neghborly Poems
Sketches in Prose
Afterwhiles
Pipes o' Pan
Rhymes of Childhood
The Flying Islands of the Night
Green Fields and Running Brooks

Above seven volumes in uniform bindings. Sold separately or in sets, per vol.: 12mo, cloth, $1.25; half calf, $2.50; full morocco, $5.00.

Old Fashioned Roses
English Edition,
16mo, cloth, $1.75.

An Old Sweetheart of Mine
With Color Plates,
Cloth, full gilt, $2.50.



JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY.

I have felt more interest in the Hoosier poet's work of late than in almost anything else which has appeared in a literary way. * * * * This delineator of lowly humanity, who sings with so much fervor, pathos, humor and grace, and who has done things, perhaps, which will outlast the more laborious work of some of the older and more pretentious poets.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

Published by THE BOWEN-MERRILL CO., Indianapolis and Kansas City.
For sale by all booksellers, or sent by the publishers, postage prepaid, to any part of the U. S., Canada or Mexico, on receipt of the price.

Merry Christmas
From R. Hollings & Co Boston

The Gift of the Year
IS A
HOLLINGS LAMP.

XMAS LAMPS
IN

Dresden China, Old Delft, Baccarat Glass and China, Terra Cotta, Wrought Iron, Antique and Bright Silver, Fine Japanese Bronze, Old Brass, Ormolu, Cut Glass, and Onyx.

FINE FRENCH GLOBES and SHADES TO MATCH.

Exclusive Styles. Moderate Prices.

R. Hollings & Co.,
Importers and Manufacturers
523-525 Washington Street, Boston

F

Before you think of

U

buying furs this fall

R

send for Lamson & Hubbard's new catalogue.

S

Lamson & Hubbard,
90 and 92 Bedford St.,
BOSTON.
Leading Furriers.

The finest line of Furs in Boston to select from.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS
OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - - -	$16,014,000.00
Liabilities, -	$13,808,000.00
Surplus, - -	$2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT,
OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'

Public Library,

THE LITERARY WORLD

FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 Somerset Street
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy

BOSTON 15 DECEMBER 1894 Vol. XXV No. 25 Whole No. 521

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & COMPANY.

Oliver Wendell Holmes.

The Last Leaf. Popular Holiday Edition. Finely illustrated. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

Dorothy Q., etc. Illustrated by Howard Pyle. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

The One-Hoss Shay, etc. Illustrated by Howard Pyle. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

The Oliver Wendell Holmes Year Book. Selections from Dr. Holmes's Prose and Poetry for Every Day of the Year. With a fine portrait. Attractively bound. 16mo, $1.00.

The Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table. With two portraits and 60 Illustrations by Howard Pyle. 2 vols., crown 8vo, $5.00; half calf, extra, gilt top, $8.50; half levant, $9.00; full polished calf, $10.00, net.

Complete Works. Riverside Edition. With Portraits, Notes by Dr. Holmes, Indexes, etc. In 13 beautiful volumes, crown 8vo. Price $1 50 a volume. The set, cloth, gilt top, $19.50; half calf, $35.75; half calf, gilt top, $39.00; half levant, $52.00.

Nathaniel Hawthorne.

The Marble Faun. Beautifully illustrated with 50 Photogravures. With a steel portrait of Hawthorne. 2 vols. 8vo, Roman binding, gilt top, in cloth box, $6.00; in special style of full polished calf, $12.00, net; full vellum, $12.00, net.

Our Old Home. Illustrated with 30 Photogravures of English scenery, portraits, etc., and with a portrait of Hawthorne etched by Schoff. 2 vols. 16mo, silk, gilt top, $4 00; half calf, $7.00; polished calf, $9.00, net.

The Scarlet Letter. With Illustrations in photogravure by F. O. C. Darley. 8vo, Roman binding, gilt top, $2.00. Large-paper Edition. 8vo, vellum, $7.50, net.

The Same. Twelve Compositions in Outline. By F. O. C. Darley. Oblong folio, $10.00.

The Same. Illustrated by Mary Hallock Foote. With portrait. 8vo, full gilt, $3.00; levant, $7.50.

A Wonder-Book for Girls and Boys. Illustrated in color by Walter Crane. Containing 20 exquisite full-page pictures in color, and about 40 headpieces, tailpieces and initials, also in color. Large 8vo, $3.00.

Harriet Beecher Stowe.

Uncle Tom's Cabin. With 16 full-page Illustrations and over 120 text Illustrations by E. W. Kemble. 2 vols. 16mo, gilt top, $4.00.

Robert Browning.

Complete Poetical Works. Riverside Edition. In six handsome volumes, crown octavo, gilt top. Price of the set, in cloth, $10.00.

The only authorized American Edition, complete, including Mr. Browning's latest revisions.

Browning Guide Book. By G. W. Cooke. Furnishing Introductions and Notes to all of Browning's Poems. Price $2.00. The set of Browning, with the Browning Guide Book, 7 volumes in a box, $11.50.

Browning's Life. Authorized Edition. By Mrs. Sutherland Orr. With a Portrait and View of Browning's Study. Uniform with Browning's Works. 2 volumes. $3 00.

Browning's Works, Browning Guide Book, and Mrs. Orr's Life of Browning. 9 volumes, in box, $14.50.

Thomas Bailey Aldrich.

Unguarded Gates, and Other Poems. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1.25. A beautiful book of Mr. Aldrich's latest perfect poetry.

The Story of a Bad Boy. Holiday Edition. With numerous Illustrations by A. B. Frost. Crown octavo, $2 00.

Mrs. Deland.

Philip and His Wife. Fourth Edition of this powerful novel. 16mo, $1 25.

The Old Garden, and Other Verses. With over 100 exquisite Illustrations in color by Wabter Crane. Beautifully printed and bound. Crown 8vo, $4.00.

W. D. Howells.

Venetian Life. Illustrated with aquatints from Original Water Colors by Childe Hassam, F. Hopkinson Smith and others. 2 vols., 12mo, bound from Mrs. Whitman's designs, in white and gold, with gilt slip covers, $5.00; half calf, $9.00; full polished calf, $10.00, net.

Their Wedding Journey. With over 80 Illustrations by Clifford Carleton. Crown 8vo, $3.00.

F. Hopkinson Smith.

Well-Worn Roads of Spain, Holland and Italy. Containing 16 full-page Phototype reproductions of water-color drawings and many smaller pen-and-ink sketches. Folio, gilt top, $15.00.

Old Lines in New Black and White. Twelve full-page Illustrations of lines from the Poems of Holmes, Lowell and Whittier, reproduced by Phototype from designs in charcoal. Oblong folio, or in portfolio, $12 00.

John G. Whittier.

Life and Letters. A work of great interest, by Samuel T. Pickard, with 7 etched portraits and views. 2 vols., crown 8vo, gilt top, $4.00.

Complete Poetical Works. Cambridge Edition. With a Biographical Sketch, Notes, Index to Titles and First Lines, a Portrait and an Engraving of Whittier's Amesbury home. Uniform with the Cambridge Longfellow. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $2.00; half calf, gilt top, $3.50; tree calf or full levant, $5.50.

Poetical Works. Handy Volume Edition. In four beautiful volumes, large type, opaque paper, tasteful binding. With four portraits and a view of Whittier's Oak Knoll home. Uniform with the Handy Volume Longfellow. 4 vols., 16mo, $5.00; half calf, extra, gilt top, $9.75; full morocco, flexible, in fine leather box, $9.75; full calf, flexible, $12.75.

At Sundown. With a portrait and 8 Photogravures. Very tastefully bound, from designs by Mrs. Whitman. 16mo, gilt top, $1.50.

Snow-Bound. With 8 Photogravures by E. H. Garrett, and portrait. 16mo, gilt top, $1.50.

Japanese Paper Edition. With text and illustrations printed on Japanese paper. 8vo, full vellum, $5.00, net.

Complete Works. Riverside Edition. With Notes by Mr. Whittier, Indexes and five portraits. In 7 beautiful volumes, crown 8vo. $1.50 each; the set, cloth, gilt top, $10.50; half calf, $19.25; half calf, gilt top, $20.50; half levant, $28 00.

H. W. Longfellow.

The Song of Hiawatha. With 22 full-page Photogravures, and about 400 text Illustrations by Frederick Remington. With fine portrait of Longfellow. Bound in full buckskin from designs by Mrs. Whitman. 8vo, gilt top, $6.00.

Evangeline. With photogravure reproductions of sixteen designs by F. O. C. Darley. Handsomely bound. 8vo, gilt top, $2.00.

The Same. With 16 Illustrations by F. O. C. Darley. Folio, unique binding, in box, $10.00.

Phototype Edition. With Darley's Illustrations, reproduced in phototype. Quarto, gilt top, $7.50.

The Hanging of the Crane. Illustrated by Mary Hallock Foote. 8vo, flexible leather, $2.00; morocco or tree calf, $7.50.

Charles Dudley Warner.

In the Levant. With a portrait of Mr. Warner, and about 25 full-page Photogravures. Bound from designs by Mrs. Whitman. 2 vols. 8vo, gilt top, $5.00.

Sold by Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & COMPANY, BOSTON.

NEW BOOKS.

The Women of Shakespeare.

By LOUIS LEWES, Ph. D. Translated from the German by Helen Zimmern. Octavo, cloth extra, $2.50.

The work comprises: 1. A study of the characteristics of the age in which Shakespeare wrote. 2. A brief description of the rise and development of dramatic poetry prior to Shakespeare's appearance. 3. A brief account of the poet's life. 4. The English stage at the time of Shakespeare. 5. The women in the narrative poems. 6. The women in the first, second and third period of the Plays. 7. The women in the Tragedies. 8. The great Tragedies. 9. The mixed poems.

"An excellent piece of analysis and characterization, presented in charming style. . . . Most attractive reading."—London Spectator.

Lorenzo Lotto.

An Essay in Constructive Art Criticism. By BERNHARD BERENSON. With thirty full-page heliotype illustrations from the masterpieces of LOTTO and his master, ALVISE VIVARINI. Octavo, cloth extra, $3.50.

For careful students of Italian Renaissance painting, for all such as are in sympathy with the critical school, with Morelli and with Frizzoni, this volume will prove of lasting importance, while for the amateur and the idler it will commend itself for its keen sympathy with the Renaissance epoch and for its many admirable (and heretofore inaccessible) illustrations.

Tintoretto.

The Life and Genius of JACOPO ROBUSTI, called TINTORETTO, by FRANK P. STEARNS. 12mo, with heliotype illustrations, $2.25.

"A careful, sympathetic biography . . . which does full justice to the man and to the artist and to the almost turbulent life which animates his pictures."—N. Y. Tribune.

Fly Leaves.

Verses by CHARLES STUART CALVERLEY. 16mo, full leather, uncut edges, gilt top (in box), $1.50.

Anybody who has read (in a foreign edition) "In the Gloaming," "First Love," "Beer," "On a Distant Prospect (of making a fortune)," "The Schoolmaster," and all those other memorable verses of the genial, witty, kindly, inimitable Calverley, will be glad, we think, to meet with them again in this taking American edition.

The Wind in the Clearing.

Poems by ROBERT CAMERON ROGERS. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Mr. Richard Henry Stoddard, in the Mail and Express, says: "They (the poems) are from a hand that is not likely to remain unknown to us long. No other young poet whose name is known to us, certainly none of American growth, could have written some of these classical poems. They are valuable additions to our scanty store of genuine and noble classical verse."

Story of the Crusades.

By T. S. ARCHER and C. L. KINGSFORD. (No. 44 of the "Story of the Nations" Series.) Fully illustrated with maps and plans. 12mo, cloth, $1.50; half leather, gilt top, $1.75.

"The History of the Crusades" is, of course, not a "story of a new nation," but the narrative, nevertheless, belongs very properly to a series of national histories, because the events described affected directly the history of every nation of Europe, while the record is also a part of the history of Christianity.

Descriptive prospectus of the "Story of the Nations" and the "Heroes of the Nations," and quarterly "Notes," giving full descriptions of the season's publications, sent on application.

G. P. Putnam's Sons
NEW YORK AND LONDON.

GINN & COMPANY.

The Best Histories.

A History of Greece. By P. V. N. MYERS, Professor of History, University of Cincinnati. In Press.

A General History. By P. V. N. MYERS, Professor of History, University of Cincinnati. Half leather, 759 pages, $1.65.

The Eastern Nations and Greece. (Part I. of Myers's and of Myers and Allen's Ancient History.) By P. V. N. MYERS, Professor of History, University of Cincinnati. 369 pages. Cloth, $1.10.

A History of Rome. (Part II. of Myers's Ancient History.) By P. V. N. MYERS, Professor of History, University of Cincinnati. 230 pages. Cloth, $1.10.

A Short History of the Roman People. (Part II. of Myers and Allen's Ancient History.) By WILLIAM F. ALLEN, late Professor of History, University of Wisconsin. 370 pages. Cloth, $1.10.

Myers's Ancient History. (Part I. is Myers's Ancient Nations and Greece. Part II. is Myers's Rome.) Half morocco. 617 pages. Illustrated, $1.65.

Myers and Allen's Ancient History. (Part I. is Myers's Eastern Nations and Greece. Part II. is Allen's Short History of the Roman People.) Half morocco. 763 pages, $1.65.

Outlines of Mediæval and Modern History. By P. V. N. MYERS, Professor of History, University of Cincinnati. Half morocco, 740 pages, $1.65.

Mediæval Europe: 800 to 1300 A. D. By EPHRAIM EMERTON, Professor of History in Harvard University. 12mo. Cloth. Maps and Illustrations. 607 pages. $1.65.

Introduction to the Study of the Middle Ages. By EPHRAIM EMERTON, Professor of History in Harvard University. 268 pages. $1.25.

The Leading Facts of American History. By D. H. MONTGOMERY. Half morocco. 359 pages. $1.15.

The Leading Facts of English History. By D. H. MONTGOMERY. New Edition, rewritten and enlarged. Cloth. 445 pages. $1.25.

The Leading Facts of French History. By D. H. MONTGOMERY. Cloth. 321 pages. $1.25.

The above books may be ordered of any bookseller, or will be sent, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States or Canada, on receipt of price. Descriptive Circulars of our books and a copy of our High School and College Catalogue sent free to any address.

GINN & CO., Publishers, Boston, New York, Chicago.

AHEAD OF ALL MAGAZINES this country has seen.—Albany Argus.

IN THE

NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW

Are always found

The Right Topics, By the Right Men, At the Right Time

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW is recognized on both sides of the Atlantic as the foremost Review in the English language, and no expenditure is spared in maintaining it in its unrivaled position.

The REVIEW is the mouthpiece of the men and women who know most about the great topics on which Americans require and desire to be informed from month to month. Its list of contributors forms a roll of the representative men and women of the age.

Subjects that concern the interests of receive constant and special attention. Among topics recently discussed are:

AMERICAN WOMEN

"Woman Suffrage in Practice"; "The Renaissance of Woman"; "Women in Politics"; "The New Aspect of the Woman Question" and "The Modern Girl," by the author of "The Heavenly Twins"; "The Future of Marriage"; "Evils of Early Marriages"; The Servant Girl of the Future"; "The Financial Dependence of Women"; "Trades-Unions for Women"; "The Lack of Good Servants"; "American Life and Physical Deterioration"; "Good and Bad Mothers"; "The Tyranny of the Kitchen"; "The Amateur Nurse"; Mark Twain's Defense of Harriet Shelley, etc.

A New Feature for 1895

The REVIEW will publish in 12 chapters, beginning with the January number, the Personal History of the Second Empire,

a historical work of unsurpassed importance, which will throw a flood of new light upon the chequered career of Napoleon III. and the influences which led to the collapse of his Empire in the gigantic struggle with United Germany under Wilhelm I. and his Iron Chancellor. It is as fascinating as a romance, being richly anecdotal and full of information drawn from sources hitherto inaccessible, presented in the graphic and vivacious style which "The Englishman in Paris," by the same author, has made familiar to thousands of readers.

50 Cents a Copy; $5.00 a Year

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW, 3 East 14th Street, New York

Noah Farnham Morrison,
SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,
877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.
Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc

BOOKS FOR THE HOLIDAY SEASON.

Colonial Days and Dames.

By ANNE HOLLINGSWORTH WHARTON, author of "Through Colonial Doorways." Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth extra, $1.25. Edition de Luxe, limited to the number of subscribers.

The extraordinary success of "Through Colonial Doorways" has caused the authoress to prepare another book on the same lines, which, like it, deals with colonial personages and incidents. The Edition de Luxe will be profusely illustrated by portraits and sketches, while the small paper edition has the necessary number of illustrations to make a delightful Christmas gift.

The Colonial Library.

COLONIAL DAYS AND DAMES.
THROUGH COLONIAL DOORWAYS.
Two volumes. 12mo. In box, $2.50.

The Birds About Us.

By CHARLES CONRAD ABBOTT, M. D., author of "Recent Rambles," "Travels in a Tree-Top," etc. Illustrated with upward of seventy-five Bird Portraits. 1 volume. 12mo. Cloth, $2.00.

For every lover of birds. It is written in a familiar and genial style, and is not burdened with technicalities, while being accurate in every particular.

Chambers's Concise Gazetteer of the World.

Topographical, Statistical, Historical. 1 volume. Crown 8vo. Uniform with Reader's Reference Library. Half morocco, $2.50.

This book does not claim to be exhaustive. Its aim has been to tell everything that may be reasonably wanted about every place likely to be looked for.

Liber Amoris.

By WILLIAM HAZLITT. Edition Limited to 400 for England and 100 for America. $6.00 net.

A newly printed edition containing numerous passages omitted in the editions of 1823. The volume will contain a fine reproduction of William Bewick's chalk drawing of William Hazlitt, a facsimile of a letter from Hazlitt to Rathmore, and one of Sarah Walker to Hazlitt (the only one known to exist).

Early English Ballads.

Chosen by R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON. Illustrated by W. Cubitt Cooke. Illustrated with about two hundred Illustrations. 4 volumes. 16mo. Cloth, $5.00; half calf or half morocco, $10.00.

The text of the Old Ballads has been carefully prepared from the original sources in each case, though the spelling is modernized so far as can be done without injuring the rhythm or accentuation. Brief historical and explanatory notes to many of the ballads are added to the Table of Contents, and the meanings of obsolete terms are explained in foot notes. Published in connection with Dent & Co.

The Sketch-Book.

By WASHINGTON IRVING. New Edition. Illustrated with Engravings on Wood, from Original Designs. 2 volumes. 8vo. Cloth extra, gilt top, $4.00; half calf or half morocco, $7.00.

The illustrations of this edition were made for the Artist Edition, the type is new, and the size is suitable for the library and the table, making the most desirable edition of this popular classic now published.

The Marquis de La Fayette in the War of the Revolution;

With some Account of the Attitude of France toward the War of Independence. By CHARLEMAGNE TOWER, Jr., LL. D. 2 volumes. Royal 8vo, cloth, gilt top, uncut, $8.00.

Henry of Navarre and the Religious Wars.

By EDWARD T. BLAIR. With fifty-five cuts in Text and four full-page Photogravures by Boussod, Valadon et Cie. Square 8vo, paper, $3.50; cloth, $4.00.

Around a Throne.

Catherine II., of Russia, her Collaborators, her Friends, and her Favorites. By K. WALISZEWSKI, author of "Romance of an Empress." 2 volumes. 8vo. Cloth, $7.50; half calf, $12.50.

History of the French Revolution.

By LOUIS ADOLPHE THIERS, ex-Prime Minister of France. Translated, with Notes and Illustrations from the most authentic sources, by Frederic Shoberl. New Edition, printed from new type, with forty-one Illustrations on Steel engraved by William Greatbatch. 5 volumes. 8vo. Cloth, $3.00 per volume; half morocco, $5.00 per volume.

This Edition will be uniform with the New Edition of Thiers's "History of the Consulate and the Empire of France," and will be published in monthly volumes, commencing September, 1894. Subscriptions will be received for complete sets only by all booksellers and the publishers.

History of the Consulate and the Empire of France.

By LOUIS ADOLPHE THIERS, ex-Prime Minister of France. Translated from the French, with the sanction of the author, by D. Forbes Campbell. An entirely New Edition, printed from new type and Illustrated with thirty-six Steel Plates printed from the French originals. Now complete in 12 octavo volumes, with thirty-six Steel Plates. Cloth, $36.00; half morocco, gilt top, $60.00.

The only good edition of the English translation has long been out of print, and the present publishers, in connection with an English house, have brought out a limited edition to meet the demand of the libraries and book-buyers. The last volume of this sumptuous edition has just been issued.

J. B. Lippincott Company, Publishers,

PHILADELPHIA.

THE VARIORUM EDITION
. . . OF . . .
SHAKESPEARE

EDITED BY
HORACE HOWARD FURNESS, Ph.D., LL.D., L.H.D.

Royal Octavo Volumes. Superfine toned paper. Extra cloth, uncut edges, gilt top. $4.00 per volume.

The Volumes Already Issued Are:

THE TEMPEST.

"It is always a pleasure to record that another volume has been added to the variorum edition of Shakespeare by Horace Howard Furness. His broad knowledge of books, his keen intelligence, and above all his sympathy with the author make him an ideal editor. His variorum edition of Shakespeare is invaluable alike to students and scholars, because it brings together not merely the various readings but all the comments that have been made on particular passages, together with original comments by Mr. Furness, drawn from his large fund of knowledge, and such notes as may serve to determine moot points. . . . 'The Tempest,' with its notes, occupies 268 pages, and as many more are contained in the valuable appendix and index."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

As You Like It.

VOL. VIII. OF THE VARIORUM EDITION.

"America has the honor of having produced the very best and most complete edition, so far as it has gone, of our great national poet. For text, illustration, commentary and criticism it leaves nothing to be desired. The editor, Mr. Horace Howard Furness of Philadelphia, combines with the patience and accuracy of the textual scholar an industry which has overlooked nothing of value that has been written about Shakespeare by the German and French as well as English commentators and critics; and, what is of no less moment, he possesses in himself a rare delicacy of literary appreciation and breadth of judgment, disciplined by familiarity with all that is best in the literature of antiquity as well as of modern times, which he brings to bear on his notes with great effect."—Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine.

The Merchant of Venice.

VOL. VII. OF THE VARIORUM EDITION.

"A large and extremely handsome volume, with every perfection of mechanical features, containing the text of the first folio, with notes that enable one to study Shakespeare as the Greek poets are studied, weighing every phrase, every word, every syllable."—New York World.

"Notwithstanding the rich harvest arising from the constant activity of Shakesperian students all over the world, we do not hesitate to say that Howard Furness's Variorum Edition is one of the most notable contributions to Shakespeare literature in the present century. The text is that of the first folio, but the various readings of the other editions are carefully stated. Each passage is annotated, so that the reader has the benefit of the counsel of commentators old and new. Further illustrative matter is consigned to the appendix."—Manchester (England) Guardian.

Othello.

VOL. VI. OF THE VARIORUM EDITION.

"In no respect inferior, it is in some ways superior, to its predecessors. In a work of such magnitude and difficulty the plan in all its details cannot be perfected at the start; the editor must learn some things by experience. In 'Othello' it seems to us that Dr. Furness has well settled all these questions of method and form, and given us a volume which may serve as the model for all that are to follow. The whole is a library boiled down into a volume, and for ninety-nine readers and students out of a hundred infinitely more convenient and useful than the multitudinous original, even if the latter were accessible to them; and it will be only now and then that the hundredth man will want to go from the one handy book to the sources whence its varied contents have been drawn."—Boston Literary World.

King Lear.

VOL. V. OF THE VARIORUM EDITION.

"The most indefatigable and enthusiastic lover of Shakespeare could not obtain an equal amount of literary light without spending years in ransacking the libraries, even if the libraries of this country furnished the material at all, which is very doubtful."—Harper's Monthly Magazine.

"The edition is, without question, the best in existence, as the editor has naturally taken advantage of the labors of all former Shakespearian scholars—English, French and German."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Hamlet.

(2 vols.)

VOLS. III. AND IV. OF THE VARIORUM EDITION.

"We have not space to do full justice to Mr. Furness's volume. Every installment of it is of great value, and complete as regards the play treated. It is a source of much satisfaction to find that this, the most exhaustive work on any one of Shakespeare's plays, comes from America."—London Athenæum.

"This work can hardly fail to mark a most important era in Shakespearian literature; that, too, not only for the American people, but for the whole English-speaking world, if, indeed, its importance is to be bounded by any circumscriptions of language. . . . It seems almost a marvel that any man should find the courage and resolution to grapple with an undertaking of such magnitude and requiring so great stress of labor."—North American Review.

Macbeth.

VOL. II. OF THE VARIORUM EDITION.

"Columns might be written on the value of this work to the Shakespearian student and scholar, but it only becomes necessary to say that it is invaluable."—Boston Evening Traveller.

"It is with pleasure that we call attention to the conspicuous merits of this work. The fine scholarship, the immense industry, the extensive research, the broad judgment and the critical acumen which the editor has displayed in the accomplishment of his task excite mingled wonder and admiration. All honor and gratitude to the scholar who voluntarily sets his nights and days to endless drudgery that he may add fresh illumination to the genius of one of his race for the elevation and enjoyment of all the rest."—Chicago Evening Post.

Romeo and Juliet.

VOL. I. OF THE VARIORUM EDITION.

"This is the most valuable work recently contributed to our Shakespearian literature, and America has the honor of producing the best and completest edition of Shakespeare's immortal plays."—Birmingham (England) Daily Post.

"One of the handsomest books that ever came from the American press. His earnest labors will secure the attention of critical Shakespearian students; and all lovers of Shakespearian dramas will be attracted to their production in this elaborate and elegant form accompanied by all the interpreting light that has been thrown upon them."—Boston Transcript.

VOLUME X. IN PREPARATION,
MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

⁂ For sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by the publishers, free of expense, on receipt of the price.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, Philadelphia.

The Literary World

Vol. XXV BOSTON 15 DECEMBER 1894 No. 25

CONTENTS

Philip and His Wife 445
Letters of Emily Dickinson 445
History of the United States Navy . . 446
Pictures of Swedish Life 446
Edwin Booth 447
The Century Cyclopedia of Names . . 447
Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush 448
How to Write Fiction 448
Early London Theatres 449
Portraits in Plaster 449
Mr. Gibson's Drawings 449

Poetry:

Ballade to a Bookman. Francis Howard Williams 450
The Hero of Esthonia 450
The Final Browning 450
Lucy Larcom 451
Border Ballads 451

Holiday Books:

The Story of a Bad Boy 451
A Tale of Two Cities 451
The Fairies' Festival 451
America's Godfather 452

Books for Young People:

Imaginotions 452
Madeleine's Rescue 452
Maurice, or the Red Jar 452
Piccino and Other Child Stories 452
The Wagner Story Book 452
The Christmas Hirelings 453
Little Ike Templin 453
Piokee and Her People 453
The Little Lady of the Horse 453
Child's History of Spain 453
Jolly Good Times To-Day 453
The Great Composers 453

Books for Boys:

In the Wilds of the West Coast 453
Decatur and Somers 453
The Two Clippers 453
The Vast Abyss 453
Sailor Jack, the Trader 453
The Captain's Boat 454
In the Heart of the Rockies 454
Endeavor Chris' 454
Chasing a Yacht 454
Asiatic Breezes 454
Brother Against Brother 454
In the Levant 454
Fairy Tales 454

Books for Little Ones:

When Molly Was Six 454
The Child Amy 454
Gypsy Breynton 455
Things Will Take a Turn 455
Little Mr. Thimblefinger 455
Artful Anticks 455

Fiction:

Lillian Morris and Other Stories 455
A Hill-Top Summer 455
The People of the Mist 455
The Lilac Sunbonnet 455
The Burial of the Guns 455
The Cook and the Captive 455
New York Letter 456
Periodicals 456
News and Notes 456

PHILIP AND HIS WIFE.*

MRS. DELAND has made us wait for her latest book, but it was worth waiting for, as it is a distinct addition to those novels which treat seriously large themes of general interest. The adjustment of the individual to the marriage relation is one that enters into every marriage, however happy it may be, and especially when the husband and wife make their beginning together in youth, confident of the future and eager to press all the sweetness of life into a single cup. Mrs. Whitney was right when she said: "This time arrives with the demands of earnest life in some phase with every pair. Every Adam and Eve must leave their early Paradise behind them, and, while it lies there like a dream, turn from it to the wilderness." This is why a book like Mrs. Deland's is often called painful. It touches on sore experiences in lives that we have known, and baffles us afresh with the ancient questions of true equality and right adjustment.

Mrs. Deland's characters are usually divided into two classes. Those in one class, with which she works out her ethical study, are typical and sharply drawn; others seem to be, indeed, living persons, human, uncertain, touched with the tenderness that we use when speaking of those near to us, and holding their own by virtue of those natural graces and weaknesses common to most of us. The story of Philip and Cecil has been so much read and discussed while it has been appearing in serial form that we need only touch upon a few points. Its lessons are brought out by example, not by sermonizing. The father of Cecil cuts the knot of his own loveless marriage by traveling "for his health" and making a home on the other side of the Atlantic under circumstances never revealed, even if suspected by his old neighbors. Philip's treatment of the question shows another possible outcome, but the general conclusion is the old one, that the only way out of an unhappy marriage is through it, since the two lives cannot be put back where they were before. A moment of discouragement is not to be taken too absolutely. Mrs. Deland's word on the title-page is the true one, "Marriage is not a result but a process." It takes more grace often to accept our mistakes and turn them to good than it does to make stepping-stones of our sins.

Mrs. Deland's minor characters would make the book worth reading were there no discussion of social or ethical problems from one cover to the other. Miss Susan Carr, who takes all the pains in the world to escape the lover who is pursuing another woman, and who finally yields to his imagined entreaties, somewhat to the good fellow's bewilderment at first; gentle Dr. Lavender, with his concern for his brother and his distrust of the widow; poor little Molly, who thinks it safer to pray to the devil too, "since God isn't quite big enough to kill him;" and faithful Alicia, with her maddening apology of a mother — all are real people to us, and do much to make us willing to consider the grave questions that we are asked here to face.

LETTERS OF EMILY DICKINSON.*

IN the poetry of Emily Dickinson there was a quality so unique and so penetrating as to awaken keen interest in the writer's personality. To this desire for further acquaintance her sister has responded by permitting her letters to be published under the editorship of her appreciative friend, Mrs. Mabel Loomis Todd, who says:

> It was with something almost like dread that I approached the task of arranging these letters, lest the deep revelations of a peculiarly shy inner life might so pervade them that in true loyalty to their writer none could be publicly used. But, with few exceptions, they have been read and prepared with entire relief from that feeling and with unshrinking pleasure; the sanctities were not invaded. Emily kept her little reserves, and bared her soul but seldom even in intimate correspondence. It was not so much that she was always on spiritual guard as that she sported with her varying moods and tested them upon her friends with apparent delight in the effect, as airy and playful as it was half unconscious.

Her letters more freely than her verses indicate "the dainty humor, the frolicsome gayety, which continually bubbled over in her daily life. The somber and even weird outlook upon this world and the next, characteristic of many of the poems, was by no means a prevailing condition of mind; for, while fully apprehending all the tragic elements in life, enthusiasm and bright joyousness were yet her normal qualities and stimulating moral heights her native dwelling place." All this we must believe since her friend so assures us, yet such sensitiveness as clearly was Emily Dickinson's means great capacity for suffering; and the intensity of her attachment to kindred and friends, as well as the seclusion into which she shrank after her earlier years, suggest that she was instinctively protecting herself by love and withdrawal from currents and counter-currents that would sadly have hurt her in their buffeting.

The letters begin soon after the fourteenth birthday. The difference in style between these and later ones is even more marked than usual. Many people in their youth have written as diffusely as Miss Dickinson, but few in maturity have used forms so condensed and incisive. After attending school in her native town of Amherst she spent a year at Mt. Holyoke Seminary. Among her mates she is remembered as a writer of extraordinary compositions and teller of intensely funny stories. At Amherst, as at the seminary, there was "plain living and high thinking." Emily Dickinson always had choice society, and throughout life received from her loyal friendships some of her keenest pleasures, as is shown by her letters to Dr. and Mrs. J. G. Holland, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Bowles, and many others. Yet she was hardly more than thirty when her growing shyness sometimes prevented her from seeing her dearest friends when they came to her house. "Her happiness in their love and trust was at times almost too intense to bear, . . . and disproportionately great pain was caused by even comparatively slight separations." To the Hollands she wrote: "We talk of you together, then diverge on life, then hide in you again as a safe fold. Don't leave us long, dear friends! You know we're children still, and children fear the dark."

---

* Philip and His Wife. By Margaret Deland. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

* Letters of Emily Dickinson. Edited by Mabel Loomis Todd. Two volumes. Illustrated. Roberts Brothers. $2.00.

How epigrammatic Miss Dickinson's letters were can easily be guessed by the readers of her poems. At Christmastime she wrote, "God bless the hearts that suppose they are beating and are not, and infold in his infinite tenderness those that do not know they are beating and are." To one friend she paid this tribute, "You have the most triumphant face out of paradise, probably because you are there constantly instead of ultimately." To another she wrote, "Is not the sweet resentment of friends that we are not strong more inspiriting even than the strength itself?" Her love for nature was as intimate as that of Emily Brontë — a source of sweet trouble and exquisite consolation. Here is a note of thanks, "In a world too full of beauty for peace I have met nothing more beautiful." A spirit vibrating like hers to the touch of subtle truth and loveliness could by no possibility accept any current ideas which made God a far-away and dreary power:

> Her garden was full of His brightness and glory; the birds sang and the sky glowed because of Him. To shut herself out of the sunshine in a church, dark, chilly, restricted, was rather to shut herself away from Him; almost pathetically she wrote, "I believe the love of God may be taught not to seem like bears'."

"In essence no real irreverence mars her poems or her letters," but some expressions in each are as startling as those often uttered by children.

Although this writer of a thousand poems refused all invitations to publish — that being "foreign to her thought as firmament to fin" — she showed a wish for competent and impartial judgment by writing to Col. T. W. Higginson, an entire stranger, and asking him, "Are you too deeply occupied to see if my verse is alive?" Selections from this correspondence have been given by Colonel Higginson in the Atlantic Monthly of October, 1891. The other letters of the pupil to her "master" are now added. Obviously she could not have chosen a better critic, one who would more fully appreciate her individuality and at the same time suggest whatever might broaden and enrich it. Mrs. Todd says, "It is hard for many persons to believe even now that Emily Dickinson had nothing to do with the Saxe Holm stories, and certainly some of their incidental poetry bears strong evidence of her unique touch."

After her father's death Miss Dickinson's retirement became almost complete, notes being the chief links that bound her to the world. Yet she never denied herself to children, who looked upon her as a kind of fairy guardian. Something elf-like, indeed, there seems to be in the composition of this rare, sequestered nature. New England has produced many original growths to puzzle and fascinate the student of psychology. None is more sure to move recurrent wonder than this recluse of Amherst. To her should be accorded a scrutiny as delicate and keen as that which is given to Jones Very or Emily Brontë or William Blake.

HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY.*

THE author of this monumental work deserves praise for the unflagging industry and steadfast ability which he has shown in carrying out his purpose. We have now, in one easily handled work of two volumes, a history of the United States Navy, comprising Revolutionary, Mediterranean, Atlantic, river, lake, and Gulf and Oriental phases of activity. We see the coasters and privateers of colonial days develop into the great frigates at the end of the last century, and find that the latter struck from the British mastheads more flags than England ever lost in all the waters of Europe. Then follows the story of fresh-water lake battles, in which whole squadrons are captured. In the piping times of peace we see Americans trying to make Old World ideas work in this Western world. After much expense and trouble we discovered that the great line of battle ships were worth next to nothing to us, being useful in neither exploration, diplomacy nor war. Hence, though their names were magnificent, their etiquette impressive, and their expense enormous, the old American line-of-battle ships added no glory to the American flag, and now repose as hulks or, transformed into receiving ships, add picturesqueness to our navy yards. The heavy frigates were, in the main, the winners of our great sea victories, though the lighter craft helped us to police the seas and scour off the pirates from the fair face of the ocean.

After the brilliant naval campaign of 1812–15, the record of peace was broken only by a few minor wars, in which our tars had no foes worthy of their steel; but one of the greatest diplomatic triumphs was won by M. C. Perry, younger brother of the hero of Lake Erie. The Antarctic Ocean, the Dead Sea, and the northern polar regions were explored. Even in the war with Mexico it was the navy's heavy guns, in a battery erected by Robert E. Lee, that first breached the walls of Vera Cruz. Our sailors gave the army a bloody sanitarium on the high plateau, while they kept the coast clear and made the rear of the soldiers safe.

When the great Civil War opened steam had replaced the wind as motive power and, to a remarkable extent, iron armor was substituted for wooden walls. With animation and evident increase of interest Mr. Maclay pictures the great struggle, and makes it appear quite probable that, except for the efficient blockade and tremendous aggression of our navy, the armies of the Confederacy might have held their own against the tremendous impact of the Northern land forces. We cannot go into the details of Part Fifth, which occupies half the book, but it is very evident that the author has conscientiously endeavored to tell the story with due attention to accuracy, literary proportion, and the enjoyment of the reader. Many of his pages are of exciting interest, and, unless we mistake, the details are remarkably correct. The final chapter treats of "the navy of today," wherein we have a picture of the achievements of our ships and men in the Asiatic and South American waters, a section on the development of ordnance, and a brief but suggestive account of our new steel vessels. The appendix gives a list of the equipment of all the national vessels from the battle ship Massachusetts, of over ten thousand tons, and armed with thirteen-inch guns, down to the old floating castles, once superb with immense masses of canvas and terrible with tiers of guns, but which now vegetate in the Wallabout without a cannon or a pound of powder on board; the American navy has always realized its ideal when American ideas have been carried out by Americans. There is also a roll of honor of seamen who have won medals for bravery in action; the pictures are sufficiently numerous and excellently reinforce the text.

PICTURES OF SWEDISH LIFE.*

MRS. BAKER has had the great advantage of years of residence in Sweden, and her Pictures bear every mark of close acquaintance with Swedish customs. She makes no attempt to describe the country systematically or to discuss its institutions thoroughly; but she records in a picturesque manner many interesting facts concerning the daily life, the governing classes, the homes, the occupations, the language, the education, the religion, and the character of this honest, ingenuous, and trustworthy people. They are a polite people:

---

* A History of the United States Navy from 1775 to 1894. By Edgar Stanton Maclay. Vol. II. D. Appleton & Co. $2.50.

* Pictures of Swedish Life, or Svea and Her Children. By Mrs. Woods Baker. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $3.75.

> As soon as the right hand (the pretty hand, the Swedes call it, for children) is known from the left, it must be put out to be shaken on the reception of a gift or a favor at the same time that the child says the word, perhaps the most frequently spoken in the Swedish language — "tak," which means "thanks." The utterance of "tak" on all suitable occasions, small and great, becomes as natural to Swedes of all degrees and almost as unconscious as breath.

Mrs. Baker epitomizes the powers of the king (according to the Swedes they are less than those of our President); describes the noble hospital, the "Sophiahemmet," which is the living queen's monument; and takes us where the king may not go, among "the Uncles," as the members of the Riksdag are familiarly called. She tells us of Victor Rydberg and his home and of Count Snoilsky, his brother poet; she dwells with peculiar affection upon the hearty home life "in the red cottage" of the common people; she notes many details about the family names, so bountifully drawn from natural objects, not from occupations as with us, and speaks plainly but temperately of the drunkenness, avarice, and profanity which are national sins, especially the first. We find little beyond a bare mention of the Gothenburg system of dealing with the liquor problem, but Mrs. Baker has evidently not studied questions of this order. Her volume is one of high value in its proper field as a picturesque view of Swedish life as a whole, and the chapters on the history of the country, dealing with its great characters or notable episodes, add to its interest. The volume is handsomely gotten up in tasteful holiday style, and it has twenty-four full-page illustrations, with many smaller ones in the text, showing good photogravure work.

EDWIN BOOTH.*

THIS new volume about the great actor is divided into three unequal parts. The first and briefest gives us the recollections of his daughter, Edwina Booth Grossman, the second consists of letters written to her, and the third includes letters to various friends, extending from June 30, 1860, just one week before his marriage to Mary Devlin, up to 1892. The recollections are far less of events than of characteristics, and they add practically little to the knowledge we previously had of the private life of Edwin Booth. The affectionate, confidential relations between father and daughter are plainly indicated, as well as Booth's tenderness, generosity, and simple manliness; but we are told no more of his boyhood and early life or of the influences which shaped his character than was given in Mr. Winter's book of a year ago, and that volume, it will be remembered, took higher rank as an enthusiastic critical review than as a biography. Nothing is said of the later marriage, in which many people were interested on account of the position of both husband and wife, except in allusions in his London letters of 1881 referring to his "intense anxiety" during her illness and the dread of her approaching death. One often hears in Chicago reminiscences of the days when Booth and Mary McVickar played in the old Madison Street Theatre together, and seldom has there been a marriage in which the outside public took a more genuine, kindly interest. However, we have no desire to quarrel with what we have for the sake of what we have not, and we are not of those who think that a great man's death should be the signal for letting loose upon the world a flood of reminiscence and comment on his affairs kept in reserve during his life. The time may come in the future when some friend may think it still due to Booth's memory to give us an all-round biography, in which the noble nature of the man will be shown even greater and loftier than has yet appeared.

The letters to Mrs. Grossman are very bright and affectionate. Booth was one of the blessed fathers who "think it jollier to receive silly letters sometimes than to get a repetition of sermons on good behavior," and his puns and jests show him as the dear companion as well as the careful guide. Among the more serious letters is one rebuking his daughter tenderly for her concern over a newspaper article in which he was criticised and slandered. "I have long ceased," he says, "to read 'theatrical news,' and have succeeded in letting my 'dear friends' know that I avoid such rot and that it is brutal to mention it to me. I repeat to them the remark Howells made to Aldrich when Aldrich asked him if he had heard of some abuse of his (Howells') writings — 'Do you suppose that I have no bosom friends?'"

The remaining letters are somewhat more varied in tone. The self-revelations to the two Carys — Richard, who was killed in the war, and his sister Emma — are delightful. Booth's dread of meeting such men as Agassiz and Felton, his devotion to the memory of his wife and to his little girl, and his simple religious faith, all find freest expression here. The epistles to David C. Anderson are most ausgelassen in their jollity and their allusions to good times past, present, or to come. There are nine pictures of Booth included among the illustrations, and others of his first wife, of his dressing room in the Broadway Theatre, and of numerous articles belonging to him.

THE CENTURY CYCLOPEDIA OF NAMES.*

A PROPOSED supplement to the noble Century Dictionary, to give an appendix somewhat larger than usual of names and places, has grown into this large volume of 1,085 pages, which is published in uniform style with the Dictionary, but without illustrations. Mr. Smith, who was the managing editor of the latter work, states the objects of this companion book to be primarily to give a dictionary of names in their orthography and orthoëpy, and secondarily to present a condensed encyclopedia in a rather fuller treatment of several thousand of the more important entries. The aim has, evidently, not been at any time out of sight to supplement the Dictionary. The person held most in view is that pampered being, "the general reader," and it will be his verdict, after some months or years of use, which will determine the practical utility of a cyclopedia after this plan.

It might be well to have a rule in the book world that no work of reference should be reviewed until it had seen a year's service in the library or office; this is the one test which fixes its place, and no other examination can compare with this. But looking through this Cyclopedia of Names as one would an ordinary book, and writing from the standpoint of the special not the general reader, we recognize at once the convenience of a cyclopedia having such a great number of entries as this has — far in excess of popular cyclopedias, like Chambers' or Johnson's even. The titles in the usual biographical dictionaries and gazetteers have, of course, been reproduced largely, with the addition of a great amount of matter relating to the other subjects named on the title-page. Perhaps one may best give a notion of the range of subjects by noting a number of disconnected entries, with an incidental remark now and then. Under Aahmes II a paragraph in smaller type is quoted from Miss A. B. Edwards; under Aaron (in Titus Andronicus) one from Mr. Bullen assigning the play to Marlowe; under Homer one from Professor Mahaffy. Ezra Abbot and F. E. Abbot are entered (but not Professor Royce or J. W. Chadwick or F. H. Hedge); other Abbotts to be found are Austin, B. V., E. A., Emma, Evelyn, Jacob, J. S. C., Josiah G., and Lyman. The matter of contemporaneous biography is always a difficulty, but still one cannot see why Hepworth, G. H., should have more space than Channing. M. M. Ballou is surely not more important in literature than Mrs. Deland or Miss Thomas, both of whom are absent. The two Alvarados, the companions of Cortez, take one half of a column. Amadis of Gaul, the Dial, the Diable Boiteux of Le Sage, Dhyani Buddha, Lopamudra, Holy Roman Empire, Tupi stock, Pluviose, Plumed Knight, Thoth, Uncle Toby, the various "Fathers" (of lies, of comedy, of waters, and so on), are other entries. The Madonna, with two columns of fine print, seems to take the lead in length of all other articles. One gets the impression that certain subjects — Turkish and Oriental topics, for instance — have had a disproportionate share of room given them, especially for the "general reader." But, as we have implied, constant use in connection with the Dictionary is the fairest and most satisfactory test of such a cyclopedia. That this one will prove eminently useful and fill a place of importance among books of common reference admits of no doubt.

---

* Edwin Booth. Recollections by His Daughter, Edwina Booth Grossman. The Century Company. $3.00.

* The Century Cyclopedia of Names. A Pronouncing and Etymological Dictionary of Names in Geography, Biography, Mythology, History, Ethnology, Art, Archæology, Fiction, etc. Edited by Benjamin E. Smith, A.M. The Century Co. $15.00.

BESIDE THE BONNIE BRIER BUSH.*

THE title of this book gives little hint of the significance of the stories which make it up, but the wonder and admiration with which one closes the book testify to its fitness as an emblem of Scottish sturdiness and beauty. Unlike many short stories, which are best enjoyed when read separately, this series demands a consecutive reading for each tale, which deepens the impression of unity created by the pictures of simplicity, piety, humor, and caution in the people of Drumtochty. It is no wonder that this new writer, "Ian Maclaren" (who is Rev. John Watson of Liverpool), has leaped into sudden fame, for the gift of the Holy Spirit is his — to transmute homely deeds into shining marvels. One weary alike of characterless sermons and the well-conned Bible may take up this volume, attracted by the brisk opening lines; while repelled by the dialect, he is soon reading new meanings into Bible texts through these stories. Was ever the parable of the Prodigal Son more pregnant with gratitude than the tale of "The Transformation of Lachlan Campbell," the "grand inquisitor" of the parish? His only daughter wandered away; he erased her name from the family Bible; but missing her, his pride softened; when she came back and he showed her the blotted line, she wrote under it with the dates, "Missed," "Found," and "Her father fell on her neck and kissed her." The delicacy of the story in avoidance of all but grief is wonderful.

If the reader is some divinity student eager to give his critical truth to an ignorant people, let him read "His Mother's Sermon," and to him, as to the Free Kirk minister, will be made known how helpful it is to "speak a gude word for Jesus Christ." The tale is an epitome of the struggle between the old and new ways of faith, between German criticism and the Free Kirk; yet later in the book it is the old conservative who says to the young man in the spirit of reconciliation, "You will say every word God gives you, and I will take as much as God gives me." Was the silence at the recent Unitarian National Conference deeper in its peace, or the defense of modern science in Presbyterian ranks more vigorous in its truth, than the Scotsman's acceptance of difference and amity?

This could not be the Scottish book it is without treating much of sermons, and so part of it is about "The Sermon Taster," who could remember "the seeventy heads, coontin' pints of coorse," in the morning's discourse, unless the preacher mixed his sets of heads "thegither" as if he were playing "hide and seek" with them. "The Cunning Speech of Drumtochty" is valuable as a study in dialect; "glorious" is a word to be "kept for the twenty-first o' Reevelation;" a tricky person was "no juist the man for an elder;" who would not be glad to be "couthy," the tender epithet for devoted nursing, cordiality, and brave, cheery words? Most idiomatic are "but," the kitchen where everybody comes and all work is done, and "ben," the inner chamber, where treasures are kept and only honored guests admitted. So both words were applied to the inner life, and a man was "far ben" when the thought of God was with him. Best of all the chapters are "Domsie," "the lad o' pairts," and "A Doctor of the Old School," the text on whose gravestone was "Come, ye blessed of my Father . . . I was sick and ye visited me." The tale changes rapidly from humor to pathos, but it ends in glory. It would be hard to speak critically of a book so full of trust and grace, but fortunately the enjoyment of it is not marred by any lack of literary finish. It is a faithful transcript of characteristics which are fading away and which are here presented with a rare quaintness of style. The book is well gotten up, with wide margined pages and attractive drab and green binding.

HOW TO WRITE FICTION.*

AS the writing of fiction bids fair to become a profession, if not a trade, we may naturally expect books like that named below to multiply. This volume has the distinction of appearing in a first edition of one hundred numbered copies in facsimile from the original typewritten manuscript. It consists of one hundred and sixty octavo pages written on a typewriter of imperfect alignment, the lines also ending irregularly. There is little to commend in this style of getting up a so-called book, which is neither printed nor bound (it is in a leather and gilt portfolio) and has a trying effect on the eyes. It has both preface and introduction, but neither table of contents nor index. The anonymous author is stated to be a teacher of literary aspirants whose after work has been successful.

The plan followed is to lay down the leading principles which govern the construction and finishing of short stories (larger works of fiction are practically ignored), and then illustrate them from Maupassant's practice in his translated volume, The Odd Number. The author discourses, for the most part, very sensibly on the need of studying human nature, the control of one's own emotions as a prerequisite of handling emotion artistically, the need of a central idea, the principles of dramatic construction, and numerous other matters which nature or art will teach those who write good short stories. Much of the matter is familiar to one acquainted with the best manuals of rhetoric and critical volumes on French or English prose. There are a few curious definitions, such as that of art as "a process of moving people's emotions;" some amusing statements, such as that "the length of a story should be the same as the bigness of the idea, no bigger and no smaller, and to make a story longer or shorter than just as long as the idea is to spoil the story;" and that every story-teller should have a complete philosophy of life. On the other hand such remarks as that on the inevitable morbidity of persons who devote themselves entirely to fictitious composition and the common fault of women (the main part of the audience here addressed) as writers are keen and sound.

The chief criticism one would pass on a volume like this is that it can never take the place of personal advice from a critical friend, and that for a young woman of talent who has had a good training in rhetoric and composition, has read largely in the masters of fiction, and has a capacity for self-criticism, it must be quite superfluous; certainly she is not likely to find here ten dollars' worth of instruction not easily accessible elsewhere! Probably it would have a bad effect in leading young women who are not talented but have a great desire to write fiction to believe that the art is one that can be acquired by mediocrity in such a way as to impose upon editors, publishers, and the public. The author is mistaken, however, if he so imagines. We are confirmed in our belief that he views story-telling too much as a useful art by the example he gives of a story written by a New York reporter on the basis of an incident known to him. This story is "reconstructed" by the author of this book in accordance with the principles and rules he has laid down. The result is a slow-moving and much-padded narrative, far inferior to the original, and contradicting not a few of the maxims laboriously expounded previously! The soundest advice to give to most young women ambitious to write is "Don't," and the small minority will get more help from such literary biography as My First Book than from scores of such manuals as this.

---

* Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush. By Ian Maclaren. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.

* How to Write Fiction. Especially the Art of Short Story Writing. A Practical Course of Instruction after the French Method of Maupassant. New York: The Riverside Literary Bureau. Charles T. Dillingham & Co. $10.00.

EARLY LONDON THEATRES.*

THIS new volume in the admirable Camden Library — a series at once popular and scholarly — on Early London Theatres (in the fields), is by T. Fairman Ordish, F.S.A. It is to be followed by a second volume treating of the theaters in the city. The present book, which is dedicated "to the memory of James Orchard Halliwell-Phillipps and William Kendle," the best of former authorities on the subject, is a continuation and amplification of articles contributed to the Antiquary, which attracted so much attention and gained such general favor that the author was urged to prepare this fuller treatise. He adds materially to what was already known about the old playhouses in the outskirts of London, and corrects many mistakes made by Malone, Collier, and other writers on the history of the English stage.

Mr. Ordish begins by telling us of the crude arrangements for dramatic performances in London before the playhouses were built; when stages were set up in the open air, particularly in the neighborhood of the sacred wells to which pilgrims much resorted, for the representation of religious dramas; and when the inner courts of the larger inns, which were built about a quadrangle surrounded by galleries at each story, were similarly utilized. The movable stages used at Chester, Coventry, and some other places, and drawn on wheels to different quarters of the town, do not appear to have been introduced into the metropolis.

The first playhouse built in London was aptly called the Theater. No view of it is known to exist, but there can be no doubt that, like its immediate successors, it was circular, roofless, and surrounded by tiers of seats, the stage being a movable one, set up in the arena and taken away when the house was used for the sports and shows of the ring. The next theater was called the Curtain; like its predecessor, it was in the Shoreditch district. On the Surrey side of the Thames various places of amusement had already sprung up — "rings" and "gardens" for bull baiting and bear baiting, inn-yards devoted to musical and dramatic entertainments, and amphitheaters or circuses. All these, with the later theaters properly so called — the Rose, the Hope, the Swan, and others — are fully described by Mr. Ordish, and the many puzzling questions concerning their history are ably discussed.

This book is elegantly printed, like all the issues of the Camden Library, and is amply illustrated with maps of the districts where the theaters stood, and views of the ancient inns where plays were performed and of the theaters of which contemporaneous engravings are extant. Altogether it is a model treatment of an extremely interesting period in the history of the English stage.

PORTRAITS IN PLASTER.*

MR. HUTTON'S admirably illustrated volume has distinction of several kinds. It gives a selection of seventy-two portraits from life-masks or death-masks in plaster from his collection, which he believes to be "the most nearly complete and the largest collection of its kind in the world." The range of subjects in this volume is indeed wide; as the collector describes it, "From Sir Isaac Newton, the wisest of men, to Sambo, the lowest type of the American negro; from Oliver Cromwell to Henry Clay; from Bonaparte to Grant; from Keats to Leopardi; from Pius IX to Thomas Paine; from Ben Caunt, the prize fighter, to Thomas Chalmers, the light of the Scottish pulpit." Mr. Hutton's letterpress, treating of the authenticity of the various masks and the physiognomy and character of the subjects, is very readable; the reproductions of the masks form a striking portrait gallery from a novel point of view, and the publishers of the book have given it bountiful margins, smooth finished paper, and a binding in silk cloth, ornamented with a gilded panel on the front cover, which fit it, despite its rather grewsome theme, for a holiday gift. For the portrait collector, especially, it would be a welcome present, as it makes a desirable supplement to any collection of portraits by the ordinary processes. Says Mr. Hutton:

> The value of a plaster cast as a portrait of the dead or living face cannot for a moment be questioned. It must of necessity be absolutely true to nature. It cannot flatter; it cannot caricature. It shows the subject as he was, not only as others saw him in the actual flesh, but as he saw himself. And in the case of the death-mask particularly, it shows the subject often as he permitted no one but himself to see himself. He does not pose; he does not "try to look pleasant." In his mask he is seen, as it were, with his mask off.

Few persons, however, will be likely to prefer the plaster portrait to one in black and white! Of the many here given but few rival the expressiveness of the living face caught by a true artist. Queen Louise of Prussia is still beautiful in this portraiture, and Volk's mask of Lincoln is very noble and far superior to most of the usual other portraits from life; on the other hand, Sumner and Frederick the Great are seen at their apparent worst. Each portrait is finely set against a small black panel on a separate leaf, and all together form a most interesting collection, embracing actors, statesmen, generals, naturalists, rulers, and men of letters of many ages and countries.

MR. GIBSON'S DRAWINGS.*

THIS first collection of Mr. Gibson's extremely vigorous and telling drawings contains a selection of eighty-four of his best compositions. The large folio size (12 inches by 18) allows room for reproduction of his cartoons on a larger scale than in Life, the Century, and the Harper periodicals, in which they have for the most part appeared and captivated thousands by their abounding life, their irresistible "go," and their pervading patriotism. Mr. Gibson depicts the most ardent life of wealth and fashion with a powerful hand and a keen eye for its contrasts with the true life of love and honor; he feels and reproduces the joyous course of beauty on its triumphal course through an admiring world; and he has a genuine American's dislike for the titled foreign nobody who carries off the charming American heiress. One almost comes to sympathize with dukes and marquises, for the moralist in Mr. Gibson rarely allows him to represent one of them as handsome!

This collection, which has already had a large sale and will deservedly run through more editions yet, gives a good notion of Mr. Gibson's favorite subjects, with a natural leaning to the more humorous. What could be more amusing than "Life's Birthday," the series on Leap Year, with its weeping bridegroom, the men leaving the ladies at the dinner table, and "hubby" sitting up for her, or than "Vacation Over" with the poor, battered Cupid in the foreground? "The Rival Operas" is a capital take-off on German and Italian. The various "puzzles"— find the heiress, the nobleman, the two lovers, the girl who has been kissed, or the Englishman at the table — easily solve themselves, but are a pleasing counterpoise to the tragedy of "$, $, $." The "Afternoon Reception in Herculaneum" shows that Mr. Gibson can depart at will from those resplendent American girls whom he pictures so effectively, and show us other types of loveliness, whether they are genuine Roman or not. The drawings of the Parisian cafés and the would-be salons of New York are equally spirited. Mr. Gibson is now on the top wave of popular favor and long may he continue there!

---

* Early London Theatres. In the Fields. By T. Fairman Ordish. Macmillan & Co. $2.00.

* Portraits in Plaster from the Collection of Laurence Hutton. Harper & Brothers. $6.00.

* Drawings by Charles Dana Gibson. New York: R. H. Russell & Son. $5.00.

The Literary World

BOSTON 15 DECEMBER 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

Ballade to a Bookman.

Crotchety delver in books,
  Hater of all that is new,
Seeker of coziest nooks
  Known to the favorite few,
  Why should you ever ask who
Fateward defiance hath hurled?
  Delver in books, it is you—
You who have conquered the world.

Snuffy old fellow, whose looks
  Hint of a wig and a queue,
Scorning the cates of the cooks
  For a pewter of ale and a stew,
Why should you ever be blue,
Seeing that runnels have purled
  Since the beginning for you—
You who have conquered the world?

Intimate friend of Horne Tooke's,
  Chum of the Wandering Jew,
Rating reformers as "crooks"
  And lovers as enfants perdus,
  Why should you ever pursue
Ways of the folks who are swirled
  Into the popular view—
You who have conquered the world?

ENVOI.

Dream as you ruminate through
  Smoke into canopies curled;
Dream, for you've nothing to do—
  You who have conquered the world.

—From The Flute Player, by Francis Howard Williams.

THE HERO OF ESTHONIA.*

ESTHONIA is the province of Russia separated from Finland on the north by the Gulf of Finland and from the province of St. Petersburg on the east by Lake Peipus and its outlet. The language of most of the people is "very closely allied to Finnish;" their abundant oral literature, although in large part collected, has received little attention from French or English writers. Mr. Kirby, who should know, believes his two volumes, which are printed in very attractive form, to be the first work published in England that enters into detail on this popular literature. He has thus, relying on three leading authorities, Esthonian and German, brought before the English-speaking world a new and important body of folklore, in which we can indicate here only a few points of interest.

About half of Mr. Kirby's first volume is occupied with a summary in prose of the story of the Kalevipoeg, the national epic. He had expected to find it only an Esthonian variant of the Finnish Kalevala, but its actual dissimilarity seems to him to justify its presentation in this condensed form. The poem has twenty cantos and some nineteen thousand verses; its meter is the eight-syllable trochaic, flowing continuously (not in distichs like the Kalevala)—a meter rendered familiar by Longfellow's adaptation of it in Hiawatha, from a German translation of the Finnish epic. One of the few poetical renderings interspersed in the prose version might well be supposed to come from Longfellow's own hand. It refers to the wedding of Salme and the Youth of the Stars in the first canto of the Kalevipoeg:

> After this they danced the cross-dance,
> Waltzed the waltzes of Esthonia,
> And they danced the Arju dances,
> And the dances of the West-Land;
> And they danced upon the gravel,
> And they trampled all the greensward.
> Starry Youth and maiden Salme,
> Thus their nuptials held in rapture.

The young giant-king, Kalev, and Linda have a son, called, in patronymic fashion, Kalevipoeg, or Kalevide, the son of Kalev. His adventures in love and war, with sorcerers and demons on earth and in Hades, are the subject of the poem; they are too complicated to be more than mentioned here. The second part of Mr. Kirby's entertaining collection, "Esthonian Folk-tales," takes up in succession tales illustrating the epic; stories of orphans and foundlings; cosmopolitan stories (where we meet our old friends Bluebeard, Cinderella, the Man in the Moon, and Red Riding-Hood among others); familiar stories of Northern Europe (such as that of Melusina); tales of the gods and elemental spirits; legends of heath and lake and of hidden treasures; stories of the devil and black magic; tales of the Orient, of the Church, of unnatural brothers, of the plague, and of beasts. Last of all come a few pages of specimens of Esthonian ballads, with a bibliography and a combined index and glossary. Mr. Kirby has done a service to all students and lovers of folklore and popular poetry by this excellent selection; it will be appreciated especially by those who already know the Kalevala somewhat, and will therefore be interested in tracing resemblances and contrasts between it and the Kalevipoeg.

THE FINAL BROWNING.*

WHEN the sixteen-volume edition of Browning's Poems was published in 1889 it was finished up to date, and the sixteenth volume contained indexes to all the poems and to the first lines of each. At that time the poet seemed likely to live for several years at least, and to bring out a number of books before a final edition of his works should be called for. But he died in December, 1889, after having added only one slender volume to what had been already gathered into that comely library edition. This book, Asolando, after being printed by itself both in England and here, is now made Vol. XVII of the edition in question; its small bulk being filled out to the average size of the other volumes by biographical and historical notes to all the poems, prepared by the poet's son, Mr. Barrett Browning, together with new indexes covering Asolando as well as its predecessors in the series.

The notes, which form more than half of the present book, are an important aid in the interpretation of the poems, and settle sundry questions which have baffled all the critics and commentators. Dr. Berdoe's Cyclopædia and Mr. Cooke's Guide-book had already done much in this direction, besides giving a deal of information concerning the poems which does not come within the scope of Mr. Barrett Browning's plan; but they had failed to explain, or erred in their attempts to explain, some perplexing allusions which his father evidently cleared up for him. On these it is fortunate that he is able to speak with authority. It is to be regretted, however, that he leaves some enigmas unsolved, including a number of those to which Dr. Berdoe refers in the introduction to his Cyclopædia. Probably the son did not happen to ask the father about these, or has forgotten what he was told about them. It is well, perhaps, that a few of these hard nuts should remain for Browning Societies and the correspondents of Notes and Queries to try their jaws upon. It may be that the poet himself could not have helped them. In more than one instance, as we learn from unimpeachable authority, he could not recollect just what he meant by a particular allusion. He could not say which of Raphael's Madonnas he intended by "Her that's left with lilies in the Louvre," and his son's notes do not refer to that painting as they do to the Madonna mentioned in the preceding line of the same poem. He also made mistakes occasionally in his use of words; as, for instance, twat in "Pippa Passes," which he supposed to be an article of female dress. His son, we see, corrects his father's blunder as to the connection of bombast with Bombastus, the name of Paracelsus.

Asolando, in the same type and the same quality of paper and provided with the same notes and indexes, forms the ninth volume in a new edition of Browning, which will be welcomed by all who cannot afford the seventeen-volume edition. It is made by putting two volumes of this last into one on somewhat thinner paper. Each volume thus averages some six hundred pages, which is not inconvenient, taking into account the duodecimo dimensions. The large type, the wide margins, and the open page make a book which it is a pleasure to read; the binding is a smooth brown cloth. The volumes are lettered on the back from one to nine; inside one finds a title-page giving the contents in brief of both volumes, and each included volume of the more voluminous edition has its separate title-page and is paged separately. The indexes and notes refer, therefore, to the volumes from one to seventeen. To all who desire to save either money or shelf room in getting the best obtainable edition of Browning this edition is to be warmly commended.

---

*The Hero of Esthonia and Other Studies in the Romantic Literature of that Country. Compiled from Esthonian and German Sources by W. F. Kirby, F.L.S., F.E.S., etc., Corresponding Member of the Finnish Literary Society. With a Map of Esthonia. In two volumes, small 4to, cloth, gilt top, price, 21s. London: John C. Nimmo, 14 King William Street, Strand.

*Asolando and Notes. By Robert Browning. Macmillan & Co. $1.50.

The Poetical Works of Robert Browning. In nine volumes. Macmillan & Co. $20.00.

LUCY LARCOM.*

A SWEET and noble soul passed out of this life when Lucy Larcom died. The graciousness of her nature, her well-balanced character, her aspirations for all that was uplifting to herself and helpful to others, her tenderness and modesty and self-sacrifice could not have been understood by most of those familiar with her writings but for this revelation in her life, letters, and diary. The history as told in these pages, much of it in her own words, was comparatively uneventful, but it has unusual charm. All along from her childhood in a home of Puritan simplicity in Beverly to the closing scene in Boston at nearly threescore and ten it is a record of absorbing interest, showing the growth of a true, lovely, and lovable womanhood.

Of the New England womanhood of the last generation, nurtured in a well-ordered household, subjected to privations, struggling against obstacles, always handicapped, but borne on by a resistless determination to learn and know and possess all that was best, Lucy Larcom was a striking and admirable example. Nothing is more apparent in these pages than that she made the utmost of her life. Her judgment was excellent, her intuitions were keen, her nature was sound and healthy. She was able to give calm and wise consideration to the perplexing questions which came up in her life. She was never the sport of impulse, but there was the staying and reliable quality in her make-up which must be defined in one word as principle. The question most difficult to settle concerned her spiritual experiences, convictions, and duties. The struggle was of almost lifelong duration, and it was only when she at last took the step which identified her with the Episcopal Church that she found absolute peace. In these records this one thing which was of paramount interest to her, the history of her religious growth from the rigid boundaries of her early faith into a wider atmosphere, has naturally a prominent place.

In whatever aspect, whether as the woman among her kindred and friends, the faithful teacher, the true poet, or the Christian seeking for more light, Lucy Larcom is attractive, amiable, sincere, and deserving of the affection and honor she received. If she had lived longer she would probably have supplemented her book, A New England Girlhood, with a fuller account of her life and especially of her literary career and friendships. The general facts are too well known to call for any special mention here. Her devotional books and her poems have met with a cordial reception and have taken their place in the cherished literature of many homes, for they belong with the thoughts of one's better moments, communion with nature, and the tender ties of domestic life. This volume has been carefully, reverently, and loyally prepared by one who appreciated her rare qualities. The sweet, benignant face of Miss Larcom fronts the title-page.

BORDER BALLADS.*

THIS beautiful quarto volume, bound in wine-colored cloth, contains twelve of the most famous ballads of the border land of England and Scotland. The inevitable Mr. Lang supplies the introduction, but ballad-lore and fairy and ghost tales are a field in which he is thoroughly at home. He sets forth a few points common to the ballads of different countries and then illustrates them with the help of Professor Child's magnificent collection, taking up each of the twelve poems to note their origin, history, and literary value. "Their poetical beauties have often been dilated upon, but their direct and simple appeal to the primary emotion, their frank handling of the obviously romantic, their fresh and vivid nature, demand no aid from 'signpost criticism.'"

Mr. Murray's etchings, mating the ballads, have high artistic value. While all are not equally successful in catching the romantic note of the verse, they are all informed with true feeling, and they positively illumine the lines of the minstrel as few modern illustrators have done. He pictures Thomas the Rhymer and the Queen of Elf-Land; Janet at Miles Cross seeking to rescue Tamlane; the three sons of the wife of Usher's Well; Clerk Saunders' "May Margaret" giving her dead love the crystal wand "out at the shot window;" Sir Roland and his faithless bride in the stream; the Demon Lover; the Lass of Lochroyan knocking vainly at Love Gregor's door; the Twa Sisters of Binnorie; Burd Helen of Kirkconnel shot in her lover's arms; the Twa Corbies and the new-slain Knight; the false Edom of Gordon burning the castle; and the Douglas Tragedy. The broad margins and handmade paper set off well the fine typography of the Constables of Edinburgh.

Miss Irene E. Jerome's Banners for the holiday season are four in number — the Joy, the Rest, and the Every-Day Banner, and What Will the Violets Be? Each consists of four panels decorated with a flower design — sweet peas, nasturtiums, bachelor's buttons, and violets — the cards being attached by ribbons and bearing appropriate selections. Of the four the violet "banner" is easily first in beauty of words and decoration. — Lee & Shepard. Each, 50c.

HOLIDAY BOOKS.

The Story of a Bad Boy.

Mr. Aldrich has written a delightful preface to this new edition of his autobiography of his youthful years, in which he declares the needlessness of a preface to this vivacious chronicle of "a natural, actual boy." He rejoices that the "lurid title may have invited the curiosity of the vicious and depraved and trapped them into reading an entirely harmless story." Mr. A. B. Frost's numerous illustrations are, as a body, very good, but an exception must be made of some of the larger drawings, which show decided haste in their preparation. The Riverside Press has done its best work on the typography and binding of the volume. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.00.

A Tale of Two Cities.

Dickens' tremendous and pathetic novel of the French Revolution tells a story of self-devotion that can never cease to move those who read it. The book is not one especially adapted for holiday publication, but it has been put into two convenient and comely volumes by the University Press, and Mr. E. H. Garrett's few illustrations are entirely in keeping with the spirit of the narrative; they are faithful studies of the costume of the time, and make the novelist's characters stand forth clearly to the eye. — Dodd, Mead & Co. $3.50.

The Fairies' Festival.

Dr. John Witt Randall, a graduate of Harvard in 1834, was a man of wealth and leisure, who made a notable collection of etchings and engravings, which went to the college on his death, with a fund. Like numerous other amateurs in life, Dr. Randall indulged himself in the writing of verse, and he left five volumes of manuscript in a confused state. This poem on the fairies, we are told by the editor, Francis Ellingwood Abbot, is an episode in a much longer poem, "Metamorphoses of Longing," which he intends to publish hereafter as a whole. Mr. Abbot's friendship for the writer leads him to say that "a long delayed but honorable and prominent position among American poets" is established in his "hope and belief" for Dr. Randall. How successful as a judge of poetry Mr. Abbot, who holds an honorable place among philosophical writers, is may be judged from these lines which we select at random from some seventy pages of similar matter:

> And since even hearts have learned to prize
> Those kindly acts which men despise,
> Let us be kind to them even more
> Than we were kind to men before.

Every characteristic which should distin sh arch- poems on fairies — lightness, grace, absent ness, for instance — are conspic Even Mr. from this long-drawn-out dog s been unable F. G. Attwood, the illustrat; with the excep- to resist its contagious priest riding through tion of the picture o the wood and two or three others, his usual merits have quite failed him in the absence of inspiration from the text. — Joseph Knight Co. $3.00.

---

* Lucy Larcom. By Daniel Dulany Addison. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

* Border Ballads. With an Introductory Essay by Andrew Lang and Twelve Etchings by C. O. Murray. Pp. xxv, 87. London: Lawrence & Bullen; New York: Longmans, Green & Co.

America's Godfather.

Miss Virginia W. Johnson's holiday volume on Amerigo Vespucci consists of a long prologue on the Young American in Florence, where he is supposed to consider the namer of our continent a greater man than Galileo or Michael Angelo, and of a sentimental, picturesque biography, not destitute of signs of reading and study, but extremely feminine in its preference of suppositions for facts and its love for exclamation and conjecture. She has had the good fortune, however, to have Mr. Harrisse before her, and therefore does not go far astray. Her book belongs distinctively to holiday literature and not to standard biography; as it is such, the publishers would have done well to take more pains with the twenty photogravures, the execution of which does not equal the other details of the volume. — Estes & Lauriat. $2.50.

Messrs. L. Prang & Co. continue to hold a leading position among publishers of holiday novelties, and they issue this year a pleasing variety of water colors, art books, calendars, and cards for Christmas and New Year. The designing, printing, and lithographing do credit to the American artists and workmen who have produced them. Among these varied publications we note with special pleasure Mr. L. K. Harlow's views of Hampton Marshes, the Merrimac (with an inserted photograph of Whittier), and the West Gate at Warwick; Roses, a booklet of short selections adorned with beautiful sweetbriar roses; Herrick's Violets, with the same flower for adornment; and two calendars, the "Golden Flower," with splendid chrysanthemum designs for the four cards, and "Every Dog Has His Day," with twelve taking dogs presiding over the months.

One of the daintiest little calendars of this year's making is the "Seasons," in four doubled cards, fitting into each other and adorned with flower and bird designs. E. P. Dutton & Co. have had it made in Bavaria. (50c.) — A much more elaborate calendar from the same makers and publishers is "Children of the Year." It has twelve large cards fancifully trimmed and adorned with some of the most captivating of lithographs of child life. It is, indeed, a specimen of Nister's best work. — $1.50.

L. Prang & Co. publish four booklets in their usual attractive style, called the Yawcob Strauss series, by Mr. Charles Follen Adams. Der Oak und der Vine, Yawcob's Dribulations, Vas Marriage a Failure? and the poem which gave Mr. Adams his reputation make up the series. Their humor is of the broad and obvious kind which wins a wide popularity, as the large sale of the Long-Handled Dipper last year showed; while Dr. Holmes, with his usual kindliness, wrote the author: "I hope your genial and always welcome humor will long continue to delight the world to which you have already contributed so much enjoyment." — Each, 25c.

In the Cranford series Macmillan & Co. publish a charming edition of The Fables of Æsop, which have been selected and told anew and had their history traced by that competent authority, Mr. Joseph Jacobs, who adds scholarly notes. The spirited illustrations are by Mr. Richard Heighway. — $2.00.

A very pleasing little volume is Old English Songs. It could not fail to be, as the ten humorous songs are illustrated by Mr. Hugh Thomson, and Mr. Austin Dobson furnishes the prefatory matter on the history of each song. — Macmillan & Co. $2.00.

Admirers of Mr. Swinburne's lyrics should not overlook the attractive selection in the Bibelot series entitled Félise, which Mr. T. B. Mosher of Portland, Me., publishes this season. — $1.00.

BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Imaginotions.

This big book in showy covers of red and gilt and black, with its profusion of pictures, will be a treasure to the child who gets it for a holiday gift. "Truthless Tales" the author, Tudor Jenks, calls these nineteen uncommon and alluring stories. The purpose — if there is any — is sometimes rather obscure, rather too subtle for the youthful mind, but the extravagances will amuse just as much as if the quips and quirks and notions had not a real meaning. The old subject of giants and dwarfs seems to be a favorite one with this author, and three of the most entertaining chapters are those about the little man who came out of the satchel, the little man who appeared under the microscope and treated his discoverer to so much advanced learning, and those delectable giant neighbors, the Megalapods. For delicious humor and sly hits at the red tape and protracted deliberations of committees and those in authority what could be better than "The Prince's Counsellors?" The stories are unequal in merit, but all are good enough, and the best are very good. Many are irresistibly amusing, droll as the most exacting reader could ask, and occasionally the situations are as absurdly original as anything of Mr. Stockton's. To know what the pictures are it is only necessary to name the illustrators, Birch, Drake, Bensell, Dan Beard, and Oliver Herford. — The Century Co. $1.50.

Madeleine's Rescue.

This is a charming and prettily illustrated French story for girls and boys, by Jeanne Schultz. Madeleine is a little orphan girl whose life is made lonely by the unfortunate management of her two bachelor uncles and her elderly maiden aunt. These three were once a united and loving family, but owing to a slight misunderstanding they are estranged, and the child, who knows the circumstances, lives first with one and then with another. While at the country seat of the aunt, driven to desperation she tears a gap in the hedge and becomes the comrade of four delightful boys whose home is next to hers. The adventures of this company make the story, which eventually culminates in the reconciliation, through their agency, of the brothers and sister. The boys are chivalric little fellows, true and noble, lovely and tender in their relations to their sweet mother and to the poor little damsel whose knights they are. It is a refined and engaging story, with a wholesome atmosphere, bubbling over with the genuine child life that must find expression for the schemes and imaginings and devices where children are so real and so natural as were James, André, Pierre, and Jacques. These are well-bred people, both old and young, who play their parts in this unpretentious but captivating book. — D. Appleton & Co. $1.00.

Maurice, or the Red Jar.

Children delight in tales of magic, and there are always writers to minister to this taste. This book for boys and girls is by the Countess of Jersey, and it tells the story of a lad who wrought terrible disaster by his disobedience and curiosity. The titled author fails to enforce the lesson that her young readers ought to be made to feel. The wrong-doing of Maurice is passed over altogether too lightly by his parents. He follows his mother, unseen by her, and watches while she unlocks a closet in an unused room and takes down a red jar and examines it. Later, on one of his boating trips he goes where he has been told not to and makes the acquaintance of two strange boys, who soon induce him to visit their more strange grandfather in a cave. By him Maurice is persuaded to get possession of the red jar and bring it to the cave. The result is in the highest degree calamitous, and Maurice has fearful adventures before he can bring matters right. It may not be profitable reading for young folks, but they will like it, and it may not harm them even if it does them no good. It is certainly very exciting and ingeniously well told. The illustrations, by Rosie M. M. Pitman, are after the Walter Crane style. — Macmillan & Co. $1.50.

Piccino and Other Child Stories.

It goes without saying that whatever Frances Hodgson Burnett writes is full of charming detail, as she has the knack of mingling humor and pathos in right proportions. Her children are real beings, for she vitalizes their imaginary doings, but in this book we also learn how Little Lord Fauntleroy happened to be written. Whether her actual son enjoys reading of himself and his quaint, courteous ways as a child as much as others delight to read of him may be doubtful; it is even possible that he may be "guyed" by the fellows of his own age. But that is not our affair, and we rejoice to learn how his mother chanced to hit on that famous semi-biographical story. The other tales are "Piccino" — dirty, handsome, and funny; once in his life he was adopted for a day or two and cleansed against his will; "The Captain's Youngest," a tale too sad and old for any child to read; and "Little Betty's Kitten," who "never felt like a kitten" after her young mistress died. The illustrations, by Reginald B. Birch, are unusually good, and the covers, paper, and type are handsome enough for the regulation Christmas present. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

The Wagner Story Book.

These firelight tales of the great music dramas are told by William Henry Frost in a mystical, indefinite way that seems better fitted for calling up pictures and reminiscences in the mind of one who knows the stories already than for acquainting a boy or girl with them for the first time. No names are mentioned, and the stories have thus something of the vagueness that perhaps belongs properly to pictures seen in the flickering firelight; but children should certainly learn the names of Brunhilde, Senta, Parsival, Tannhäuser, and Siegfried when they read the legends connected with them. Both literature and music have combined to make these stories dear, and as here told their influence is wholly on the side of bravery, truth, and unselfishness. Some of the pictures add little to the value of the book. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

The Christmas Hirelings.

One of the very prettiest stories of the year for children is this one, by Miss M. E. Braddon, and we can wish no better Christmas wish to the children of this country than that many of them may find this charming book in their Christmas stockings. Miss Braddon's story is in some ways the English counterpart of Little Lord Fauntleroy, but the English girl is almost more winning than the American boy. In each case there is an obdurate grandfather whose heart is softened; in each case a little child leads the way to a better and purer life. There is nothing sensational in the book; it is simply an exquisitely told story of child life.— Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

Little Ike Templin.

Col. Richard Malcolm Johnston's fourteen short stories of Georgia plantation life have much to recommend them in their humorous shrewdness. The title-story is the best. It is an account of a little negro child who will not learn to walk and is finally taught through the kind offices of a large "razor-backed" pig. "The Campaign of Potiphar McCray" will delight Northern boys and girls with its story of three little rebels who ran away to join the Confederate army, but were finally betrayed by Potiphar McCray, their donkey. There is a pleasant out-of-doors flavor to all Colonel Johnston's stories, and his pictures of Southern life are so vivid that the book is sure to have a broadening influence on the minds of the children into whose hands it falls.— Lothrop Publishing Co. $1.00.

Piokee and Her People.

Piokee is a lovely and lovable Indian girl, who was left when an infant at the ranch of a cultivated and well-to-do family. She has slight indications of white blood in her veins through some remote ancestor, and consequently her native delicacy and practical sense may thus be accounted for. While everything is going on happily in her home, where she is cherished and in every way treated as a daughter, she is suddenly brought into contact with a squaw who claims to be her stepmother and requests her to return to her father, Cold Blast, whom Piokee had believed to be dead. The girl has a sensitive conscience and lofty ideas about duty, and is soon made to feel that she must at once leave her home of refinement and comparative wealth and cast in her lot with her own people. She accepts the hardships and squalid conditions of savage life, and begins at once the work of educating her own family and helping them to a higher plane. After stating that the story is far fetched, it must be admitted that theoretically it is commendable, and the outcome is felicitous. Piokee is a charming and noble character, and her story suggests a possible solution of the Indian question. Of course there is a thread of romance, and the ideals are of a desirable even if unattainable kind. The author is Mrs. Theodora R. Jenness. The pretty illustrations are by Miss Maria L. Kirk. — D. Lothrop Co. $1.50.

Parents and others who wish to get the most for their money in the way of books for the whole family of children need not hesitate when they can procure for three dollars the large bound volume of Harper's Young People, with its eight hundred illustrations, its serials by Captain King, Kirke Munroe, and others, and its admirable variety of reading matter of all kinds; or the two smaller volumes of St. Nicholas for four dollars, with Mr. Kipling's Jungle Stories, Tom Sawyer Abroad, Decatur and Somers, and a long list of other stories, sketches, and poems by the foremost authors of the day. — The Century Co.

The Little Lady of the Horse, by Evelyn Raymond, is a well-told story of Steenie Calthorp, who is brought up on a California ranch and is taught many secrets in the art of horsemanship by old Sutro and "Kentucky Bob." Later she works marvels in horse-breaking and wins a race as jockey. It is hardly needful, however, to make her an heiress in the last chapter.— Roberts Brothers. $1.50.

Mr. John Bonner's Child's History of the United States was one of the books which many children enjoyed a generation ago. His Child's History of Spain, with its many illustrations, shows the advance made in books for children in the interval. Mr. Bonner has a picturesque subject here, and he does justice to it. The pictures are numerous and excellent. — Harper & Brothers. $2.00.

Jolly Good Times To-Day, which Mary P. Wells Smith tells of, are not the pleasures of Hackmatack, which her previous books have described, but those of city children in Cincinnati. Her interesting chronicle of Amy Strong and her friends justifies her faith in the bright, intelligent, kind, and generous children of this generation. — Roberts Brothers. $1.25.

A new edition of Mr. Hezekiah Butterworth's informing little volume, The Great Composers, is issued by the Lothrop Publishing Co. It has been thoroughly reëdited and a new chapter, on a number of "Other Great Composers," added. — $1.00.

BOOKS FOR BOYS.

In the Wilds of the West Coast.

Mr. J. Macdonald Oxley knows how to write for boys. This bulky volume of some four hundred pages is full of adventures such as might have happened in the places and at the time he writes about. The west coast is that of North America, away up by Puget Sound and Vancouver's Island. The events took place fifty years ago, and the prominent characters, to whom we are introduced in the first chapter, are Mr. Douglas, chief factor of the Hudson Bay Company, and Rae Finlayson, son of an officer of the company. Rae is the hero, a lad of fifteen, tall, strong, manly, and trustworthy, into whose life remarkable experiences had already come. He is here of the party on board the steamer on their way to found Fort Victoria. There are perils by sea and land, encounters with wild beasts, a strange episode with a whale and a whirlpool, adventures among the Indians, an Indian war, the capture of Rae, and his rescue by a Russian vessel on the way to Sitka, a very exciting time among the seals, and lastly a hunt for the sea otter. It is a fresh, bright, enjoyable book, and no boy into whose hands it falls will be willing to lay it aside till he has finished the last chapter. — Thomas Nelson & Sons. $1.50.

Decatur and Somers.

Much credit is due Miss M. Eliot Seawell for this admirable story of certain brilliant episodes in our naval history. Of all her books on her favorite subject this is perhaps the best. The friendship of the two young officers was as beautiful and tender as anything related in history. Both were noble souls cast in heroic mold. One gave himself up early for his country, going to almost certain death with Spartan fortitude; the other, no less a hero, lived for his country and made his name illustrious. The narratives of the sinking of the French privateer, the capture of the Tripolitan private, the destruction of the Philadelphia, and the exploding of the "infernal" at Tripoli are told in an extremely spirited manner. Every boy should read this book, and also make himself familiar from other sources with the lives of two more of the young heroes of our navy and with the stirring exploits and momentous deeds of those trying but glorious years in our national life. — D. Appleton & Co. $1.00.

The Two Clippers.

There is no lack of adventure in this story of New South Wales, by F. Frankfort Moore. During the first half the scene is laid at a sheep run, where Carew, one of the shearers, is observed by Bob, the overseer's son, to bear tattoo marks answering to those of a noted bushranger for whose arrest a large reward is offered. From the outset Bob believes in the innocence which the man asserts, and his shrewd Scotch father soon shares this conviction. After various adventures Carew is arrested, but it quickly transpires that the real criminal has already been captured, and Carew is set free to enjoy rest, friendship, and the fortune which an uncle in England has left him. The story is graphically told and has several illustrations. — E. & J. B. Young & Co. $1.50.

The Vast Abyss.

Under this title George Manville Fenn tells at leisurely length the story of a boy who helped his uncle make a telescope. In the family of another uncle the orphan lad had known injustice enough to make him appreciate the kind, straightforward treatment accorded him in the new home. His love for scientific work was easily aroused, and his sturdy patience served him well in grinding glasses. Moreover, he had adventures with the elements, with rascally relatives, and with a rowdyish young neighbor, which fully tested his manliness. He was a brave fellow, and when the author leaves him he was "well on the high road to making himself one of those quiet, retiring, scientific men of whom" England "has such good cause to be proud." — E. & J. B. Young & Co. $2.00.

Sailor Jack, the Trader.

So many stories of the Civil War have been related that Harry Castlemon in the present tale of his War series is fortunate in localizing the events he narrates among the comparatively unfamiliar Southern plantations. He tells us of the lads who were too lazy to join the army voluntarily, and so were drafted; of Southern prisons and stockades; of blockade runners; of the Union feeling among some of the planters; of the desire of nearly all of them to sell their cotton at the North; and of "Sailor Jack's" skill in avoiding arrest and his success in transporting cotton to New York. The book is written with spirit and vigor, and will find eager readers among boys, who will learn from it the important part which cotton played in the war.—Porter & Coates. $1.25.

The Captain's Boat.

A good, breezy, healthy book for boys is Mr. W. O. Stoddard's story of The Captain's Boat. The boy hero is a plucky, sensible fellow, who knows how to hold his own in the various wild adventures which befall him. Boys are rarely critical of inherent probability, so we can venture to recommend the book, although in older folk it may cause some misgivings. However, with a good moral tone and plenty of "snap" in it, there is no reason why any boy should not be delighted with such a book if Santa Claus brings it down the chimney.—The Merriam Co. $1.50.

In the Heart of the Rockies.

This story, by G. A. Henty, lacks the historical background which is one feature of his books generally; and to older readers, at least, it has not the interest that centers round the adventures of Wulf the Saxon, another of this year's triad of books, but it is only proper to say that boys might not all agree in this verdict. Its scenes are wrought out in the cañons of the Colorado River. Friendly and unfriendly Indians, hunters, and miners are among the characters, though the central one is, as almost invariably in Mr. Henty's books, an English lad of pluck and manly spirit. The incidents are not improbable, and there is a certain dignity about Mr. Henty's writings that keeps them from sensationalism. He always studies the geography and history of a region well before accepting it as the scene for a story, and in the present case he is much indebted to Mr. Baillie-Grohman, who has paid several visits to this part of the country. The official report of Major Powell, published by the United States Government, furnished him with the details of the difficult and dangerous passage through the cañons.—Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

Endeavor Chris'.

This story, by Isabella T. Hopkins, is sure to find a welcome among the members of the Christian Endeavor Society, for it relates in a pleasant manner the experiences of a little waif. Sheltered from his birth by kindly farming people, he takes, even from his earliest years, as his motto, "I'll endeavor." It does not seem to us probable that any child will endeavor so early and continuously as does Chris', but if he can it is well for him and his friends. Certainly the story sets forth in excellent manner the effect of the motto which all the Christian world honors. The plot of the tale is interesting, and the shrewd characters of the country folk are humorously depicted.—Cong. S. S. and Pub. Society. $1.50.

The recommendations of Chasing a Yacht, the last new book by James Otis, are its rapid movement, its exciting incidents, and the general interest of the plot; its drawbacks are the general low tone of conversation and the disagreeable characters to whom we are introduced. Of course there are cowards in real life as well as boys of manly spirit; there are thieves and tramps as well as honest boys capable of earning their own living. Unless there is adequate reason for associating with the former, however, it is wiser to let them alone. Mr. Otis is one of the writers for boys who turn out a great number of stories, caring chiefly to produce something readable, in which aim he certainly succeeds.—Penn Publishing Co.

Col. Thomas W. Knox comes to the front each Christmas season with a new installment of his Boy Travellers. This time they are In the Levant, and with a course that takes in Algiers, Carthage, Athens, Constantinople, Smyrna, and Beyrout. There is no lack of interest or of information on the road.—Harper & Brothers. $3.00.

Oliver Optic gives his boy readers less information and more adventure than Colonel Knox, as a rule, and his Asiatic Breezes, the fourth volume in the second series of the All-Over-the-World Library, is no exception. The Suez Canal and Mohammed are two of the many topics touched upon. Brother Against Brother, by the same writer, is the second volume in the army series of the Blue and the Gray. It is a story of Kentucky at the beginning of the late war, and relates some of the more striking incidents of that troubled time.—Lee & Shepard. Each, $1.25.

FAIRY TALES.

The children of all ages who rejoice to hear tales of fairyland have half a dozen volumes set before them this year which will insure them much delight. Mr. Andrew Lang, having edited other chromatic collections, brings forth the Yellow Fairy Book this season; the tales are collected from Russian, German, French, Icelandic, Red Indian, and other sources, and Mr. H. J. Ford has drawn many spirited illustrations; in its general make-up the volume resembles its predecessors from the same hand. (Longmans, Green & Co. $2.00.)—Mr. Joseph Jacobs also presents a fourth collection in More Celtic Fairy Tales, but protests that it is his last work in this direction. The stories begin with No. XXVII, in continuation of Celtic Fairy Tales, and the illustrations by Mr. John D. Batten and the notes by Mr. Jacobs are on the same level of excellence which the three earlier volumes maintained. Mr. Jacobs' editing is of such a kind that mature people interested in folklore will find his volumes profitable, while the information is not allowed to interfere with the stories proper. (G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75.)—The Golden Fairy Book is a neat volume with one hundred and ten illustrations by H. R. Millar, which show force and individuality. The stories, which are of some length, as a rule, are taken from George Sand, Jókai, Dumas, Voltaire, Lermontov, Laboulaye, Souvestre, and Servian, Italian, Hungarian, Russian, and South African sources; it is a collection well worth examining even by those who have already a small library of fairy tales. (D. Appleton & Co. $2.00.)—The Fairy Tales from the Arabian Nights, which E. Dixon has edited and Mr. Batten illustrated, have a more special character than the preceding collections. The volume is published by J. M. Dent & Co. in London—a sufficient testimony to its typographical beauty; Mr. Batten has a narrower range here than usual, and he does not strike us as being so successful as he commonly is. (G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.00.)—Mr. E. A. Lemann's illustrations to the seventeen Fairy Tales by Hans Christian Andersen in Madame Chatelain's translation are finished and graceful, and the volume makes a step of importance in the picturing of Andersen's tales, which have been comparatively neglected by artists. (J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.50.)—The Story of Alexander is one of the most artistic volumes in fairy or folklore issued this season. It gives a modernization for children of the favorite legend of the great conqueror which assumed so many shapes in post-classical and mediæval times. Mr. Robert Steele has told the story well, and Mr. Fred Mason has supplied appropriate illustrations; one may, however, be a little doubtful of the profitableness of such a mixture of fact and fable for children. (Macmillan & Co. $2.50.)—Tales of the Punjab, told by the people and collected by Flora Annie Steel, is a volume resembling Mr. Jacobs' collections. Mrs. Steel gives the text, which is suitable for children's reading, and Major R. C. Temple adds notes, an analysis of the tales on the Folklore Society's plan, and a survey of the incidents in modern Indian Aryan folktales. This matter makes the book one of much value to folklorists. It is published in the handsome Cranford series style.—Macmillan & Co. $2.00.

Two dainty little books, bound in silk and tied with a red ribbon, open the Banbury Cross series, prepared for children by Grace Rhys. The first contains the "Sleeping Beauty" and "Dick Whittington," and the second "Jack the Giant-Killer" and "Beauty and the Beast." R. Anning Bell has made the striking illustrations.—Macmillan & Co. Each, 50c.

BOOKS FOR LITTLE ONES.

When Molly Was Six is a little volume of stories—one for each month—which Miss Eliza Orne White has brought together from her earlier and later work. Molly is a sweet and natural child, and other little girls will be profited by reading of her sayings and doings.—Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.

In The Child Amy, on the other hand, Miss Julia Magruder has described one of those children who are, happily, as impossible as they are undesirable. This particular little girl is a miracle of wisdom at seven, and at eleven she is positively antique. She discourses piously and morally at both ages to old and young, and at the end of the book she declaims like an actress. It is needless to say that a writer capable of this sort of character virtually engages her Amy at eleven, and we have that worst sort of volume for small girls—the kind which teaches them their self-sufficiency and hurries them into love-making at an age when dolls and games occupy the thoughts of natural children.—Lothrop Publishing Co. $1.50.

Dodd, Mead & Co. have reprinted in fine style Mrs. Phelps-Ward's story, first issued some thirty years ago, Gypsy Breynton. It would be interesting to mark the difference in tone between two generations of children's books as here exemplified, but we can only say that Mrs. Ward's hand seems to us to have gained much in cunning by practice, and that this minute chronicle of a little girl's doings tempts one to wish again that all so-called books for children were abolished, and that boys and girls could be brought up on the more nourishing food of good literature for men and women adapted, if need be, to the child's comprehension. — $1.50.

Miss Beatrice Harraden has revised a story written five years ago — Things Will Take a Turn — which is based upon actual persons, if not a "true story" altogether. It is one of the best books for little girls that we have met for a long time. Rosie Burnley, or "Childie," her grandad, the old secondhand bookseller, Mr. Jones the bird fancier, and the other characters from higher life are set forth in a way that reminds one of Mrs. Burnett at her best. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.

Mr. Joel Chandler Harris tells in nineteen chapters what the children saw and heard in the queer country of Little Mr. Thimblefinger. The stories gathered here are from three sources, he says — the negroes, Middle Georgia folklore derived from England, and his own invention. Mr. Rabbit and Mrs. Meadows are prominent characters again, and Mr. Herford is the sympathetic illustrator.— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.00.

Mr. Oliver Herford's Artful Anticks is a collection, mainly from St. Nicholas, of his amusing verses and his still more amusing pictures concerning various members of the animal world. The verses are so bright and the drawings so happy that the parent reading these pieces to the little ones will get almost as much pleasure from the reading as they.— Century Co. $1.00.

Little Miss Faith, by Grace Le Baron, reminds one not a little in its story of Miss Harraden's book, but it is slighter and lacks the simplicity of tone which gives charm to Things Will Take a Turn. Miss Le Baron is evidently not a born story-teller for children, but one who tries to write down to them. — Lee & Shepard. 75c.

Father Gander's Melodies, which Adelaide F. Samuels has written "for Mother Goose's grandchildren," is a collection of nonsense verse for the small people that will certainly please them if the good opinion of their elders is a test of their merit. Lilian Trask Harlow's illustrations are very taking. — Roberts Brothers. $1.25.

Mr. P. S. Newell, whose Topsys and Turvys was a successful novelty of last season, has got out a new volume of them this year. It is not only twice as large, but almost twice as good as its predecessor. About half of these very ingenious pictures are in color, and the rest in single tints. — The Century Co. $1.00.

Miss A. G. Plympton's tale of "Silly Willy," the factory boy, and the manufacturer's little daughter, Rags and Velvet Gowns, is one which should touch the hearts of the rich employer as well as of his children. — Roberts Brothers. 50c.

Our Little Ones' Annual for this year is the usual good assortment of stories, sketches, and poetry for the small folk, admirably illustrated. It is one of the best of miscellanies for young children. — Estes & Lauriat. $1.75.

FICTION.

Lillian Morris and Other Stories.

Of all short blood-curdling stories — we make no exception — "Yamyol," in this new collection by Sienkiewicz, seems to us the most horrible. It is condensed into a dozen short pages, but written with awful intensity and with marvelous power. The end is a complete and hideous surprise. This little tale is a masterpiece of literary work, and its effect on the reader extraordinary. All the stories are remarkable and all are desperately sad. "Lillian Morris" is a tale of the early California days, and describes one of the long, wearisome journeys over land by stage. As a love story it has a touch of Turgeneff's exquisite sentiment, and Lillian's character suggests Turgeneff's Lisa. These tales by the great Polish novelist belong to a very high order of fiction. He has much in common with the great Russian novelists, but he is more passionate than Tolstoï and more vigorous than Turgeneff. Of the art of writing a short story Sienkiewicz is thoroughly master. — Little Brown & Co. $1.25.

A Hill-Top Summer.

Alyn Yates Keith is the nom de guerre of a New Haven woman, the wife of Governor Morris. Her Spinster's Leaflets, as well as the chapters in this little book, were first published in the New York Evening Post. She has a keen sense of the humor and pathos of New England country life, and some of the character sketches suggest Miss Wilkins. The story is a description of a summer's sojourn in an isolated little town where all the inhabitants had romantic histories — if the visitor had only the discerning eye to read them underneath the rough exteriors. The desolation and isolation of the tiny village and the narrow, stunted life of the inhabitants are admirably depicted. Mrs. Morris has a charming style, always picturesque and sometimes epigrammatic. She reads the hearts of her characters and makes heroes and heroines of them in the truest sense. The little vignettes which wind themselves around some of the pages are delicate and appropriate. The book is a real addition to the library of New England fiction. The writer knows thoroughly the virtues and the defects of a primitive New Englander, and recognizes the pettiness as well as the picturesqueness of New England village life. — Lee & Shepard. $1.25.

The People of the Mist.

The best possible criticism on Mr. Rider Haggard's last story is in the dedication. He says, "I dedicate this effort of 'primeval and troglodyte imagination,' this record of barefaced and flagrant adventure, to my godsons, in the hope that therein they may find some store of healthy amusement." Not one of his previous novels, not even She, is so fraught with "troglodyte imagination" and "flagrant adventure" as The People of the Mist. Miraculous escapes, wonderful snake-worshiping tribes, and rubies and sapphires by the eight-pound sack are the "store of healthy amusement" provided. Nothing but the unexpected happens in Mr. Haggard's stories, but we cannot harden our hearts to carp at this book on the score of unreality, in gratitude for the thrilling hours of suspense caused us by the endless perils of the hero and the heroine. Whether this is really "healthy amusement" for boys we cannot decide, but all rules are relaxed in the holiday season. — Longmans, Green & Co. $1.00.

The Lilac Sunbonnet.

Mr. S. R. Crockett's third venture into the field of fiction differs from both its predecessors. It has not quite the humor of The Stickit Minister, neither does it possess the wild and picturesque interest which made The Raiders a remarkable book in its way; still it is a good story. Its theme is love, pure and simple — the inception and growth of a passionate affection between a divinity student and a country maiden, with few stirring incidents; just a little counterplot of jealousy to defer and avert precipitate felicity, and that due admixture of theology without which a Scotch romance would not seem complete. There is a good deal of kissing:

> "Now go on; tell me what else you see," said Winsome.
>
> "Your lips" — began Ralph, and paused.
>
> "No, six is quite enough," said Winsome after a little while, mysteriously. She had only two and Ralph only two, yet she said, with little grammar and no sense at all, "six is enough."
>
> But a voice from quite other lips came over the rising background of scrub and tangled thicket.
>
> "Gang on coorting," it said; "I'm no lookin', an' I cannot see onything onyway."
>
> It was Jock Gordon!

— D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

The Burial of the Guns.

This collection of short stories is written with Mr. Thomas Nelson Page's usual cleverness and nerve. There are half a dozen tales in the compilation, all but one of them distinctly Southern in motif and inspiration. The second, which gives its title to the volume, is equally powerful and pathetic. It is the story of an artillery battery, four twelve-pound Napoleons and two three-inch Parrotts, named by their adoring gunners the Evangelists, the Eagle, and the Pet. Lee's surrender found the battery high up on the Blue Ridge guarding a pass, and when the fatal news, at first disbelieved, of the final failure of the Southern cause is confirmed, and the surrender of the battery is demanded, the company hold a sort of funeral service, tumble the guns down a precipice into the river, and silently disband for their distant homes. It is an unusual story. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

The Cook and the Captive.

This story, which its author, Miss Charlotte M. Yonge, vouches for as "literally true in every point," stands on the authority of a contemporary author, St. Gregory, Bishop of Tours. It carries us far back in point of time to the early part of the sixth century, when France was Gallo-Roman and Christian civilization in its precarious infancy. The hero of the tale is the young Attilus, grandson of Bishop Gregory himself, who was claimed as a hostage by Hildebert, king of the Western Franks, and by him presented as part slave, part ward, to Hunderik, a half heathen chieftain living on the confines of the Burgundian principality. When the cities were yielded up for which the boy was held as hostage, Hunderik refused to part with him except in exchange for an impossible ransom, and in the end young Attilus owed his freedom to the courage of his grandfather's cook, a Moorish slave, who bravely penetrated the wild fastness where he was imprisoned and effected his escape. — Thomas Whittaker. $1.25.

P'tit Matinic' and Other Monotones is a dainty little volume of sketches with more than thirty drawings and decorations by the author, Mr. George Wharton Edwards. The tiny volume is bound in full sheep, with a design in embossed gold stamping. Most of the sketches were made on the coast of Nova Scotia, and both the descriptions and the drawings are cleverly executed. The ability to draw a picture and the ability to tell a story seem to go together often nowadays. "Old Grimes' Masterpiece" is more than a sketch, and shows that the writer can be pathetic as well as picturesque. The collection will make an attractive little Christmas present. — Century Co. $1.00.

NEW YORK LETTER.

ONE of the New York evening newspapers published twenty-four columns of book advertisements a day or two ago, and will probably have thirty columns or more on the day when this issue of the LITERARY WORLD appears. In round numbers it may be supposed that in the aggregate the twenty-four columns alluded to cost about nineteen hundred dollars; this sum for a single issue of one paper! Comment is unnecessary as to the condition of the book trade here.

Mr. Howells happened in at the New York office of Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. the other day, I am told, and was introduced to a gentleman, also there by accident, who expressed himself as being under great obligations to the novelist. "You see, Mr. Howells," he explained, "unconsciously you saved me from being mobbed last Sunday night. I was interested in one of the free lectures given to the people of the East Side, and took a prominent part in arranging for a discourse on Venice, which was billed for one of the Bowery theaters. When I reached the playhouse, rather late, it was jammed to the dome with about 2,400 people, who were getting restive. The stereopticon man was on hand with his pictures, but at the last moment the lecturer sent word he was ill. Knowing the audience, this sudden announcement threw me into a cold perspiration; but I sent out a messenger, who brought back a copy of your Venetian Days, and I read four chapters to the audience, which gave wild applause from time to time. If it hadn't been for your book I might have been mobbed." I cannot vouch for this story, but it is going the rounds and doubtless has at least a basis of truth.

Mr. Oliver Herford, the artist, who has been growing into note gradually, and his friends believe securely, has returned to New York after spending two months in Boston.

Mr. Talbot, formerly of the Railway Age, has concluded arrangements, I understand, to bring out the first number of his new Magazine of Travel on December 15. The editor is Mr. Frank Chaffee, author of Idle Verses Idly Writ and Bachelor's Buttons. Both men are widely and favorably known in the publishing business. The idea of the new magazine seems original. The title tells of its peculiar field, and it will be copiously illustrated, principally from photographs. The first number is anticipated with interest.

The Napoleonic craze has swept beyond the realms of literature. Dealers in works of art tell me they are having an unprecedented number of orders for busts and portraits of the Little Corporal.

Dr. A. Conan Doyle's farewell was said at a dinner given him in the Aldine Club the evening of December 7. Mr. Hamilton Mabie, chairman of the entertainment committee, presided and introduced the guest of the evening. Among the gentlemen present were Sir Henry Cunningham, Dr. Henry Van Dyke, Edgar W. Nye, Noah Brooks, David Christie Murray, F. Hopkinson Smith, Thomas Nelson Page, and the Rev. Dr. W. S. Rainsford.

H. E. ROOD.

PERIODICALS.

The November issue of the Portfolio is a monograph on "Albert Dürer's Engravings" by Lionel Cust. It is finely illustrated with four plate reproductions of the "Madonna with the Monkey," the "Nativity," the "Little White Horse," and the "Portrait of Pirkheimer," and many illustrations in the text. "The minds of those who study Dürer's work," says Mr. Cust in conclusion, "should be open and unbiased. In that case there cannot but be conveyed to them the lesson which truth, purity, and sanctity of purpose are ever bound to teach." Mr. Hamerton's guiding hand will be missed from the Portfolio henceforth.

Professor Wünnenberg's charming picture, "Wooing," is the photogravure frontispiece to the Magazine of Art for December. The etching by F. Walker is the beautiful "Vale of Avoca." Mr. R. H. Sherard estimates "James Tissot and His Life of Christ" more highly than the illustrations appear to us to warrant. C. Wilhelm writes of "Art in the Ballet," and Hélène L. Postlethwaite of "Some Noted Women Painters," whose portraits are given. Edwin Bale, R.I., describes "A Memorable Visit to La Verna," and Victor Champiez gives the first part of "English 'Arts and Crafts' from a Frenchman's Point of View."

In Macmillan's for November is begun a new novel by an anonymous author, "The Herons," which presents many complications at the outset, but promises to be interesting. "Plunket's Widow," a bright short story, is the only other contribution of a fictitious character. Two historical articles are "The Japanese Invasion of Corea in 1592" and the second of those on "The Rebellion in the West Indies," ending the Maroon War. Gibbon's career as a soldier has been investigated and made the most of in a paper of eight pages. "An Old World Parson," Reverend Henry Smith, the silver-tongued, is the subject of a congenial and admiring writer. In "Traced Homeward" an attempt is made to find the starting point of many phrases in current use. "The Year's Golf" is of value to those who understand that popular game, and "Our New Treaty with Japan" is of special interest at the present time.

Bank-President A. B. Hepburn, a very high authority, expounds and indorses "The 'Baltimore Plan' of Currency Reform" in the December Forum. Col. T. A. Dodge considers "The Death of the Czar and the Peace of Europe." The late Mr. Hamerton's autobiographical paper describes "The Chief Influences on My Career." Col. C. D. Wright answers the question, "May a Man Conduct His Business as He Please?" with an assertion of the qualified rights of society in the case. His incidental recommendation of profit sharing as one remedy for labor troubles is followed by Mr. L. R. Ehrich's presentation of "Stock-Sharing as a Preventive." "The Reading Habits of the English People," "Is the West Discontented?" "New Story-Tellers and the Doom of Realism," and two views of "Christian Missions" are the more important articles that remain.

An article of much general interest in the Yale Review for November is Prof. A. T. Hadley's on "Recent Tendencies in Economic Literature," in which he deprecates the tendency to methods which Adam Smith and Mill never used. "The Manchester Ship Canal" is treated by Edward Porritt, and "Currency and State Banks" by Mr. Alfred L. Ripley, who indorses the "Baltimore Plan" in the main.

In the October issue of the valuable Quarterly Journal of Economics Prof. F. W. Taussig writes ably of "The Wages-Fund Doctrine at the Hands of the German Economists;" Prof. C. F. Dunbar treats "The New Income Tax" judicially; D. M. Frederiksen shows the state of "Mortgage Banking in Germany;" Alice Rollins Brewster expounds "Early Experiments with the Unemployed" in the England of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries; and Professor Taussig, again, sums up the results of "Recent Discussions of Railway Management in Prussia."

In the Fortnightly Review for November Mr. A. Henry Savage-Landor treats of "Burning Questions of Japan;" Arthur W. Rücker has an appreciation of the life and work of "Hermann von Helmholtz;" "Women's Newspapers" are Miss Evelyn March Phillipps' subject; and Mr. Mallock begins a novel, "The Heart of Life."

A strong and sensible article is the Duke of Argyll's in the Nineteenth Century for November, on "Christian Socialism," and Mr. H. D. MacLeod's "Monometallist Creed" is one of the ablest statements of that doctrine that have appeared for a long time. Mr. J. Taylor Kay presents, mainly from American sources, a useful table of "The Parliaments of the World." "Babies and Monkeys" is an article by S. S. Buckman that will not please most mothers who read it.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— Charles Scribner's Sons will publish this month the American edition of Paul Bourget's Outre Mer, which is at present running in the New York Herald.

— Mr. Frank Harris, until recently editor of the Fortnightly, has purchased the Saturday Review.

— The Methodist Year Book for 1895 was issued the first week in December. It contains, in addition to the usual calendarial matter, the latest statistics of the Methodist Episcopal Church, full information regarding all their great benevolences, a notice of their many organizations and institutions, statistics of the world's Methodism, and other matters of value.

— In recognition of the distinguished services he has rendered to literature by the publication of The Dictionary of National Biography, the University of Oxford proposes to confer an honorary degree upon Mr. George Smith. Mr. Smith is the head of the firm of Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co., and was a personal friend of Thackeray, Browning, and other eminent writers.

— Prof. Jean Victor Duruy died in Paris, November 25. He was born in Paris in 1811. On June 23 1863, he was appointed minister of public instruction. He resigned this office in 1869, and was appointed a senator. He was the author of a number of works on ancient, mediæval, and modern history. He was a grand officer of the Legion of Honor and member of the Institute.

— Cassell & Co. of London are to be the publishers of The Autobiography of George Augustus Sala, which is now in an advanced state of preparation.

— William Heinemann will publish at once, in two volumes, Letters and Leaves Selected from the Journals of Edmond and Jules de Goncourt, and a dainty little volume entitled A Century of German Lyrics, translated by Mrs. Freiligrath-Kroeker.

— Lawrence & Bullen, London, will publish shortly a critical monograph on Keats by Robert Bridges, which was written as an introduction to a new edition of that poet's works to be issued by the same firm. Mr. Bridges' introduction will contain a careful study of the prosody of Keats and a critical survey of his works.

— Mrs. G. J. Romanes is engaged in writing a biography of her late husband. In this work she is assisted by Rev. Philip Waggett of Cowley, Professor Wyndham Dunston, F.R.S., the Dean of Christ Church, and some others.

— Rev. Dr. William Greenough Thayer Shedd, professor of systematic theology in Union Theological Seminary, died in New York, November 6, aged seventy-four years. Dr. Shedd was a voluminous translator, editor, and writer, the best known of whose works is Dogmatic Theology, of which the third and last volume was published a few months ago.

— Mr. William Watson's many admirers will be glad to know that he is in town again and that he has quite recovered his health. He is thinking of sharing a cottage in Buckinghamshire with a friend, but will be frequently in town this winter. The new volume of poems will be a little bulkier than his Lachrymæ Musarum. Most of the contents have appeared in the Spectator, the Yellow Book, Daily Chronicle, and Westminster Gazette. — The Bookman.

— T. Fisher Unwin has lately published a novelette entitled A Fancy Sketch, the story of a platonic friendship between a young artist and a "woman of forty;" the second volume of The Best Plays of Ben Jonson (the first volume, under Professor Herford's editorship, having already appeared in the Mermaid series, of which the present volume forms the last number); and The Story of the Expansion of South Africa, by the Hon. A. Wilmot, a member of the Cape legislature and a friend of Mr. Rhodes.

— The title of the new book by Mrs. Everard Cotes (Sara Jeannette Duncan), which is to be published shortly by D. Appleton & Co., is Vernon's Aunt. It was received with much favor on its simultaneous serial publication in this country and England.

— Messrs. Flood & Vincent, Meadville, Penn., announce for early publication a novel entitled 6,000 Tons of Gold, by Mr. H. R. Chamberlain, London correspondent of the New York Sun. This story, which deals in a most original way with the pressing monetary problems of today, recently ran through two editions in four days upon its publication in London.

— The Presidents of the United States is the title of an elaborate illustrated volume written by John Fiske, Carl Schurz, William E. Russell, D. C. Gilman, John Hay, and others, which is to be published immediately by D. Appleton & Co.

— G. P. Putnam's Sons add to their previous announcements the following works: The Women of Shakespeare, by Louis Lewes, Ph.D., translated from the German by Helen Zimmern; Three Men of Letters, comprising studies of George Berkeley (Bishop Berkeley) and his American visit, "A Great College President (Timothy Dwight of Yale), and What He Wrote," and "The Literary Strivings of Joel Barlow," by Prof. Moses Coit Tyler of Cornell University; A Buddhist Catechism, an introduction to the teachings of the Buddha Gótamo, compiled from the Holy Writings of the Southern Buddhists, with explanatory notes for the use of Europeans, by Subhadra Bhikshu; Personal Recollections of War Times, 1861–65, by Albert Gallatin Riddle, member of the House of Representatives from the Nineteenth District of Ohio (the Cleveland District); In the Heart of the Bitter-Root Mountains, the story of "the Carlin Hunting Party," September–December, 1893, by "Heclawa;" The Relation of Religion to Civil Government in the United States, by Rev. Isaac A. Cornelison, D.D.; Force and Spirit, or the Scientific Evidence of a Supreme Intelligence, by Col. H. M. Lazelle, U.S.A.; King Arthur, a comparative study of the Arthurian epic, by the Rev. S. Humphreys Gurteen, M.A.; and The Aseptic Treatment of Wounds, by Prof. C. Schimmelbusch of the University of Berlin.

— J. G. Cupples & Co. of Boston have in press for immediate publication Cochrane's Songs from the Granite Hills of New Hampshire, an exquisite Christmas book.

— Harper & Brothers have just ready Mrs. Ritchie's Chapters from Some Unwritten Memoirs; The Christmas Hirelings, a novel, by M. E. Braddon; A Sporting Pilgrimage, by Caspar W. Whitney; Wayside Poems, by Wallace Bruce; A Bread-and-Butter Miss, by George Paston; The Royal Marine, by Brander Matthews; A Kentucky Cardinal, by James Lane Allen; An Agitator, by Clementina Black; and Volume XV of Harper's Young People. They will publish at once in book form Mr. Zangwill's The Master.

— Social Evolution, which has attained phenomenal success in this country, has gone through so many editions that the original plates are completely worn out. A new edition has therefore been printed from new type, and issued in more convenient shape for readers than the original octavo form. Benjamin Kidd, the author of Social Evolution, was essentially unknown in England before his book appeared. He was a hard-working minor official who had been active in agitation for the improvement of the condition of that class of clerks to which he belonged. Mr. Kidd was recently promoted, and now has been made Superintendent of Death-duty Statistics.

— G. P. Putnam's Sons have in preparation a History of the Fifth Army Corps, by Wm. H. Powell, Lieutenant Colonel of the United States Army. The history will be comprised in a large octavo volume, with maps, plans, and portraits, and will present a full and complete account of the movements and operations of the corps from the organization of the first division to the close of the war, together with a description of the battles in which it was engaged. The book will be printed in the same general style as the History of the Nineteenth Army Corps, issued two years back by Messrs. Putnam. The publication of the History of the Fifth Army Corps will be entered upon as soon as a sufficient number of orders for it have been secured to return the cost of the production of the edition.

— Messrs. Roberts Brothers announce for early publication The Condition of Woman in the United States, by Madame Blanc (Th. Bentzon), translated by Abby L. Alger; Cromwell's Soldier's Bible, being a reprint in facsimile of The Souldier's Pocket Bible, compiled by Edmund Calamy, and issued for the use of the Commonwealth Army in 1643, with a biographical introduction and a preface by Field Marshal the Right Hon. Viscount Wolseley, K.P., G.C.B.; and the Life and Adventures of John Gladwyn Jebb, by his widow, with an introduction by H. Rider Haggard and a portrait of Mr. Jebb.

—The weekly journal, Science, will be published after January 1 under the direction of an editorial committee, in which each of the sciences is represented by a man of science who is at the head of his department.

Authors and Their Public

In Ancient Times. A sketch of literary conditions, and of the relations with the public of literary producers, from the earliest times to the invention of printing in 1450. By GEORGE HAVEN PUTNAM, author of "The Question of Copyright," etc. Second edition. 12mo, $1.50.

The New York Times says that ". . . The book abounds in information, is written in a delightfully succinct and agreeable manner, with apt comparisons that are often humorous and with scrupulous exactness to statement."

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, New York.

NEW BOOKS.

Old and New Unitarian Belief.
By JOHN WHITE CHADWICK. Cloth, $1.50.

Messages of Faith, Hope, and Love.
Selections for Every Day in the Year from the Writings of JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE. Cloth, $1.00.

The Deeper Meaning.
By FREDERIC A. HINCKLEY. Cloth, 50 cents.

For sale by booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by

GEO. H. ELLIS, Publisher,
141 Franklin Street, Boston.

St. Nicholas

FOR YOUNG FOLKS.

Edited by Mary Mapes Dodge.

In 1895

ST. NICHOLAS will have five great serial stories, more of Rudyard Kipling's "Jungle Stories," more "Brownies," E. S. Brooks's story life of Napoleon, suggestive articles by Brander Matthews, Theodore Roosevelt, Prof. Hornaday, etc., practical papers, short stories, delightful verse. It is the greatest educator you can give a boy or girl.

A Subscription

makes the best possible Christmas gift. On and after the issue of December number we will give November number free to new subscribers. November begins the volume. A beautiful certificate sent to those who wish to use a subscription as their Christmas gift. Subscription price, $3.00.

The Christmas Number,

Sold everywhere, 25 cents, is a royal gift-book in itself, — the treat of the year. Don't fail to take home a copy.

The Bound Volume,

containing the numbers of the past year,—more than 1000 pages and nearly as many pictures, in two richly bound parts, costs $4.00.

Subscribe through dealers, or remit to

THE CENTURY CO.,
Union Square, New York.

G. P. Putnam's Sons,

27 and 29 West 23d St., New York.
(RETAIL DEPARTMENT.)

B O O K S

SEND FOR LIST OF

100

Standard Books

(Single volumes and small sets, in every department of literature),

In special leather bindings, suitable for dainty presents to cultivated people, at moderate cost.

ALSO

Catalogue (No. XI.) of Choice

English Books

(Including some rare sets and beautiful illustrated volumes), in rich bindings, for private libraries and for presents.

LANGUAGES MASTERED IN 10 WEEKS.

Part I. (8 Lessons), either language, sent for 25c.
MEISTERSCHAFT BUREAU, Boston, Mass.

FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH, ITALIAN.

NEW BOOKS

Published by

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

MEMORIALS OF ST. JAMES'S PALACE.

By EDGAR SHEPPARD, M. A., Sub-Dean of H. M. Chapels Royal, etc. 2 volumes, large 8vo. With 8 Copper Plates, 33 Full-page plates, and 34 Illustrations in the Text. Cloth, ornamental, gilt top, $10.50.

. . . It has been my object to illustrate not only the lives of Royal residents within the historic building, but also the character of the events, persons, ceremonies, and treasures of art, which in the course of more than three centuries have been more or less closely associated with the palace. . . .—From Preface.

BORDER BALLADS.

With an Introductory Essay by ANDREW LANG and 12 Etchings by C. O. MURRAY. Printed on laid paper, gilt top, half uncut, 4to ($13\frac{3}{4}$ x $8\frac{3}{4}$), $7.00.

(750 copies of this book have been printed, of which 200 have been secured for the United States.)

HISTORY OF THE COMMONWEALTH AND PROTECTORATE, 1649-1660.

By SAMUEL RAWSON GARDINER, M. A., Hon. LL. D., Edinburgh, Fellow of Merton College, Honorary Student of Christ Church, etc. Vol. I., 1649-1651. With 14 Maps. 8vo, $7.00.

"Precision, lucidity, accuracy, are the qualities of Dr. Gardiner's style. The impartiality, the judicial temper, which distinguish Dr. Gardiner among historians, are conspicuous in this new volume from its first page to its last." —Daily News.

NUGGETS IN THE DEVIL'S PUNCH BOWL,

And Other Australian Tales.

By ANDREW ROBERTSON, author of "The Kidnapped Squatter." Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.25.

THE REPOSE OF FAITH:

In View of Present-Day Difficulties.

By the Rev. ALEXANDER J. HARRISON, B.D., Lecturer of the Christian Evidence Society, author of "Problems of Christianity and Skepticism." Crown 8vo, $2.00.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price.

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.,
PUBLISHERS,
15 East 16th Street, New York.

WILD FLOWERS IN ART AND NATURE.

A new and beautiful work by J. C. L. SPARKS, the renowned art instructor, principal of the National Art Training School, South Kensington, London. Valuable instruction on the selection of materials and use of colors, and full instructions for reproducing the twenty-one beautiful lifelike plates, showing our most valued wild flowers. These plates are of the highest grade of art printing and are from water colors by H. G. Moore, who made the illustrations for Sander's great work on orchids. The botanical classification and text telling us of these flowers in history, in prose and in poetry are by F. W Burbidge, University Botanical Gardens, Dublin. In six parts, $1.00 each, the whole, when bound, making a beautiful table book.

THE ART OF ILLUSTRATION.

A book that a refined person will instinctively pick up and enjoy. It gives the whole story of the modern process of illustration for books and newspapers. There are many examples from the work of the masters of pen drawing, including Sir John Gilbert and Daniel Vierge. This is a decidedly valuable book to all engaged in drawing for illustration or in making illustrations by process. Price $3.50.

If your dealer has not got these books, write to us for them. Sent on receipt of price, postpaid.

HUDSON IMPORTING CO.,
19 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address

Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

THE

POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY

FOR DECEMBER.

Athletics for City Girls. By MARY TAYLOR BISSELL, M.D.

Shows how girls shut up among brick walls can maintain their health.

The Need of Educated Men. By President DAVID STARR JORDAN.

A word of stimulus and encouragement for all who are fearful about the future of society.

Pithecoid Man. (Illustrated.) By Professor E. P. EVANS.

Shows how the "missing link" and his family probably looked.

Studies of Childhood. IV. The Child's Thoughts about Nature. By JAMES SULLY, M.A., LL.D.

Contains very many quaint and curious ideas.

The Economic Theory of Woman's Dress. By Dr. THORSTEIN VEBLEN.

A novel lesson in political economy.

OTHER ARTICLES:

RESPONSIBILITY IN CRIME FROM THE MEDICAL STANDPOINT (illustrated); THE UNIVERSITY AS A SCIENTIFIC WORKSHOP; SHINTO, THE OLD RELIGION OF JAPAN; THE ANCIENT OUTLET OF LAKE MICHIGAN; THE CHEMISTRY OF SLEEP; THE GEOLOGY OF NATURAL SCENERY; GEOLOGIES AND DELUGES; SKETCH OF ZADOC THOMPSON (with Portrait).

EDITOR'S TABLE; LITERARY NOTICES; POPULAR MISCELLANY; NOTES.

50 cents a number; $5.00 a year.

D. APPLETON & CO., NEW YORK.

The Gift of the Year

IS A

HOLLINGS LAMP.

XMAS LAMPS

IN

Dresden China, Old Delft, Baccarat Glass and China, Terra Cotta, Wrought Iron, Antique and Bright Silver, Fine Japanese Bronze, Old Brass, Ormolu, Cut Glass, and Onyx.

FINE FRENCH GLOBES and SHADES TO MATCH.

Exclusive Styles. Moderate Prices.

R. Hollings & Co.,
Importers and Manufacturers
523-525 Washington Street, Boston

SENT FREE Our 16th Annual Holiday Catalogue–1894-95–of Choice Books, suitable for presentation or for the library, at 25 to 50 per cent. reduction from publishers' prices. Send your address now and have a copy mailed to you free.

ESTES & LAURIAT, Boston.

NEW GIFT BOOKS.

The handsomest of the season.

NAPLES: THE CITY OF PARTHENOPE and its environs. By CLARA ERSKINE CLEMENT. Illustrated with 20 full-page plates in photogravure of scenes in and around Naples. Small 8vo, handsome binding. $3.00.

A new companion volume to LILY OF THE ARNO, GENOA THE SUPERB and QUEEN OF THE ADRIATIC.

THE SALON OF 1894. The new volume of the greatest art annual of the age. Over 100 photogravure illustrations—INCLUDING 4 IN COLORS—of the prize paintings of this year's Salon exhibits. Imperial 8vo, red silk cloth, with the golden palette design. $10.00.

KENILWORTH.
HEART OF MIDLOTHIAN. Handsome new holiday editions of two of Scott's grand historical novels, edited by Andrew Lang, and magnificently illustrated in etching and photogravure by AD. LALAUZE and others. All proofs on Japanese paper. Small 8vo, handsomely bound. Each 2 vols. $6.00.

Companion editions to our issues of ROMOLA, LAST DAYS OF POMPEII, RIENZI and IVANHOE.

AMERICA'S GODFATHER. Being the story of Amerigo Vespucci. By VIRGINIA W. JOHNSON. Illustrated with 20 full-page plates in half-tone. Small 8vo, handsome cloth cover. $2.50.

The above for sale by booksellers, generally, or sent by mail, POSTPAID, on receipt of price by the publishers,

ESTES & LAURIAT, Boston.

History for Ready Reference

AND

TOPICAL READING,

By J. N. LARNED,

Ex-President American Library Association.

"Instead of a dry and colorless encyclopedic abstract it gives us the freshness and animation of the best writers in their own words; the quintessence of an extensive literature."—George Parsons Lathrop.

"It supplies what no encyclopedia known to me can give."—Mellen Chamberlain.

"I believe it will prove one of the most valuable reference books in existence."—John Fiske.

"Every paragraph in this great work was prepared by a master hand."—Dr. William Rice, Librarian, Springfield, Mass.

PUBLISHED BY THE

C. A. NICHOLS CO., Springfield, Mass.,

Sold only by Subscription. Agents Wanted.

CHARLES JACOBUS, Gen'l Agent,
36 Bromfield Street.

The Critic

A Weekly Review of Literature and the Arts.

Edited by J. B. and J. L. Gilder.

10 cents a copy. $3 a year.

"THE CRITIC has always been interesting, but of late years it has shown many signs of increasing prosperity and of widening editorial grasp. We have commented on the excellence of its literary correspondence from London, Boston, Chicago and elsewhere, and on its capital special articles. It is now publishing at frequent intervals very interesting familiar talks on books and people from the pen of Mr. Zangwill. . . . The paper shows a steady growth in the direction of a wide and intelligent gathering of literary news."—The Outlook, 5 Dec., 1894.

Bishop Potter Always Reads It.

"I am glad of this opportunity to express to you my keen sense of indebtedness for THE CRITIC. I never read it—and, no matter how much driven, I never allow it to go unread—without a fresh conviction of its rare worth.

"27 Oct., 1885. H. C. POTTER."

Dr. Storrs's High Commendation.

"You may certainly publish any words which I have heretofore written in commendation of THE CRITIC, and add to them, if you wish, that my reading of it since they were written has only hightened my esteem of its attractiveness and value. May it reach that ever larger success and influence which it deserves.

"March, 1893. RICHARD S. STORRS."

Mr. Whittier's Welcome Visitor.

"I inclose three dollars for THE CRITIC for the coming year. I find it a welcome visitor.

"16 Jan., 1887. JOHN G. WHITTIER."

"I gladly concede that New York possesses one literary treasure to which Boston has nothing comparable in the way of journalism. I mean THE CRITIC—the most impartial, as it is, in my judgment, the ablest critical journal in the land. "FREDERIC H. HEDGE.

"CAMBRIDGE, MASS."

We have reprinted from our "Trilbyana" number (Nov. 17) pen-and-ink portraits of Du Maurier and Whistler. 10 cents each. New volume (15th year) begins Jan. 1, 1895.

To Preachers and Teachers!

To any clergymen or educational workers not on our list since 1893, we will send THE CRITIC till Dec. 31, 1895, on receipt of $1.00*—one-third our regular subscription price per year.*

THE CRITIC CO., 287 Fourth Ave., New York.

RAND, McNALLY & CO.'S
LATEST BOOKS.

THE BIRTH OF A SOUL.

A Psychological Study by Mrs. A. PHILLIPS, author of "Man Proposes," "Benedicta," etc., issued in Rialto Series, price 50 cents.

"It is a book that should be bought and read and reread and pondered over."—Nashville Times.

"The incidents . . . are handled by Mrs. Phillips in a very skillful manner."—San Francisco Call.

". . . it is quite one of the best books of the year."—Boston Times.

"It is an interesting story in which love and adventure are well blended. The incidents are exciting and the characters are well drawn."—Philadelphia Call.

". . . The book is interesting and on the whole, well written."—Chicago Evening Journal.

REED'S RULES.

A Manual of Parliamentary Law. By the Hon. THOMAS B. REED, ex-Speaker of the House of Representatives. 282 pages, size 4 x 6 inches. Handy for the pocket. Price, in cloth cover, 75 cents; full seal grain flexible leather, $1.25.

"Reasonable, right, and rigid."—J. STERLING MORTON, Secretary of Agriculture.

"I commend the book most highly."—W. MCKINLEY, Governor of Ohio.

HIDDEN DEPTHS.

A Modern Study of the Social Question with a preface by the world-renowned philanthropist, WM. SHEPHERD ALLEN, which, together, with the publisher's preface, will arouse unusual interest.

RAND, McNALLY & CO.,
CHICAGO and NEW YORK.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets,	- -	$16,014,000.00
Liabilities,	-	$13,808,000.00
Surplus,	- -	$2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of TRAVEL, SPORT,

OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

NEXT YEAR'S READING

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

—Founded in 1850—

Some Attractive Features for 1895

12-Months' Serial

Hearts Insurgent, A New Novel,
By THOMAS HARDY

AN HISTORICAL NOVEL

Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc,
By the Sieur Louis de Comte (her Page and Secretary), Illustrated by F. V. du Mond.

GEORGE DU MAURIER
Will contribute Society Sketches with his Own Illustrations.

3-Months' Serial

The Princess Aline, A Novelette,
By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS
Beautifully illustrated by C. D. Gibson.

SOME AMERICAN FEATURES

Southern Papers. By Julian Ralph.
Maritime History of New York. By Thomas A. Janvier, Illustrated by Howard Pyle.
First Impressions of New York. By W. D. Howells.
Articles on American Sports. By Caspar W. Whitney.

SOME FOREIGN FEATURES

Additional Japanese Sketches. By Alfred Parsons.
Stories of Chinese Life. By Julian Ralph. Illustrated by C. D. Weldon.
India, Described and Illustrated by Edwin Lord Weeks.
Papers on Northern Africa.

SCIENCE * LITERATURE * ART

Articles on Practical Physiology by Professor Andrew Wilson, of Edinburgh. Papers on Literary Landmarks of Rome, Florence and Jerusalem, by Laurence Hutton, illustrated by Frank V. du Mond. Adolph Menzel, by Charles Waldstein. Glasgow School of Painting, by Mrs. Elizabeth Robins Pennell, etc.

SHORT STORIES

By leading authors, including Owen Wister, Mary E. Wilkins, Sarah Orne Jewett, George A. Hibbard, and Constance Cary Harrison.

Subscription, $4.00 a Year.

HARPER'S WEEKLY

1857—Thirty-eight years in the Lead—1895

THE WAR IN KOREA

Julian Ralph, the distinguished writer and correspondent, has been sent to the seat of war and there joined by C. D. Weldon, the well-known American artist, who is co-operating with Mr. Ralph in sending the WEEKLY exclusive information and illustrations.

TWO STRONG SERIALS

1. The Red Cockade. By Stanley J. Weyman.
2. The Son of His Father. A Novel of New York. By Brander Matthews.

ARMY AND NAVY

Personal Adventures of Distinguished Officers. Continuation of the series of Naval Battles. Both illustrated.

ILLUSTRATIVE RECORD WILL BE MADE OF THE MOST NOTABLE ACHIEVEMENTS IN ALL BRANCHES OF ART

THIS BUSY WORLD By E. S. Martin
POPULAR SCIENCE By Eminent Authorities
AMATEUR SPORT By Caspar W. Whitney

VIGOROUS EDITORIALS
TRENCHANT SPECIAL ARTICLES
POLITICAL CARTOONS

Some of the Contributors Who Have Made the Present Volume Notable: Hon. Carl Schurv, Gen. Lew Wallace, Henry James, Richard Harding Davis, Charles Dudley Warner, Henry Loomis Nelson, Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, T. Mitchell Prudden, M. D., Thomas A. Janvier, Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge, Prof. F. W. Taussig, Capt. Charles King, U. S. A., Poultney Bigelow, Owen Wister, Prof. N. S. Shaler, Dr. Richard Wheatley, and many others.

In Fiction.—Rudyard Kipling, Mary E. Wilkins, A. Conan Doyle, I. Zangwill, Brander Matthews, E. F. Benson, W. Clark Russell, Eva Wilder McGlasson, Maarten Maartens, and many others.

ALL IMPORTANT EVENTS PRESENTED

PROMPTLY, ACCURATELY, EXHAUSTIVELY, IN THE HIGHEST ORDER OF ILLUSTRATION AND DESCRIPTIVE TEXT

Subscription, $4.00 a Year.

HARPER'S BAZAR

Volume XXVIII

The woman who takes HARPER'S BAZAR is prepared for every occasion in life, ceremonious or informal, where beautiful dress is requisite.

Some of the particulars in which its excellence appears:

ELEGANT DESIGNS
From Worth Models.
By Sandoz and Chapuis.

OUR PARIS LETTER
By Katharine de Forest.
NEW YORK FASHIONS.

OTHER STRIKING FEATURES

DOCTOR WARRICK'S DAUGHTERS
AN AMERICAN SERIAL
By Rebecca Harding Davis

MY LADY NOBODY, an intensely exciting Novel,
By Maarten Maartens

Charming Short Stories by Brilliant writers will be given weekly

ART AND ARTISTS

The BAZAR presents constantly the finest work of American and European artists. Pictures from New York, London and Paris Exhibitions will maintain its reputation as a fine art periodical.

ESSAYS AND SOCIAL CHATS By

Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
Junius Henri Browne.
Margaret Sutton Briscoe.
Anne Frances Springsteed.
Elizabeth Bisland.
Marion Harland.
Christine Terhune Herrick.
Harriet Prescott Spofford.

HOUSEHOLD RECIPES. Articles upon cooking and service, with formulas in great variety, appear in every number.

NEW YORK SOCIETY
By "Spectator" and "Mrs. Van Twiller."

AMATEUR THEATRICALS
By Fanny Aymar Mathews, Grace Furniss and Mildred Howells.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

Questions receive the personal attention of the Editor, and are answered in the BAZAR at the earliest possible date after their receipt. This brilliant fashion weekly, with the prestige of a long and successful career, will begin its twenty-eighth year in January, 1895.

Subscription, $4.00 a Year.

HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE

A Fifty-Two Week Feast

FIVE CONTINUED STORIES

Corporal Fred By Capt. Ghas. King
The 'Scutney Mail By Sophie Swett
On an Arizona Trail By Capt. C. A. Curtis
Snowshoes and Sledges By Kirk Munroe
Afloat with the Flag By W. J. Henderson

OUR PUBLIC SERVANTS

A Day in the Senate. By Senator Lodge.
What Governors Do. By Governor Russell.
The President's Cabinet. By Theo. Roosevelt.
Representatives' Duties. By Henry C. Lodge.
Detecting Wrong-doing. By Thomas Byrnes.

SUCCESSFUL MEN'S START

Admiral Gherardi. By F. Matthews.
Lew. Wallace. By Mattie D. Britts.
Theodore Thomas. By James Barnes.
R. M. Hunt. By Richard Barry.
F. S. Church. By Barnett Phillips.

JUVENILE SOVEREIGNS
Alphonso of Spain.
Wilhelmina of Holland.
Edward of England.

GREAT STATE PAPERS
How the Gorman Bill Looks.
How Madison's Papers Look.
How Treaties Are Made.

GREAT MEN'S SONS.
Son of Charlemagne.
Son of Martin Luther.
Son of Napoleon.

GETTING ON IN LIFE

BECOMING A PHYSICIAN OR SURGEON. By Dr. J. A. WYETH.
COMING TO NEW YORK TO STUDY ART. By CLARA B. CAHILL.
BOYS WHO STUDY LAW IN EARNEST. By JAS. A. PARKER.

NEW YORK STREETS
A Waif's Luck.
Fanny Cahill.
A Tenement Girl.

WHALING ADVENTURES
Runaway Fin-Back.
Revengeful Whale.
Saved by a Carcass.

HELPFUL SCIENCE
Life in an Observatory.
Changes in the Earth.
Our Moon Knowledge.

A GREAT CITY'S LIFE

New York Water Life. By Julian Ralph.
How New York is Fed. By Chas. L. Norton.
Lighting New York. By Wm. Hemingway.

BUILDING MODERN WONDERS

The Flying Machine. By Hiram Maxim.
The Ocean Greyhound. By F. Matthews.
The Trolley-Car. By Herbert L. Webb.

LET US SEND YOU A PROSPECTUS AND SAMPLE COPY FREE

Subscription, $2.00 a Year.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

☞ Postage free to all subscribers in the United States, Canada and Mexico. Booksellers and Postmasters usually receive subscriptions. Subscriptions sent direct to the publishers should be accompanied by Post-office Money Order or Draft. When no time is specified subscriptions will begin with the current number.

LAWRENCE
Public Library,
LAWRENCE, MASS.

THE LITERARY WORLD
FORTNIGHTLY

Books, we know, are a substantial world, both pure and good

E. H. HAMES & CO. 1 SOMERSET STREET
Terms: $2.00 per year Ten cents per copy
BOSTON 29 DECEMBER 1894 Vol. XXV No. 26 Whole No. 522

MACMILLAN & COMPANY'S
Notable Books of the Year 1894.

By CHARLES DEXTER ALLEN.

American Book-Plates. A Guide to their Study, with Examples. With a bibliography by EBEN NEWELL HEWINS, Member Ex-Libris Society. Illustrated with many reproductions of rare and interesting book-plates. Imperial 16mo, gilt top, $3.50 net.

By GEORGE WILLIAM BALFOUR, M. D., LL. D.

The Senile Heart: Its Symptoms, Sequelæ, and Treatment. Illustrated. 12mo, $1.50.

By JOHN BARTLETT, A. M., Author of "Familiar Quotations."

A New and Complete Concordance, or Verbal Index to Words, Phrases, and Passages in the Dramatic Works of William Shakespeare, with a Supplementary Concordance to the Poems. 4to, half morocco, $14.00 net.

By HJALMAR HJORTH BOYESEN, Professor of Germanic Languages and Literatures at Columbia College.

A Commentary on the Writings of Henryk Ibsen. 12mo, gilt top, $2.00.

By ROBERT BROWNING.

The Poetical Works of Robert Browning. New and Complete Edition, including, in addition to the matter heretofore embraced in the 16-volume edition, ASOLANDO; together with Biographical and Historical Notes to the whole Poems. 9 vols., 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $2.25 each. The set in box, $20.00.

By GEOFFREY CHAUCER.

The "Oxford" Chaucer. The Complete Works of GEOFFREY CHAUCER. Edited, from numerous manuscripts, by Prof. W. W. SKEAT. With portrait and facsimiles. 6 vols., 8vo, $4.00 each net.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD, Author of "Saracinesca," etc.

Katharine Lauderdale. A Novel. With illustrations and a new portrait. Small 12mo, buckram, 2 vols., in box, $2.00.

By S. R. CROCKETT, Author of "The Stickit Minister," etc.

The Raiders: Being Some Passages in the Life of John Faa, Lord and Earl of Little Egypt. 12mo, $1.50.

By OLIVER FARRAR EMERSON, A. M., Ph. D., Assistant Professor of Rhetoric and English Philology in Cornell University.

The History of the English Language. 12mo, $1.25 net.

By ADOLF ERMAN.

Life in Ancient Egypt. Translated by H. M. TIRARD. Super-royal 8vo, $6.00.

By FREDERIC W. FARRAR, D. D., F. R. S., Archdeacon and Canon of Westminster, author of "The Life of Christ," "Seekers After God," etc.

The Life of Christ as Represented in Art. With photogravure frontispiece and numerous illustrations from the great masters and famous modern English painters. 8vo, gilt top, in box, $6.00.

By ALICE STOPFORD GREEN.

Town Life in the Fifteenth Century. 8vo, 2 vols., in box, $5.00 net.

By FRANK HARRIS.

Elder Conklin, and Other Stories. 12mo, $1.25.

By FREDERIC HARRISON, Author of "The Choice of Books," etc.

The Meaning of History and Other Historical Pieces. Large 12mo, gilt top, $2.25.

By GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D. C. L., Pembroke College, Oxford; editor of "Boswell's Life of Johnson."

Harvard College by an Oxonian. With new frontispiece portrait of President Eliot and other illustrations. Crown 8vo, "Crimson" cloth, gilt top, $2.25.

By BENJAMIN KIDD.

Social Evolution. New Edition. 12mo, $1.50.

By the Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M. P., Author of "The Beauties of Nature," "The Pleasures of Life," etc.

The Use of Life. 12mo, gilt top, $1.25.

By Prof. J. F. McCURDY, of the University of Toronto.

History, Prophecy, and the Monuments. I. To the Fall of Samaria, 721 B. C. 8vo, $3.00 net.

Edited by HENRY FAIRFIELD OSBORN, Da Costa Professor of Biology in Columbia College.

Columbia University Biological Series.

I. From the Greeks to Darwin. By HENRY FAIRFIELD OSBORN, Sc. D. 8vo, $2.00 net.

II. Amphioxus and the Ancestry of the Vertebrates. By ARTHUR WILLEY, B. Sc. With illustrations. 8vo, $2.50 net.

By JOSEPH PENNELL.

Pen Drawing and Pen Draughtsmen. Their Work and Their Methods. A Study of the Art To-day, with Technical Suggestions. A new and enlarged edition, with nearly 400 illustrations, including many examples from original drawings. 4to. Printed on J. Dickinson & Co.'s art paper, bound in buckram, $15.00.

By SIR WALTER SCOTT, Bart.

The Dryburgh Edition of the Waverley Novels. With numerous illustrations. Complete in 25 vols., large 12mo, cloth, each vol. containing a complete novel. $1.25 each. The set, boxed, $30.00.

⁂ Limited edition on large paper, sold only in sets. $5.00 per vol. net.

By C. ELLIS STEVENS, LL. D., D. C. L., F. S. A. (Edin.).

Sources of the Constitution of the United States Considered in Relation to Colonial and English History. New, revised, and enlarged edition. 12mo, $2.00 net.

By Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD, Author of "Robert Elsmere," etc.

Marcella. With new portrait. Small 12mo, 2 vols., in box, $2.00.

By WILLIAM WINTER, Author of "Shakespeare's England," etc.

Life and Art of Joseph Jefferson. Together with some account of his Ancestry and of the Jefferson Family of Actors. 12mo, gilt top, $2.25.

By WILHELM WUNDT.

Lectures on Human and Animal Psychology. Translated from the second and revised German edition (1892) by J. E. CREIGHTON, A. B. (Dalhousie), Ph. D. (Cornell), and E. B. TITCHENER, A. B. (Oxon.), Ph. D. (Leipzig). 8vo, cloth, $4.00 net.

Sold by all Booksellers, or sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, by MACMILLAN & COMPANY, Publishers, No. 66 Fifth Avenue, New York.

January Atlantic,

Beginning a new volume, has a very attractive list of

CONTENTS.

A Singular Life.
First chapters of a notable Serial Story by ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS.

The Survival of the American Type.
By JOHN H. DENISON.

Alcyone.
A Poem. By ARCHIBALD LAMPMAN.

Joint Owners in Spain.
A striking Short Story. By ALICE BROWN.

The Symphony Illustrated by Beethoven's Fifth in C Minor.
By PHILIP H. GOEPP.

The Meaning of an Eisteddfod.
A description and interpretation of this interesting Welsh festival, by EDITH BROWER.

A Village Stradivarius.
A Two-Part Story. Part I. By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN.

Two Important Papers on France:

1. The Genius of France.
By HAVELOCK ELLIS.

2. Gallia Rediviva.
By ADOLPHE COHU.

Soul, Wherefore Fret Thee?
Poem. By STUART STERNE.

A Wish Fulfilled.
A graphic article relating to the Japanese-Chinese War. By LAFCADIO HEARN.

Co-operative Production in the British Isles.
By J. M. LUDLOW.

The Want of Economy in the Lecture System.
By Professor JOHN TROWBRIDGE.

The Author of Quabbin.
A biographical sketch of I. H. Underwood, by J. T. TROWBRIDGE.

Mr. Winthrop's Reminiscences.

A German Appraisal of the United States.

Comment on New Books.

The Contributors' Club.

TERMS: $4.00 a year in advance, postage free.

November and December numbers free to new subscribers remitting before December 31st.

Postal Notes and Money at risk of sender. Remit by money-order, draft, or registered letter, to

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.
11 East 17th Street, New York.

The Only Authorized American Edition OF BROWNING.

Complete Poetical Works.

Riverside Edition. In 6 handsome volumes, crown octavo, gilt top. Price of the set, in cloth, $10.00.

The only authorized American Edition, complete, including Mr. Browning's latest revisions.

Browning's Works, Cooke's Browning Guide-Book, and Mrs. Orr's Life of Browning. 9 volumes, in box, $14.50.

Sold by all Booksellers.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.,
Boston.

History for Ready Reference AND TOPICAL READING.

By J. N. LARNED,
Ex-President American Library Association.

Giving History in the exact language of the most gifted authors, and culling the choicest gems of historical literature.

"I believe it will prove one of the most valuable reference books in existence."—John Fiske.

"Every paragraph in this great work was prepared by a master hand."—Dr. William Rice, Librarian, Springfield, Mass.

"It is a skillful guide into all realms and ages of history."—Pres. Fiske, Albion College, Albion, Mich.

"It is a great work."—Pres. Whitman of Colby University.

"A large part of the most precious historical treasures."—Hon. Wm. T. Harris, U. S. Commissioner of Education.

SOLD ONLY BY SUBSCRIPTION.

THE C. A. NICHOLS CO., Pubs., Springfield, Mass.
CHARLES JACOBUS, General Agent,
36 Bromfield Street, Boston.

IF YOU ARE GOING
WEST
TAKE THE RELIABLE
Hoosac Tunnel Route.
ELEGANT SLEEPING CARS

Boston to Chicago and Boston to St. Louis
WITHOUT CHANGE.

For time tables, rates of fare, etc., apply at 250 Washington St., Boston.
J. R. WATSON,
General Passenger Agent.

A Charming Biography

Maria Edgeworth.

Her Life and Letters. Edited by AUGUSTUS J. C. HARE. With a Portrait and View of her home. 2 vols., gilt top, $4.00.

These letters constitute the first adequate and public biography of one whom Macaulay regarded as the second woman of her age.—London Standard.

One of the most vivacious series of letters that have appeared for some time past.—Morning Post, London.

Sold by all Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

THE NEW YORK BUREAU OF REVISION. FOR AUTHORS: The skilled revision, the unbiased and competent criticism of prose and verse; advice as to publication. FOR PUBLISHERS: The compilation of first-class works of reference.—Established 1880. Unique in position and success. Indorsed by our leading writers. Address
Dr. Titus M. Coan, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

RARE AND OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS.
Send your lists of wants to
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston
Large Stock of Old English and American Books.
History, Poetry, Drama, Theology, Philosophy, etc.

Noah Farnham Morrison,
SIGN OF THE ARK. Rare, Old and Curious Books,
877 BROAD ST., NEWARK, N. J.
Libraries Purchased. Send for Catalogue.

NO OTHER Life Policies as liberal cost as little money, no others as cheap give as much for the money, as those of

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Best either for Family Protection or Investment of Savings. Non-forfeitable, world-wide, lowest cash rate.

Assets, - -	$16,014,000.00
Liabilities, -	$13,808,000.00
Surplus, - -	$2,206,000.00

Largest Accident Company in the World, only large one in America. Covers Accidents of

TRAVEL, SPORT,
OR BUSINESS

All around the Globe.

Paid Policy-holders, $24,500,000

JAS. G. BATTERSON, Pres't. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec'y.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Ass't Sec'y.

The Literary World

Vol XXV BOSTON 29 DECEMBER 1894 No. 26

CONTENTS

The Vagabonds 463
Wedgwood and His Pottery 463
The Golden House 464
Saint Paul and His Missions 464
Chapters from Some Unwritten Memoirs . . 464
Daniel Defoe 465
Life in Ancient Egypt 465
John March, Southerner 466
Two Books by Mrs. Bishop 466
Musicians and Music Lovers 466

Minor Notices:

Eighteenth Century Vignettes 467
In the Dozy Hours 467
Talk at a Country House 467
A Sporting Pilgrimage 467
Schools and Masters of Sculpture 467
The Colonial Cavalier 467
Cicero and the Fall of the Roman Republic . . 467

Poetry:

The Poet. Edmund Gosse 468
Thomas Bailey Aldrich. Charles W. Stevenson, 468
London Letter 468
Philadelphia Notes 469

Fiction:

The Honorable Peter Sterling 469
The Story of Lawrence Garthe 469
The Castle of the Carpathians 469
Melting Snows 470
Kensington Palace 470
A Child of the Age 470
Sibylla 470

Minor Notices:

St. Paul's Conception of Christianity 470
Sheldon's History of the Christian Church . . 471
The Messiah of the Gospels 471
The History of Marriage, Jewish and Christian . 471
The Old Church in the New Land 471
Reminiscences of a Portrait Painter 471
An Imaged World 472
The Blue Ribbon 472
Periodicals 472
News and Notes 473
Publications Received 474

THE VAGABONDS.*

ANOTHER book by Margaret L. Woods is a notable event. As daughter of Dean Bradley and wife of President Woods of Trinity College, Oxford, her life would seem to have been sheltered, but in this book, as in her earlier ones, she deals with the somber side of existence among the country folk. Her Village Tragedy was sad and powerful, and her Lyrics and Ballads, though rather "creepy," were full of genius. Now she tells us of circus life among the tents and wagons, where every one talks slang and drops all his h's. There is so much of this vernacular that it is almost surprising to find Mrs. Woods using pure English toward the end of the book when the scene changes. Never once does she lose her hold on the grimness and realism of the life she depicts. Fortunately there are other circuses than the one she describes, or Dean Hole might not speak of them so enticingly as he does in his volume of Memories just published. How Mrs. Woods obtained her inner knowledge of the ways and evasions of some shows is her secret. The plot is complicated by many characters (as is natural in a circus), each one, however, standing out in full relief. It develops unexpectedly, and the contrast of the Sister of Mercy and the hospital life to the tent life and selfish love is truly stirring and fine.

Mrs. Woods has proved herself an expert in tragedy. She neither commiserates her actors nor inflicts punishment upon them as a deus ex machina. Environment is the force which she manages with such art that vitality kindles her story into a living demonstration of the force of circumstances. Through all the sordidness of these lives there rises the might of love in developing the sister's executive ambition and causing Joe's relinquishment of the woman he loves and his benignant charity to his first wife. Surely Mrs. Woods has studied life with an artist's reticence and written of vicissitudes repugnant to taste as only a lady can. Her purpose is representation, not the furthering of any special morality save that of love.

WEDGWOOD AND HIS POTTERY.*

THE ceramic art is the gift of the Orient. All over the earth, indeed, primitive man made cooking utensils, and rare is the tribe or clan that has not added some decorations, however rude, to its earthen vessels. The spark of genius, however, must be in a people that makes the useful utensil also the teacher of beauty. China gave us porcelain, but many nations have given us pottery. As Egypt and Cyprus taught the Mediterranean nations to mold and bake clay, while it required the Greek genius to perfect this pottery as a vehicle of art, so also in the far East, while China excelled in body, material, and color, it required the æsthetic Japanese to touch with fascinating beauty the products of the wheel and kiln.

In the British Isles there seems to have been scarcely a trace of artistically decorated pottery before the time of Wedgwood. As the foundation stone in the history of most ancient English potteries there is found on investigation the name of some foreigner from the Continent. The English people not only imported from France, Holland, and Germany their artistic specimens of the ceramic art, but they imported foreigners when they wished to improve their pottery. In Josiah Wedgwood, however, we have a native Englishman who devoted his life to beauty as expressed in earth transfigured by fire. Who is not familiar with the delicate blue and white Wedgwood ware, with its classic figures, its medallions, its cameo and jewel like surfaces? The writer of this article remembers, as one of the very first things that awoke in his soul the love of beauty in articles of use, and suggested to his boyish mind that there was such a thing as the philosophy of æsthetics, a teapot molded and baked long ago by some of Wedgwood's workmen. It was a capital idea in Dr. Smiles, who has wrought so nobly in biography and in practical philosophy, to present us, as it were, with a literary Wedgwood cameo, and against the background of English eighteenth century life to set in the bas-relief of a charming style the life of this teacher of beauty. As usual with most of Dr. Smiles' books, the volume is a handy volume neatly printed, easily held and enjoyed, indexed, and furnished with a frontispiece portrait, while the chapters are pleasantly brief.

Josiah Wedgwood was born to his craft, for his forefathers were potters in Staffordshire. For over two hundred years the fifty or more small potters in Burslem had been workers in clay. Born in 1730, Josiah was the youngest of thirteen children. His mother was a delicately organized woman, quick and sensible, and kindly in her disposition. She was the daughter, it is said, of a nonconformist minister. Josiah learned his trade at a time when the best earthenware in England was imported from Delft in Holland. Afflicted with smallpox (the dregs of his disease settling in his knee), he suffered agony for years, and finally had his leg amputated. He was bothered all his life thereafter with wooden legs, a considerable variety of which he tried with varying degrees of satisfaction; but it is more than probable that his disease was the cause of a greater concentration of mind and talents on his chosen profession. He was so fortunate as to be thrown in contact with another poor invalid, who was England's greatest sculptor, and so the medallions of Flaxman adorned the clay of Wedgwood. Busy all his life in discovering, analyzing, and testing clays, inventing new details of machinery, drawing out and applying the talents of men and women, and making all events and resources bend to the consummation of his art, Wedgwood has left his mark deeply upon the art and industry of England, and his name is a household word in America and in English-speaking Christendom. Dr. Smiles tells the story of his life, giving fascinating details and clear outlines, and the volume is a notable addition to our literature. Every boy and girl who would learn how to dignify labor or to enjoy and elevate industry, or who would know the secret of success, should read this work.

---

* The Vagabonds. By Margaret L. Woods. Macmillan & Co. $1.50.

* Josiah Wedgwood, F.R.S. By Samuel Smiles, LL.D. Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

THE GOLDEN HOUSE.*

MR. WARNER'S second novel of New York life brings over from A Little Journey in the World Rodney Henderson and Carmen, who took Margaret's place. In its earlier chapters it seems less vital and powerful than that tragic story of a noble woman whose conscience was betrayed by her love and whom Death came to save from moral destruction through fashionable materialism. But it gathers strength as it goes on, and the pages which treat of the hopeless love of Father Damon and the little agnostic doctor, Ruth Leigh, are among the most moving that Mr. Warner has written. These two may not come together. Both were devoted with unselfish fervor to the cause of suffering humanity:

> She had not come from the country with an exalted notion of being a worker among the poor of whom so much is written; she had not even descended from some high circle in the city into this world, moved by a restless enthusiasm for humanity. She was a woman of the people, to adopt a popular phrase. From her childhood she had known them, their wants, their sympathies, their discouragements; and in her heart — though you would not discover this till you had known her long and well — there was a burning sympathy with them, a sympathy born in her, and not assumed for the sake of having a career. It was this that had impelled her to get a medical education, which she obtained by hard labor and self-denial.

Father Damon is a mediæval saint — a member of the Cowley Brotherhood, one may assume — taking up with the Knights of Labor and the single-tax men, but rooted and established beyond removal in the ascetic life, and pained very deeply by the secularism of the plain but heroic doctor. Their work brings them together often, and the man in him and the woman in her cannot disobey the primal instincts. The hopelessness of their love is clearer to her than to him at first; he flees from it at once in horror, but thoughts of leaving his Order arise. She knows too well that she could not respect him in that case, and without respect could not marry him. He leaves the city after a hard struggle, and she goes about her work pertinaciously and more and more in revolt against the existing social order:

> Yet a great change had come into her life — the greatest that can come to any man or woman in the natural order. She loved and was loved. An ideal light had been cast upon her commonplace existence, the depths of her own nature had been revealed to herself. In this illuminating light she walked about in the misery of this world. This love must be denied, this longing of the heart for companionship could never be gratified, yet, after all, it was a sweet self-sacrifice, and the love itself brought its own consolation. She had not to think of herself as weak, and neither was her lover's image dimmed to her by any surrender of his own principle or his own ideal. She saw him, as she had first seen him, a person consecrated and set apart, however much she might disagree with his supernatural vagaries — set apart to the service of humanity. She had bitter thoughts sometimes of the world, and bitter thoughts of the false system that controlled his conduct, but never of him.

The "Golden House" is a phrase that has a twofold application — to the magnificent palace that Henderson and Carmen plan, and the old-fashioned house which Jack and Edith Delancy inhabit on the Long Island shore. The first is not built, for Henderson dies suddenly and his last will, making great philanthropic bequests, is burned by Carmen. The second endures, a home of peace and natural joy, after Jack has lost his fortune and from a frivolous lounger about town has become a man with an occupation. Edith is a true and affectionate woman, though not of an equal stature with the Margaret of the previous novel:

> With the mere instinct of femineity she saw the falseness of the assumption that the higher life for man or woman lies in separate or solitary paths through the wilderness of this world. To an intelligent angel, seated on the arch of the heavens, the spectacle of the latter-day, pseudo-philosophic and economic dribble about the doubtful expediency of having a wife and the failure of marriage must seem as ludicrous as would a convention of birds or of flowers reasoning that the processes of nature had continued long enough.

The reader of The Golden House will early recognize its great superiority over most of the novels — even those with a "purpose" — of the day. Mr. Warner sees life first of all as it is, and he does not obtrude narrow moralizings into his engaging narrative. But his observation is keen, his occasional comment searching, and his esteem for the things which truly edify — in preference to the shallow and heartless and conscienceless life of the idle rich — is contagious. Too many such voices on the side of the genuine humanities there cannot be in this materialistic age. This book is an achievement in the world of art and the world of moral excellence, for which Mr. Warner deserves the profound thanks of his countrymen.

SAINT PAUL AND HIS MISSIONS.*

IN more respects than one this volume holds a place among the remarkable publications of the year. Next to the life of our Lord stands the life of St. Paul in the department of the world's biography. The author of this work, the Abbé Constant Fouard, writes with a freedom from ecclesiastical bias, a breadth of view, and a candor of spirit which we do not always find in men of religious communions. The translator, George F. X. (Felix Xavier?) Griffith, has done his work well, with the author's sanction and coöperation. The result is a study of the great apostle to the Gentiles and his part in the planting of Christianity which does justice to the subject and for American and Protestant readers has positive charms of method and manner which cannot be transferred to a book notice. It is a book which every student of the New Testament ought to read, and which will make many of its readers want to see its author's previous work on "The Beginnings of the Church" (St. Peter and the First Years of Christianity).

If asked whether the Abbé Fouard's book will displace Conybeare and Howson's, the English classic on this subject, we should answer "no;" for its way is very different from that — as different as a Frenchman is from an Englishman, as Paris is from London. But put a resolute Christian faith inside of French fancy, sentiment, and feeling, and what a result do we not get! What a life of Christ Renan might have written! What a life of St. Paul the Abbé Fouard has written! "Constant" is well his name. True he is to the heart of Christianity and large enough his vision to take in the spiritual as well as the material aspects of its historical development. We accept this book as a harbinger. It is a promise of the good times coming. The world is growing and the Church is advancing. We are "coming together." This book is a scholar's book for scholars. The publishers have dressed it attractively and given it a good map.

CHAPTERS FROM SOME UNWRITTEN MEMOIRS.*

THE reminiscences of Mrs. Anne Thackeray Ritchie are interesting in themselves, but it is quite as important to notice, first of all, that they are innocent, friendly recollections, woven together in a happy, unaffected fashion. One feels honored at being taken into close relationship with the writer and her distinguished friends, instead of having the disagreeable feeling of listening at some forbidden literary keyhole and participating in the disgrace of sharing revelations never intended for him. The earlier recollections show that Mrs. Ritchie has not forgotten the essential features of child-consciousness. She remembers the curious, irrational way that children have of magnifying the importance of certain events and dwarfing the value of others which to the mature mind assume far greater importance. Her description of the evening at Lady Elgin's, when she first consciously met a poet, tells us how bravely she swallowed "that gulp of salt water which is so apt to choke us when we first take our plunge into the experience of life." Poets, great poets, were all around her, and Frederick Locker was especially kind to her; but she knew of only one poet present, Jasmin, who was then admired and quoted and translated. Looking for him, she beheld "a jolly, red, shiny, weather-beaten face, with large round prominent features, ornamented with little pomatumy wisps of hair, and a massive torso clothed in a magnificent frilled shirt over a pink lining." The other poets she did not recognize.

---

*The Golden House. A Novel. By Charles Dudley Warner. Illustrated by W. T. Smedley. Harper & Brothers. $2.00.

*Saint Paul and His Missions. By the Abbé Constant Fouard. Longmans, Green & Co. $2.00.

*Chapters from Some Unwritten Memoirs. By Anne Thackeray Ritchie. Harper & Brothers. $2.00.

The descriptions of life in Paris, including the visit to Chopin, are also examples of the reproduction of this child atmosphere through which we see the events. The chapter entitled "My Witches' Caldron" contains heterogeneous scraps of experience, the picture of the dull evening when Miss Brontë sat in the old bay-windowed drawing-room on Young Street being perhaps the most characteristic and important of the remembrances. These odds and ends are pleasant reading, photographing for us the back of the Duke of Wellington, a few whimsical words of Lord Palmerston, and other scraps trifling and absurd when taken singly. The first time Mrs. Ritchie ever heard Mr. Gladstone she saw only the soles of his boots; how this happened we leave for readers of the memoirs to find out. Tenderest and most pleasant of all are the glimpses she gives us of her father's life and his relation to his children. She dwells lovingly on evidences of his gentle, simple personality, retelling the story of his first lecture, the happenings of his Weimar trip, when he related experiences of his college days and other incidents. There is nothing in the book so seriously considered as were the Records of Tennyson, Ruskin, and Browning. Everything is in a lighter vein whether amusing or pathetic, but it is well put together and proves entertaining.

DANIEL DEFOE.*

MR. THOMAS WRIGHT, who is the principal of the Cowper School at Olney, England, may be an excellent teacher, but he is not one of the heaven-born biographers. Few writers are so successful, however, in writing themselves down in their prefaces as he. It is not that he takes the deprecatory tone, as prefaces used to do; he has gone to the other extreme and blows his own trumpet with great vigor. He thinks that Defoe is not a familiar personality of his time; but who has had more attention from the essayists and editors? He holds that Robinson Crusoe is an extended and minute allegory of Defoe's life, and that by adding twenty-seven years to the dates in the book he comes on the exact dates of the real career. In getting at this number of years and his starting point in various months, Mr. Wright reminds one more of Mr. Ignatius Donnelly than of a sober biographer. He astounds us by declaring that "another feature of this book is its bringing out, more clearly than can be found elsewhere, that Defoe was above all things — that it was his endeavor to be at all times — the man of God. . . . What I mean is . . . that his aims and desires were right. His was a great soul, and little souls should beware of measuring him by their own standard." It may seem a trifle to Mr. Wright that Defoe was one of the chief liars of his time, and prostituted his pen to serve causes in which he did not believe. It is not strange that such a biographer should compliment the four Lives before his own as "valuable works all of them, but dry as Sahara." Such jewels as that we have just quoted are plainly not to be found in Sahara.

Mr. Wright magnifies the new material he has used, especially the letters written by Sophia Defoe and Henry Baker, whom she afterward married, and "a long and extremely beautiful letter" by Defoe himself. Mr. Baker's opinion of the novelist is far from painting him as a "man of God," and Defoe's own letter is little above the ordinary. Mr. Wright's style is characterized by lumbering attempts at humor with as little lightness in them as there is of sagacity in his personal judgments. A biography that more conspicuously fails to set before the reader the actual complex man who is its subject, we have rarely encountered. At the same time Mr. Wright has been so industrious in picking up matter relating to Defoe, and has arranged his matter by sections in so convenient a way for reference, that he cannot be passed over by any student of Defoe's life. For penetration or acuteness of criticism, for consistency or even ordinary clearness of judgment of character, no one should take up this handsome volume. But the facts of Defoe's life are here in great minuteness, and Professor Minto and Mr. Saintsbury, to name no other writers, will supply what is here conspicuously lacking to a good biography. The volume is finely printed, and its illustrations — portraits of Defoe and views of houses and scenes connected with him — are many and well executed.

LIFE IN ANCIENT EGYPT.*

PROFESSOR ERMAN, the author of this fine volume on the manners and customs of the ancient Egyptians in the Old, Middle, and New Empires, is the successor of the great Lepsius at Berlin and the author of several works on Egyptian grammar. This book was written seven years ago, and it has not waited in vain for a good translator. Miss Tirard's usual level is far above that of the hack workman whom publishers are often so deluded as to employ on books of the first importance; only in details where an intimate knowledge of the subject is needed to secure against error has she made, according to experts, a few mistakes. It would have been better, one must think, however, to have retained generally the usual English forms of Egyptian names, as well as in such cases as Osiris and Thothmes; to write Amon Rēʿ does not indicate the pronunciation to the ordinary reader better than a simpler system of marks without dotted letters and inverted commas. A glossary giving the more correct forms once for all would have left the text free from many strange and unpronounceable terms.

Professor Erman's work brings within reach of the ordinary reader the latest results of Egyptian scholarship in the field it covers. Wilkinson's great work is far behind the present state of knowledge in its text, owing to the author's comparative ignorance of hieroglyphics, but its rich store of illustrations has been drawn upon freely, as well as Lepsius' Denkmäler and the Perrot-Chipiez volumes. There are four hundred of these pictures and eleven plates, representing all the activities and surroundings of the men and women who inhabited the land that is "the gift of the Nile," between 2830 and 1050 B.C. In this period there was much change in the useful and the fine arts, in external and internal relations, in fashion, art, literature, and religion. Professor Erman has made a picture of the developing life of this people, always a subject of deep interest to every other civilized race, that shows them in all the animation and naturalness of true men and women. After introductory matter on the land, the people, and the history, he shows us the king and his court, the political conditions, the police and the courts of justice, the family life, the house, dress, recreations, religion, the burial customs, the learning, literature, plastic and useful arts and crafts, agriculture, traffic and trade and war, that were to be found in the Nile valley thousands of years ago. The volume is neither a treatise for specialists nor a merely ornamental picture book, but an admirably clear and well-proportioned survey, by a scholar of the first rank, of those matters of Egyptian life that are of general interest. References at the foot of the page are many, and a special index shows the writer's indebtedness to Lepsius and the Select Papyri of the British Museum, on which, indeed, he says his work might be regarded as a commentary. These six hundred pages will satisfy all but Egyptologists in the natural desire which we entertain to get near to the life of this wonderful ancient people.

---

*The Life of Daniel Defoe. By Thomas Wright. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $3.75.

*Life in Ancient Egypt. Described by Adolf Erman. Translated by H. M. Tirard. Macmillan & Co. $6.00.

JOHN MARCH, SOUTHERNER.*

IT is not easy to slip along gently on the current of Mr. Cable's latest novel. It requires attentive reading, especially in the first half of the book, for one to become sufficiently at home with the characters to understand their hints and half statements, and thus avoid the humiliation of looking back now and then to take his bearings afresh. Certain scenes are hard to understand and leave the reader wondering if this is due entirely to his own density or partly to the shortcomings of the writer himself. Conversations occur with a disjointedness and irrelevancy that make them perplexing instead of elucidating, and people play at cross purposes with apparently the most inadequate reasons for it. Thus it is not until one closes the book and looks at it as a whole that its real interest and value appear with distinctness. This interest is less in the plot than in the characters, less in the characters than in the picture afforded of a Southern town strongly localized, where latter-day problems of civilization are worked out in ways more or less familiar ever since men first began to work together for their own advancement and, incidentally, for the good of the race. It is the story, too, of a man's development from one set of conditions to another, socially, mentally, and spiritually. He makes mistakes in love as in business, and is baffled in the one as in the other; but he pulls through, as many a man has pulled through worse odds before him, and again the old story is repeated that honest purpose is better than trickery, love is better than distrust, and final success means more what a man is than what he has.

Some of the minor characters stand out with quite as much clearness as do either impetuous John March or his brave little Barbara. Both of them were endowed with an ill-assorted pair of parents, though John's mother and Barbara's father were so well matched in egotism, selfishness, and duplicity that it was almost a pity to interfere with the marriage between them, in which they would certainly have served the ends of poetic justice. However, we are told at the end that John's mother "sort o' sweetened and mellered" after she gave up writing poetry, and one can quite well believe it. Judge March is the portraiture of a noble man, influential outside his home, ambitious for his only child, but forever burdened by the hopeless mistake of his marriage. Certain scenes in the book are good examples of the force that may be expressed in very few words of description; such is the graduation scene, in which one reads all the pathos and longing of the old man's life.

TWO BOOKS BY MRS. BISHOP.

WE have not been able to establish the pedigree of this book to our satisfaction.[1] It has no preface with a date, though copyrighted by the publishers this present year; but we conclude that it is in reality a new book, and relates the last adventures of Mrs. Isabella Bird Bishop. It is a small book of some 150 pages, but there is an astonishing amount of matter in it for its size, and it is as interesting as anything Mrs. Bishop has ever written. What can we say more! The illustrations by Edward Whymper are, to say the least, noticeable because of his name. There are but five chapters. They describe a journey from the Vale of Kashmir over the mountains into Tibet — a region which it is hardihood for a man to penetrate, most of us would say madness for a woman. At Rawal Pindi Mrs. Bishop left the railway that connects Lahore with Peshawur, bought her camp equipage, and traveled by cart, horseback, and house boat to Srinagar, which she reached in April, and where, two months later, her ascent of the Himalayas began. A month's hard work took her to Leh, the capital of Ladakh or Lower Tibet, where she was in the midst of the most magnificent scenery, in the heart of the Buddhist country, and surrounded by a humanity as strange as the nature, and both full of novelty to our Western eyes.

A more toilsome, perilous, or eventful experience than that of this summer could hardly be imagined. The grandeur of the snow-covered mountains, often rising to a height of twenty thousand feet or more; the picturesqueness of the convents and palaces crowning the lower summits, the flowery fragrance and beauty of the valleys, the turbulence of the streams, the squalor of the villages and the villagers, the physical exposures incident to lofty elevations, the trials of dizzy pathways and rickety bridges, the ritualism of the convent chapels and priests, the processions of lamas in their red and yellow vestments, the curiosities of family life, the presence and influence of Christian missionaries, the castles and glaciers and flocks of sheep, the huge Tibetan mastiffs, the caravans passing to and from the remote interior of Asia, the winds and snows — all together make up a picture the like of which is scarcely to be paralleled in any other quarter of the globe. Mrs. Bishop goes everywhere, does everything, conquers everybody, and forgets nothing.

We have read with fresh interest, as if it were a new book, the first American edition, reprinted from the fifth English edition, of Mrs. Bishop's record of her six months in the Sandwich Islands.[2] It is hard to realize that it is close on to twenty years since the first appearance of this fascinating work, which helped to lay the foundation of its author's fame. Since then Miss Bird has become Mrs. Bishop, but her change of name has not changed her identity nor altered the fact that she is one of the intrepid, indefatigable, and instructive travelers of the century, and that to her we are indebted for some of the most graphic and entertaining pages of descriptive writing which have ever come from a woman's hand. Twenty years have made, of course, considerable changes in the political, social, and religious aspects of the Sandwich Islands, but none in their natural aspects, and hardly any in their domestic and personal features. They are the old islands of twenty years ago. Mrs. Bishop's book is therefore still good reading, and the American publishers have reproduced it in convenient and attractive form, with a map and numerous illustrations.

MUSICIANS AND MUSIC LOVERS.*

AS Mr. William F. Apthorp is one of our best musical critics it is interesting to learn from him that "it is peculiarly noticeable that musicians among themselves say little, as a rule, about the feelings music calls up in them; they talk about the music itself, and such talk is seldom of a nature to interest an outsider." Most music lovers are influenced, he thinks, more than they realize by the performer's personality rather than by the music itself:

> In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the music lover looks first to see who is to be the solo performer; what the programme is to be interests him only secondarily. . . . Show me the man who looks first to see what is to be played or sung, and I will hold him in my very heart of hearts as a music lover who deserves to be a musician.

The difference between music lovers and musicians Mr. Apthorp makes very distinct. He finds a deplorable lack of definite thought in musical matters among people who call themselves musical, much musical cant, and much flimsy rhapsodizing; the whole musical experience of most music lovers is only "a jumble of vague physical or emotional impressions." In these days of Wagner enthusiasm Mr. Apthorp has still the courage of his convictions, saying that "it was largely owing to circumstances that Wagner applied his genius to music." The composer's great power and general culture are obvious, but he feels that in Wagner his music was the servant of his culture, while precisely the opposite was true of Mozart.

---

* John March, Southerner. By George W. Cable. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

[1] Among the Tibetans. By Isabella Bird Bishop. F. H. Revell Co. $1.00.

[2] Six Months Among the Palm Groves, Coral Reefs, and Volcanoes of the Sandwich Islands. By the same. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.25.

* Musicians and Music Lovers. By William F. Apthorp. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

This volume is a collection of essays most of which have been in print before. Some of them are parts of lectures delivered at the Lowell Institute, and some are articles which have appeared in the Atlantic. Mr. Apthorp believes that criticism is merely the expression of enlightened opinion, and that the critic has no right to be dogmatic. He is in favor of the French style of criticism where the critic writes over his own signature. The critic's "true position is that of the interpreter between the composer, or performer, and the public, and to a certain extent also that of guardian of popular taste; but it is not for him to play schoolmaster to artists." "Johann Sebastian Bach" and "John Sullivan Dwight" suggest the breadth of the writer's range. The last essay on "The Science of Music" is the most original. There should be no question what music ought to be, but "the only questions that interest the science of music are what music is and has been and how and why it has become what it is."

MINOR NOTICES.

Eighteenth Century Vignettes.

The second series of Mr. Austin Dobson's altogether pleasing short studies of men and manners in the last century embraces papers on Swift (The Journal to Stella); Dodsley and the two Paynes, the booksellers; Richardson; Johnson's library; the topography of Humphrey Clinker; Ranelagh; Lady Mary Coke; "Little Roubillac," the sculptor of so many of the allegorical monstrosities in Westminster Abbey and elsewhere in English churches; "The Berlin Hogarth," Chodowiecki; the Duc de Nivernais (Cardinal Mazarin's grandnephew) in England; and "the prisoners' chaplain," Silas Told. The twelve papers of various lengths are matched by ten portraits and two views of houses. To commend Mr. Dobson's fascinating prose or to proclaim his intimate knowledge of the eighteenth century would be to paint the lily. — Dodd Mead & Co. $2.00.

In the Dozy Hours

Miss Agnes Repplier delights and stimulates us. She is usually fresh, sometimes surprising, always bookish. What a browser among books she is, or rather what an omnivorous feeder! She turns everything to account, bringing in an apt quotation, making happy allusions, or deftly indicating some touch of humor. She appears at home in all forms of literature, and avails herself of everything that will add convincement to her statements and criticisms. At times there are suggestions of pedantry; the wide reading is a little too much in evidence, but this is a pardonable weakness. Miss Repplier has opinions of her own, and fortifies them by those of the great minds of many ages. Her strictures on conduct just escape being ironic by reason of the general genial atmosphere we are conscious of. The twenty essays are by no means on the same plane of merit. That on "Reviewers and Reviewed" is shrewd and always timely; the two concerning the contentions between women and men, or the revolt of woman conspicuous at the present day, have a keen edge of sarcasm; "The Discomforts of Luxury" contains truths worth telling; the query about "Pastels" is pertinent and amusing. As a whole, the papers make a pleasing and suggestive contribution to our literature of this class, and if they do not add much to the reputation of the author, they certainly detract nothing from it. — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

Talk at a Country House.

This volume, by Sir Edward Strachey, seems like a mild reproduction of Friends in Council. Among the series of talks on various subjects are scattered interesting paragraphs; but the conversation is dull to a degree, and reminds one irresistibly of the Harry and Lucy dialogues. The chapter on Sir Thomas Mallory's Morte d'Arthur is quite erudite, and the one on Persian poetry also contains interesting information. Other topics discussed are "Tennyson and Maurice," "The Arrowhead Inscriptions," "A General Election," and "Love and Marriage." In the last reference is made to the York Manual in use before the Reformation, where, in addition to the marriage vows still retained in the English service, the words "for fairer, for fouler," followed "for better, for worse." — Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

A Sporting Pilgrimage.

Mr. Caspar W. Whitney, the "athletic editor" of Harper's Weekly, has made a pilgrimage to England to study the traditions of sport and the systems in present use. His four hundred pages are profusely illustrated with photographs of evrey phase of hunting, golf, rowing, football, and club and university athletics in general. He takes up each sport by itself, beginning with riding to hounds, and does not recount his impressions on a journey. The volume is thus a systematic work on English sport, and it would seem sure of an instant and hearty reception on this side of the water. Mr. Whitney's enthusiasm leads him to speak, under football, of the "silly objections timorous and bigoted people may put forth in their ignorance;" but this paragraph was evidently stereotyped before the recent game at Springfield. It should appear, too, from his account that sport makes men "gentle;" hunting a red deer into the Bristol Channel, after a run of eighteen miles (p. 67), we presume is one of the proofs of this refining and humanizing tendency! To some it may appear that the brutality which marks the Englishman, by the side of other civilized races, is nourished by many of his sports. Mr. Whitney marks the moderation of the English universities concerning football and their freedom from the mercenary features of our American contests. Golf he considers a "disease," but treats the game in much detail. — Harper & Brothers. $3.50.

Schools and Masters of Sculpture.

Miss A. G. Radcliffe's volume is a companion to her valuable work on painting. She takes a wide survey of her subject, beginning with Egypt and Assyria and closing with a chapter on the sculptors and sculpture of our century. Two chapters of very practical interest are devoted to the study of sculpture in the museums of Europe and America. Miss Radcliffe has a well-balanced mind; she refrains from superfluous adjectives, and she has followed with care the surest authorities in her large field. The full-page illustrations, some thirty-five in number, are admirably reproduced, as well as chosen with a true sense of fitness. The volume is an excellent introduction to this branch of fine art. — D. Appleton & Co. $3.00.

The Colonial Cavalier.

The colonial Puritan has been so lavishly celebrated in prose and poetry that we are sometimes prone to forget his more picturesque contemporary, the colonial cavalier, although he has left his mark quite as irrevocably stamped on Southern character. Miss Maud W. Goodwin has gathered together many interesting details of the cavaliers in the Southern States, and the result is a delightful volume. Eleven chapters deal respectively with his home; sweethearts and wives; dress; news, travel, and trade; friends and foes; manservants and maidservants; church; education; laws, punishments, and politics; sickness and death. All of these topics are carefully treated. The illustrations are on a par with its general excellence, and no one will regret an hour or two passed in running through this sketch of the Pre-Revolutionary South. — Lovell, Coryell & Co.

Cicero and the Fall of the Roman Republic.

This handsomely printed book of truly classical appearance belongs to the series of Heroes of the Nations, of which Mr. Evelyn Abbott is the editor. Mr. J. L. Strachan-Davidson, the author, being a fellow of Balliol College, Oxford, its pages are therefore founded on sound learning, we may be sure, and a ripened judgment characterizes its opinions and estimates. Barring the question of reckoning Cicero among the "heroes" of the nations, one will find in this volume an exhaustive and careful biography of the great Roman orator and a critical study of his forensic exploits. The whole is a creditable monograph, with sufficient historical background to show the times in which Cicero lived and wrote and spoke and the part which affairs had in shaping his character and career. How vivid and real these pages make the famous orations against Catiline and Verres, those traditions of every academic boyhood! Roman parties and statesmen in Cicero's time are the subject of one interesting chapter; Cicero as a magistrate of another. There is a full account of his training and of his family connections and environment. After all, it is but a single chapter in Roman history which Mr. Strachan-Davidson tells, and when all is told how little we know of that long and crowded national pathway which more than almost any other holds the attention of the world. But Cicero's was a commanding figure; he rivets the gaze, and events and persons take their relations in a measure from him. Collegians and lads in Latin schools beginning to grapple with Cicero's masterpieces will find this book most helpful in grasping their subject, and we look to see it become an immediate part of the outfit of many a young classical student. — G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

The Literary World

BOSTON 29 DECEMBER 1894

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter

POETRY.

The Poet.

In ancient Rome, the secret fire —
An intimate and holy thing —
Was guarded by a tender choir
Of kindred maidens in a ring.
Deep, deep within the home it lay,
No stranger ever gazed thereon,
But flickering still by night and day
The beacon of the house it shone;
Through birth and death, from age to age,
It passed a quenchless heritage;

And there were hymns of mystic tone
Sung round about the family flame,
Beyond the threshold all unknown,
Fast welded to an ancient name;
There sacrificed the sire as priest
Before that altar, none but he,
Alone he spread the solemn feast
For a most secret deity;
He knew the god had once been sire
And served the same memorial fire.

Ah! so, untouched by windy roar
Of public issues loud and long,
The Poet holds the sacred door
And guards the glowing coal of song;
Not his to grasp at praise or blame,
Red gold, or crown beneath the sun,
His only pride to tend the flame
That Homer and that Virgil won,
Retain the rite, preserve the act,
And pass the worship on intact.

Before the shrine at last he falls;
The crowd rush in, a chattering band;
But ere he fades in death he calls
Another priest to ward the brand;
He with a gesture of disdain
Flings back the ringing brazen gate,
Reproves, repressing the profane,
And feeds the flame in primal state;
Content to toil and fade in turn
If still the sacred embers burn.

— Edmund Gosse, in In Russet and Silver.

Thomas Bailey Aldrich.

"Make way," said Apollo, as vanished his frown,
"At a 'Feast of the Poets' let Aldrich sit down;
Such a delicate touch is not often allied
With a catholic view that is wholesome as wide.
His art is a vessel of gracious design
Oft full of the warm, ruddy juice of the vine;
And even when empty, it still has the tone
Of glass cut and fashioned in Venice alone."

CHARLES W. STEVENSON.

◆

LONDON LETTER.

WE are in full flood tide of Christmas books, the number and variety of which have considerably increased of late years. The youngsters must suffer frightfully from the embarrassment of riches when making their choice. The revival of the fairy tale is one of the notable things. Almost every one of the important publishers has a special fairy tale book this Christmas. Distinguished among these is More Celtic Fairy Tales, published by Mr. David Nutt, the latest fruit of the collaboration of Mr. Joseph Jacobs and Mr. John D. Batten. Never did artist and illustrator work together in more complete harmony. Their books are exquisite, and I envy the youngster who gets this one as a Christmas gift. Mr. Batten is good at beautiful and poetic things, but he is better at drolls and grotesqueries. A novelty in fairy books is Cossack Fairy Tales, published by Messrs. Lawrence & Bullen. These have a quite uncommon flavor, though it is curious, too, to find how often they have a common root with Western fairy tales. "A Cossack Cinderella" is but one example of this. The book is beautifully produced, and illustrated admirably by E. W. Mitchel.

Boys' books are here in shoals. Messrs. Blackie have all the veterans writing for them and draw in the promising young writers as well. A good writer of boys' stories must wield an uncommon power and hold a heavy responsibility. Mr. Henty, for example, ought to be responsible to a considerable extent for creating a manly spirit in English youths. He, at least, understands the duties of his calling. I see Mr. Fisher Unwin has had an admirable idea in republishing for his Children's Library Robinson Crusoe, with the old Cruikshank drawings. Crusoe never loses his magic for boys old and young, and I have been the witness lately of the absorption of a grown-up boy of thirty in Defoe's masterpiece, which he had already read a score of times. A very delightful boy's book, though not new, with a limpidity of thought and manner which fascinates the grown-up reader, is A Battle and a Boy, by your countrywoman, Blanche Willis Howard. Mr. Heinemann is the London publisher. Franzl, with his "family" of a baby sister and his bright confidence that the world will give him absolutely all he wants, is a quite original hero, and the foreign flavor of the book is pleasant. Then for girls there is Banshee Castle, by Rosa Mulholland, whose beautiful work for girls is widely popular. This book, with its pretty snatches of song and vivid sketches of scenery, has a Celtic flavor of its own which is quite magical. Messrs. A. D. Innes & Co. are also supplying charming books for girls. This is a specialty of this firm, I suppose on account of their girls' magazine, the Monthly Packet. Moira O'Neill, Roma White, Miss Crompton, and Miss Christabel Coleridge are among Messrs. Innes' authors, and it would not be easy to find four more competent writers of girls' books.

To return to ordinary literature. The new man of the month is Mr. Arthur Morrison, whose Tales of Mean Streets Methuen & Co. have just published. Some of these stories of East End London are corrosive in their brutal strength, but there is always pity in the book and a gleam of humor which relieves the tension. Mr. Morrison was a National Observer writer under Mr. Henley, and is another example of the admirable judgment of that prince of editors. "A golden book of spirit and sense," as Mr. Swinburne once called a novel of Gautier's, is The Book of English Prose, selected by Mr. Henley and his lieutenant, Mr. Whibley, and published by Messrs. Methuen at six shillings. The selections are from old writers, and bring together a great mass of wit, fire, and eloquence. This ought to be a standard book.

Mr. Lane has just published Mr. William Watson's Odes. I am not a believer in the greatness of Mr. Watson, whom I consider a minor poet of much accomplishment, but the new book has some charming pieces, one especially, "The Saint and the Satyr," a poem of exquisite feeling and treatment. Mr. Lane promises us this week Ballads in Prose, by Miss Nora Hopper, the young Irishwoman whose contributions to the Yellow Book (quite un-Yellow-Book-like) have excited much interest. His other Irishwoman, George Egerton, publishes her Discords with him also this week.

Mr. Lane's late partner, Mr. Mathews, announces some books of interest. One is a volume of poems by Mr. Lionel Johnson, who has the making of a great critic. One can always pick out his reviews in a London daily by their sanity, clear sight, and high-mindedness, as well as by the learning which unobtrusively runs like a golden thread through them. His poems have the same lofty quality, and stand out in a time when the minor muse amongst us is sick and morbid. Another of Mr. Mathews' poets is Miss May Prolyn, from whom we have heard nothing since the early eighties. Her new volume will be called Pansies, and I can answer for its containing fresh and exquisite poetry. Mr. Ernest Dowson's stories will also be something of an event.

Irish readers in America will be delighted with Miss Edna Lyall's new story, Doreen, which is as thoroughgoing as only the opinions of an English convert to Home Rule can be. In the very first scene a ruffianly land agent is flung over a cliff. Doreen's father is a Fenian prisoner in Portland, and the circumstances of the book are about as rebellious as possible. Miss Edna Lyall writes a good generous story to rejoice the immense circle of her admirers. Nearly five hundred pages of close print is abundant allowance for a six-shilling book, but there is no fear that Miss Lyall's admirers will weary of her.

Mr. John Davidson has made a distinct place for himself among the younger poets, and he is a strong man, which is a rare thing in those ranks. Mr. Davidson's strength at times is almost rude, but it amazes us the more when he gives us side by side with violent ballads some exquisite poem of nature absolutely distinct in thought and fit in utterance. Mr. Davidson's conception is less than his treatment, which is ornate and full of beautiful color. His Ballads and Songs, just published by Mr. John Lane, is having an unusual and well-deserved success.

A beautiful book which I have read lately is Tales from the Masque, by J. H. Pearce, published by Messrs. Lawrence & Bullen. Mr. Pearce is one of the very few people who receive nothing like adequate recognition for their work. Perhaps it is too elusive in its dreamy charm ever to be popular. Some of the little tales read like folklore, while others are episodes of today; but all alike are tender and delicate, and fraught with deepest meanings in the simplest diction.

Mr. Heinemann has begun to publish a series of the earlier books of Björnstjerne Björnson — his books of a time when he was a poet and not a tendency novelist as he afterwards became in The Heritage of the Kurts. The first of the series, Synnövé Solbakken, is an exquisite idyl of Norwegian peasant life, and has powerful yet delicate character-drawing. From such books as this the unwholesome element which repels one in Ibsen, Tolstoï, and the other prophets out of the North and the Orient is absent. Though it is a little love story, it has something of the luminous grace which is in Hans Andersen, something of the whiteness of eternal snow fields and the color — rose on snow — of Northern Lights.

Mr. Heinemann also publishes a book of strong stories in the Bret Harte manner, by Mr. Frank Harris, the late editor of the Fortnightly and present editor of the Saturday Review. Mr. Harris is strongest in his least pretentious stories — mere snatches of wild life; but all the critics have been praising A Modern Idyll, a powerful but unpleasant study of a minister's unlawful passion for the worthless wife of one of his deacons.

The new papers, the Realm and the Liberal, have appeared. The Realm looks like the old Saturday, and the first number, while up to a high level of excellence, had nothing novel in its manner or matter. I have not yet seen a copy of the Liberal, but its table of contents looks dull. Messrs. Ward, Lock & Bowden are changing their old established Sylvia's Journal into the Windsor Magazine at the new year. It can hardly be better under its new name than Sylvia has been for a couple of years.

KATHARINE TYNAN HINKSON.

PHILADELPHIA NOTES.

A LITERARY group in Philadelphia, which probably has no counterpart elsewhere, is known to its members as The Club, for the reason that it is quite unique and otherwise unnamable. It is without organization, minus officers, and entirely dispenses with a treasury. To speak of "members" is really a misnomer, for nobody ever is elected; yet The Club has flourished since 1884, and is still growing. Its fellowship consists of college professors, among whom are Dr. Morris Jastrow, Jr., Dr. Roland Falkner, Prof. Felix E. Schelling, Dr. D. G. Brinton, Prof. A. H. Smythe, and Mr. Hay; and of bibliophiles like John Thomson, Lewis L. Smith, A. Edward Newton, Carl Edelheims, Dr. Selser, Frank O. Zessinger, John Adams, H. Bunnell, and Jacob Sulzberger. These, with a few more, meet fortnightly through the winter season from house to house, and discuss each night a different author who invites investigation by the excellence of work which is unknown to the "great reading public." One member takes the life of the author, another storms his works, and the appetite stimulated by these tasks is refreshed at the end. Since 1884 one hundred and twelve of the illustrious obscure have thus been handled, including such seldom spoken names as Sebastian Brandt, William Browne, Thomas Campion, William Combe, Thomas Dekker, William Dunbar, John Dyer, Ebenezer Elliott, Sir George Etheridge, George Gascoigne, William Godwin, Robert Greene, Thomas Holcroft, James I of Scotland, R. H. Horne, Sir Thomas Overbury, Theodore Hook, George Psalmanazar, Thomas Henry Pye, Richard of Bury, Richard Savage, John Selden, James and Horace Smith, John Taylor the Water Poet, Nicholas Udall, Charles Wells, and Dr. John Walcott. These are but a few samples of the throng of unknown spirits that haunt the meetings of The Club.

When a movement of any sort begins to set in steadily there is always a supply of unexpected material to feed it. The awakening of a literary spirit in Philadelphia, of which I spoke in my last notes, has had several witnesses since that time. Mr. Philip Goepp, a musician of culture, a Harvard graduate and lover of books, will contribute to an early number of the Atlantic Monthly a paper called "The Symphony," in which he will give a trained composer's view of the emotions aroused by great music in the educated and lay minds. This is a subject to which Mr. Goepp has given much attention, and there are few professional musicians equipped as he is with general culture, a sense of observation, and a gift of expression for the task. That there is a popular desire to know more about this side of music is made plain by the constant discussion between the professional and non-professional lovers of the muse of harmony.

In further assurance of the advancement of local literature comes the news that a well-known author of the town has been approached by Mr. Richard Mansfield with a proposition for several plays. He is said to have furnished one play, which the actor has highly praised and is about to contract for a series.

Two other young Philadelphians who deserve notice are the sculptors, Charles Grafly and Alexander Calder. They have recently taken part in a competition for a statue to the great Philadelphia surgeon, Dr. Gross, which, when completed, will probably be erected at Washington. The award has not yet been made, but Dr. W. W. Keen, chairman of the committee in charge, has loyally expressed the view that the work should be done by a Philadelphian, and Mr. St. Gaudens has approved the models of Messrs. Grafly and Calder. Even Philadelphians seem to ignore the fact that many of the artists now most eminent at home and abroad have been reared in the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, and such a recognition of the rising talent is very gratifying.

Boston and Philadelphia will have an equal interest in the course of lectures to be given by Mr. William Roscoe Thayer of Cambridge at the residence of Mrs. Morris Longstreth in January. The author of the Dawn of Italian Independence and Poems, New and Old, will speak in three successive lectures on Bismarck, Garibaldi, and Napoleon III. No contemporary writer has made a more thorough study of these great figures of modern history, and Mr. Thayer will have a cultured and fashionable audience.

HARRISON S. MORRIS.

FICTION.

The Honorable Peter Sterling.

Probably the complications and corruptions of political life in New York City were never before made the theme of a protracted love story pervaded with such pure sentiment as this one by Mr. Paul Leicester Ford. Of the mismanagement and villainy practiced in the wards, of bossism, obstructions to reform, delays in justice, factions, wranglings and riots, we have had more or less in fiction, but nothing like this. Here are over four hundred pages which read like actual history of certain political movements and persistent and successful work for reform, with a fine, tender love story running pure and sweet, an undercurrent in a life openly pledged to rough partisan work and rude companionship in squalid places. Fortunately, Peter Sterling is a man's hero. If a woman writer had created him, she would have been laughed at for placing her ideal so high. Mr. Ford is responsible for a very unusual but, let us believe, a possible character, and having started him on his eventful career he has stood bravely by him and helped him through. In these days of disappointing novels, when it is so much the custom to leave the hero and heroine in unsatisfactory circumstances, it is pleasing to meet an author who has regard for them and sees to it that all ends happily. Many readers will care nothing for the politics, but they will enjoy the love story. It is a good one. Peter is the kind of lover dear to the heart of the novel reader. He was worthy the sweet singleness of devotion he received, and the book, even with the tiresome politics, is very readable and very enjoyable. — Henry Holt & Co. $1.50.

The Story of Lawrence Garthe.

Any one who has read Maurus Jókai's Eyes Like the Sea, with its six-times married heroine, will be amused to compare Bessy with Bella, the heroine of Mrs. Ellen Olney Kirk's latest novel. "Bella" has only been married four times, but for absolute absence of any moral sense she will compare favorably with Bessy. Each of these heroines is endowed with the same charm of nature which manages to preserve an appearance of innocence and youthfulness in spite of very doubtful experiences. Bella is very cleverly contrasted with Constance. Constance is the most highly developed modern instance of the Puritan type. The situations into which Lawrence Garthe is thrown between Constance, whom he wishes to marry, and Bella, the divorced mother of his child, are powerfully handled. Of course the story ends well, a little too well for life, but on the whole the book is worth reading and will sustain its author's high reputation for ability and careful work.— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

The Castle of the Carpathians.

Jules Verne has not written a more sane and well-sustained story than this. The excellent descriptions of a wild region in Transylvania and the accounts of the homely ways and daily life of the shepherds and villagers give it an air of veracity not to be expected from this author. The mysterious castle is finely set among the cliffs in an almost inaccessible place. It has been the scene of tragedies, and now after having been long abandoned it is supposed to be the home of supernatural beings of diabolic power. After one desperate attempt to reach it the villagers are stricken with terror, and affairs are in a deplorable state when two travelers arrive. One of them, Count Franz, has reasons of his own for believing it to be the hiding place of a certain enemy of his. He sets out to ascertain, and the mystery of its magic powers is revealed by the fact that two men are using for their own purpose electric batteries and telephones. A tragic romance and the destiny of several individuals are complicated with the physical phenomena in a way that no one but the inventive and ingenious author would have thought of. The glimpses of life in a fascinating country too little known make the book worth reading. The full-page pictures, about forty in number, are unusually graphic. — The Merriam Co. $1.50.

Melting Snows.

There is a certain innocent romantic spirit which none but the Germans possess and none but the best of the German writers can handle with impunity. Heine and all the lovely fairy tales and the ballads and the legendary poems of Germany are made beautiful by this spirit which gives its charm to Prince Schoenaich-Carolath's Melting Snows. Mr. John Addington Symonds' clever daughter, Margaret Symonds, has translated this prettiest of modern German stories. Youth and first love and the awakening of the human soul, treated with the frankest romanticism, are Prince Schoenaich-Carolath's themes, but he handles his subjects in a masterly way. We have read no book for years which is as exquisite in its simple poetry as this. — London: John C. Nimmo. 5*s*.

Kensington Palace.

Mrs. Emma Marshall's skillful hand reproduces the court of Queen Mary the Second with such freshness of color that the picture, even in its details, seems a transcript from life. The central figure is that of a gentlewoman whose dignity, courage, and ability made her thoroughly a queen. The study of her character is based chiefly upon the Lettres et Mémoires de Marie, Reine d'Angleterre, edited by the Comtesse Bentinck, and the Memoirs of Mary, Queen of England, edited by Dr. R. Doebner, both published in 1886. Mrs. Marshall fully shares the feeling of the Comtesse Bentinck that a perusal of the queen's writings gives another aspect to what has been sometimes considered her indifference to her unhappy father's fortunes. The characters surrounding the chief personages are wholly imaginary, but they are well imagined; and the love story of Margery, the pure-hearted maid of honor, is an idyl quite in harmony with Queen Mary's own. — Macmillan & Co. $1.50.

A Child of the Age.

This seems to us the most morbid book of the year, in which we find nothing to recommend. The late Francis Adams' story is sickly in conception, unpleasant in execution, and intolerably ungrammatical. There is a period of immaturity of soul which most morbid natures pass through which may be called the "bob-veal" stage, and during this period their literary effusions are quite as harmful to the mental digestion as bob-veal is to the physical, and should be as rigidly suppressed. A Child of the Age was composed during this stage, and for unwholesome crudeness it surpasses even The Story of a South African Farm. The similarity of the book to Musset's Enfant de Siècle is unintentional, but it is none the less marked. If possible Mr. Adams' confessions are more "naked and unashamed" than Musset's. — Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

Sibylla.

Sir H. S. Cunningham pictures here a high-bred, gifted, and noble woman, who marries a man as high-minded as herself at the beginning of the book. How there came a silent misunderstanding, and how, to the enrichment of both lives, it was adjusted, we leave the reader to ascertain. Montcalm, Sibylla's husband, was an able, hard-working member of Parliament. But Annersham, the brilliant, volatile member, whom his party watches in some trepidation, is a man who "had learnt to think of himself as a sort of privileged being for whose benefit the race of husbands and wives existed, whose prerogative it was to step in where husbands failed and teach some yearning, dissatisfied soul how charming man could be if only you found the right man." The joint agency of Sibylla, Lady Cynthia, and the keen-witted Mrs. Ormesby rescues him from this unworthy career by evoking all that is best in his complex nature and fastening his affections upon one queenly woman who loves and marries him. The atmosphere of the story is not only wholesome but interesting. — Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

At the Gate of Samaria is the story of a nineteenth century young woman who cut loose from her family and home and went to London to devote her energies to art. There she lived in the delightful atmosphere of Bohemia and finally married a man whom she thought she loved. But it was a marriage of the senses and not of the soul. She left her husband and went back to her art. With another lover she would have joined the ranks of the despised and outcast in society had not circumstances suddenly given her legal freedom. The book is written with power and intensity, and the author, William John Locke, has considerable literary skill, but it belongs to the long list of novels of this year wherein the heroines hysterically demand freedom from every possible restraint. At the Gate of Samaria is not quite as coarse as The Yellow Aster, but it is of the same unwholesome variety. — D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

A Family Dilemma is the title of a good story by Lucy C. Lillie, in which is treated in a new manner the old theme of unknown heirs suddenly discovered who cause perplexities. The ways in which the conditions of the colonel's unsigned will were finally fulfilled furnish the details of the story, the supposed heiress, unknown to herself, proving to have had a baseless claim and the real heiress being very unselfish. The contrast in character between the "showy," but strong, honest Sarah in her short-lived wealth and Jean the gentle, refined woman, who used her fortune in founding a model academy, is well drawn. — Porter & Coates. $1.25.

With Volume XXV, containing The Surgeon's Daughter and Castle Dangerous, the excellent Dryburgh edition of the Waverley Novels comes to an end. It contains a short supplementary glossary and a full index to the whole set. The favorable impression made by the first volume (which we noticed at length) has been confirmed by the successive monthly issues of this attractive and inexpensive edition, which should be examined by all who would possess Scott's novels in a comely but not costly form. The publishers announce the early issue of Scott's Poems in two volumes uniform with the twenty-five of the novels. — Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

Mr. Percy Pinkerton has selected from Matteo Bandello, the bishop story-teller of the sixteenth century, twelve of his cleanest stories, to which he has prefixed a brief biographical and critical introduction, taking the author's name as the title of the book. Bandello declared his tales to be "not fables but true histories." Hence they have a distinct value as an aid to understanding the life of Renaissance times which they do not possess for us as tales alone. The story of Romeo and Giulietta, as here told at length, ends more dramatically than in Shakespeare. — London: John C. Nimmo. 7*s*. 6*d*. net.

There is a strong British flavor to Ploughed, a collection of amusing stories by Mrs. L. B. Walford. The spoiled English lad who was "ploughed" or "dropped" from an English university and whose disgrace made his parents wretched for months is a type of youth not indigenous to our American soil. Our American boys are more complicated; the same experiences would be met by them much less simply. "An Eastern Cadet" gives a charming picture of English home life. — Longmans, Green & Co. $1.00.

Still another of the handy Dent reprints of famous novels is the novels of Susan Edmonstone Ferrier in six volumes, including Marriage, The Inheritance, and Destiny, each in two volumes. Mr. Reginald B. Johnson writes the notes and introduction, in which he tells what little is known of this lively and humorous novelist, who must always be named with Miss Edgeworth and Miss Austen. — Macmillan & Co. $6.00.

Henry Kingsley is coming into fashion again evidently, for here is Ravenshoe, one of his best novels, and thoroughly deserving a reprint, from another publisher than the one who has issued Geoffrey Hamlyn. Ward, Lock & Bowden's new edition, of which this is the first installment, will give one good-sized volume of some 450 pages to each novel in clear type and tasteful binding. — $1.25.

Marie, by Laura E. Richards, is a touching story of a French girl and her precious violin in the strange environment of a New England town. It is a worthy companion to the author's Captain January and Melody in its tenderness and grace of delineation. — Estes & Lauriat. 50c.

In Poppæ "Julien Gordon" has added one more to the long list of stories of marital misery. As a writer she has a certain superficial cleverness, but not enough to make her tale of high social life and low social morals endurable. — J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

MINOR NOTICES.

St. Paul's Conception of Christianity.

Theological students are indebted to Rev. Dr. A. B. Bruce for another scholarly book from his careful pen, which deserves to take its place by the side of his Training of the Twelve, though smaller and less striking than that remarkable work. No one man's exegesis is acceptable to everybody, and no New Testament student would assent to all of Dr. Bruce's interpretations; but we must cordially bear witness to the thoroughness and scholarship with which this work has been written and to its value for all who wish to get to the bottom of St. Paul's theological thinking. Taking the Epistles to the Romans, Corinthians, and Galatians as the chief sources, as containing the leading ideas of Paulinism, and carefully sketching Paul's personal religious history, Dr. Bruce first reviews the leading epistles one by one, and discovers the purpose, method, and point of each; then he assembles in order the teachings of St. Paul on the great doctrines of the Christian religion — sin, the righteousness of God, the death of Christ (in connection with which he traverses Professor Everett's theory), faith, the Holy Spirit, "sinful flesh" in its relation to holiness, the law, election, the Church and the kingdom, and the last things. The result is that we have a full and, in the main, fair conspectus of the teachings, arranging them in their true perspective and proportion. A closing chapter compares and connects Paul's teaching with that of our Lord. Dr. Bruce's scholarship is modern; his point of view independent; his style fresh; his language clear; his conclusions always weighty; and his whole method suggestive and stimulating. Great service may be rendered by a book like this, which sets old truths at new angles, readjusts the lenses, sharpens the focus, and reforms conceptions and convictions. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00.

Sheldon's History of the Christian Church.

Professor Henry C. Sheldon's five large volumes are intended to occupy a medium place, he says, between a compendium and an elaborate and ponderous history in many volumes. It seems difficult, however, to see from the matter what class of minds he had in view, as he omits a great many facts which the standard manuals, especially the recent Möller and Müller, give, and is at the same time sufficiently far from the philosophic treatment of such a work as Dr. J. H. Allen's Epochs of Christian History. The work is, perhaps, best designated as a popular or semi-popular series of lectures on the history of the Church by one neither a specialist nor a philosophic historian. Such a work has its uses, but we should not suppose that Professor Sheldon had hit the right style or proportion for the theological students he says he had mainly in view. The division of space allows one volume to the years 1–590 A.D., a second to the years 590–1517, and three to the period from 1517 to the present day. American Church history since the colonial era occupies 155 pages in the last volume. Where we have tested the work it indicates industrious scholarship, a conventional point of view, adherence to a mild orthodoxy, and a general lack of good proportion, many words being often bestowed on minor matters. Renan is termed "a sprightly critic," and the late Dr. Edwin Hatch is set right. The often repeated "we" of the preface is an index of much poor writing in the body of the work, and "substraction" (page 64) and "concensus" (page 54) show careless proof-reading. Professor Sheldon has covered a vast field in a superficial and hasty manner. — T. Y. Crowell & Co. $10.00.

The Messiah of the Gospels.

Eight years ago Rev. Dr. C. A. Briggs published a volume on Messianic prophecy, which opened the treasures of the Hebrew Scriptures so far as they related to the expected Saviour and Deliverer. Years of storm and stress have followed, in which the student had to turn warrior and fight in the cause of intellectual freedom. Thrust out of their synagogue by the highly organized corporation to which he had belonged, he has not been able to return to his first love until recently. Dr. Briggs finds Messianic hopes and expectations not only in the Hebrew writings but also in the Greek. He knows, as all scholars know, that had certain books now classed as "Apocrypha" only been written in Hebrew they would have come down to us in the canon of Holy Scripture. One of the most interesting chapters in this work before us is a study of the Palestinian Messianic idea and the hopes entertained by the Jewish writers who lived in the countries of the Dispersion. Dr. Briggs analyzes and sets forth with clearness, also, the Messianic idea of the forerunners of Jesus — Mary, Elizabeth, Zacharias, John the Baptist, and Simeon. Naturally beginning with Mark and ending with John, he puts under his lenses of scrutiny every scrap of the sacred writings which relate to the Messiah. His method is comparative and the results are suggestive. We have in this volume an excellent example of the higher criticism applied to the New Testament by a reverent evangelical scholar. Yet this work is but one half of the whole. Another volume soon to follow will treat of the Messianic idea in the Acts, Epistles, and Apocalypse.

In one respect Dr. Briggs is very "heterodox" (whatever that word may mean nowadays), but in most other respects he is so ultra-orthodox (using the term in the traditional sense) that many of those who expected to use him ballistically against the old traditions will be disappointed. This book is a poor projectile to hurl at the old Reformation creeds, and "liberal" Christians will be much disappointed in it. Indeed, we shall not be surprised to find that some of those who convicted him have great searchings of heart and a little remorse over their hasty action in decapitating one of their most active scholars. Dr. Briggs finds in conclusion that the Old Testament predictions were only partially fulfilled in Jesus, and that most of them, as well as the great mass of their ideals, were taken up by Jesus himself and projected into the future. In a word, in his view, as in that of the Hebrews, one of the smallest elements of prophecy is that of prediction. Furthermore, Jesus was a prophet and the greatest of them. — Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00.

The History of Marriage, Jewish and Christian.

This is a strong book on a vital subject. It is also timely for us as the question of divorce and how to deal with it is prominent in this republic. It is a question which affects both political and social life. There is a crying need of reform, and a voluminous literature on the subject is in process of production. It is a common theme at the debating clubs of college and university societies to inquire "Shall the reform come through a national law or shall reform be left to the separate States? Shall the ancient Scriptural injunctions still hold or shall we modify the traditional rules?" There are two sides to the general question, whether we take it to be political, social, or religious. The Dean of Lichfield, H. M. Luckock, is an ultra-conservative churchman, who stands in the old paths and maintains the ancient ordinances of the Church of England. In relation to divorce and certain forbidden decrees he has made a very careful study of authorities. He is opposed to the principle of relaxation. His object is to make Englishmen regret the concessions made by Parliament in 1857, and to determine them against a single step farther in extending the privileges of divorce. He has studied minutely the Mosaic law, the New Testament Scriptures, and the history of the English Church. While he presents a very readable text, he packs much learning and many references in his footnotes. He believes that all the testimony of Scripture and Christian tradition is against the marriage of a man with his deceased wife's sister, and some of his arguments are based on excellent common sense and knowledge of human nature. He considers that the Jewish claims founded on the concessive legislation of the Pentateuch are not to be considered as available by Christians. He considers the United States as an awful example of the results which have flowed from relaxation of the ancient traditions. In his chapter on the consequences to be feared from a change of the laws he pictures a state of things from which the lover of his country and race will pray to be delivered. Whether we agree or disagree with the writer's conclusion, the work is scholarly, suggestive, and strong in its pleas.— Longmans, Green & Co. $1.75.

The Old Church in the New Land.

This felicitous title covers a little volume of parochial lectures connecting the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States with the Church of England, and tracing the historic continuity of both in their organic unity back of the Reformation through the dark times of the Middle Ages and the troubled times of British Christianity to the foundation period of the first century. The author is a scholarly and clever young Englishman, rector of an important parish in Baltimore. The Bishop of Maryland, Dr. Paret, furnishes a commendatory introduction. The lectures are short, simple, not too crowded with facts or dates, pictorial in their style, and fitted to instruct the mind and guide the judgment as to the ecclesiastical developments of eighteen Christian centuries. We need not say that Rev. C. Ernest Smith believes in the English Church and her American succession in their foundations, structure, faith, principles, and destiny with all his heart; but he writes with reasonableness and candor. The book is a good specimen of the intelligent work done in American pulpits at the present day.— Longmans, Green & Co. $1.25.

Reminiscences of a Portrait Painter.

These are the reminiscences of Mr. George P. A. Healy, who, if he has not actually painted the portraits of more distinguished people from life than any other artist now living, certainly has come near to that distinction. Born in Boston in 1813, he remembers Stuart, first took the brush in hand when he was sixteen, followed Sully's advice to make painting his profession, and had Mr. Harrison Gray Otis as his first famous sitter. "Little Healy" he was then called. Since that time he has painted portraits of Andrew Jackson, Henry Clay, Daniel Webster, John Quincy Adams, Thiers, Guizot, Audubon, Gambetta, Liszt, Longfellow, Pope Pius IX, Lord Ashburton, the Queen of Roumania, Sherman, Grant, and Lincoln, and many others in public or private life. Painter laureate he might almost be called. Woodcuts of the portraits of all these great people and of others illustrate this book, which, beside the author's sketch of his life, contains five chapters of anecdote about his friends and sitters. A pleasant story it is of a quiet, industrious, honorable, useful career.— A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.50.

An Imaged World.

Poems in prose are generally rather dull reading, but Mr. Edward Garnett has written extremely beautiful descriptions of nature in his prose poems published under the above title:

> The night has shut me in with its black, starry wings; a dreamy silence lulls the starlit wood, and dusky midnight folds the valley of the eternal heavens. A little wind, murmuring into itself a tender, heedless song, strays through the branching, labyrinthine leaves. . . . Yet where art thou? The night is here, and I am lying sad in loneliness. The red stars burn low on the horizon's verge — low, low to the black earth. Angered are they; slow time doth anger them. And in my solitary ear sings low the timorous wind passing adown the hill, murmuring unto this proud and pitiless night its faint, unheeded song.

This quotation is a fair example of Mr. Garnett's style, dreamy and perhaps a little vague, yet not devoid of charm. One of the most interesting sections into which An Imaged World is divided is "In Gray Crowds." One of the poems describes hospital life, and this will easily bear comparison with Mr. Henley's hospital sketches; indeed, we think it a finer conception than Mr. Henley's in its dignity and self-restraint. Five drawings by William Hyde, beautifully reproduced, add greatly to the attraction of Mr. Garnett's volume.— Macmillan & Co. $2.00.

The Blue Ribbon.

This is an inspiring book. It is a story of modern and contemporaneous success in a difficult field. It is a winning story about winning people who love their fellow men. After this book the name of Murphy must be held in fresh honor. The subject of temperance is ever vital and practical, and while legislation, education, and the code of social life have much to do with reformation and right conduct, it is self-evident to all thoughtful peoples that personal temperance is that which needs most to be cultivated. Mr. Arthur Reed Kimball, in this interesting book, which is well furnished with portraits, calls attention to the great social change of which the blue ribbon is typical, and then tells us of the founder of this movement. Francis Murphy's early life was spent in the Emerald Isle, and he traveled by jaunting-car to the ship which took him to New York. After various adventures and vicissitudes and service in the army during the Civil War, he became a hotel-keeper in Portland, Me. There in that Prohibition State John Barleycorn threw him into the direst poverty; converted through the kindly influence of Captain Cyrus Sturdivant to the Christian life, he lost his beloved wife. Yielding to persuasion, he started to give a temperance lecture, but forgetting what he had committed to memory he broke down. Emerging from the wreck of his projected rhetoric he rose into high flights of real oratory, and ever afterwards he was a persuader and conqueror of men. Thus began the blue ribbon movement. In true apostolical succession, the work was carried on by his sons, Thomas Edward Murphy and William J. Murphy; and the story of their present triumphs is told in this book, which is a record of success in winning men from the saloon to temperate and Christian lives. To those who have heard the Murphys at the Christian Endeavor and other conventions no further praise of their oratory need here be given; such hearers will read with pleasure Mr. Kimball's capitally told story of their life and work. —Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25.

The required course of home reading this year in the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle embraces these five volumes, all illustrated more or less: The Growth of the English Nation, by Katharine Coman and Elizabeth Kendall, professors in Wellesley College; Europe in the Nineteenth Century, by H. P. Judson, professor of political science, University of Chicago; From Chaucer to Tennyson, by Henry A. Beers, professor of English literature, Yale University; Renaissance and Modern Art, by Prof. W. H. Goodyear of the Brooklyn Institute; and Walks and Talks in the Geological Field, by Alexander Winchell, late professor of geology in the University of Michigan. The five manuals indicate a steady improvement in the quality of reading required by this great popular institution. Professor Goodyear's volume is printed on good paper and especially well illustrated. — Flood & Vincent. Each, $1.00.

Of the making of books about London there has been literally no end, as Mr. George A. Sala writes in his preface to London Up To Date, a volume of detached essays. But London seen through the eyes of a nineteenth century journalist is wholly different from the London of Goldsmith or Lamb. Mr. Sala describes "A Levee at St. James' Palace," or "A Banquet at Fishmonger's Hall," or "The Derby," or "A First Night at the Lyceum," with the impartial cleverness of a born journalist. His essays are brief, "newsy," and full of local gossip. They have no value for the antiquary or the traveler. — Macmillan & Co. $1.25.

The subjects of Mrs. Sarah K. Bolton's latest collection of biographical sketches, Famous Leaders Among Men, are Napoleon Bonaparte, Lord Nelson, General Sherman, Phillips Brooks, Henry Ward Beecher, Spurgeon, John Bunyan, Thomas Arnold, Wendell Phillips, and Charles Kingsley. They represent war, reform, literature, and the pulpit, and the writer has intended to make something of a contrast between their varied careers. Mrs. Bolton's talent as a biographer is too well known to need commendation. — T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50.

The Cambridge edition of Whittier's Complete Poetical Works matches the convenient and attractive edition of Longfellow so designated. There is a fine portrait drawn by Schoff. The text is the same as in the Riverside edition, with the same arrangement; At Sundown and a few poems first printed in the new biography, with a few new notes, have also been included; Mr. Scudder writes the biographical sketch.— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.00.

The little book entitled Business, with the sub-title, "A Plain Talk with Men and Women Who Work," is both sensible and spirited in its pithy discussion of the "American noun" (business) and its just limits. Mr. Wells would have done well to emphasize more the salutary effects of good literature and art. — Fleming H. Revell Co. 35c.

Because I Love You is the attractive title of a collection of poems of love gathered by Anna E. Mack, with much skill and good taste, from a wide variety of true poets. The literary level of the selection is high, and no phase of the personal love of man and woman seems to have been neglected. The book is well printed and bound in white and gold. — Lee & Shepard. $1.50.

The "Dutch Tiles" calendar, which is published by the Channing Auxiliary of San Francisco and copyrighted by C. A. Murdock & Co. of that city, is an effective and artistic novelty in the calendar line. Its twelve cards are printed in blue and ornamented with appropriate Dutch figures and scenes and apt quotations.

PERIODICALS.

The January Century opens with a striking picture of Elise, the eldest sister of Napoleon. Professor Sloane continues his biography with the facts in Napoleon's life between 1791 and 1795. Thus far the illustrations are more attractive than the biography itself. "Maxim's Experiments in Aërial Navigation" and "Festivals in American Colleges for Women" are timely articles. Fifty years ago college life for women would have been deemed as impracticable as is aërial navigation now. Fifty years hence "aërial navigation" may prove to be as possible as is electrical locomotion now. Mr. Crawford's "Casa Braccio" is not up to his usual standard of writing. Professor Hardy's "Lines on the Fly-Leaf of a Copy of Omar" are by far the best poetry in the number. The practical man will note the open letters on "A Cure for the Pass Pestilence" and a cure for diphtheria.

The complete novel in the January issue of Lippincott's is "The Waifs of Fighting Rocks," by Captain Charles McIlvaine. The scene is laid in the mountains of West Virginia, and the tale is one of adventure, love, and jealousy among the mountainers. "By Telephone," a stirring newspaper story, by Francis C. Regal, shows how a plucky reporter defeated a conspiracy and brought the criminals to justice. "A Question of Responsibility," by Imogen Clark, deals with delicacy vs. life-saving in a lodging house. The other stories belong to Christmas, and are "Mrs. Santa Claus," by Marjorie Richardson; "A Prodigal Friend," by S. Elgar Benet; and "Mrs. Risley's Christmas Dinner," by Ella Higginson. "Christmas Customs and Superstitions" are collected by Elizabeth Ferguson Seat. Edgar Fawcett recalls "New Year's Days in Old New York," and Edith Duff "Empress Josephine's Happy Day" ninety years ago. In "The Ducks of the Chesapeake" Calvin Dill Wilson tells all about the canvasback before he is shot and after. Gilbert Parker offers a study of "Herbert Beerbohm Tree," the actor. F. M. B., in "With the Autocrat," recalls some notable private utterances of Dr. Holmes, and M. Kaufmann discusses "Socialist Novels."

The centerpiece of the January Harper's is a finely illustrated article, by Julian Ralph, on "Charleston and the Carolinas," which Northern readers will turn to with pleasure in these wintry days. Charleston's waking to new life is felt in these pages, and the glow which is spreading all over the Southern States. Mr. Thomas Hardy has changed the title of his novel, "The Simpletons," begun in the last number, to "Hearts Insurgent," but his art is unchanged. Mr. Hamblin Sears takes us to a turn "With the Hounds in France;" but one needs only to look at the pictures in this article to realize how cruel a sport is "the hunt." May it soon be among the bygones! The curious story of "New York Slave-Traders" is told by Mr. Thomas A. Janvier, who is gathering together a large amount of lore relating to the early experiences of the metropolis. Mr. Alfred Parsons continues his fascinating pictures — with pen and pencil — of Japan, devoting his attention this month to an ascent of Fujisan. Mr. Henry Cabot Lodge shows how many "Americanisms" are derived from Shakespeare. Miss Jewett tells a long story, "A War Debt," in her pleasant style, and Kate Mason Rowland sketches "The Fortunes of the Bourbons."

"Autumn Leaves" by Millais, a "Study for Coriolanus" by J. D. Linton, and "Sergeant Tanviray" by Paul Golleron are the three full-page adornments of the Magazine of Art for January. "Sculpture of the Year," "Mr. Robert Kirkpatrick's Collection," "Thomas Hope McLachlan," and "Munich as an Art Center" are the principal articles in a rich number.

The Chicago Journal of Political Economy has amply justified its existence in the two volumes already issued. The first number of the third volume, for December, has four excellent articles, which show that science as distinguished from the popular clamor of the day is to be a force in the West. "State Railways in Australia" are shown by William Hill not to be a model for our imitation, and J. W. Million tells us that "State Aid to Railroads in Missouri" is as doubtful an example. Prof. Bernard Moses' paper on the "Nature of Sociology" should be read by all who would think soundly concerning this so-called "new science." Mr. R. F. Hoxie's able discussion of the "Adequacy of the Customs-Revenue System" exhibits its many defects. In the book reviews Prof. Simon Newcomb estimates Prof. R. T. Ely's strength and weakness as an economist.

The Portfolio for December is a monograph, by Alfred W. Pollard, on "Italian Book Illustrations." Nine plates and numerous illustrations in the text show the naïve and straightforward work of these early illustrators of the fifteenth century, whom Mr. Pollard ranks as the best of their day.

Amid a host of denominational and local religious reviews the New World stands out as a conspicuous landmark in periodical literature. On its list of contributors of articles or signed book reviews are seen the names of men eminent in various branches of the Christian Church. In the December number Rev. David N. Beach of Cambridge, one of several Congregationalists who enrich this number, calls attention to "Some Questions in Religion Now Pressing." Combining fervor in style with clear vision, he suggests that the time has come for a definite reconstruction of theology along lines in harmony with the largest knowledge and the sturdiest faith of the age. Rev. Charles E. St. John in setting forth "A Unitarian's Gospel" shows that "to give men character, God, eternal life together in one brave thought is to give them a gospel of irresistible strength." The gem of this basket of jewels is a discussion of "Athanasianism" by Prof. Levi L. Paine of Bangor. The article is humorous, witty, and forceful, and shows the author a master of dialectic. We hope to hear from Professor Paine on what he styles the "pseudo-Athanasian Augustinianism and its outcome on the New England Trinitarianism." President Andrews of Brown University, believing that the substance of religion is eternal, declares "Science a Natural Ally of Religion." Rev. S. R. Calthrop of Syracuse, under the title "One Lord and His Name One," argues vigorously, drawing his main illustration from vortex atoms, that matter is a mode of motion of spirit. The newly discovered "Gospel According to Peter" is appraised conservatively by Prof. J. Armitage Robinson of Christ's College, Cambridge, who dates the text at about 165 A.D. The work and personality of "John Addington Symonds," who, with Ruskin and Browning, has interpreted the art and literature of Italy to the modern Anglo-Saxon mind, are set forth clearly by Frank Sewall. Rev. C. C. Starbuck, with the aid of the recent seceder, Count Paul von Hoensbroech, applies the scalpel to "Modern Jesuitism." In his paper on "The Mimicry of Heredity" Rev. George Batchelor sums up a very suggestive discussion with an optimistic view of the future. Nearly fifty pages of excellent book reviews by specialists conclude the third volume of this able quarterly.

The Harvard Graduates' Magazine for December has for frontispiece a fine portrait of Dr. Holmes from a photograph taken in 1885. Dr. D. W. Cheever sketches him in a phase unknown to the great multitude of his admirers, as the "Anatomist" in the lecture room; and Rev. Samuel May gives tender reminiscences of "Dr. Holmes with His Classmates." Professor Sumichrast shows what is done for "The Newcomer at Harvard;" Dr. D. A. Sargent describes "The Hemenway Gymnasium" and its good work; Mr. N. H. Dole makes "A Plea for the Study of Russian;" C. F. Adams sets forth "The Importance of Veterinary Science;" and Prof. J. P. Cooke is briefly sketched, with a portrait, by Prof. C. L. Jackson.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— The reports of the death of the novelist and poet, Robert Louis Stevenson, are so positive and circumstantial as to leave, unfortunately, but very little reason for disbelieving them, although he has been reported at death's door several times. A despatch from Auckland, New Zealand, dated December 17, declared that "advices by steamship from Apia, Samoa, of the date of December 8, say that Robert Louis Stevenson, the novelist, had died suddenly from apoplexy, and that his body was buried on the summit of Pala Mountain. He had half completed the writing of a new novel." Mr. Stevenson was born in Edinburgh, November 15, 1850, and he had thus but little more than completed his forty-fourth year. The son of Thomas Stevenson, the lighthouse builder, and the grandson of Robert Stevenson, the inventor of the revolving light, he was a delicate and impulsive boy, devoted to books but not to study. No one, he said, ever had more certificates or less education, though he was graduated at the University of Edinburgh. From his early years he aspired to write and practiced incessantly. Compromising with his father, who wished him to become an engineer, he studied law at twenty-one. After several contributions to the magazines, which attracted favorable attention, he wrote his noted Treasure Island in 1883. Of its inception and development Mr. Stevenson lately gave a very interesting account in the collection called My First Book. The list is long of the books which followed, each widening the circle of the author's readers until he became, in several aspects, the most popular writer of the day. The originality of his mind was most fully shown in the famous narrative of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. Edinburgh, Travels with a Donkey, Familiar Studies, The Silverado Squatters, The New Arabian Nights, A Child's Garden of Verse, Kidnapped, Prince Otto, The Merry Men, Underwoods, Virginibus Puerisque, Memoirs and Portraits, Memoir of Fleeming Jenkin, The Dynamiter, The Black Arrow, A Tale of the Two Roses, The Master of Ballantrae, Catriona, The Wreckers, and The Ebb Tide — this is an imperfect list of the works of this romantic novelist, who was one of the masters of English style. His later years were a struggle for health; he settled at one time in the Adirondacks, but found no permanent relief until he made his home in Samoa. Few writers of the day have become better known through their books and accounts of their life in the periodical press, and few of any age have accomplished more under great obstacles than Mr. Stevenson, dying at the comparatively early age of forty-four, leaving a lasting name in English literature.

— G. P. Putnam's Sons will shortly begin the publication of a serial to be entitled Little Journeys. The series will be published in monthly numbers, tastefully printed, and each number will contain a description of a recent visit made by Mr. Elbert Hubbard to the homes and haunts of some well-known author. The first group of authors whose homes are to be described includes George Eliot, Thomas Carlyle, John Ruskin, W. E. Gladstone, J. M. W. Turner, Jonathan Swift, Victor Hugo, William Wordsworth, W. M. Thackeray, Charles Dickens, Shakespeare, and Oliver Goldsmith.

— At the age of seventy-six years, and just after a long illness, George Jacob Holyoake is helping to bring out a new penny monthly called Labour Copartnership and devoted to the principle of "copartnership," which claims to end the conflict of labor and capital by giving to the worker a share of profit as dividend or bonus on his wages. The journal is published by the Labour Association of John Street, Adelphi, London, England.

— Messrs. Duprat & Co. of New York announce for early publication The Library of Robert Hoe, Esq., a contribution to the history of bibliophilism in America, by O. A. Bierstadt, assistant librarian of the Astor Library.

— The subject of M. Zola's next book is to be The Three Romes, or rather, he says, the four Romes — Ancient Rome, Rome of the Middle Ages, Papal Rome, and the Rome of today. The pontiff, he says, will be the central figure in his work, just as Napoleon III was the central figure in La Débâcle. His Abbé Pierre of Lourdes will go to Rome with the object of finding out a harmony between evangelical doctrine and the democracy, which M. Zola regards as possible; and between religion and the progress of science, which is quite another thing.

— Mr. Crockett's new story, The Men of the Moss-Hags, which is now running as a serial in an English paper, will be issued in America by Macmillan & Co.

— The great work of Professor Maspero entitled The Dawn of Civilization, which is coming from the press of D. Appleton & Co., contains nearly five hundred illustrations. This volume is an attempt to put together in a lucid and interesting manner all that the monuments have revealed to us concerning the earliest civilization of Egypt and Chaldea.

— Mr. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, the son and executor of the late Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, asks that any persons having letters of Dr. Holmes will send them to Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 4 Park Street, Boston, or A. P. Watt, Esq., Hastings House, Norfolk Street, Strand, London, with reference to their possible use in a contemplated Life and Letters of Dr. Holmes. These letters will be carefully returned to their owners after copies have been made of such as are found to be available.

— Guillaume Louis Figuier, author of The Primitive Man, The Day After Death, and other scientific works, died in Paris, November 9, aged seventy-five years.

— From a New England Hillside is the title of a little book, by Mr. William Potts, to be published immediately by Macmillan & Co. It bears as a sub-title, "Notes from Underledge," the name of Mr. Pott's home at Farmington, and is filled with discursive talks on every imaginable topic connected with persons, places, and things, but more especially with nature in all her changing moods.

— Mr. William Watson is universally recognized to be one of the most poetic poets of his day. A new volume of poems by him is announced by Macmillan & Co. Odes and Other Poems will contain among others the verses published recently in the Spectator, the Daily Chronicle, and other English papers.

— The Robert Clarke Co. have in press a reprint of Chronicles of Border Warfare; or, A History of the Settlement by the Whites of Northwestern Virginia, by Alexander S. Withers (Clarksburg, 1831), edited by Reuben G. Thwaites, secretary of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin.

— A work of unusual interest, by Franklin Henry Giddings, professor of sociology at Columbia College, will be published by Macmillan & Co. under the title, The Principles of Sociology This work will differ from all previous treatises on sociology in its rigorous exclusion of topics that fall properly within such other social sciences as political economy, public law, and the theory of the State and in its systematic organization of the facts and principles that are strictly sociological.

— The Clarendon Press expects to publish early in the new year the first volume of a Local History of Phrygia, by Prof. W. M. Ramsay, D.C.L., of Aberdeen, author of The Church and the Roman Empire before A.D. 170. The plan of the work is to treat each district and city separately, collecting all information that can be gathered from every source about each, from the earliest period when anything can be learned about it down to the final conquest by the Turks. The facts about the ancient religion of each district will be gathered with especial care, and the original texts on which every inference is based will be given in appendixes to the several chapters. The early history of Christianity will be treated very fully, and the Christian inscriptions will be collected in special chapters. Vol. I will be devoted to the Lycos Valley (with the great cities of Laodiceia, Hierapolis, and Colossai) and to the extreme southwestern parts of Phrygia.

— Longmans, Green & Co. will publish early next year a new book by the Rt. Hon. A. J. Balfour, entitled The Foundations of Belief, being notes introductory to the study of theology.

— T. Y. Crowell & Co. will publish immediately Prof. Amos G. Warner's valuable book on American charities. This exhaustive and stimulating work promises to become a standard authority on a subject that is daily assuming greater and greater importance. In advance of publication it has already been adopted as a textbook by a number of the leading universities, and it will be welcomed by students of sociology as an indispensable guide, and by the general public as a revelation regarding topics in which hitherto sentiment has been a greater factor than knowledge. Its tendency will not be to discourage genuine charity and benevolence, but to show in what ways the humane instincts can be best employed.

— Roberts Brothers have just ready a volume entitled As a Matter of Course, by Annie Payson Call. Other books also just ready are The Minor Tactics of Chess, a treatise on the deployment of the forces in obedience to strategic principle, by Franklin K. Young and Edwin C. Howell; an American copyright edition of Nora Hopper's Ballads in Prose; a copyright edition of Discords, a new volume by George Egerton; a copyright edition of The Great God Pan and the Inmost Light, by Arthur Machen; and a new and cheap edition, in an attractive binding, of The Light of Asia.

— Robert C. Winthrop, who died November 17 in Boston, aged eighty-five years, was the author of The Life and Letters of John Winthrop and other works relating to the early history of our country.

— Songs on Stone, Mr. Whistler's series of lithographic drawings in color, to be published in parts containing four plates each, will probably not be issued until next year.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

☞ All books and pamphlets received by the Literary World are entered under the above heading. Further notice of any publication is dependent upon its importance.

Biographical.

Great Commanders: General Hancock. By Gen. Francis A. Walker. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

The Life of Oliver Wendell Holmes. By E. E. Brown. Lothrop Publishing Co. $1.50

Books for Young People.

Three of Us: Barney, Cossack, Rex. By Mrs. Izora C. Chandler. Illustrated. Hunt & Eaton. $2.00

Tony: the Story of a Waif. By Laisdell Mitchell. Philadelphia: Charles H. Banes.

A Salt Water Hero. By Rev. Edward A. Rand. Thomas Whittaker. $1.25

Economics and Politics.

Labour and the Popular Welfare. By W. H. Mallock. New edition. Macmillan & Co. 90c.

A History of Tithes. By the Rev. H. W. Clarke, B.A. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00

Suicide and Insanity. By S. A. K. Strahan, M.D. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00

Towards Utopia. By a Free Lance. D. Appleton & Co.

Educational.

Elements of Mechanical Drawing. By Gardner C. Anthony, A.M. D. C. Heath & Co. $1.50

The Students' Series of English Classics. Goldsmith's Traveller, and Deserted Village. — Tennyson's Elaine. Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. Each, 25c.

Maynard's French Texts. Petites Histoires Enfantines. 25c. — Maynard's German Texts. Der Besuch im Carcer. 25c. Maynard, Merrill & Co.

Introduction to English Literature. Including a Number of Classic Works. By F. V. N. Painter, A.M. Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. $1.25

Eclectic English Classics. Woodstock; or, The Cavalier. By Sir Walter Scott. 60c. — An Essay on John Milton. By Lord Macaulay. 20c. — A Midsummer Night's Dream. 20c. — Silas Marner. By George Eliot. 30c. — L'Allegro, Il Penseroso, Comus, and Lycidas. By John Milton. 20c. American Book Co.

Magill's Modern French Series. Jean Morais, suivi de Tuyet. By Jules Clarétie. Christopher Sower Co. 60c.

An Introduction to the Study of English Fiction. By Wm. Edward Simonds. D. C. Heath & Co. $1.00

Shakespeare's Comedy of the Merchant of Venice. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Katharine Lee Bates. Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. 35c.

Essays and Sketches.

Pushing to the Front. By Orison S. Marden. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50

Sea and Land. Features of Coasts and Oceans, with Special Reference to the Life of Man. By N. S. Shaler. Illustrated. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50

The Great Refusal. Being Letters of a Dreamer in Gotham. Edited by Paul Elmer More. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1 00

Talk at a Country House. Fact and Fiction. By Sir Edward Strachey. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

The Prelude to Poetry. The English Poets in the Defence and Praise of Their Own Art. Edited by Ernest Rhys. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

American Writers of To-Day. By Henry C. Vedder. Silver, Burdett & Co. $1.50

Oliver Wendell Holmes. A Paper Read at the 21st Annual Dinner of the Harvard Club of San Francisco, October 18, 1894. By George B. Merrill.

Before He Is Twenty. By R. J. Burdette, Frances Hodgson Burnett, Edward W. Bok, Mrs. Burton Harrison, and Mrs. Lyman Abbott. Fleming H. Revell Co. 75c.

Wild Animals in Captivity; or, Opheus at the Zoo, and Other Papers. By C. J. Cornish. Macmillan & Co. $3.50

Literary and Social Essays. By George William Curtis. Harper & Brothers. $2.50

Theatrical Sketches. Here and There with Prominent Actors. By Margaret. The Merriam Co. 75c.

Ballads in Prose. By Nora Hopper. London: John Lane. Boston: Roberts Brothers. $1.50

As a Matter of Course. By Annie Payson Call. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

Fiction.

The Despotic Lady. By W. E. Norris. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

The Story of Babette. By Ruth McEnery Stuart. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $1.50

St. John's Wooing. A Story. By M. G. McClelland. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $1.00

Ministers of Grace. A Novelette. By Eva Wilder McGlasson. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $1.00

The Story of Rodman Heath; or, Mugwumps. By One of Them. Arena Publishing Co.

The Christmas Hirelings. A Novel. By M. E. Braddon. Harper & Brothers. $1.25

A Bread-and-Butter Miss. A Novel. By George Paston. Harper & Brothers. $1.00

The Royal Marine. An Idyl of Narragansett Pier. By Brander Matthews. Harper & Brothers. $1.00

A Kentucky Cardinal. A Story. By James Lane Allen. Harper & Brothers. $1.00

An Agitator. A Story. By Clementina Black. Harper & Brothers. $1.00

Under Fire. By Captain Charles King, U.S.A. Illustrated. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25

The Literary Shop, and Other Tales. By James L. Ford. George H. Richmond & Co. $1.25

Shylock's Daughter. A Novel. By Margaret Holmes Bates. Illustrated. Charles H. Kerr & Co. 50c.

Knights of Cockayne. By Graily Hewitt. London: Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.

"Love and Quiet Life." Somerset Idylls. By Walter Raymond. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25

Beyond the Veil. By G. B. Willcox. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.00

A Double Cherry. By M. E. Winchester. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

The Play-Actress. By S. R. Crockett. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

The Justification of Andrew Lebrun. By Frank Barrett. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

English Episodes. By F. Wedmore. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

Synnövé Solbakken. By B. Björnson. Given in English by Julie Sutter. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

Twilight Land. By Howard Pyle. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $2.50

History.

The Winning of the West. By Theodore Roosevelt. Vol. III. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50

The Liberation of Italy. 1815–1870. By the Countess Evelyn Martinengo Cesaresco. With portraits. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.75

England in the Nineteenth Century. By Elizabeth Wormeley Latimer. A. C. McClurg & Co. $2.50

History of Bohemia. By Robert H. Vickers. Chicago: Charles H. Sergel Co. $3.50

The History of Sicily; from the Earliest Times. By Edward A. Freeman. Vol. IV. Edited by Arthur J. Evans. Macmillan & Co. $5.25

Harvard College by an Oxonian. By George Birkbeck Hill, D.C.L. Macmillan & Co. $2.25

History of the United States. By E. Benjamin Andrews. Two vols. Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.00

Memorials of St. James's Palace. By Edgar Sheppard, M.A. In two volumes. Longmans, Green & Co. $10.50

History of the Commonwealth and Protectorate. 1649–1660. By Samuel Rawson Gardiner, M.A. Vol. I. 1649–1651. Longmans, Green & Co. $7.00

Henry of Navarre and the Religious Wars. By Edward T. Blair. J. B. Lippincott Co. $4.00

Juvenile.

Jack the Giant-Killer, and Beauty and the Beast. Illustrated. Macmillan & Co. 50c.

Sleeping Beauty, and Whittington and His Cat. Illustrated. Macmillan & Co. 50c.

Sailor Jack, the Trader. By Harry Castlemon. Illustrated. Porter & Coates. $1.25

A Frogland Wedding. Words and illustrations by Roy Conger. Music by Helen Hitchcock. Laird & Lee. 50c.

Poetry, Music, and the Drama.

The Poems of William Drummond of Hawthornden. Edited by William C. Ward. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. Two vols. $3.50

Freytag's Technique of the Drama. Trans. by Elias J. MacEwan. S. C. Griggs & Co. $1.50

Love Songs of Childhood. By Eugene Field. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00

Theatricals. Second Series. The Album. — The Reprobate. By Henry James. Harper & Brothers. $1.75

Poems: Old and New. By George Cotterell. London: David Nutt. 5s. net.

The Temple Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well. — Twelfth Night. Macmillan & Co. Each, 45c.

American Song. A Collection of Representative American Poems. By Arthur B. Simonds, A.M. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

Chant of a Woodland Spirit. By Robert Burns Wilson. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

Penrhyn's Pilgrimage. By Arthur Peterson, U.S.N. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

A Century of Charades. By William Bellamy. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

School and Parlor Comedies. By B. L. C. Griffith. The Penn Pub. Co. 30c.

The Story of Portus; and Songs of the Southland By Mary H. Leonard. Charles W. Moulton. $1.00

The Wind in the Clearing, and Other Poems. By Robert Cameron Rogers. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25

Judah; an Original Play in Three Acts. By Henry Arthur Jones. Macmillan & Co. 75c.

Selections from the Poems of Aubrey De Vere. Edited by George Edward Woodberry. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

On the Wooing of Martha Pitkin. By Charles Knowles Bolton. Copeland & Day. 75c.

The Thought of God in Hymns and Poems. Second Series. By Frederick L. Hosmer and Wm. C. Gannett. Robert Brothers. $1.00

Hymns and Verses. By Samuel Longfellow. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

In Russet and Silver. By Edmund Gosse. Stone & Kimball.

Many Moods. By Warren Holden. J. B. Lippincott Co.

Of Such is the Kingdom, and Other Poems. By Anna Olcott Commelin. Fowler & Wells Co. $1.50

Songs from the Granite Hills of New Hampshire. By Clark B. Cochrane. Cupples & Patterson. $1.25

Wayside Poems. By Wallace Bruce. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $2.00

"The Poet of Poets." The Love-Verse from the Minor Poems of Edmund Spenser. Alexander B. Grosart, editor. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.25

Green Pastures: being Choice Extracts from the Works of Robert Greene. Made by Alexander B. Grosart. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.25

The Lyric Poems of Edmund Spenser. Edited by Ernest Rhys. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

Pipe and Pouch. The Smoker's Own Book of Poetry. Compiled by Joseph Knight. Joseph Knight Co. $1.25

Religion and Theology.

At Dawn of Day. Thoughts for the Morning Hour. Compiled and arranged by Jeanie A. Bates Greenough. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.75

Simon Peter: His Later Life and Labors. By Charles S. Robinson, D.D. Thomas Nelson & Sons. $1.25

Protestant Missions. Their Rise and Early Progress. By A. C. Thompson. Chas. Scribner's Sons. $1.75

Oowikapun; or, How the Gospel Reached the Nelson River Indians. By Egerton R. Young. Hunt & Eaton. $1.00

The Student Missionary Enterprise. Edited by Max Wood Moorhead. Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.50

Herald Sermons. By George H. Hepworth. With Portrait. E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.00

Old and New Unitarian Belief. By John White Chadwick. George H. Ellis. $1.50

Messages of Faith, Hope, and Love. By James Freeman Clarke. George H. Ellis. $1.00

The Deeper Meanings. By Frederic A. Hinckley. George H. Ellis. 50c.

Miss Havergal's Secret. "Being with Him." The Secret of Peace and Power. By Giles F. Bushnell. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. 50c.

The Parchments of the Faith. By Rev. George E. Merrill. American Baptist Pub. Society. $1.25

Religious Progress. By Alexander V. G. Allen. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

The History of Marriage, Jewish and Christian, in Relation to Divorce. By Herbert Mortimer Luckock. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.75

The Trial and Death of Jesus Christ. By James Stalker, D.D. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.50

New Streams in Old Channels. Selected from the Writings of Lyman Abbott, D.D. Edited by Mary Storrs Haynes. Lothrop Pub. Co. $1.00

History of the Religious Society of Friends; called by Some the Free Quakers, in the City of Philadelphia. By Charles Wetherell. Porter & Coates.

Clerical Life and Work. A Collection of Sermons. By H. P. Liddon. Longmans, Green & Co. $2.00

The Virgin Mother. Retreat Addresses. By the Rt. Rev. A. C. A. Hall. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.25

The Book of Numbers. By the Rev. Robert A. Watson, M.A. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.50

Between the Lights. Thoughts for the Quiet Hour. Compiled by Fanny B. Bates. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.25

The Expositor's Bible. The Psalms. By Alexander Maclaren, D.D. Vol. III. Psalm xc–cl. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.50

Home Talks about the Word for Mothers and Children. By Emily Huntington Miller. Hunt & Eaton. $1.00

The Kindergarten of the Church. By Mary J. Chisholm Foster. Hunt & Eaton. $1.00

Sermons on the International S. S. Lessons for 1895. By the Monday Club. Cong. S. S. and Pub. Society. $1.25

An Outline Handbook of the Life of Christ. By Wm. A. Stevens and Ernest De Witt Burton. Second edition, revised. Silver, Burdett & Co. 50c.

The Power of an Endless Life. By Thomas C. Hall. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00

Religion and Business. Practical Suggestions to Men of Affairs. By Henry A. Stimson. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. 75c.

Fundamentals. The Basal Truths of the Christian Faith. By W. F. Markwick. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. 75c.

Scientific and Technical.

An Introduction to Comparative Psychology. By C. Lloyd Morgan. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25

A Rejoinder to Professor Weismann. By Herbert Spencer. D. Appleton & Co.

Radiant Suns. A Sequel to "Sun, Moon, and Stars." By Agnes Giberne. Macmillan & Co. $1.75

Travel and Observation.

Polar Gleams. An Account of a Voyage on the Yacht Blencathra. By Helen Peel. A. C. McClurg & Co. $2 50 net.

Occult Japan. An Esoteric Study of Japanese Personality and Possession. By Percival Lowell. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.75

From Edinburgh to the Antarctic. By W. G. Burn Murdoch. Longmans, Green & Co. $5.00

Up the Susquehanna. By Hiles C. Pardoe. Illustrated. Hunt & Eaton. $1.00

In Cairo and Jerusalem. An Eastern Note-Book. By Mary Thorn Carpenter. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.50

Miscellaneous.

The Grape Culturist. A Treatise on the Cultivation of the Native Grape. By Andrew S. Fuller. New edition. Orange Judd Co. $1.50

Chambers's Concise Gazetteer of the World. J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.50

American Book-Plates. A Guide to Their Study, with Examples. By Charles Dexter Allen. With a Bibliography by Eben Newell Hewins. Macmillan & Co. $3.50

The Russian Jews: Extermination or Emancipation. By Leo Errara. Trans. by Bella Löwy. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

The Inns of Court and Chancery. By W. J. Loftie, Illustrated by Herbert Railton. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

Catalogue of the Books Relating to Architecture, Construction, and Decoration in the Public Library of the City of Boston, November 1, 1894.

The Century Illustrated Magazine. May, 1894, to October, 1894. The Century Co. $3.00

The Minor Tactics of Chess. By Franklin K. Young and Edwin C. Howell. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

Five Thousand Words Often Misspelled. By Wm. H. P. Phyfe. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.

The British Fleet. The Growth, Achievements, and Duties of the Navy of the Empire. By Com. Charles N. Robinson, R.N. Macmillan & Co. $3.00

Woman in Epigram. Compiled by Frederick W. Morton. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00

Eureka Entertainments. For Public and Private Occasions. The Penn Pub. Co. 30c.

Shoemaker's Best Selections for Reading and Recitation. No. 22. The Penn Pub. Co. 30c.

Where to Stop: a Guide to the Best Hotels in the World. Boston: Moses King. 25c.

A Scientific and Practical Treatise on American Football for Schools and Colleges. By A. Alonzo Stagg and Henry L. Williams. Revised to date. D. Appleton & Co. $1.25

The Massachusetts Society of the Sons of the American Revolution. Year Book, 1894. W. B. Clarke & Co.

About Women. What Men Have Said. Chosen and Arranged by Rose Porter. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

A Concordance to the Poetical Works of John Milton. By John Bradshaw, M.A., LL.D. Macmillan & Co. $4.00

The Reference Catalogue of Current Literature. 1894. London: J. Whitaker & Sons. New York: R. R. Bowker, Publishers' Weekly Office.

Steinitz and Laskar Match. With Comments, etc. By H. E. Bird. Macmillan & Co. 35c.

The Egyptian Book of the Dead. The Most Ancient and the Most Important of the Extant Religious Texts of Ancient Egypt. By Charles H. S. Davis, M.D., Ph.D. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $5.00

Bibliographica. Part III. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00

The Whist Table. A Treasury of Notes on the Royal Game. Edited by "Portland." Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.00

On the Processes for the Production of Ex Libris (Book Plates). By John Vinycomb. Macmillan & Co. $1.25

The Humour of Spain. Selected by Susette M. Taylor. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25

A Catalogue of the Academia delle Belle Arti at Venice. Compiled by E. M. Keary. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

Advertising Rates:

First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

JANUARY.

172 Pages. Now Ready.

The Princess Aline. A Story. By Richard Harding Davis. Part I. With 4 Illustrations by C. D. Gibson.

New York Slave-Traders. By Thomas A. Janvier. With 3 Illustrations by Howard Pyle.

Hearts Insurgent. A Novel. By Thomas Hardy. Part II. With Illustration by W. Hatherell. The First Part appeared in the December number under the title of "The Simpletons."

The Fortunes of the Bourbons. By Kate Mason Rowland. With 6 Illustrations by C. S. Reinhart, and Frontispiece Portrait of the late Count of Paris.

A War Debt. A Story. By Sarah Orne Jewett. With 3 Illustrations by W. T. Smedley.

Shakespeare's Americanisms. By Henry Cabot Lodge.

Lin McLean's Honeymoon. A Story. By Owen Wister.

With the Hounds in France. By Hamblen Sears. With 10 Illustrations.

The Middle Hall. A Sequel to "The Dividing Fence." By Ruth McEnery Stuart.

Fujisan. By Alfred Parsons. With 18 Illustrations by the Author.

An Adventure of a Lady of Quality. A Sketch. By Mary Jameson Judah.

Beyond. A Story. By Katrina Trask.

Charleston and the Carolinas. By Julian Ralph. With 27 Illustrations.

Editorial Departments as usual.

Booksellers and Postmasters usually receive Subscriptions. Subscriptions sent direct to the publishers should be accompanied by Post-office Money Order or Draft. When no time is specified Subscriptions will begin with the current number. Postage free to all subscribers in the United States, Canada, and Mexico.

Important Books Published Recently

HYPATIA; or, New Foes with an Old Face.

By Charles Kingsley. With 300 Illustrations from Drawings by William Martin Johnson, and a Portrait of the Author. Two volumes. 8vo, Ornamental Silk Binding, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $7.00. (In a Box.)

Literary and Social Essays. By George William Curtis. Post 8vo, Cloth, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $2.50.

Portraits in Plaster. From the Collection of Laurence Hutton. With 72 Illustrations. Large Paper, 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $6.00.

Twilight Land. Written and Illustrated by Howard Pyle, Author of "The Wonder Clock," "Pepper and Salt," etc. 8vo, Half Leather, Ornamental, $2.50.

"Harper's Young People" for 1894. Volume XV. With about 800 Illustrations and 888 Pages. 4to, Cloth, Ornamental, $3.50.

THE GOLDEN HOUSE.

A Story. By Charles Dudley Warner, Author of "A Little Journey in the World," etc. Illustrated by W. T. Smedley. Post 8vo, Half Leather, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $2.00.

The Story of Babette. By Ruth McEnery Stuart, Author of "A Golden Wedding," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

The White Company. By A. Conan Doyle. New Library Edition. Illustrated by George Willis Bardwell. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75.

A Sporting Pilgrimage. Riding to Hounds, Golf, Rowing, Football, Cricket, Club and University Athletics. Studies in English Sport, Past and Present. By Caspar W. Whitney. Copiously Illustrated. 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $3.50.

Wayside Poems. By Wallace Bruce, Author of "Old Homestead Poems." Illustrated. Square 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $2.00.

TRILBY.

A Novel. By George du Maurier, Author of "Peter Ibbetson." With 120 Illustrations by the Author. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75; Three-quarter Calf, $3.50; Three-quarter Crushed Levant, $4.50.

Josiah Wedgwood, F. R. S. His Personal History. By Samuel Smiles, LL. D., author of "Self-Help." With Portrait. 12mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

Commemorative Addresses: George William Curtis, Edwin Booth, Louis Kossuth, John James Audubon, and William Cullen Bryant. By Parke Godwin. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $1.75.

Vignettes of Manhattan. By Brander Matthews, Author of "The Story of a Story," "Studies of the Stage," etc. Illustrated by W. T. Smedley. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

The Borderland of Czar and Kaiser. Notes from both sides of the Russian Frontier. By Poultney Bigelow. Illustrated by Frederic Remington. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $2.00.

Harper's Little Novels. The Royal Marine. By Brander Matthews.—A Kentucky Cardinal. By James Lane Allen.—Ministers of Grace. By Eva Wilder McGlasson.—St. John's Wooing. By M. G. McClelland.—An Agitator. By Clementina Black. Square 32mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00 per volume.

Theatricals—Second Series—Two Comedies: "The Album"—"The Reprobate." By Henry James, Author of "Daisy Miller," etc. Post 8vo, Cloth, $1.75. (In uniform style with "Theatricals."—First Series: Tenants—Disengaged, $1.75.)

The Boy Travellers in the Levant. Adventures of Two Youths in a Journey Through Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, Greece, and Turkey, with Visits to the Islands of Rhodes and Cyprus; and the Site of Ancient Troy. By Thomas W. Knox. Profusely Illustrated. Square 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $3.00.

Chapters from Some Unwritten Memoirs. By Anne Thackeray Ritchie, Author of "Records of Tennyson, Ruskin, Browning," etc. Crown 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $2.00.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

The above works are for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by Harper & Brothers, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, Canada, or Mexico, on receipt of price. Harper's Catalogue will be sent to any address on receipt of Ten Cents.

LAWRENCE
Public Library,
LAWRENCE, MASS.

1 DECEMBER, 1894.

THE LITERARY WORLD

HOLIDAY NUMBER

E. H. HAMES & CO. * PUBLISHERS
1, SOMERSET ST. ※ BOSTON · MASS.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS' NEW BOOKS

POMONA'S TRAVELS

A Series of Letters to the Mistress of Rudder Grange from her Former Handmaiden By FRANK R. STOCKTON. Fully illustrated by A. B Frost. 12mo, $2.00.

"One of the most delightful books Mr Stockton has ever written. It is capital reading. Mr. Frost's pictures are admirable."—N. Y. Times.

Rudder Grange. Illustrated by Frost. $2 00. The two volumes, uniform, in a box, $4.00.

THE SHERMAN LETTERS

Correspondence between General and Senator Sherman from 1837 to 1891 Edited by RACHEL SHERMAN THORNDIKE. With Portraits. 8vo, $3.00.

"A unique collection of letters, rich in material for future historical history, and vitally interesting as a series of unconscious self revelations of two eminent men Valuable as a contribution to history, it has the charm and fascination of an enthralling character-study."

—New York Tribune.

A SHELF OF OLD BOOKS

By Mrs. JAMES T. FIELDS. Illustrated with Portraits, Autograph Fac-similes, etc 8vo, $2.50.

A volume of unique literary interest. The late James T Fields left a library remarkable for its associations, and especially distinguished for its personal relics of men of letters. Mrs. Fields presents here a sympathetic account of these treasures that will attract all interested in the personalities of literary men and women.

WILD BEASTS

A Study of the Character and Habits of the Elephant, Lion, Panther, Leopard, Jaguar, Tiger, Puma, Wolf, and Grizzly Bear By JOHN HAMPDEN PORTER. Illustrated. 8vo, $2.00.

"It is filled with thrilling incident and adventure and is at the same time a work which will arouse a love for natural history."—Boston Advertiser.

POLLY

A Christmas Recollection. By THOMAS NELSON PAGE. Illustrated by A. Castaigne. Small folio, $1.50.

"Another of Mr. Page's delightful tales of Southern life. The illustrations are very effective, and the volume is tastefully bound."—Boston Times.

Marse Chan. Illustrated by W. T. Smedley.
Meh Lady. Illustrated by C. S. Reinhart.
In uniform style. Each, small folio, $1.50.

THE BIRDS' CALENDAR

By H. E. PARKHURST. With 24 Illustrations. 12mo, $1 50 net.

The author describes with sympathy and enthusiasm the birds as they appear throughout the year in Central Park, the number and variety of which will surprise the general reader, for with this guide he will be able to identify every bird of importance.

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF A. B. DURAND, BY JOHN DURAND.

Illustrated with Photogravures. Two Editions. On hand-made paper, 4to, limited to 100 copies, $17 50 net; square 8vo, limited to 500 copies, $6.00 net.

Mr. Durand's life is an epitome of American art history, and this volume narrates not only the artist's life, but the development of American painting during the past half-century.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF ERASMUS.

By JAMES A FROUDE 8vo, $2 50

"The volume is one of rare value and must become a historical standard."

—Boston Advertiser.

LIFE OF CHARLES LORING BRACE.

Chiefly Told in His Own Letters. Edited by his daughter. With Portraits. 8vo, $2 50

The great work accomplished by Mr Brace, particularly in the Newsboys' Lodging Houses, gives to his biography a peculiar interest It reveals his mental and spiritual as well as his external experience his private life, and his views on moral and political questions.

THREE SCORE AND TEN YEARS:

Recollections. By W J LINTON With Portrait $2.00

These recollections cover an unusually long period of an unusually varied life, and reveal a rich fund of interesting reminiscences of eminent men and women, as well as of the events with which their names are associated.

HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES.

By E. BENJAMIN ANDREWS, President of Brown University Two vols. With Maps. Cr. 8vo, $4.00.

Among the histories of the United States Dr. Andrews' work will fill a unique position, being at the same time a genuine piece of literature and a comprehensive story of the growth of the country from the earliest times down to the present, in a form brief and easily to be grasped.

THE BURIAL OF THE GUNS.

By THOMAS NELSON PAGE. 12mo, $1.25

Containing six stories, rich in pictures of old Virginia life, and told with that simple, exquisite art that stamps Mr. Page as the finest exponent of the old and new South in fiction.

JOHN MARCH, SOUTHERNER.

By GEORGE W CABLE. 12mo, $1.50

Mr Cable's new novel displays his talents at their best. It is a remarkable picture of an old Southern town.

HENRY KINGSLEY'S NOVELS.

Ravenshoe, 2 vols. Austin Elliot, 1 vol.
The Recollections of Geoffrey Hamlyn, 2 vols.
Each 12mo, $1.00. The set in a box, $5.00.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF DEAN STANLEY.

By R. E. PROTHERO and Dean BRADLEY Cheaper Edition. 2 vols. $5.00.

"It does not contain an uninteresting or unnecessary page. It is an enchanting picture of the man It is a noble record of one of the English Church's noblest ministers."—The Advance.

SEA AND LAND.

Coast and Deep Sea Phenomena, with especial reference to the Life of Man. By Prof. N S. SHALER. Illustrated. $2.50

Written in the author's well-known, popular style, and fully illustrated from his photographs of curious and significant phases of the realm of nature with which he deals.

THE ODES OF HORACE.

Translated by WILLIAM E. GLADSTONE. 8vo, $1 50.

The difficulty of turning the Latin of Horace into corresponding terse, epigrammatic, and at the same time poetical English has been mastered by Mr Gladstone in a manner that will recommend his volume to all lovers of the classics as an example of remarkably sympathetic and vigorous translation.

OTHER NEW BOOKS ARE—"Three Years of Arctic Service," by Gen. A W. Greely, New Popular Edition (Illust., 8vo, $5.00), "William Shakspere," a Study of Elizabethan Literature, by Barrett Wendell (12mo, $1 75); "Musicians and Music Lovers," and Other Musical Essays, by W F. Apthorp (12mo, $1 50); "Costume of Colonial Times," by Mrs. Alice Morse Earle (12mo, $1.25); "The Religions of Japan," by William Elliott Griffis (12mo, $2 00); "Travels Amongst the Great Andes," by Edward Whymper, Cheaper Edition (Illust., 8vo, $4.00).

L. L. ROUSH Des.

Juveniles

PICCINO,

And Other Child Stories. By Mrs FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT. Illustrated by R. B Birch. Square 8vo, uniform with "Little Lord Fauntleroy," $1 50

Mrs BURTON HARRISON writes: "The history of Piccino's 'two days' is as delicate as one of the anemones that spring in the rock walls facing Piccino's Mediterranean A delightful volume, in fair print, and furthermore embellished by Mr. Birch's graceful and sympathetic drawings."

THE WAGNER STORY BOOK.

Firelight Tales of the Great Music Dramas. By WILLIAM HENRY FROST. Illustrated 12mo, $1 50.

"A most charming volume"—Boston Advertiser

NORSELAND TALES.

By H. H BOYESEN. Illustrated. 12mo, $1 25

"A collection of ten of this delightful writer's short stories."—Philadelphia Press.

THREE NEW BOOKS BY G. A. HENTY.

In the Heart of the Rockies. A Story of Colorado.
Wulf the Saxon A Story of the Norman Conquest.
When London Burned. A Story of Restoration Times.
Each, crown 8vo, illustrated, $1.50.

"They are as animated and descriptive as the Henty books always are, giving plenty of dependable facts at the same time that the narrative interest is well sustained.

—Philadelphia Press.

CZAR AND SULTAN.

The Adventure of a British Lad in the Russo-Turkish War of 1877-78 By ARCHIBALD FORBES. Illustrated 12mo, $2 00.

"A brilliant and exciting narrative, and the drawings add to its interest and value"—N Y Observer

TO GREENLAND AND THE POLE.

A Story of Adventure in the Arctic Regions. By GORDON STABLES Illustrated 12mo, $1.50.

THE BUTTERFLY HUNTERS IN THE CARIBBEES.

By Dr. EUGENE MURRAY-AARON. With 8 full-page illustrations. 12mo, $2.00.

"We have rarely become interested in a boy's book that contained so much valuable information conveyed in so interesting a manner."—Boston Times.

THINGS WILL TAKE A TURN.

By BEATRICE HARRADEN. Illustrated. 16mo, $1.00

A sweet story of child life by the author of "Ships that Pass in the Night."

LOVE SONGS OF CHILDHOOD.

By EUGENE FIELD. 16mo, $1.00.

MAKING OF OHIO VALLEY STATES.

By SAMUEL ADAMS DRAKE. Illustrated. 12mo, $1.50.

⁂ SCRIBNER'S BULLETIN OF HOLIDAY BOOKS, also ILLUSTRATED LIST OF BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG, will be sent to any address.

The Century Co's Christmas Suggestions.

A Subscription to The Century. The leading feature for 1895 will be a richly illustrated Life of Napoleon written by Professor Sloane, of Princeton, the result of many years of study and research, verified by all the latest and best authorities. A new novel by Marion Crawford, one by Mrs. Burton Harrison, papers on Washington in Lincoln's Time by Noah Brooks, stories by all the leading writers, are among the features of the coming volume. The subscription price is $4.00. New subscriptions should begin with November. Rudyard Kipling's first American story, "A Walking Delegate," is in the Christmas number.

A Subscription to St. Nicholas. This unrivaled magazine for young folks has just closed its most successful year. While their elders are reading Professor Sloane's Life of Napoleon in THE CENTURY, young folks are to have in ST. NICHOLAS a delightful story-life of the great Emperor entitled "A Boy of the First Empire," by Elbridge S. Brooks. More of Rudyard Kipling's famous Jungle Stories are coming. Five serial stories by well-known writers will be among the contents, and more Brownies by Palmer Cox. Everything is illustrated. A subscription costs $3.00, and the publishers will send a beautifully printed certificate to those who wish to use the magazine as a Christmas present. Begin with November.

The Century Dictionary. A gift that will be most welcome to any one. The great standard encyclopedic dictionary of the English-speaking world, without a rival in its special field. Now made complete by the issue of The Century Cyclopedia of Names, a supplemental volume. Send 10 cents for the richly illustrated pamphlet describing it, with specimen pages. Sold only by subscription; address the publishers.

The Century Cyclopedia of Names. Complete in itself. A pronouncing and defining dictionary of proper names in geography, biography, mythology, fiction, art, archæology, history, etc. In one magnificent volume of 1100 pages. Sold only by subscription; address the publishers.

Books of Travel. Across Asia on a Bicycle. The story of the remarkable trip of two young American students. Richly illustrated, cloth, $1.50. The Mountains of California, by John Muir, the California naturalist, of whom Emerson said, "He is more wonderful than Thoreau." Illustrated, cloth, $1.50.

Edwin Booth. Recollections by his daughter, Edwina Booth Grossmann, with Mr. Booth's letters to her and to his friends, giving a delightful glimpse of the great actor. Illustrated with photogravure reproductions of portraits. Octavo, 300 pages, cloth, $3.00. Limited edition, 100 copies, octavo, on Holland paper, $12.50; Edition de Luxe, 50 copies, quarto, on Whatman paper, $25.00.

Other Books of Biography. The Reign of Queen Anne. Delightfully written papers by Mrs. Oliphant describing famous people of the days of Queen Anne. Full-page pictures printed in two colors. Magnificently bound, $6.00. The Autobiography of Joseph Jefferson ($4.00), one of the most notable books of our generation. The Autobiography of Tommaso Salvini ($1.50). The Women of the French Salons. By Amelia Gere Mason. Richly illustrated and printed in two colors, $6.00.

Art Books. English Cathedrals, by Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer. In handsome binding, $6.00. The same issued in the form of a handbook for tourists, cloth, $2.50; leather, $3.00. Old Italian Masters. Timothy Cole's collection of sixty-seven engravings, with text by W. J. Stillman, $10.00. A few copies of the magnificent Portfolio of Proofs left,—125 issued,—$175 each.

Poetry. Five Books of Song, by Richard Watson Gilder. A complete collection of Mr. Gilder's poems. Illustrated, 250 pages, cloth, $1.50. Poems Here at Home, by James Whitcomb Riley (20th thousand), containing his best work. Cloth, $1.50; vellum, $2.50.

New Novels. When all the Woods are Green. A romance of primeval Canadian forests by Dr. S. Weir Mitchell; with portrait of the author. 430 pages, $1.50. A Bachelor Maid, a novel of contemporary New York society by Mrs. Burton Harrison, illustrated by Irving Wiles. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Small Books in Exquisite Bindings. P'tit Matinic' and Other Monotones, by George Wharton Edwards. Stories of life on the Nova Scotia coast, illustrated by the artist-author. Full sheep binding, with rich design, $1.25. Writing to Rosina, a novelette by William Henry Bishop. With illustrations. Bound in full stamped sheep, $1.00. Thumb-Nail Sketches. Quaint stories of adventure by George Wharton Edwards. Richly illustrated. In stamped sheep binding, $1.00. The Love of the World. A remarkable little book of religious essays by Mary Emily Case. $1.00.

For Lovers of History. The Complete Works of Abraham Lincoln. The miscellaneous writings, letters, etc., of Lincoln; edited by Messrs. Nicolay and Hay; in two volumes, octavo, 700 pages each, from $10.00 to $15.00, according to binding. Abraham Lincoln: A History, by Messrs. Nicolay and Hay—more than a life of Lincoln: a history of his times and of the Civil War. Sold only by subscription. Battles and Leaders of the Civil War. The famous Century War Book, written by Grant and scores of great generals on both sides; containing 1700 illustrations. Sold only by subscription; address the publishers.

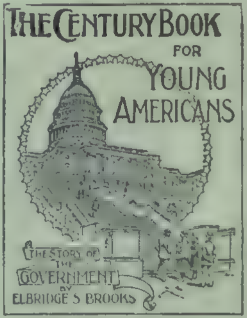
For Boys and Girls.



Rudyard Kipling's Jungle Book. One of the great successes of the season. "Nothing about animals has been written to compare with it since Æsop's Fables," writes Mr. Charles Dudley Warner. In beautiful binding, with numerous illustrations, $1.50.

The Century Book for Young Americans. The Story of the Government, by Elbridge S. Brooks, describing in attractive story-form the visit of a party of bright young people to Washington, who investigate thoroughly the government of the United States. 200 engravings. Issued under the auspices of the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution; introduction by General Horace Porter. 250 pages, $1.50.

Books by Mary Mapes Dodge. The Land of Pluck. Stories and sketches for young folk about Holland, with some on other subjects. Richly illustrated, $1.50. When Life is Young. Verses for boys and girls. Illustrated, $1.25. Donald and Dorothy. New edition. Illustrated, $1.50.

Other Books for Boys and Girls. Imaginotions. "Truthless Tales," by Tudor Jenks. Richly illustrated, $1.50. Topsys and Turvys Number 2, by Peter Newell. A most surprising picture-book for young folks, $1.00. The Man who Married the Moon, by Charles F. Lummis. Instructive and entertaining. Illustrated, $1.50. Some Strange Corners of Our Country, by the same author. A book that every boy and girl in America should read ($1.50). A New Brownie Book, "The Brownies Around the World," by Palmer Cox, $1.50. Artful Anticks. Humorous verse for young folks, by Oliver Herford, cleverly illustrated by the author ($1.00). Toinette's Philip, by Mrs. C. V. Jamison, the author of "Lady Jane." Illustrated by Birch, $1.50. Lady Jane,—"a children's classic." Illustrated by Birch, $1.50. Bound Volumes of St. Nicholas. The twelve numbers of the past year, containing more than a thousand pages and as many pictures, in two handsomely bound volumes ($4.00). Walter Camp's Book of College Sports. An expert's ideas on foot-ball, base-ball, etc. Illustrated, $1.75. A capital gift for a boy.

Send to The Century Co., Union Square, New York, for complete catalogue. Ask to see The Century Co.'s books at the stores. Sold everywhere, or copies sent, post-paid, by the publishers.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S
New Illustrated and Popular Holiday Books.

Now ready. 12mo, bound in "Crimson" cloth, gilt top, $2.25.

By the Editor of "Boswell."

HARVARD COLLEGE BY AN OXONIAN.

By George Birkbeck Hill, D. C. L., Pembroke College, Oxford: editor of "Boswell's Life of Johnson," author of "Writers and Readers," etc. Illustrated with New Frontispiece Portrait in Photogravure of President Eliot, and with views of the principal buildings, including the oldest picture of the college." 12mo, "Crimson" cloth, gilt top, $2.25.

The accomplished and scholarly editor of Boswell's Johnson, Dr. G. Birkbeck Hill, records in this volume his impressions of Harvard in a very entertaining series of chapters, touching upon such subjects as, for instance: The Growth of Harvard—Cambridge in England and Cambridge in New England—The College Chapel—Fagging and "Hazing"—Old Characters—After-dinner Speeches—Class Day—The Athletic Craze—Signs and "Shingles"—Harvard and Yale—The Elective System—The Law School—The Lawrence Scientific School—Radcliffe College—The Library—The Faculty—Oxford and Harvard.

By the Author of "The Memories of Dean Hole."

MORE MEMORIES. Being Thoughts About England Spoken in America.

By the Very Rev. S. Reynolds Hole, Dean of Rochester, author of "Reveries," "A Book About Roses," etc. With two Illustrations. 12mo, "Crimson" cloth, gilt top, $2.25.

New Book by Frederic Harrison.

THE MEANING OF HISTORY AND OTHER HISTORICAL PIECES.

By Frederic Harrison, author of "The Choice of Books," etc. Large 12mo, gilt top, $2.25.

"A work of remarkable interest and value."—N. Y. Press.

Robert Browning's Works.

New, Complete, and Definitive Edition. In nine volumes. 12mo, cloth, in box, $20.00. THE POETICAL WORKS OF ROBERT BROWNING. New and Complete Edition, including, in addition to the matter heretofore embraced in the 16-volume edition, ASOLANDO; together with Biographical and Historical Notes to the whole Poems. 9 vols., 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $2.25 each. The set in box, $20.00.

New Book by Mr. William Winter.

LIFE AND ART OF JOSEPH JEFFERSON.

Together with some Account of His Ancestry, and of the Jefferson Family of Actors. By William Winter, author of "The Life and Art of Edwin Booth," "Shakespeare's England," etc. With Frontispiece and Photogravure Plates and other Illustrations. 12mo, cloth, gilt, $2.25. Uniform with William Winter's "Life and Art of Edwin Booth," published last year.

⁂ Also an edition printed throughout on English hand-made plate paper. Limited to 200 copies. In box, $6.00 net.

A Sumptuous Art Work.

PEN DRAWING AND PEN DRAUGHTSMEN.

Their Work and their Methods. A Study of the Art Today, with Technical Suggestions. By Joseph Pennell. A New and Enlarged Edition, with over 400 Illustrations, including Many Examples from Original Drawings by Sir F. Leighton, Sir J. E. Millais, Sir F. Burne Jones, F. Sandys, F. Walker, J. Mahoney, W. North, E. A. Abbey, Holman Hunt, A. Parsons, Aubrey Beardsley, etc. 4to, bound in buckram. Printed on J. Dickinson & Co.'s Art Paper. Price $15.00.

"An interesting and beautiful book."—New York Times.

Canon Farrar's New Book. Profusely Illustrated.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST AS REPRESENTED IN ART.

By Frederic W. Farrar, D. D., F. R. S., Archdeacon and Canon of Westminster, author of "The Life of Christ," "Seekers After God," etc. With Photogravure Frontispiece and numerous Illustrations from the Great Masters and Famous Modern English Painters. 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, in box, $6.00.

"This book must be sure of a wide and generous welcome. It is a noble volume in itself—over five hundred pages royal octavo—and in its whole execution an example of the perfection to which the art of book-making has been brought. The illustrations are very numerous, and represent the art of every age from almost the very dawn of Christianity down to the present. . . . For a gift-book no better could be found."—Chicago Standard.

"There is a breadth of culture in this book which shows the author to the best advantage. . . . It is destined to be a favorite volume in the approaching Christmas season."—Boston Herald.

Illustrated by Hugh Thomson.

PRIDE AND PREJUDICE.

By Jane Austen. With Preface by George Saintsbury, and 100 Illustrations by Hugh Thomson. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, or edges uncut, uniform with "Cranford," "Shakespeare's England," "Our Village," etc. $2.25.

⁂ Also an Edition de Luxe, limited, on Hand-made Paper. Super Royal 8vo. $18.00 net.

GULLIVER'S TRAVELS.

With Introduction by Henry Craik, C. B., and 100 illustrations by C. E. Brock. Crown 8vo, gilt, or edges uncut, $2.00.—In the Press.

⁂ Also an Edition de Luxe, limited, Super Royal 8vo, printed on hand-made paper, bound in buckram.

THE FABLES OF ÆSOP. SELECTED.

Told anew, and their History traced, by Joseph Jacobs, with about 300 illustrations by Richard Heighway. Crown 8vo, gilt, or edges uncut, $2.00.

⁂ Also an Edition de Luxe, limited, Super Royal 8vo, printed on hand-made paper, bound in buckram.

SELECTIONS FROM THE POEMS OF AUBREY DE VERE.

Edited, with a Preface, by George E. Woodberry, Professor of Literature, Columbia College. 12mo, gilt top, uniform with "Ballads and Barrack-room Ballads," "The Poems of William Watson," etc., $1.25.

"The sympathy of the poet with the ancient Irish spirit must have been fed with patriotic fervor, akin to renewed inspiration, to permit him to render the old lays of his country with such fidelity to their native genius. . . . These poems of Aubrey de Vere—to characterize them largely—are scenes from the life of Christ in Man; and there is something in them—in their gladness, their luminousness, their peace—which suggests Fra Angelico, the halo of Christian Art."—From the Preface.

New Fairy Tales from India.

TALES OF THE PUNJAB; TOLD BY THE PEOPLE.

By Mrs. Steel, author of "The Flower of Forgiveness, and Other Stories," "Miss Stuart's Legacy," etc. Illustrated by John Lockwood Kipling, author of "Man and Beast in India." Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, $2.00.

NEW BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Mrs. Molesworth's New Story.

MY NEW HOME.

By Mrs. Molesworth, author of "Four Winds Farm," "Tell Me a Story," etc. With Illustrations by L. Leslie Brooke. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

A Tale of the French Revolution.

IN THE LION'S MOUTH.

The Story of Two English Children in France, 1789-1793. By Eleanor C. Price, author of "The Foreigners," "Gerald," "Valentina." 12mo, decorative cloth, $1.50.

MACMILLAN & CO., 66 Fifth Avenue, New York.